First Things

by Tom Hartman

First impressions are rarely the most accurate and first intentions are rarely the most lasting, though they are often the wisest. But first impressions and first intentions often have a real value — a freshness, a simplicity, a possibly charming naivete. They are usually sketchy, piecemeal and await a later integration that must not be forced prematurely. I give you then an unintegrated series of first impressions and first intentions.

Amherst County, Virginia

I find here a sort of synthesis of the Virginia tidewater where I was a small child and the rural Pennsylvania hills where I grew up. There has been a certain rootlessness in my life at many levels, as there has been for so many of my early post-World-War-II generation. Amherst County may be the quintessential bore to many of its natives, but to me it seems a capital place to put down roots finally, if the fates allow. I already sense a peace here in the spectacular foothills that I have not known.

I have learned much about Amherst County and I treasure the expectation of learning more. Thank heavens for bicycles and thank heavens for libraries!

Did you know, for example, that the rocks exposed here at Sweet Briar are among the oldest to be found anywhere on earth? Margaret and I rafted down the Grand Canyon of the Colorado some years ago in the company of a poet-geologist friend, and I shall always remember the deep nostalgia that swept over me as we finally passed into the Inner Gorge, that special canyon within a canyon that is the Grand Canyon at its very bottom. The Inner Gorge is the oldest eon of all reached — the Precambrian, the period before the explosion of complex life, the one period to which the Grand Canyon devotes, not just another colored layer, but a special canyon of its own. I learn from books in the library that here at Sweet Briar we stand on the very same Precambrian when we stand on the top of our hills.

Did you know, for example, that the greatest concentration of rainfall in recorded human history occurred just north of here in August, 1969? I learned that from The Torn Land. Amherst and Sweet Briar did what they could, but there were entire families up there in Nelson County that have never been found. Presumably their bodies lie buried in the riverbeds, the Tye, the Piney, the Buffalo, deep in the Precambrian.

Did you know, for example, that Thomas Jefferson would have traveled regularly down the valley by Sweet Briar-to-be in his last years, when he fled so often from Monticello to Poplar Forest? That in fact he would have traveled right by where my house stands on Old Stage Road, little dinky Old Stage Road? I thought I had pieced that knowledge together from various books until I learned from Dumas Malone's latest volume, The Sage of Monticello, that Jefferson habitually, and from my perspective, perversely, took the longer route to the east. (Surely he sometimes came the way by my house, if only for a change.)

Sweet Briar

Even the humblest of colleges has for me a magic, a sacredness, which nothing else has, because of what happens there. Sweet Briar (hardly a humble college) has, somehow, a unique and dense magic. Part of it is what Julia de Coligny once described as "the beauty of the place, which has its effect, whether consciously or unconsciously, on all who have entered its gates." Part of it is the pervasiveness I sense here of the Je ne sais quoi that an erstwhile English professor named Robert Pirsig once labeled Quality, and then chased all over the American landscape in Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance. (The man could have saved himself a lot of gas if he had studied a little more philosophy.) Other colleges may have bigger numbers of one sort and another, but I'll match our Je ne sais quoi against any.

For me a large part of the magic of Sweet Briar grows from the fact that my generation, particularly my generation of intellectuals, seems to have been subject to one long program of disorientation ever since we were born into a world that had just had its Holocaust and its Hiroshima (I was six months in the womb when we dropped the Bombs). Here, the very fact that Sweet Briar is relatively isolated and relatively new makes it possible for me to get a purchase on things, a sense of where I am. I have met all my neighbors and all their dogs (and have all but Gert Prior's Sally eating out of my hand). I have met Martha Von Briesen, Julia de Coligny, Helen McMahon, Elizabeth Sprague, to mention only a few. I have helped Sally Bowley at a greenhouse sale and pinch-hit watering plants. I have seen Mt. Pleasant go through a full half of its ancient cycle as I bike daily to campus down past the crumbling foundation of the Sweet Briar station. I know how old the precocious Daisy was when she died; I have seen her things in Ann Whitley's museum. I was there for the electric moments this fall at Founders' Day when Prof. Richard Rowland evoked for us the grief of Daisy's family transformed into hope through the founding of Sweet Briar, and the grief he and Clarissa felt at the death of their own child just after they arrived at Sweet Briar, and how that grief was itself transformed in part through the people and things they found here.

I think the thing I'm driving at has much to do with the charm certain fictional worlds have for us. One can get a grip on things there but they are, nevertheless, inexhaustible. Sweet Briar has that character for me now, but it is real, and I am really part of it, and for me that is much better. (That is why I am a philosopher and not a literary man!)

Lucy Crawford

Gert Prior introduced me to the fact of a most memorable predecessor in the philosophy department. Soon thereafter I came across The Best of Lucifer while browsing in the library. Fascinating! I mean to keep alive the words of one who said such things as these:

—"The abundant life is based on freedom — and freedom is an empty abstraction unless it is charged with knowledge — it is the truth that will set us free — and only the truth.

Men do not really love pleasure — what they really love is LIFE and the living of it.

We realize that 'above all nations in Humanity,' and that uniting all the diverse 'races' of mankind, there is really only one race: the human race. And that although we discern many tongues, there is only one language — only one language that says what it means and means what it says — the language of LOVE."

I anticipate eagerly, as a cold winter day project, digging into the wealth of Lucy Crawford papers preserved in the Mary Helen Cochran Library.

The Sweet Briar Rose

The sweet briar rose once grew in profusion on the plantation that became the college (we read in The Story of Sweet Briar College). The sweet briar is a wild rose; bushes centuries old have been found on the grounds of old castles in England. I've looked for it everywhere on my bike. I've looked along the creek; I've looked around the Monument; I've looked where the old train station stood. I can't find it anywhere. Elizabeth Sprague showed us — Sally Bowley and me — where the last four cultivated sweet briars stand on campus. One we moved to the safety of the greenhouse where Sally and Reed Franklin and I will try every which way of propagating it. I'm not going to tell you where the others are. Find them yourself. Ask Elizabeth yourself.

Sally, Reed, Elizabeth and I are determined to have a special garden on campus for the sweet briar and its eleven hybrids, and, by golly, we will too. I've found a supplier of the sweet briar, but I'd rather find it wild, growing here somewhere. I'll keep looking on my bike and I'll find it, by golly. I'm not looking just on my bike either. I've been pouring over the botany books in the library, and I've already come up with an interesting clue: in England, where it is native, the sweet briar grows almost exclusively on the chalk soils. I'm not going to tell you what I'm doing with that clue either, but if you see me sniffing around the edges of fields, you'll know that I am looking for the sweet briar. Actually, one does sniff for it: the remarkable thing about the sweet briar is the unique haunting fragrance of its foliage.

Sally Bowley's dream is to be able to give every Sweet Briar graduate a healthy little sweet briar rose plant. And by golly, she will too. If I have my way it will be a wild sweet briar from Amherst County, Virginia. Thank heavens for bicycles, and thank heavens for libraries.

Rosa rubiginosa — Sweetbrier

Postscript, summer 1982. This spring, working with a clue from Elizabeth Sprague's article "Trees We Remember" in the winter 1979 Alumnae Magazine, I found two sweet briars in full bloom growing wild in a hay field near the entrance to campus. From their position — not far from the old entrance that is now a ginko-lined path — one concludes these sweet briars are remnants of the very bushes for which the plantation was named. Presumably they have been there all these years being mowed down again and again, coming back again and again, perhaps only now fortuitously reaching sufficient size to bloom and be recognized. The sweet briar is indeed a survivor! And we have successfully propagated the sweet briar. Next spring Sally Bowley will have a healthy little sweet briar bush to present to every new graduate.

Tom and Margaret Hartman came to Sweet Briar in 1981, replacing Elizabeth Wentworth of the philosophy department when she retired to Prescott, Arizona. The Hartmans have an arrangement new to Sweet Briar: they are sharing one full faculty position. The Hartmans have previously shared positions at Otterbein College, Ohio, and Knox College, Illinois. Before that, Margaret taught at Sophie Newcomb College of Tulane University while Tom taught in a one-room high school in a New Orleans maternity home. Both have Ph.D.s from the University of Rochester, where they met. Margaret's undergraduate degree is from Vassar; Tom graduated from Carnegie-Mellon.

LIBRARY GAZETTE

The Friends of the Mary Helen Cochran Library receive a bi-annual news letter, the Library Gazette, which contains information about proceedings of the Council, reports on the annual meeting, brief comments on books purchased by The Friends and articles on subjects of interest to its members.

Tom Hartman's evocative First Things is reprinted from the Winter, 1981, issue of the Library Gazette with the permission of the author and of Julia S. de Coligny '34, editor of the Gazette.

The Gazette is sent to all past and present members and to parents of new students. It would be of great interest to all past and present students who have used, for research or for relaxation, the Mary Helen Cochran Library. Membership in the Friends ranges from $5.00 for a student, $15.00 for an alumna or friend, to $3,000 for a life membership (and several categories in between). Membership fees are used primarily for the purchase of new books for the library.

the adult education/ degree program

by Caroline Bloy, Admissions Counselor

An unexpected phenomenon is taking place at Sweet Briar College. Springing up from behind boxwood and dogwood, armed with black notebooks and pencil boxes, dressed in the usual college fashion, is a bevy of aspiring mature women, curious and eager to see what higher education at Sweet Briar College is all about. Most are married, most have children, most have encouraging and supportive husbands, and initially all were terrified.

In 1980 the first brave ones approached Sweet Briar asking if it would be possible to take a course or two in order to consider entering a degree commitment at a later date. This was a step into the unknown for both the mature returning student and the college. Much to Sweet Briar's credit, it responded with encouragement, advice and a warm welcome. The risk was worth taking, the personal testimonies of those involved confirm our expectations that the program is working well for all concerned.

During the last two years, the Adult Degree Program has been slowly evolving. As the interest and number of older women increased, it became apparent that Sweet Briar had to establish guidelines and direction to the program. Consequently, in the fall of 1982 an Ad Hoc Committee on the Adult Education Program was formed. Its task was to recommend certain policies that would aid in the development of the program. Eligibility was an important question. The committee recommended that to be eligible for this program a student must be at least 26 years old, or out of formal education for at least four years. These parameters would eliminate any possible overlap with the traditional college student, and set the program distinctly apart. The committee also recommended that the admission process should be as flexible as possible, in the hopes of removing the many imaginary or real barriers which might exist for the returning students. The following procedures were suggested: none of the customary college entrance examinations would be requested. The applicant must be a high school graduate. Should the applicant's transcript reveal a major deficiency in a particular area, such as math, she would be asked to complete courses in the deficient areas before entering Sweet Briar. The applicant is also asked to submit two letters of recommendation, a description of her work experience, paid or volunteered, and a short essay on why she wishes to continue her education at Sweet Briar. Applicants may request the transfer of credits previously earned from an accredited college or university. However, 19 units must be taken at Sweet Briar in order to be eligible for the Sweet Briar degree.

Unless a student has recently been

involved in a college program, she is encouraged to begin with only one or two courses. This suggestion is always gratefully received by the returning student. The one constant typical characteristic of all re-entry students is fear — fear of performing poorly, fear of failing — and more than a few words of encouragement are needed to allay this anxiety. With this in mind the Ad Hoc Committee strongly recommended that the re-entering student be urged to avail herself of all support services on campus. Both Deans made themselves known and available for academic or personal counseling. They encouraged the returning student to use the Academic Resource Center in the library for help in the necessary study and writing skills. The Dean of Student Affairs educated them on the “dos and don’ts” of life at Sweet Briar and arranged a monthly luncheon for them. The faculty, who see them daily, have given generously of their time and help.

At present, 13 students are enrolled in the degree program, a small number but an academically strong group. Five of these students have had previous college experience. They range in age from 24 to 54 years old. All but one is married. All the married students, save two, are mothers of one to four children.

During the last academic year there were three generations of one family in attendance at Sweet Briar: Laurie Wright in Kindergarten and, in Turning Point, her mother and grandmother, Bea Wright and Barbara Fore. Six Turning Point students have full or part-time jobs. They hail from Amherst, Arrington, Bedford, Lynchburg, Madison Heights, Piney River, Roseland, and Sweet Briar. Five of these students have been nominated as Sweet Briar Scholars. The first graduate of the Turning Point program, Louise Cook Newton, graduated Summa Cum Laude and was awarded the Visual Arts prize at Commencement, 1982. The opportunity to attend Sweet Briar, to grow intellectually, and to be successful in the process has truly been a turning point in the lives of these women.

Academically no concessions have been made. Turning Point students follow the same curriculum and area requirements as the traditional student, even to the physical education requirement. So far none of the Turning Point students have made a varsity team, but that may not be far off.

The faculty is delighted with their presence in class. They contribute a different point of view because of their maturity and experience. Besides that, they are highly motivated. Their eagerness, curiosity, participation and faithful attention to the subject matter have been contagious, providing a benign affect on the younger students.

The greatest satisfaction, as far as Sweet Briar is concerned, is that the Turning Point students are equally delighted to be here. They speak openly and enthusiastically about Sweet Briar, about faculty, administration and students. They feel welcomed, wanted, and supported, and consider themselves complete members of the Sweet Briar community.

Next year, 1982-1983, the enrollment in the Turning Point program will swell to 20 with the admission of eight new returning women. All entering students will have a “little sister” assigned to them. They will all take part in an orientation program. All will sign the Honor Pledge and all will be terrified. But that too will pass, and they will soon feel confident and capable and, like their predecessors, will discover that they are wanted, welcomed and supported at Sweet Briar College.

New Faces, New Places

Dean Fontaine M. Belford

Dr. Fontaine M. Belford, formerly director of the Goucher College Center for Educational Resources, is the new Dean of Sweet Briar College succeeding Dean Beatrice P. Patt.

Dr. Belford earned her B.A. Degree at Hollins College in 1962, majoring in English, French, and philosophy. She received an A.M. degree from Yale University Divinity School in 1964 and a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature from the University of North Carolina in 1968. She has also studied at Harvard, the University of Munich, the University of Paris, and M.I.T.

She is editor of "A Once and Future Time, Steps Toward a Theology of Wholeness," and author of numerous articles, as well as several scholarly works in progress.

At Goucher, Dr. Belford not only administered, but in 1977 created the Goucher Center for Educational Resources, which serves the adult community of Baltimore. The programs she has designed and staffed include a core curriculum of 100 noncredit liberal arts courses, a Women's Management Development Institute, Public Policy Institute, Returning Women's Program, Teachers' Institute Volunteers Practicum, and Post Graduate Pre-Medical Program.

In 1979, Dr. Belford brought the Maryland State Department of Education's Summer Center for the Arts, a program for 800 gifted high school students, to Goucher College where it has become a permanent part of the program. Concurrently, she has continued to teach courses within the English Department and serves as an Adjunct Professor at the University of Maryland Medical School.

Before taking on her administrative duties at Goucher College, Dr. Belford was associate professor of English and Comparative Literature at Goucher. Before that, from 1966-1968, she was instructor in French Literature at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She also taught at Friends' Girls' School in Ramallah, Jordan; Bethune-Cookman College in Daytona Beach, Florida; and the Peace Corps Senegal II Project at Berea College in Kentucky.

Dr. Belford has lectured widely in the Baltimore area and has presented 29 papers before national and international conferences. She serves on the boards of the National Endowment for the Humanities, the American Council on Education, the Koinonia Foundation, Seabury Press, and the U.S. Association for the Club of Rome.

She is a consultant on the Baltimore Mayor's Advisory Committee on Arts and Culture, the Philadelphia Cultural Consortium, the University of Maryland Medical School, George Washington University, and the Baltimore County Board of Education.

John G. Jaffe & Patricia L. Wright

John G. Jaffe has been appointed director of the Sweet Briar Library replacing Henry James, Jr., who has retired. At the same time, Mrs. Patricia L. Wright will assume the newly created position of associate director.

Not really a new face on campus, Mr. Jaffe came to Sweet Briar as acquisitions librarian in 1979 from Bryn Mawr College where he had been acquisitions librarian, acting gifts and exchange librarian and humanities bibliographer.

He received his B.A. degree from the University of the South, Sewanee, TE, and an M.A. in English and M.S. in library science from Villanova University.

Mrs. Wright came here as circulation librarian in 1967 and was named technical services librarian and cataloguer in 1969. She served as acting head librarian in 1976-77 and during the spring term of 1980. She holds a B.A. degree from the University of Missouri and an M.S. in library science from Villanova.

Gail Donovan

Gail Donovan, formerly assistant director of University Food Services at the University of Virginia, has been appointed director of Food Services at Sweet Briar College, succeeding David B. Eames, who retired in June after 11 years in the post. Donovan will have direction of Prothro Commons, the College's chief dining facility, which was completed in the fall of 1981; the Wailes

Student Center; and catering services. She will manage a staff of 75.

Donovan earned a B.S. degree, summa cum laude, in Hotel Administration from the University of New Hampshire. She brings to her new position extensive experience in restaurant management and university food service management. Her position at the University of Virginia followed three years as food service manager of the Refectory Dining Hall at the University of Richmond; two years as food service manager of a student "Pub" at the University of Virginia; a year as director of sales and catering for a 200-room Ramada Inn; and six years as a tavern coordinator for Dunfey Family Hotels and Motor Inns, a New England chain.

Donovan has set two chief goals at Sweet Briar: (1) "to centralize food services on campus and to create a professional department, delivering consistently good quality service to the college community that will represent Sweet Briar well;" and (2) to get students involved.

"I am anxious to get students employed in catering," she says. "It will be a good learning experience. This is a mini-business, involving products, personnel, and financial management. Eventually students who develop the competence and interest can become student managers," she says.

"The University of Virginia and James Madison have over 500 students working for food services," she notes. "It's a terrific source of income for them, the time is flexible, and the experience is applicable to many other kinds of business management positions."

Marriage, career, family... can women do it all?

by Carter H. Hopkins, Director
Office of Career Planning

“Difficult”

“Hectic”

“Like juggling balls, but it works!”

“With family cooperation, anything is possible”

These remarks come from Sweet Briar graduates who have found a way to successfully combine marriage and family with full-time careers.

In March, 1982, a survey was conducted by the Office of Career Planning to determine the career patterns and career combinations of alumnae. The population polled consisted of a random sampling of 517 women who attended college between 1922 and 1980. More than a hundred questionnaires were returned, most respondents being members of the classes of 1960 through 1980.

Certain definite career patterns emerged from the data collected. In general, from the 1920s through the 1950s, more alumnae began their careers with marriage than with employment or graduate school or any combination thereof. In the 1960s, the respondents were more likely to report beginning their careers with a combination of school and job, school and marriage, or marriage and job. By the 1970s, more participants left Sweet Briar to immediately combine school and/or marriage with employment. Interestingly enough, both members of the Class of 1980 involved in this study began their careers with full-time employment.

The relationship between the respondents' undergraduate majors and their working careers proved noteworthy. Fifty-six percent of those participating in the survey had never held a job that could be considered directly related to their undergraduate majors, whereas only eighteen percent had current jobs related to their college studies. These statistics help to explain the overwhelming number of comments received on the questionnaires as to the flexibility and underlying usefulness of the liberal arts degree.

Analyses of the 1982 alumnae survey show certain trends: more Sweet Briar women are working now, at all stages of their lives and in many various career combinations; more alumnae are entering the work force directly after graduation, as well as entering or re-entering at later periods.

The respondents' advice to current students indicates that the majority believe that women must be ready to combine any number of careers at any given time, depending upon their situations, options and needs. Their responses also reflect the belief that the liberal arts education does indeed provide the basic flexibility necessary to face any changes and challenges that may arise.

Mary Frere Murchison Gornto, '69, of Wilmington, NC, is the full-time executive director of the Downtown Area Revitalization Effort, Inc.

"The various combinations and their timing have always seemed to work very well, especially with regard to our children and their needs. Take advantage of varied opportunities and experiences, including volunteer efforts. My liberal arts degree and volunteer activities enabled me to get the position as Bicentennial Director and certainly contributed to my present position. My Sweet Briar education, I am convinced, instilled in me a desire to learn and the ability to think, and though my major was chosen without any plan for using it after graduation, my involvement in historic preservation has surely benefited from my courses in American History, Art and Architecture."

Hedi Haug White, '64, of New York, NY, is the full-time president of Pambar-tim Realty Corporation.

"The most difficulty we encountered in combining marriage and job was when one spouse's employer transferred him to another state! Combining job and family is harder...to plan for school vacations and illness without having help. My husband shares as much as possible in staying home when our son is ill or on vacation. In truth, though, the lion's share of this falls to me. Personnel work and real estate work have many elements in common...dealing with, negotiating with, problem-solving with people. My psychology major was a logical foundation for both."

Olivia Benedict Maynard, '58, is the full-time chairman of the Michigan Democratic Party.

"The combination of children and career has been in balance since 1967. How? With a sense of humor, energy and luck."

Anne Green Gilbert, '69, is the full-time director and teacher of her own creative dance center in Seattle.

"If you are going to combine so many careers, you need a cooperative husband or a housekeeper!"

Doris Albray Bardusch, '41, director of admissions and assistant to the director of volunteers at St. Barnabas Medical Center in New Jersey.

"Do not let anyone talk you out of continuing to work (if you want to continue) simply because you are going to be married."

Mary Frances Brown Ballard, '49, of Wayne, PA, majored in political economy, then studied journalism in graduate school. She has recently acquired a law degree.

"I urge everyone to combine and vary experiences. Work in your field before children are born and keep in touch, at least part-time, in their early years. Moving is severely disruptive for marriage, family and career goals."

Diane DeLong Fitzpatrick, '69, of Atlanta, GA, was a history of art major at Sweet Briar. She worked full-time as a graphic designer for five years and is now a part-time art teacher.

"You must remember to put your own goals and satisfaction right up there with the demands of your family. The more there is to do, the more you will force yourself to organize and choose your priorities. Vacations are essential! I recommend the book Superwoman by Shirley Conran."

Yvonne Worley Randell, '50, of Kennesaw, GA, is a self-employed painter-sculptor who spent only one year at Sweet Briar before moving on to Emory University for her degree in nursing. She was a full-time teacher at the Emory Univ. School of Nursing until the birth of her first child, and has done her full share of volunteer work.

"So many younger women ask me how I've managed to raise five beautiful children and develop my career in art. A strong bond exists between my concern for the human condition in both nursing and as a figurative artist...chances are that I would have remained at Sweet Briar had the art department been stronger...you may serve the needs of someone else in the future by giving support to those with two loves — a family and an outside passion."

Carter Hunter Hopkins, director of career planning at Sweet Briar, received an A.B. from Sweet Briar and an M.Ed. from American University in Guidance and Counseling. Before assuming her present position she was guidance counselor at Stone Ridge Country Day School in Bethesda, Md. Carter, too, combines marriage, career and family. She and her husband, Edward M. Hopkins, and young son, Hunter, live in Amherst.

The Career Connection

You are invited to participate in an alumnae advisory network sponsored by the Office of Career Planning at Sweet Briar.

Purpose

- To provide students with a chance to test their career interests before making a commitment at graduation.
- To provide alumnae with the same chance before making job/career changes.
- To provide students and alumnae with the opportunity to learn about job market dynamics in specific occupational fields.
- To help students and alumnae make valuable contacts in their chosen career fields.

About the Program

- This is a year-round network that enables participants to provide students and alumnae with information about their jobs through internships or on-the-job "shadowing."
- To participate, register by completing the form below and returning it to the Office of Career Planning.
- The extent of your commitment is your decision. You can volunteer 30 minutes, a day, a week, a Winter Term, or a summer, depending on your schedule.
- Information will be placed in an Alumnae Network Directory in the Career Resource Center, according to your occupational field.
- Students and alumnae will contact you (or anyone you designate) about setting up internships or "shadowing" experiences.
- Even if you yourself do not want to participate actively, we would appreciate knowing if your employer offers opportunities for internships and/or "shadowing" experiences.

THE EWALD SCHOLARS SYMPOSIUM

EARLY MAN

THE SEARCH FOR ORIGINS

In the rolling foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains here in southern Virginia, about 10 miles from the headquarters of Jerry Falwell's Moral Majority campaign in Lynchburg, three of the most eminent paleoanthropologists in the world recently put aside their scientific differences to stress one point — the fact of evolution.

Speaking at a symposium at Sweet Briar College on the origins of man, Richard E. Leakey, director of the National Museum of Kenya and discoverer of important prehuman fossils there, took aim at attempts by conservative groups to push through laws requiring that a "creationist" view of earth and mankind be taught along with evolution.

"I address the question of evolution because for too long too many have been too afraid to speak out on this important matter," he told the largely undergraduate audience. "During this year, men and women across the world...will be commemorating the death of Charles Darwin 100 years ago. Charles

Darwin has become the focus for debates; his theory of evolution and natural selection has been put up to trial.

"We've had some extraordinary spectacles in parts of world, perhaps none more extraordinary than the recent episode here in our country where there was an attempt to compare scientific understanding and documentation about human origins with an interpretation based primarily on theology."

In January, a federal judge struck down a law in Arkansas that would have mandated the teaching of creationism along with evolution in public schools there. Lawsuits are pending involving another creationist law, in Louisiana.

"Evolution is not a question of theory," Mr. Leakey said. "It did occur. What is a theory is the mechanism by which evolution has happened."

Mr. Leakey noted his much-publicized dispute with another paleoanthropologist at the seminar, Donald C. Johanson, over the significance in human development of fossils Mr. Johanson found in Ethiopia in the 1970's. But, he said, "the fact of the disagreements and disputes in the field must not allow people to assume that...the idea of evolution is wrong.”

Asked later if he was aware how close he was to a center of fundamentalist opposition to evolution, he replied, ‘Of course. I lead with my chin often.’”

F. Clark Howell, director of the Laboratory for Human Evolutionary Studies at the University of California at Berkeley and moderator of the symposium, noted that there was much debate about whether evolution takes place slowly and gradually, or whether there are rapid bursts of change and long periods of stasis.

“There were probably many mechanisms at different times in different places that started different organisms,” he said. “But we know much more about [evolution] biochemically and in terms of molecular biology than ever before.”

However, scientists interested in refuting creationist ideas must realize that if they debate creationists “they are not going to win,” said Mr. Johanson, head of the Institute of Human Origins in Berkeley.

“These people are incredibly well prepared. They know the media, they know how to manipulate the media, they know how to act in front of a camera. Most scientists are not well prepared,” he said.

“The other thing is that by debating them you do give them credibility,” Mr. Johanson said. “What has happened is that people are debating the same points people argued a hundred years ago, but they are doing it under the guise that creationism is science.”

“The threat which stems from the creationist movement, the fundamentalist movement, goes beyond the threat to evolution,” he said. “Because if you throw out evolution, you are throwing out physics, you are throwing out chemistry and biology. You’re throwing out the basis of all modern science, and this is anti-intellectual. The last thing human beings need today is a new movement in the direction of anti-intellectualism.”

He acknowledged that only scientists could successfully point out the flaws in the creationists’ arguments. “Scientists do go into court,” he said, and “the laws are being beaten.”

Despite their agreement on the dangers of creationism, the appearances of Mr. Leakey and Mr. Johanson at the symposium emphasized their scientific differences.

The two have been involved in a heated — at least by scholarly norms — dispute over whether fossils found by Mr. Johanson in Ethiopia do, as he claims, represent a species of ape ancestral both to humans and to a group of apes known as Australopithecus that died out about a million years ago.

Mr. Leakey claims the fossils represent a more primitive form of Australopithecus and are not part of the human evolutionary line.

In scholarly conferences and papers and in public media, as well, the two have pressed their views — Mr. Leakey in his television series entitled The Making of Mankind, broadcast in Britain in 1981, and in a book of the same name; Mr. Johanson in a work that was a Book-of-the-Month Club selection, Lucy: The Beginnings of Humankind, titled after the nickname of a skeleton he discovered.

Mr. Leakey, the son of the famous anthropologists Louis and Mary Leakey, agreed to attend the Sweet Briar symposium only on the condition that he not appear at the same time as Mr. Johanson. The last time the two appeared together, sparks flew.

On a segment of Walter Cronkite's television series "Universe," Mr. Leakey refused to fill in his version of man's family tree on a chart Mr. Johanson had prepared outlining his own theory.

Mr. Leakey handed the chart back to Mr. Johanson, then abruptly crossed out Mr. Johanson's side and put a big question mark in the space left for his views. "I'm not going to say if you're right or wrong...I think you're wrong," he told Mr. Johanson.

So at Sweet Briar, Mr. Leakey gave two lectures on the first day of the symposium and left early the next day to fly back to Nairobi, hours before Mr. Johanson arrived for his two lectures.

Catherine H. C. Seaman, chairman of the anthropology and sociology department at Sweet Briar, was credited by officials there with exercising a great deal of finesse in arranging the symposium.

A tape of the "Universe" segment was shown on the second session of the symposium, after Mr. Leakey was en route home. And the announcement of the segment was indicated in the printed program only by "film presentation — to be determined."

During his lectures, Mr. Leakey refused to be pinned down on several scientific points, although he acknowledged that one famous skull that he discovered in Kenya was younger than he had contended for several years. In line with other scientists, he now believes it to be about 2 million years old, he said, instead of the 2.6 million years originally thought.

He also seemed to be trying to play down the significance of his dispute with Mr. Johanson, saying several times that a scientist's interpretation of ambiguous fossil remains depends on his particular perspective and training.

Despite his important fossil discoveries at sites in Kenya known as Koobi Fora and Lake Turkana, Mr. Leakey appeared to seek the role of senior statesman, saying that with his responsibilities as the director of the Kenyan museum and its staff of 400, "I can only do my fossils as a hobby. If I spent more than a weekend a month at Lake Turkana, I'd be lucky. and I haven't been to Koobi Fora for more than a spell of four or five days since about 1972."

He does have a permanent research camp at Lake Turkana, however, where assistants he has trained conduct research.

Mr. Johanson, on the other hand, relished pointing out his differences with Mr. Leakey. At one of his lectures, he said, "As you may or may not know, this was originally intended to be a public debate, which because of certain circumstances did not come about. So we have an opportunity, I think unfortunately, to present our views separately."

He also noted that while Richard Leakey had written about what he believed to be the essentially cooperative nature of early man, "I think there is evidence in the fossil record of aggression, and, in fact, we will learn more about this this spring. There is an important specimen which has been found which shows signs of aggression."

He wouldn't say anything more about the fossil, except that a press release was being prepared and that information about the fossil would be released in May.

The April issue of the American Journal of Physical Anthropology contains a complete description of the fossils he collected in eastern Ethiopia in the 1970's, he said, providing the detailed evidence on which he based his theories. But Mr. Johanson also stressed that those theories might change after he conducts three months of field work in the area this fall. It will be the first extensive work there since 1977, when political upheaval made work impossible.

In moderating the symposium, Mr. Howell of Berkeley warned that it was natural for scientists, as human beings, to let their personalities become involved in disputes over data. But that also gets in the way of science, said Mr. Howell, who is generally credited with introducing the interdisciplinary approach to field work that now characterizes the best digs.

"You have to be prepared to change your mind. It is what science is all about. But people do insist on taking sides," he said, "rather than trying to stand back and look at the evidence, question the evidence, and ask other people's advice. When there is polarization, we ultimately never get anywhere."

"Science changes; controversies come and go, as do scientists. But the evidence is still there, and some way or other there has to be a better way of wringing the truth out of the evidence," he said.

"Thirty-five years ago, there was no modern view of human evolution; there was no fossil record to speak of. Now there is a cascade of evidence. The question is how we deal with it."

Kermit the Frog, and others, advise the class of 1982!

It's not clear whether Kermit referred to "hallowed halls" or "hollowed halls" when he spoke to Harvard University's graduating class last spring.

"I've been in hallowed (or hallowed) halls before, but this place is really seriously hallowed... it out-hallows anyplace I've been for a while."

Kermit went on to extoll the benefits of a college education.

"From here on," he said, "it's smooth sailing on friendly seas. As you set out on the great vacation of life, think of Harvard as the travel agent, arranging the trip, making all your flight reservations and even booking you a table at the best restaurant."

Other speakers at other graduations were not quite so sanguine as the celebrated Muppet, but many expressed an optimistic outlook for the Class of 1982, especially for women.

Sarah Porter Boehmler, '65, a vice-president of the American Stock Exchange and mother of three children, spoke at Sweet Briar's ceremonies.

"Women today have a greater variety of alternatives...career, marriage, motherhood, social involvement...this new-found freedom brings burdens...to strike a balance between these demands."

The Rev. Janice Lee, delivering the baccalaureate sermon at Sweet Briar, said "Life without growth and change is death. Each one of you is going on to growth and change in your life...for each of us, the future will be different. We each will have choices...of saying yes, or saying no. My prayer for you is that you be open to the freedom you have to make your own choices."

At Kenyon College, Alan Alda addressed the graduates. "I wanted to give you," he said, "a world that respected you as a woman as much as it did me as a man. I wanted the pledge of that respect in words that couldn't be broken. I wanted it engraved in the Constitution of our country. But unless a miracle happens Sweet Briar College within the next 37 days, you're not going to get it. You'll pay the same taxes as a man, Congress can choose to draft you just like a man, but you won't be guaranteed equality of rights under the law...not this year and not next year and maybe not for this century."

I attended graduation at Ithaca College where my son Harold was among some 900 students receiving degrees. We enjoyed beautiful weather, a view up Lake Cayuga and a remarkable speaker.

Jane Bryant Quinn is a financial writer and television reporter. She didn't start out in that direction. She, too, had choices to make. These choices led her in unexpected directions.

"Whenever I hear my official job history read off, I am struck by how misleading it is," she said.

"It sounds as if I ascended life's ladder, step by glorious step, accompanied by loud applause. If the same thing doesn't start happening to you right away, you may think something is wrong. But I fell through a lot of steps along the way — jobs applied for but not gotten, failed publications, disappointing jobs, wrong decisions. For years, I had no firm idea of where I was going. The official biography shows that I have leaped the chasm. The full, uncensored biography shows that I leaped that chasm in two bounds.

"The topic today is foresight, otherwise known as 'what is going to become of me?'

"Some of you will put that question off for a couple of years by going to graduate school. When I sat where you are sitting, I had my own ticket to graduate school. Over the summer, I faced the fact that the only reason I was going on to school was that I was too scared to look for work. When I found a job, and another way to frame my future, I took it.

"For those of you who are starting on your careers, or who are still looking for a career to start, the future is much less certain. It sometimes seems that no matter which way you ride, it is uphill and against the wind. But think back four years, when you first came here...back then you were starting something new, and wondering what would happen to you. Well, now you know what happened. And four years from now, you will have answered the questions you have today. Something will happen to you, something will turn up, and chance will play a part.

"It is a very interesting time that you are walking into. The famous baby-boom generation created an enormous distortion in the job market. When they started getting out of college, about ten years ago, they descended upon an economic system that was not ready for them. There were simply more people than jobs. Unemployment went up. Average incomes went down. A lot of educated people failed to get the kind of work they were qualified for. A deep malaise set in.

"But your generation and the people coming after you are something else again. You may not realize it, but you are referred to in demographic and economic circles as the baby bust. You are the start of a much smaller generation. This fact changes your collective future and changes it for the better.

"The baby-boom generation has gradually found its way into the economy, found jobs, bought houses, started families. The economy has expanded tremendously in order to accommodate them. You hear mostly about the inflation of the past few years, and the unemployment of the past 12 months. What you do not hear is that until very recently the economy was creating new jobs at a record rate, new businesses, new export markets, higher levels of real growth. This tremendous, and forced, expansion had its costs. But the fact remains that you are being presented with a significantly larger national economy than existed ten years ago, and there are fewer of you to inherit it.

"This means that your prospects should be better. At the start, your way may be blocked a bit by the huge generation ahead of you. Because of their numbers, they cannot advance as fast as they'd like. But as time passes, and the present working population ages, there will be a shortage of workers. The brains industries, in particular, will need every ounce of brains they can scrape up. Population studies have suggested that smaller generations do better, economically, than larger generations. There are simply fewer people to split the proceeds. So unlike those who preceded you, you are starting out a step ahead.

"The women among you, who plan to work, will also do better than those who preceded you. When I got my first writing job in New York, 20 years ago, female writers were often paid 30 percent less than men who did the same work, and that was when a female writer could find a job at all! I got one of the most important jobs of my budding career by agreeing to be known as J.B. Quinn, so that no one would know the terrible truth that I wasn't a man.

"On the entry level, much of that job discrimination is gone. But there's still a quota system. Every manager has a sense of how many women are enough, and although women may be equal on an entry level, men are still progressing faster. Women in general have not yet made it past the middle-level jobs. I speak here of both black and white women, who are doing about equally well. Black men of equal education start out about the same as white men, but they too fall behind as the years go by. My generation has established the right to work, and the right to equal pay...but that's all. It is your generation that will have to fight the battle for equal promotion, right to the top.

"I feel a certain sadness when young working women tell me that women should have children or careers, but not both. That is exactly what I used to hear 20 years ago. My generation generally chose children, the next generation chose careers. I don't know what your generation will choose. Yet hundreds of thousands of women who want both, have both.

"It's helpful to have children when you're young, before your career has advanced very far. This is true for both men and women. On the bottom rungs of the work ladder, you have few responsibilities, which means that you have much more time to give to your children. Babies and starting jobs go together better than you realize. By the time you have advanced enough in your career so that you have to work late from time to time, or take business trips or bring work home on weekends, your children have grown into teenagers and they don't want to see you anyway.

"In looking for work, now or in the future, I urge you to consider any opportunity that seems to offer something better, in terms of personal responsibility. It might be a job that had never occurred to you to think about...the way economic reporting had never occurred to me. If you take that job, with increased responsibilities, you might find that it interests you far beyond anything you might have imagined.

"I urge you to keep alive the spirit of inquiry which, with any luck, you have learned here. I urge you to keep your circle of acquaintance wide, so that you will always have fresh points of view. I hope that you will listen to your critics. If you can't answer them adequately, maybe they have something. I pray that you will worry if you start sounding like everyone else you know.

"This country desperately needs citizens who can look beyond their own narrow interests to those of the nation as a whole. Charles Peters of the Washington Monthly wrote that what we need is a rebirth of patriotism... "not of flag flaunting, my-country-right-or-wrong jingoism, but of a loyalty to the national community, that will cause each person to ask what is best for all of us, at the same time that he asks what is best for himself...a patriotism that says that there is something else besides our own special groups to take into account — the welfare of our nation and our people as a whole."

Junior Year in France Marks 35th Year

This year, 1982-83, Sweet Briar's Junior Year in France program will celebrate its 35th anniversary. According to Robert G. Marshall, Director, there will be three celebrations: one in New York in the fall, one in Paris in January, and one at Sweet Briar in the spring.

It is hoped that the Sweet Briar celebration will evolve into a "mini-reunion" primarily for alumnae who took part in the Junior Year program and/or majored in modern languages or foreign relations, though all interested alumnae will be welcome.

Mary Morris Gamble Booth '50 will serve as chairman for this celebration. The program, which will run from noon on Friday, March 5 through noon on Saturday, March 6 will have Paul Simon, Representative from Illinois as its main speaker. Mark these dates on your calendar now, and you will receive more information later.

For History Buffs

To readers who are interested in British history (19th century). I wish to recommend Victorian Viceroy, a life of the second Lord Lytton, by E. Neill Raymond, son of Prof. Dora Neill Raymond, who taught history at Sweet Briar from 1925 to 1949. She was my freshman advisor and history professor; as a senior I also enjoyed her course in Modern European History.

With the support of a John Simon Guggenheim Foundation grant for a sabbatical year (1949-50), Mrs. Raymond went to England to pursue her Lytton researches, chiefly in the Royal Archives at Windsor Castle and in the British Museum.

It was in England that she suffered a stroke, which sadly brought to an end her research and her teaching career.

Many years later, after his retirement from a career in the federal government, Neill Raymond assembled his mother's notes, conducted further extensive research himself, and wrote the Lytton biography, which she had hoped to complete.

In this book Robert Lytton moves through high social and political circles, where his friends include Disraeli and the Queen herself, Robert and Elizabeth Browning and others whose names are familiar to even casual readers of British history.

Victorian Viceroy was published in 1980 by Regency Press, of New York and London. Surely, Prof. Raymond would have been proud of her son's achievement. He has produced an interestingly readable biography of Robert Lytton, whom Victoria named the first Earl of Lytton, shortly before his Viceregal term ended in 1880. That year the Liberals were swept into office and Disraeli's and Lytton's resignations were tendered to the sovereign simultaneously.

Lytton's diplomatic career was crowned with his appointment as Ambassador to France, a post he held with distinction from 1887 until his death in Paris in 1891.

This book represents exhaustive research, including recent interviews with descendants of Robert and Edith Lytton. The reader travels with Lytton and his family, moving from one diplomatic post in Europe to another, and residing at intervals at Knebworth, their beloved home in Hertfordshire. The book also traces Lytton's life-long compulsion to write poetry, most of which was published under his pseudonym, Owen Meredith.

Neill Raymond has written a well-rounded biography. With a balanced presentation of his strengths and foibles, Lytton emerges as an engaging person, a man who has been largely overshadowed by the greater roles played by many of his contemporaries, military, political and literary.

Politics out of Place

I find myself out of tune with those of you who write and assemble the Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine. In your recent issue the article "Acting Machines and the Theatricalization of State" offended me. To me the article seemed to take aim directly at Mr. Reagan. I feel that politics are out of place in your college alumnae magazine, especially at a time when Sweet Briar is trying to build a broader base of alumnae support (as evidenced by student calls for the Alumnae Fund).

Carolyn Montgomery Lange '48
Houston, TX

Ann Reams, director of the Alumnae Association responds:

We appreciate your writing your concerns about the article. It was submitted following Joe Roach's presentation of one of our Winter Forum lectures as part of the Alumnae Association's town-gown, continuing education program. The talk was excellent and even though these same remarks were made, when spoken and delivered with a smile and a sense of humor they did not come across as critically as they could be interpreted in the written article. In fact, it was such a good lecture and enjoyed by so many people that it was printed at the request of quite a few alumnae.

I am sorry that you were offended, but happy to know that you follow our magazine so closely. Please continue to let us know your reaction to other articles. Our readers' comments and opinions mean a great deal to us.

"Platitudinous Ponderosity"

The editorial on page 9 of the Summer 1982 issue of the Alumnae Magazine struck a responsive chord. I suffer when I read such "platitudinous ponderosity" — for example the preceding article by Professor Joseph R. Roach, Jr.!

It brought to mind the enclosed bit of foolishness which my father, a scholar, minister of the Gospel, priest of the Episcopal Church, and teacher, gave to us when we were children. I have added a few words here and there, which you will recognize, bringing it up to date!

"In promulgating your esoteric cogitations and articulating your superficial sentimentalities and psychological observations, beware of platitudinous ponderosity. Let your conversational communications possess a clarified conciseness, a concatenated cogency, a coalescent consistency. Eschew jejune babblement, asinine affectation and flatulent garrulity, and sedulously avoid polysyllabic profundity and vainglorious rhodomontade.

Disregarding the foregoing meaningful expertise actualizes the potentiality of crustified exegesis, antispasmodically emanating from the germ of the animal refrigerator, thereby producing a prolific source of irritability in the pericranial epidermis of the mental profundity, resulting in an ongoing cerebral deficiency."

Incidentally, my father was son of the first Reverend Arthur P. Gray of Amherst, for whom Gray Hall was named. My father, A. P. Gray, Jr., taught the entering Academy students, among whom was my aunt, Ellen Douglas Gray.

Academy and Specials

When Helen Link Weidely wrote, she was looking forward to two trips — the first to another grandson's wedding in Connecticut in May and the other to the World's Fair in September. She had just received her 200-hour pin for hospital auxiliary work. One grandson lives in Hawaii; another, in London; a third is the chief photographer for the Army's # 1 parachute team, the Golden Knights (his wife is their chief journalist); still another works for IBM; and the youngest grandson graduated from Boston U. Her granddaughter had just been selected outstanding caseworker in her district and honored with a luncheon at Radford College. She graduated at VPI and got her master's in social services at Va. Commonwealth U.

Margaret Davies McMillin, Chattanooga, TN, has two daughters; her only son, Lt. Douglas McMillin, was killed in action in World War II. She also has three great-granddaughters and one great-grandson.

Jean O. Harris writes from the Camelot Hall Nursing Home in Harrisonburg, VA, that she often thinks of her happy days at Sweet Briar and remembers favorite teachers like Miss Helen Young, who taught her music.

Katherine Griffith Murphy, Warsaw, VA, has two children. Her daughter Ann, whose husband is president of the Va. Manufacturer's Association, has three children and lives in Richmond. Katherine's son, a lawyer, represents Northern Neck in the House of Delegates, following in the footsteps of his late father, who served there 20 years and was treasurer of the state under Gov. Colgate Darden. The son and his wife Helen Turner Murphy '56 have one daughter.

Mabel Cato Tillar is a wheelchair patient in the Convalescent Center of Sunnyside Presbyterian Home, Harrisonburg, VA, but is able to receive visitors. Her husband died in 1979. Ruth Jackson Leatherman, also at Sunnyside, is now in the Health Care Center because of the need for increased physical care.

Now that she has moved to Rivermont Avenue, Martha W. Massie misses painting what she could see from the windows of her Court Street apartment in Lynchburg. She enjoyed her years at Sweet Briar.

Alberta Hensel Pew and Edwina Hensel Smith, twin 90-year-olds, had a wonderful winter of balmy weather and sunshine in Naples, FL.

Mattie Walker Worth, Charlotte, NC, enjoys showing her May Court pictures to friends who didn't know her in 1918. She remembers how slow the train trip to Lynchburg was in those days — quite different from the three SB Alumnae-sponsored overseas trips she has been on more recently.

Martha Steele McNaghten will be 90 in July, but she is well and lives alone — six winter months in Arizona and the other six in her hometown of Hutchinson, KS. Mary McClintock Norton, Forrest City, AR, is 91 and "almost inactive." She says she is not in touch with her SB contemporaries. Grace Talmadge Davis, however, has kept up with two of her Sweet Briar friends for 60 years — Ailane Bethel Metcalf from Rhode Island and Elaine Wiecek Thimmerasch from Baton Rouge — although she has seen them only once during this time. Now a widow, crippled, and living alone, Grace is mainly interested in her family, which includes seven grandchildren and six great-grands.

Helen Eubank Garber enjoys living in an Episcopal retirement home in Birmingham with lots of her girlhood friends. Her two children are a great pleasure. Her son, who lives in Birmingham, has two children: Al, III, is an electrical engineer at Ala. Power Co. and Betsy graduated from Vanderbilt and is in her second year of law at U. of Ala. Helen's daughter, who lives in Anniston, has three married children: her daughter lives in Anniston, and her sons, in Birmingham.

Katherine Copeland Bell, a widow, has retired to Kinston, NC, where she was born, and enjoys living in a small Southern town with friends and family. Since both her sons are in Eastern North Carolina, she sees them often. She has a grandson and a granddaughter.

Alice Hogg Seneff has moved to Pittsburgh from Maine and is living in the Episcopal Church Home. While she misses her friends in Madawaska and Edmondson, Canada, she has family and friends in Pittsburgh too. Martha Easley Shott also felt it was time for her to make a change, although she is still well at 88. She has sold her house and now lives in the Glenwood Park Retirement Home in Princeton, WV.

Nannie Claiborne Hudson, Amherst, VA, has just celebrated her 89th birthday, but she spent the past winter helping the Rev. Ralph Fall collect data for his book, The Descendants of the Four Sons of the Rev. Robert Rose, a follow-up of his book, The Diary of Rev. Robert Rose, on the early Episcopal Church in Virginia. She still plays bridge often and enjoys her garden club, reading, and TV.

Another bridge player is Miriam Jones Vander Voort, who came in second in her latest duplicate tournament. She had a cataract operation with lens implant while spending three months in Pampano Beach but had fun anyway. Now home in Verona, NJ, she still can't drive; however, she stays busy with UDC work and enjoys being taken out by her grandchildren.

Jane Snow Thomas, now 90, and her husband, a Yale graduate, live in Nokomis, FL. They have one son. Jane remembers that at Sweet Briar she lived in Gray and her roommate was Eugenia Culbertson Fowler.

Because of an invalid husband and the fact that she doesn't drive, Katherine Withers Hamilton finds her life centers around books, country pursuits, and, above all, her beloved Irish Wolfhounds. Without much to do but think, she feels fortunate in still having something left to think with at 86.

Bess Kell Blair, 88 and crippled somewhat from a broken hip sometime ago, now lives in an apartment in a very large complex for older people in Wichita Falls, TX. She is pleased that her old family home has become Heritage Society property and is therefore well taken care of.

Eudalia White Lahrke, who broke her back a year and a half ago when she fell down her stairs, even now feels quite a lot of pain, but she is still active and feels lucky to be alive. When she wrote, she was hoping to fly to California to see her son and daughter-in-law, three grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Two granddaughters live in New Jersey, near enough to visit often.

Fanita Ferris Welsh, now 86, has lived happily in a cottage at Presbyterian Home, Evanston, IL, for seven years. It is a beautiful place with flowering shrubs and is one of the best retirement homes in the U.S.A. She spends six weeks in February and March at Arizona Inn, Tuscon, AZ. She has four grandchildren and one great-grandson living in various parts of the country — mostly in the East.

Clare Shanahan Boyd writes from Plainfield, NH, of her life-long interest in unearthing — quite literally from excavating the cellar-hole on her New England farm and also from looking in antique shops — 18th and 19th century china and earthenware made in England. She ended with a large collection of 18th century painted earthenware, creamwares, salt-glaze pieces, black glazed, cane-ware, etc. and from the early 19th century, painted wares, printed wares, lustres and even slip-wares and ironstone. To give her collection a permanent home, she offered it to the Smithsonian Institution, which, on the recommendation of its ceramic expert, accepted 400 pieces. The gift, which Clare calls "Ceramics Available to the Common People," is now represented by a few pieces in the Recent Accessions Case.

Polly Bissell Ridler (Mrs. Earl S.), 100 Waterway Rd., Apt. 201 E, Tequesta, FL 33458

Fund Agent

Jane Henderson, Forest, VA 24551

Elizabeth Spahr Lytle is still living with her daughter, but they have moved to Woodstock, VT.

Elsie Palmer Parkhurst, now 86 and retired to domesticity, keeps busy with the 16-room house in Kingston, PA, where she and her husband enjoy frequent visits from their descendants — four children, 16 grandchildren, and 11¾ great-grands. However, one daughter lives in Honolulu. Three grandchildren are still in college — boys at Lafayette and Princeton and a girl at Boston College.

Ruth McClravy Logan, who writes that she is very much a senior citizen and the last living member of her family, is living in a senior citizen home in Oakland, CA. She recalls that she transferred from Vassar to SBC because of the climate and Sweet Briar's resident M.D. After graduation she served in the Navy for almost a year. Later she was a long-time president of the San Francisco Sweet Briar Club and is still a loyal alumna.

Margaret Gibson Bowman has been fighting cancer for several years. Since it is in recession at present, she went to Bermuda for seven weeks and plans 10 weeks in Maine this summer. She lives in a lovely retirement hotel, "30-30 Park," in Bridgeport CT, near her son and her granddaughter. She also has a great-grandson.

Faithful secretary Polly Bissell Ridler was not able to compile these notes because of a broken wrist. She regrets that it also prevented her from returning for Reunion.

Dorothy Job Robinson's sister who lives in Kentucky tells us news of her writer sister who lives in Wales. She says Dorothy keeps up with her education by taking courses in English and Russian. She is a founder of the Soroptomist Club of Wales, which is composed of executive and professional business women. She is especially proud of her daughter, who lives in Kent and commutes to London, where she is secretary to one of the top executives of the "Distillery" — the largest corporation in Great Britain. The daughter is also a writer and in her younger days was on the British International Ball-room Dancing Team.

Gertrude Pauly Crawford, our ex-class secretary, has the happy habit of wintering every year in Florida, but her real joy is a new great-grandson. She lives in Grosse Pointe Woods, MI.

Mary "Lette" McLemore Matthews of Norfolk, VA, writes an enthusiastic message about her "up and going" life of bridge, mah-jongg, membership in two garden clubs and in the Altar Guild, where she helped to raise, through a book store and gift shop, $7,000 for missions. She takes time to call on shut-ins and sick friends and sees frequently her two daughters and "feels mightily blessed."

Shelley Rouse Aagesen "made" California for Thanksgiving but was disheartened to discover that several in her age bracket had "busted" themselves and were in nursing homes. She hopes we're not the same.

Frances Evans Ives is happily relinquishing most of her board memberships but is still interested in a few clubs like the AAUW, which annually raises thousands of dollars for scholarships. She finds writing light verse is more fun, and she is in the process of publishing a book — if her "courage and stamina hold out." Her family seem to elude the home port of Montclair, NJ. Her daughter spends much time in Orient, Long Island, and her son has just returned from Nigeria. One granddaughter is in California and another is doing graduate work at the U. of Barada in India.

Elizabeth (Lette) Shoop Dixon of Suffolk, VA, says she is still able to live alone, enjoy her friends, play bridge, walk a lot, and spend six weeks in Georgia with her "beloved" sister.

Gertrude Anderson of Findlay, OH, says she must be in good health because she shoveled a lot of snow this past winter. Her greatest disability is deafness which isn't helped by a hearing aid, but she keeps active and enjoys life.

Marion North Lewin of Fairhaven, MA, escaped the wintry blasts by visiting her actress daughter in California. Even at her "advanced age" she has enrolled in a university class to study Shakespeare.

Edith Durrell Marshall, of perpetual motion, left her home in Cincinnati to travel to Amherst to visit her daughter Ann Whitley '47. Ann is the one who has been "digging" on the College campus with Helen McMahan '23 and unearthed many artifacts, enough to stock a museum and to provide material for a slide-talk program that she has presented to clubs. Edith has been to Washington, DC, and returned to SBC for our 60th. She summers at Lake Leelanau, MI, where she makes delicious strawberry preserves for friends and the church bazaar. She is historian of her Presbyterian church and in charge of the archives there.

Louise Pochat Hattersley and her husband live in a garden apartment in a retirement home in Cincinnati. They have done a great amount of traveling throughout the U.S. and in Canada, Mexico, South America, Europe, and the Near East, including Turkey, plus a number of cruises. While she is aware that these trips are past history, the memories are a joy to her. Louise has a son in Cincinnati, a daughter in Dayton, OH, five grandchildren; and two "greats."

Ruth Geer Boice, who lives in a retirement home in Toledo, OH, says her greatest thrill this past year was to return to the old family home and find that the young people who bought it revered its basic beauty, making Ruth both proud and happy. She is content where she is and holds fond memories of her classmates in '21.

Florence Woelfel Elston of Chicago has received special honor from the Eisenhower Scholarship Foundation, on whose board she served. At present, after being its president, she is treasurer of the Henrotin Hospital. She writes about her four wonderful days in Washington, where the members of the Boxwood Circle were royally entertained. The Curator of the White House, who is also on the SBC Board of Overseers, arranged for an extensive tour of the rooms. Florence had the pleasure of being with Anne Pannell Taylor at a dinner at which she was the speaker. She also met Missie McGinnis McClain '54, whose husband is a former Sweet Briar chaplain.

Florence Ives Hathaway of Abington, MA, had three high points this year. The first was being able to attend our 60th. She wrote, "From being a 'meek and humble freshman' in '17, I felt a surge of great pride at the long strides of growth in my alma mater. It has attained stature as it devoted itself to maintain serious purposefulness." The second memorable event was a gathering of the Ives Clan at the Home of a cousin in Greenwich, CT. It was he who in his capacity as attorney made it possible for our College to receive a generous yearly grant. The third high point was the awarding to the Hathaways' older son, Richard, a full professorship at Norwich U. in Vermont. Florence reports three children and ten grandchildren.

Isabel Godwin Bailey of Hendersonville, NC, writes that she had been in good health until recently when the arthritis she has been harboring settled in her hip, causing extreme pain. Her son has placed her in a rest home in Greensboro near him and his wife. She is really homesick, but above all she wants to go to her grandson's wedding in Bronxville, NY. We hope she makes it!

Maynette Rozelle Stephenson of Orange, CA, our class president emeritus, writes a spunky message from her convalescent abode saying that although she walks with a chair, she takes part in a splendid activity program of cooking, music, and ceramic classes. She has a daughter and four grandchildren nearby.

Emma Adams Kyle has joined the nursing home club. She finds Kimberly Hall, which is just outside her hometown of Windsor, CT, a "very pleasant place to be."

Secretary

Cordelia (Deedie) Kirkendall Barricks, (Mrs. Arthur A.) 100 Bay Place, Apt. 2101, Oakland, CA 94610

I know, unfortunately, that our ranks are dwindling, but the rest of you are no older than I, so please write to me. You don't want me only featured in the column.

I'm writing this early, because I'll be away when the notes are due. Should you write in after this goes to press I'll have to wait another year to have your news in 1925's column.

I'm going to Anniston, AL, to help celebrate Kess's 80th birthday. I again will be his daughter's house guest. I was there last October when I was "queen" for more than a day. I sent my collection of crosses, via Trailways, and gave a lecture on my crosses at Anniston's Museum. Kess's daughter Tora was in charge of the beautiful tea which followed my program. I had cocktails in the charming, beautiful home of Clare and Eulalie Jenkins Draper '52. I had the pleasure of meeting her parents and some of her friends. It was a delightful time.

I've mentioned Kess before, my friend since 1921. I used to be one of his "drags" at West Point way back when. From Anniston I'll visit my cousin's widow in Ocean Springs, MS. Before I went to Anniston last October, Kess met me in Baltimore, where we visited another daughter of his, and we then went to Pennsylvania to visit my sister and my niece and her husband. It seems to be "All in the Family." From Pennsylvania we went to West Point for the Army-

Brown football game. Army won. On this trip we drove through the campuses of VMI, W&L, and VPI, where Kess was a student before going to West Point. I remember going on a blind date to W&L, because Bill Kuykendall and I shared the last name, although spelled differently. You can imagine the fun I had with 700 men to 70 dates.

Enough of me for a while. Giddy Kinsley Whitehead sent me her beautiful Christmas card, showing the photo of the restored and enlarged Whitehead home. Her daughter and her husband now live with her — a joy for all. Giddy is quite well, except for arthritis.

Ione McKenzie Walker now lives in a retirement home, The Westminster-Canterbury House in Lynchburg.

Helen Bane Davis has moved to a different location in Greenville, SC. We hope both Ione and Helen will be happy and healthy in their new homes.

I was supposed to be with Freddie Bernhard and Hellen Mowry Fell, Class of 1924, in February for brunch in San Francisco, but alas! I was in my apartment for eight days, because of high blood pressure and dizziness. I'm fine again. Perhaps I am a "Dizzy-Lizzie." Freddie spends every summer in the East with her sister. Sorry not to have news of these lassies for you.

We had our Sweet Briar Day luncheon on Dec. 29th at an attractive restaurant "La Mere DuQuesne" in San Francisco. We numbered 12. I was picked up by Susie Evans Reeves '68 and Mary Sturr Cornelius '62. Others in attendance were Anne Wimbish Kasanin '59, Penn Willets Mullin '66, Comer Schmoeller Mori '71, Pat Potter Duncan and Edie Vongehr Bridges '41, Pat Layne Winks '52,

Jane Holden Walker '39, Amoret Thlssell '82 (an SBC senior), and yours truly '25.

Josephine Guion Hunt, who was a resident at St. Paul's Towers where I live, died in April. She was at one time a physical education teacher at Sweet Briar and was the widow of a retired general, a West Point graduate. Her sister was Dr. Connie Guion, whom many of us remember so well. Mrs. Hunt was in her 90's.

Now I'll have to continue with myself. I spent Christmas in Kennewick, WA, with my oldest son and daughter-in-law and their married daughters and families. My bachelor son, Fred, accompanied me. He is the one who has such circulatory trouble. He can never be better, but we must rejoice he is holding his own. I now have three great-sons, two boys and a girl. Two live locally and one is in the Northwest. Never a dull moment when we are together — such fun, too, but strenuous.

Christmas ran into my birthday celebration in January. Kess came out to celebrate with me. His granddaughter and her family, as well as my local family, helped make me forget I am 79. I was glad I was able to walk off some of the calories when we toured the Hearst Castle at San Simeon. I was even able to negotiate 300 steps.

I hope this finds you and yours "in the pink" and not "in the red" after paying your tribute to Uncle Sam.

The following items came in after the above was written: Gertrude McGiffert MacLennan wrote that they have had nine guests so far this season, expected six more the next week, and then more in April. She and Don love it. They are taking a course in Citrus Production, Marketing and Management at Polk Community College, and she is taking another, Landscaping and Home Gardening — both very interesting. After a bad freeze the weather had been warm, and the trees were bursting with bloom when she wrote.

Estelle (Teddy) Schofield Thompson and husband have moved from Grand Rapids, MI, to Ft. Lauderdale, FL. Virginia Burke Miller and husband have moved from Boynton Beach, FL, to Englewood, CO. We wish them health and happiness in their new homes.

Last fall was the first Council Meeting I attended when "Miss Rogers" was not present to give each alumna a warm and individual welcome, but it was a delight to stay with Chaplain Mike Bloy and his charming wife. My delightful roommate from Parkersburg, WV, happened to live next door to one of Jimmy's cousins!

The extension of the Meta Glass dining room, recently named Prothro Commons, has glorious views of the farm and the Blue Ridge Mountains. The Founders' Day Festivities were especially inspiring. Professor Richard Rowland gave the sensitive and mirth-provoking address called "The Founders, a Personal View," which appeared in the winter issue of this magazine. So many trees and bushes have grown around the Monument the views are not as extensive, but the march to the hilltop was led by the very stirring Amherst County Band!

There should be some more 50th wedding anniversaries coming soon. Anne Mason Brent Winn gave a vivid account of the Winns' celebration.

"June 21, 1980, John and I celebrated our 50th....All three of the children were here and gave us a magnificent party with a gold and white striped tent, music, champagne, and old friends and family....Almost a year later John died quietly in his sleep....I keep busy in the too big house, but I can't face moving. I still work with the Philharmonic Woman's Guild and the museum and go fox-hunting twice a week with Winnie West Morriss '28....Have a darling young woman and 8-year-old Jennifer living here. It helps." Anne Mason plans to spend Christmas in New Zealand with her daughter Mason and her family.

I have been on cloud nine ever since last June when our doctor son Bennett, his wife Cynthia and their three daughters invited so many relatives and old friends that 79 sat down for dinner after cocktails at the Bethlehem Club. My sister Helen Bean Emery '34 and her husband Natt had all of us for a picnic at noon the next day. Tracy Bean Kenny '66, who came to Sweet Briar the year Meta Glass Dorm opened, her husband Fred, Sister, Randy and parents George and Betty Lee Bean had T-shirts for every one of the relatives (emblazoned in front with green bean pods on a white background). The range in age was 2 to 80!

I invited Natalie Sidman Smith and Nancy Coe '30 to visit us for the Bach Festival, held in the gorgeous and newly restored Lehigh U. Chapel the middle of May. Lee spent the winter in Florida and went from Del Ray Beach to Key West to north of Sarasota. She enjoyed seeing "Goodie" Eskesen Chase '26 and was sorry to hear she had broken her hip soon thereafter. She especially liked seeing the Spanish galleon, Atacha, and the preview of its treasures at Key West.

It was fun to see Rosa Heath Bridges at my Shipley roommate's granddaughter's wedding in Norfolk. She looked as smashing as when she was a member of our May Court!

Libber Lankford Miles writes from Maine, "We had a great trip in March to the island of Nevis in British West Indies. John says if heaven is not like Nevis, he really doesn't care to go....Our latest excitement is that our second son, Burnley (Col. USAF), has just been assigned to Greece for three years, as commander of the Communications Group and advisor to a joint military assistance group working through the Embassy. He has been given an apartment in Athens with a view of the Aegean. We have an idea that a trip to Greece may come next year." Libber keeps in touch with Mary Moss Sutliff '30. She and Bob have been South for a visit with Bob and Virginia Hodgson Sutliff's son Calvin and have returned to Falls Church, VA.

Maria Bemis Hoar wrote recently, "I have been listening frustratingly for Sweet Briar news...Of course, I see Nora Lee Antrim and Margaret Moncure Johnson frequently. We worked at St. Paul's for the Lenten Lunches under Nora Lee's direction. Margy and Nori went to Washington recently to visit Elizabeth Lee Valentine Goodwyn. This week we are involved in gardensitting for various homes that will open for Garden Week. Lib Wood McMullan '27 and I are working at Brandon one day, and one day I will be at the house that was Elizabeth Lee's home and is now headquarters for the Garden Club of Virginia. ### Secretary

Marjorie Morse Emling (Mrs. Ralph A.), 3216 South 95 St., Fort Smith, AR 72903

Fund Agent

Jessie Coburn Laukhuff (Mrs. Perry), Waugh's Ferry Rd., Amherst, VA 24521

Dear Classmates: Remember our 50th in '83! Miki awaits any bright ideas for the celebration. Her address: Mrs. Hugh M. Martin, 1420 Park Ave., Baltimore, MD 21217.

Arizona: Jeanette Shambaugh Elliott writes about her three daughters — Nancy Stein Seacholes, mother of two teen-age boys, has become an historical archeologist; Susan Stein Elmendorf, mother of three, is a practicing psychiatric counsellor; and E. Carol Stein is an M.D. who will be teaching and setting up research in occupational related health care at the U. of Rochester. Jeanette is slowly building a 19th and 20th Century collection of Chinese paintings and calligraphics.

Arkansas: Marjorie Morse Emling, your secretary, grows weary at times with the duties and the pleasures of running a home; baby-sitting two active grandchildren, aged 1 and 3; tending a garden; transcribing board meeting notes for the League of Women Voters; and searching in vain for the time to pursue her favorite pastime — reading. Husband Ralph, who is now treasurer of our local L.W.V., lends his support and interest to all of the above. We spent three glorious warm sunny weeks in Mexico City and Guadalajara in February.

Connecticut: Mary Kate Patton Bromfield is still doing alumni publications, annual fund, etc., at Kingwood-Oxford School, West Hartford. She is involved with the Hartford Hospital as a board and a committee member.

plans to go to Alaska the latter part of the summer....I still work at Wilton and admire the chairs from Appomattox Manor there." (Wilton is the Colonial Dames of Virginia headquarters.)

Early in May the Eppes family held their annual reunion at the Jordan Point Country Club near Hopewell. Jimmy and I stayed in a house adjoining the Manor property where his brother's widow lives. The National Park Service bought Appomattox Manor several years ago, and we went there to a reception given for the Eppes descendants.

Anne Gochnauer writes, "I am very busy with my antique shop, the Golden Horseshoe in Upperville....I have only authentic furniture and accessories — lamps a speciality. Also have garden and live in the house in which I was born — house built in 1810." Last summer on one of our trips home to Bethlehem we stopped to see Anne. We parked our car in front of her antique shop and found it had just closed for the day. We talked to neighbors who said Anne was on a New Hampshire Lake visiting a college friend; we knew this must be Nora Lee Antrim.

Kay Smith Boothe is delighted to report, "I'm back home and feeling fine — mighty busy making up for lost time. Thanks to your memo I'm sure, I've heard from lots of old and dear friends and am most appreciative. These include Eleanor Duvall Spruill, Amelia Hollis Scott, Evaline Edmunds Thomas, and Emilie Giese Martin, bless them. [Ed. note: We have just received the sad news that Emilie died in June..] Enjoy sailing on the Hudson....Biggest news in the Boothe family is that Doug, Bud's #2 son, has been accepted at Princeton, UVa and Cornell and we're awaiting his decision. Garland, III, is a sophomore at Bucknell; both want to be engineers. Nancy went to Mt. Holyoke and Duke."

On Sept. 9, 1981, Milo Bates Crawford moved from W. Boothbay Harbor, ME, to Marion Oaks, Ocala, FL, to be halfway between her children. Her son James and family were there for Christmas, and, to get her settled, her daughter from New York came down over a weekend vacation from her job with the Orange County Social Service Dept.; so it's a better location for Milo.

Ella Parr Phillips Slate says, "I am happily spending the winter in Charleston, SC (better weather than Connecticut). Since my husband Sam died in February, I have been as busy as two bees trying to do things he took care of. I will stay in my Sherman, CT, home as long as I can cope. I love it up there. Am almost ready for our next reunion!"

Eleanor Duvall Spruill had a big winter. Jim had a successful cataract operation in November, since when he has been "seeing like a boy"! Eleanor had a one-man show, engaged in some other water-color activities, and expected to go to Portugal and Madeira in June with a Tom Hill Painting Workshop. She reports that the children and grands are growing up fast.

Elizabeth Hilton writes, "Since reunion in 1979 I have been on one trip to Mexico with a painting group, Manzanillo, for two weeks. It was fun and worthwhile, but the climate was very humid." She enjoyed meeting people from Canada and California.

Helen Weitzmann Bailey says, "My contribution is small as usual because I sense a greater need that exists among us....My resources don't stretch much further than the needs of the poor who are elderly and sick, the need for prison reform, the needs of young people who have gotten in trouble with the law or drugs, the need to work for peace in the world."

We have lost four very precious classmates this past year. Their names have appeared in the Alumnae Magazine, and I have been asked not to repeat. I know we all send deepest sympathy and love to their families.

U., Margaret practices in the Boston area, and Bennet makes art pottery.

Kansas: Good news came from Rosie Taylor Anderson: she plans to be at SBC for our 50th. Her son and family live in Troy, KS, and she sees them often.

Louisiana: Sue Graves Stubbs is still on the go as an officer in the National Society of Colonial Dames. Her travels bring her into contact with many Briarites. Sue was involved with her Princetonian granddaughter's debut in Ft. Worth and her presentation as a Duchess in the San Antonio Fiesta.

Maryland: Miki Murdock Martin and Jessie Coburn Laukhuff will put their heads together this fall at Alumni Council to plan for our 50th. Miki is spending her days at home now writing verses and by-laws, planting a garden, and enjoying the companionship of her husband.

Nebraska: Two of Mary-Nelson Neville Sieman's granddaughters were married in 1981. Sharon Hanson married Mark Frey in February and Lisa Hanson married Scott Johnson in December. Mary-Nelson and her husband toured the British Isles last July and visited Fred's family in Northern Germany. This spring they joined her sister Frances Neville Newberry and husband on a cruise through the Panama Canal. The Newberrys have a small condominium in Green Valley, AZ, where they spend the cold winter months.

Ohio: Blanche Davies Barloom and her husband Marvin have taken some interesting trips in recent years, including North Africa, Austria and Hungary. Two of Blanche's photographs were awarded a place in a major photographic show.

Oklahoma: Mary Alice Moore and her sister continue to enjoy their new town home and frequent trips. The Sweet Briar bulletins and reports Mary Alice finds interesting, and she marvels at the great strides the college has made. To quote her — "It can't be almost 50 years!"

Tennessee: Mary Elizabeth Clemons Porzelius says she hopes to be at the reunion. She visits her daughters in Washington and Baltimore and has a grandson in V.P.I. and a granddaughter in junior high school.

Virginia: I quote from Elizabeth S. Gray's dandy note: "After 4½ years of 'retirement' I still haven't learned the meaning of the word — with a part-time paid job and serving on the boards of five organizations — church, school, hospital, foundation and health council, plus housekeeping. For the last several years we've had a Round Robin letter with 'Carsonites' Dot Wood Schirmacher, Evelyn Cooke Esterly, Marie Lange Gaskell, Elizabeth Combs Carroll and me. It usually takes nearly a year to complete its rounds. We send pictures, old and recent, recipes, news, etc., and it's great when it arrives!" A mastership has been established at the Episcopal High School in Alexandria, VA, in honor of Bob Latham, Ella Jesse Latham's husband, who taught at the school from 1924-69. Bob was known to his students as "The Hawk." He taught Latin, Physics and History during the 46 years he served on the faculty. In addition, he was athletic director for 18 years and coached several sub-varsity teams. Ella saw Sally Shallenberger Brown in Palm Beach in March. Jessie Coburn Laukhuff and husband Perry spent seven months abroad last year, 2½ in Switzerland, three in a Cotswold cottage in England, and the rest of the time in Germany and Scandinavia, including a 12-day cruise to the North Cape. Their daughter is now living with them. Jessie is still fund agent for our class and bulb chairman for the local alumnae club. Kitty

Gochnauer Slater has a publisher interested in having her write another book. Her first was The Hunt Country of America. The new book would probably be titled Virginia Hunt Country Manors and Their Squires (and would include famed thoroughbred stables of this section). Kitty's son and daughter now live in the Upperville-Middleburg area. There are three grandchildren nearby. Meg, 14, and Kate, 7, are prospects for SBC. Kitty's sister Anne Gochnauer '29 is very active in the antique business in her shop, The Golden Horse Shoe, in Upperville, and they often forage together for fine furniture, Staffordshire, etc. Margaret Wayland Taylor writes that all her children were home for Christmas, as well as the only grandchild, Sarah (4½ years), and her mother, 97 years old and still alert and active. Husband Robert is still working full time in his law firm. They celebrated their 45th wedding anniversary taking a Caribbean Island cruise in November. Virginia Vesey Woodward sent the glad news of another grandchild, Caroline, born August 1, 1981. The baby is the daughter of Paul and Ginger Woodward Gast '73 who live in Arlington, VA. Ginger celebrates her 10th reunion in '83 and Virginia her 50th. Result: Virginia may find herself babysitting instead! From Fran Powell Zoppa comes her usual cheerful note — a busy life and a promise to attend our 50th.

Wisconsin: Marjorie Jones Cook (formerly Mrs. David Garlick) sends news of her recent marriage to John G. Cook, after seven years of widowhood. Marjorie and Jack enjoyed a Caribbean "honeymoon." Marjorie has four children — her eldest, D. Stevens Garlick is married and a professor teaching German at the College of Wooster, Wooster, OH; her second Susan G. Paslov, has three children and is taking law in Lansing, MI; her third, Dan, slightly handicapped, lives in an apartment with another man and earns minimum wage at Miles Curative Workshop; fourth, Mary, is married to an Englishman, Alan St. George, an architect, as is Mary — both working for a London firm in Sentra, Portugal. Marjorie hopes to attend our 50th.

Now that you have read my class notes and seen how many of us are coming to reunion, doesn't it inspire you to join us at SBC in '83?!

Anna L. Redfern Ferguson (Mrs. Finlay F.), 7340 Hampton Blvd., Apt. B-2, Norfolk, VA 23505

Fund Agent

Margaret MacRae Jackson (Mrs. Charles R.), 1846 Pacific Beach Dr., San Diego, CA 92109

This was our reunion year and I hope as many of you attended as were able. I didn't make it because I was babysitting my grandchild while my daughter and son-in-law took a short trip to Europe. but I thought of you all!

Dorothy Prout Gorsuch didn't make it either. First one she's missed, she says. Her daughter Laurie was married in May and those of us with daughters know what that means. Dotty, who is now a landscape consultant, recently had a three-months course in landscaping at Rutgers U. Back to the books was a challenge and it was "fabulous."

Lillian Lambert Pennington is living it up in Thomasville, NC, where she reports she is "over-volunteered but it keeps me active, happy and healthy!" Her son Neiland and his family have moved to Naperville, IL, and Lil misses them very much, especially her grandson John.

Marion Leggett Whyte, now a Florida gal, writes, "It's hard to believe that 1937 was 45 years ago. I don't feel a day over 39."

Helen Williamson Dumont had the pleasure of attending the Sweet Briar brunch in Princeton at the home of Helen Cornwell Jones '40 where she was joined by Nancy Nalle Lea and Sarah Belk Gambrell '39. Helen's son, Wayne, was recently appointed U.S. Attorney for New Jersey. Nancy was planning her July 10 marriage in Trinity Church, Princeton, to Alfred G. Genung, Princeton '31, from Plainfield, NJ, when she wrote.

Polly Lambeth Blackwell writes that she and husband Winfield "are having a grand time growing older in good health and visiting our daughters and their families." They now have nine grandchildren. Polly serves as a tour guide at the N.C. School of the Arts in Winston-Salem, NC.

Wilton House Museum in Richmond, VA, claims Marle Walker Gregory's attention. She took time out to go to the Antiques Forum in Williamsburg and then for a trip to Mobile and New Orleans.

Martha Hardesty Minshall is still enjoying life in Boulder, CO. She works with the Boulder County jail inmates twice a week and is taking three courses at the U. of Colorado. All that, plus dancercise and bridge lessons, keeps her off the streets, she says. Two sons and families are near her; the third boy is studying at Berkeley.

Natalie Hopkins Griggs and husband Jack had a "fascinating" trip to China. On their return, they found they had two more grandchildren, who now number nine. "A happy year for us," reports Nat.

Frances Johnson Finley has been engrossed in producing Historic Garden Week in Virginia. So for a pleasant change, she and Jimmy will soon be taking off for Greece. Ann Parks '39 of Virginia Beach will be one of the party.

Rebecca Douglas Mapp and husband George Walter will also be among the travelers. They will visit the great rivers of Europe.

My thanks to all who have written. I have enjoyed hearing from you. And courage to the new secretary!

Many cards have said what a terrific reunion we all had at our 40th!

Shirts Shaw Daniel in Swarthmore, PA, is a grandma again for daughter Dottie's second son. She went to Denver to "help out" and was sorry to have missed Eunice Foss Sneed there. She sees Betsy Campbell Gawthrop '39 occasionally.

Heleen Ann Littleton Hauslein in Wayne, PA, is retiring from teaching after roughly 30 years at Radnor, PA, School. She writes how invaluable SB training was for this rewarding career. After a wonderful trip to Italy with Jane Clark Hartrich, they want a "repeat." After 22 years in the Oklahoma Public Schools, Wilma Cavett Bird is also retiring from teaching — but she says she will be "job hunting" this fall.

I see Judy Davidson Walker in Middletown, RI, when John and I go to St. George's reunion. Her distinguished husband has just had a book published.

Sweet Briar College

Butch Gurney Betz reports from Garden City that she had a wonderful talk with Mary James last May but that in July Mary died. Mary had been undergoing chemotherapy. We will all miss our outstanding class member and remember her enthusiastic leadership — especially in Step Singing. Butch writes that they flew to England in March to visit their banker son and his family in Kent.

Frances Watkins Centilli sent a card from their family ceramic shop in Devine, TX, "The Understatement Ceramics," featuring gifts, bisque, greenware, firing, and classes.

Ruth Hemphill deBuys wrote of the five-day ice storm in Birmingham, AL. They had no heat or electricity and -2°. She and John had sold their second home, a farm, but Ruth does not miss it too much.

Lil Fowlkes Taylor and retired husband Tyler travel constantly — golf trips everywhere. They recently met Libby Lancaster Washburn and William in Atlanta and lunched with Anne Gayle O'Beirne, who is an Atlanta jet-setter. Libby and William live in Lexington, VA.

Jane Clark Hartrich of St. Louis writes of a big family wedding in Seattle and of four grandsons visiting from Alaska. The Hartrichs had a wonderful visit with Bill and Janie Loveland Byerts, who came through St. Louis.

Nelle Hudgens Levvis writes of their retiring from the cold North to warm Mt. Dora, FL, and loving it. She and Walt recently toured Mexico, speaking Spanish as they went.

Marie Gaffney Barry and Ted, back from a Utah ski trip, are off to all points in Florida and there will visit Lillian Fowlkes Taylor and Tyler, who will introduce them to Romantic Point Clear, AL, with its moss-covered oaks. Marie and Ted attend many lectures in their hometown of New Canaan, CT, and symphonies in New York City.

Alpine Martin Patterson in Virginia Beach is sneaking in as much golf as possible along with Altar Guild, hospital board, bridge, and mah-jongg. She has just moved her 91-year-old mother and her 87-year-old aunt into Westminster-Canterbury at Virginia Beach and is still coping with boxes of silver, china, linens, etc.

Evy Cantey Marion writes from Greenville, SC, of their enjoyment of their grandchildren — not too far away.

Lucy Parton Miller and husband are moving after 27 years in Weston, MA, to Punta Gorda, FL, where they will continue their nation-wide lectures on "Noise Control."

Pat Potter Duncan may move from California to Connecticut to try out New England life — Marie Gaffney Barry and I are encouraging it.

Barbara Thompson Parker and husband live in Raleigh, NC, and report the exciting careers of their daughters — one living in a thirteenth century castle in Italy and another being a California wine exporter.

Margaret Craighill Price and Karl, when not raising money for SB Alumnae Fund, are seriously farming in Virginia, where "Craigie" herself planted over a thousand trees. She and Karl are just back from St. Lucia Island.

Jean Ruggles Hall and new husband enjoy their new home in Chatham, MA. Linda Boyle Richardson and husband moved from Crawford Notch, NH, to Conway. They must love the cold.

Betsy Tower Bennett, Irvington, NY, is studying Bible courses and losing weight — an interesting combination.

Pi Dowling von Wellsheim says her many children are scattered and producing many grandchildren (11). One child is in China in the Peace Corps; another, in Haiti. She regrets missing reunion but has too many grands.

"Yours Truly," here in Connecticut, often goes to NYC, where daughter Anne Cross '66 puts on successful benefits for SB. John drags me skiing — a lost cause, so I have taken up cross country.

Betty Doucett Neill wrote of the Board of Overseers' dinner at the Chevy Chase Country Club honoring Boxwood members and of seeing Craigie and Louise Kirk Edwards (just back from a cruise). "Dowsit" urges everyone to dig deeper for Alma Mater to help keep it in the black. We ran into Dowsit and John at Kennedy Airport, we returning from Spain and they headed for weeks in five countries. Anita Loving Lewis and Bill told of rescuing Dowsit and husband from a traumatic experience on the Pennsylvania Turnpike where they'd locked themselves out of their car in a pouring November rain. Anita's son Bill was chosen to participate in a Military History Symposium at West Point. Anita recovered from foot surgery in time to garden their 3½ acres.

Louise Lembeck Reydel and Charlie, wintering in Tequesta, FL, with children and grands, saw Charlie Davenport Tuttle in West Palm Beach, where the Tuttles have their boaf.

Helen Gwinn Wallace and husband are still raising thoroughbreds on a Virginia farm, where their son and daughter live with them — all working together.

Dottie White Cummings, just back from Florida, and Joan Myers Cole are going on the SB Mediterranean Cruise in August.

Ann Pickard McCarry and Tom left California, he retiring from the bench, and moved back to Lookout Mountain, TN, where their only son lives nearby. She and Tom had a wonderful African trip and they loved the animals.

We extend our sympathy to Helen Hamilton Lewis in St. Louis. She lost her husband on Nov. 16. She's very busy looking for a smaller house. Having been Zone Chairman of Garden Clubs of America, she is now National Vice Chairman.

Barbara Nevens Young celebrated her mother's 90th birthday. (Her mother is Marjorie French Nevens '14.) Dowsit came down to New York to help celebrate. Barb in Dallas misses her grands in the East.

Decca Gilmer Frackleton in Fredericksburg, VA, goes to SB for Friends of Library meetings. Her daughter Carter '72 was at SB for her 10th along with Dowsit's daughter Marty Boney.

Peg Tomlin Graves in Lynchburg is very busy with SB Admissions, Golden Stairs, etc.

Joan Devore Roth and John are going to Houston to visit their daughter and son Wayne, who is with NASA and who will take them all aboard Space Shuttle III. Later they go to France.

Mimi Worthington Foster in Louisville had a gall bladder operation, not recommended by her, recovered in Palm Beach, and is now back at "Animal Crackers," a children's shop. They were hoping to get to the golf invitational with Peg Tomlin Graves in Lynchburg in June.

Edge Cardamone O'Donnell, recovering from an illness which caused her to miss her daughter's wedding, is fine now and sylph-like. She and Ted are off to Florida to rent — maybe to live.

Mary Scully Olney and Jim are off to Alaska for their son's wedding; another son lives there too. Their daughters are scattered and only young Katy is not married.

Betty Blount Kempson wrote from Pensacola that they were expecting their eighth grandchild in June. A 12-year-old granddaughter is already interested in SBC.

I love hearing from all of you. Keep it up.

Fund Agent

Julia Mills Jacobsen (Mrs. Lawrence), 4416 Edmunds St., N.W., Washington, DC 20007

Elizabeth (Zu) Zulich Reuter and Don, now retired, ski in Vail every winter. She talked to Mary Symes Anderson, resident of Aspen, and learned that Mary's oldest daughter has twins. This time Zu and Don went on to California to see daughter Maggie and her first baby, Abigail. Oldest son, Don, has a 12-year-old daughter and one that is 15 months old. Mark is working on a Ph.D. in Physics at Lehigh U. and Pat works for Defense Mapping in Washington along with graduate school at VPI (extension at Dulles Airport). Zu sings in the local choir and serves on the Towanda Library Board.

Edie Page Gill Breakall will serve on the Alumnae Board as Admissions Representative. She attended the Ewald Symposium in March and saw Steve Nicolson McIlvaine and her husband who had lived next to Dr. Leakey in Kenya. They were going to see Cappy Price Bass and Bruce soon.

Jenny Whitaker Shelton and H.B. sold their home in Durham and bought a condominium. Belo, their son, is being married in Atlanta in June. Peggy Jones Wyllie and her husband bought a farm in Troy, VA, after spending some time in South Africa following his retirement. Julie Mills Jacobsen has a 2-year-old grandson and as of March has a granddaughter.

Ruth Longmire Wagner plays tennis, does volunteer work and will take an intensive course this fall to learn to docent at Bayou Bend, a period room museum. Willard died in 1979, but her children live in the Houston area. Bill is married, has two children, and is legal counsel to the trust department at Texas Commerce Bank. Alicia is a Montessori teacher. Julie is married to an attorney and works for a subsidiary of Dow Chemical. Chaile finishes up at LSU this spring.

Ann Gladney Gibson also lives in Houston. Her husband is an attorney with Texaco. They have a daughter and a son who is a student at Rice U. Helen Davis Wohlers and Herb spent two weeks in Vienna in September and headed for Mexico and Yucatan in February. Hel is president of her branch of AAUW and does some traveling from her Brevard, NC, home for meetings within the state.

Anne Macfarlane Clark and Charles found the Republic of South Africa fascinating and later had a wonderful trip to Spain. The twin sons of Sally Leffen Macfarlane and Hugh married in 1981. Anne and Sally still live in Tampa.

Anne Dickson Jordan is a realtor in Virginia Beach. She and Chick went to son Chick's wedding in Knoxville last fall. They will return for the World's Fair with special interest in Larsony's, son Chick's restaurant, which opened in early March. Mittie Jordan Harvey '74 and her husband will live in Norfolk next year since Will, a graduate of T.C. Williams Law School, has a clerkship with one of the federal judges.

Ellen Gilliam Perry is going to be living in Charlottesville again as Marvin has retired from the presidency of Agnes Scott. Barbara Bourke Stoval and David live in Virginia Beach. He is the top man in the second Leggett store which recently opened in their largest mall, Lynnhaven. Rosemary Newby Mullen became a grandmother for the first time in July, 1981. Jane Lesh Gould's daughter had a son in July, 1981, and her son and daughter-in-law had a son in September. Marty Holton Glesser, her sister Mary Lou Effler '46, and her daughter-in-law had six days in Haiti during their Mardi Gras.

Perk Traugott Brown continues teaching in an elementary school in Virginia Beach. Her oldest son, a dentist there, has made her a grandmother. Ted, married last summer, and his wife are also there. Sam, a lawyer, will marry Betsy Fitzgerald of Richmond — a second cousin of Susan Buchanan Coupland's — in October.

Harriet (Lovah) Willcox Gearhart, a travel consultant, took the Maryland Churchman's Club through Portugal and northwest Spain. Tyler graduated from Middlebury Col. and Rosalie is in the U. of Pa. Nursing School. The two oldest daughters share a flat in NYC. Sarah is an assistant editor with Coward, McCann and Geohegan, publishers. Mary is manager of the Mimi Garrard Dance Company.

Lyn Dillard Grones has a tree farm 125 miles from Virginia Beach. She manages that business, is a national consultant for Red Cross and serves on several state-wide boards of directors. Tutti Hall Peckham and Bob had a lovely Christmas in Bermuda. She wrote that Jane Thompson Sherrill who attended her first reunion in 1980 died in January. Jane McJunkin Nelson and Oscar were at a Cattle Convention in San Antonio in January when he suffered a heart attack. Oscar had heart surgery there and at last report was doing fine at their home in Lewisburg, WV. Audrey Betts of Greensboro, NC, goes to SB Alumnae Board meetings in the capacity of director of Region IV.

Susan Buchanan Coupland's older son, Randy, and his wife left in February for three years in Malaysia. He is the Malaysian Comptroller of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco International. Susan and husband Randy will go on a group tour of China for three weeks in the fall and will spend a week in Malaysia with the younger Couplands before returning home. Younger son, John, his wife, and 3-year-old daughter live in Durham, where he works with big Randy in the insurance business.

Jane Carothers Clarke Morrow is still marking maps and planning trips for AAA members. She will be escorting a bus tour later this year, probably to Yellowstone National Park. Jane stays busy these days; more people are driving as the cost of plane travel continues to rise.

Mary Kritser Miller has three children with college degrees. Shelby (33), his wife, son (12), and daughter (2), live in Santa Fe, NM. Shelby uses his M.A. in social work in his job in Santa Fe County with abused children at the teenage level. Jack (29), his wife, and one-year-old son are in Amarillo. He is a self-employed land man for oil business. Martha (24) and her husband are residents of Lubbock. Roy is with the local public service company and Martha works for a local decorator. Mary's husband George, a native of Ohio, is an early retired banker who is active in civic affairs. The altar at St. Paul's church in Columbus, OH, was given in memory of his grandmother. George, his two brothers and the three wives were to attend Mother's Day services there together for the first time in thirty years. Mary and George are signed up for their first SBC trip, the Grand Mediterranean Passage, starting early at Lisbon. They went to Alaska last summer on the "Love Boat" and highly recommend that trip.

Antoinette (Tony) Le Bris Maynard started a job at the Library of Congress in 1977 cataloguing books in French, Spanish and Portuguese. She stopped working there in 1960 as they started going overseas. Paul retired from Foreign Service in 1975 and they lived in Thailand for another year. Their older daughter, Libby, 33, is an artist residing in Eureka, CA. Their younger daughter, Carol, 27, has been an audiologist at UVA Hospital in Charlottesville. She and her pediatrician husband moved to St. Louis in June. Philip, 18, has completed his first year at Michigan State U. Last summer Tony visited her sister, who lives near Le Mans in France. Her sister is fixing some large rooms and baths for either four guests or private contacts.

Jodie Morgan Hartman and Jimmy came from Charleston, WV, for my youngest child's March wedding. Nancy Haskins Elliott '39, Pasadena, CA, my sister, saw her namesake, Nancy Elliot King, 24, on her big day. John, 32, and Jetton, 28, are not married. Telle, 26, was married in Colorado in Sept., 1980, but they are now living in Winston-Salem, NC. Telle is in the 24-month Physician's Assistant program at Bowman Gray Hospital.

Please let me hear from you during the year.

Thanks to many of you for your good-luck wishes to me in my new job as editor of this magazine. It's a lot of work, but there are many fringe benefits. For instance, I must go to Sweet Briar several times a year, as I did last April for a whole week! Walter came with me for the weekend. We were met at Lynchburg by dear Ann Morrison Reams '42, director of the Alumnae Association, and her nice husband, Bernie, who took us out for a drink and a snack (Air Virginia is great, but no food!). We stayed with Anne and Mike Richards (he teaches history; she's a member of the sophomore class in addition to being the mother of three boys, a cat and a ferret) who live on Elijah Road in what we used to know as "Red Top." After Walter left, I moved to Sweet Briar House, where host Harold Whiteman insisted on carrying my suitcase up to "Bart's room" which has a comfy bed and a big desk for working editors. It was a perfect spring week: dogwood and redbud in bloom, the Mary Hughes Blackwell tulips looking just like our spring color, the students beautiful and bright, and the faculty and staff cordial and interesting. What more can I say?

Well, I can say that the class of '49 was much in evidence at spring Alumnae Board meetings. Mary Virginia Grigsby Mallett, alumnae chairman for region VI, shared a bathroom with me. Preston Hodges Hill, alumnae fund chairman, and Katie Cox Reynolds, an Overseer, were roommates, like old times! Libby Trueheart Harris, chairman of alumnae representatives, was on hand, too. How's that for '49?

My once, but not much, removed cousin, Alice Trout Hagan, came over from Roanoke for lunch one day and we had a small share in the celebration of Helen McMahon's (would you believe?) 80th birthday. As I delivered a card the next day, Helen Mac was talking with Patsy Davin Robinson.

I wish you all could have been with us at spring step singing. It was a lovely evening and, though the music was perhaps not quite as harmonious as in our days, the spirit was just as warm...tears, as everyone realized it was the last time for the seniors. The juniors sang "Sweet Briar, Sweet Briar, flower fair," all three verses (after a practice session with Mary Virginia Mallett and Martha Mansfield Clement '48); the seniors held forth with the golden oldies... "Eva, iva, ova, evolution"...bringing a few tears to the eyes of the visiting alumnae.

And what has the evolution done to the class of '49? Peggy Quynn Maples writes and from Frederick, MD, to say that her two sons and families live in the D.C. area; John has a two-year-old daughter, Beth, and another is due in August; Allen expects his first child in June; daughter Maggie is working as an aide in the public school and hoping for a full-time teaching job this fall.

Maggie Woods Tillett has a new grandson, John Tillett Northrup, born January 4. He and his parents, Dorsey and Frank, and big brother Tommie came for an Easter visit. "Whew!" sighs Maggie, describing the interaction of a 10-month-old Springer Spaniel puppy, a 10-year-old Collie and three-year-old Tommie!

Preston Hodges Hill tells me that Gene had surgery on a shoulder last winter, but they managed a skiing vacation with son Gene II and his wife Joan in Aspen during the New Year's weekend.

Kitty Hart Belew (Kitty, how can I condense four pages?!) says, in part, "Alice Trout Hagan was here for parents' weekend at U. of Richmond, where her daughter Kitty is a freshman...had her to lunch with Margaret Towers Talman, Marie Musgrove McCrone, my sister Nan Stone and Judy Burnett Halsey (both SBC '47) and Lucy Boyd Edmunds '63. Our other '49 classmates were busy, Libby Trueheart Harris at College Council, Betty Wellford Bennett teaching and Ann Dear Jones waiting to become the grandmother of her daughter Bev's Kate. Maggie arrived to tell us her house had been broken into, and that her daughter Nell will be married May 22 (my daughter Lindsay will be a bridesmaid). Betty Wellford Bennett's daughter will be married in June."

Kitty and her sister Nan went to Sweet Briar in March for one day of the "Origin of Man" Symposium and ran into Kay Bryan Edwards and her attractive daughter Pricay.

Libby Trueheart Harris and Hiter have announced the engagement of Mary Lawrence Harris '79, a third year med student at U.Va., to Dr. Charles Kraft Loving...a November wedding. Mary's twin, Elizabeth ("Whiz"), is working at Chemical Bank in New York, where Kitty's daughter Lindsay works. Kitty's son Chip will graduate from V.P.I. this summer, Alan is a freshman at J.S. Reynolds, a community college in Richmond; and Kathy is a rising senior at St. Catherine's.

Anne Eustis Weimer took John and Scott south during spring break, and saw Mary Louis Stevens Webb and Rutledge. Stevie says she's also seen Judy Baldwin Waxter and Bill, Sally Melcher Jones, Polly Vandeventer Saunders '46 and Indy Bain Lindsay Bilisoly '48. Stevie's children are Rutledge, who starts college this fall, and Mary, who is finishing her second year of law school this fall. Anne and Judy have done several local Smithsonian tours, one along the James River led by Carden McGehee, Caroline's attractive son.

Carter Van Deventer Slattery reports that Herbert is now retired, but still working in two small businesses. They've acquired a house at Hilton Head. Son Charles, a banker in Memphis, and Hugh, a stock-broker in Ft. Worth, are still unmarried; Herbert III, a lawyer, and his family are still in Knoxville.

Kay Bryan Edwards brags that her first grandchild, named for her, is absolutely the brightest and the best! Her children are living from Amsterdam to Washington to Greensboro, but she had all eight of them in Greensboro for Christmas, plus assorted spouses and grandchildren! Kay is raising money for the N.C. Dance Theatre. She went to London and both Spoleto Festivals last summer.

It was nice to hear from Joyce Smith White, whose son Jim has graduated from Central Conn., daughter Chris from Ohio Wesleyan, and son Nelson from Bates. Joyce, like many of us, finds herself looking forward to reunion in 1984 — mark it on your calendar!

Carolyn Cannady Jones was busy planning daughter Anne's April wedding in Montreat, NC, where they have a summer home. Caroline Casey McGehee and Coleman were just back from a three-week trip to the Orient — Hongkong, Tokyo, Manila and China — and Caroline was looking forward to visiting Sweet Briar for a meeting of the Friends of the Library.

Mary Frances Brown Ballard is now a full-fledged lawyer and has recently moved from Texas to Wayne, PA. She also has a new grandson.

Fritz Duncombe Lynch says that daughter Susan's LP was released in February, titled "Susan Lynch—Big Reward," and there's a beautiful picture of Susan on the cover. The following week Susan's picture was in People magazine (3-1-82) with a good review of her songs, wit and lyrics; she appeared at "The Bottom Line," a showcase for new talent in New York.

Katie Cox Reynolds is working as director of community relations for the Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co., using her political and community experience as well as her Sweet Briar education. The Reynolds' children are Molly, a legal assistant, Franny, an artist, and Flip, a sophomore at Colby College. Phil is still with Travelers Insurance and plays the violin with the Connecticut String Orchestra. They're going on tour with the orchestra to Rumania in May.

A newsie note came from Dot Bottom Duffy, who is still working three days a week at The Daily Press, Inc. in Newport News, VA, as the "directing" editor. Husband John heads the "Meet the Composer" program in New York and is an active composer himself, presently working on a public t.v. series, "Civilization and the Jews" to be aired in 1983-84. Dot is studying for a master's degree in history (16th-century English) at Columbia. Her son Whitney Gilkey was married in June, lives in Newport News, and works for the cable t.v. station there.

Marie Musgrove McCrone, who claims she never sewed a stitch until she became a grandmother (of four, at last count) is now making little girl's smocked and French hand-stitched dresses, real labors of love and worth at least $500 each by completion!

Joan McCarthy Whiteman announces the arrival of her granddaughter, Lindsay Kimball McLeod, who lives near enough for Joan and Wes to see her often. Joan is playing duplicate bridge during the the cold Illinois winter, waiting for golf season.

Ellen Ramsey Clark enjoyed a family reunion in Snowmass, CA. Son Ken is a banker with Wachovia Bank in New York; Ellen, a stock-broker with Smith-Barney in Dallas; Ramsay and Marshall work for Memphis firms; and Allison is a tenth grader and quite a tennis player.

A few brief items: Frances Pope Evans: "Working in oil and gas business." Sally Legg Martine: "After 55 years in Binghamton, we have moved to Wakefield, RI...call it mid-life crisis, change of jobs and everything else...same nice husband, however!" Ann Henderson Bannard, from Tucson: "Christmas is really over — Yorke shaved off his luxuriant beard which he started on a Colorado River trip last summer; Doug on last lap of eighth grade and braces; Dave on last lap of grad school, after a hiatus performing with the Boston Opera; I had a one-person show in Santa Fe during Festival of the Arts, now scrambling to finish new work for another." Ann is a sculptor.

Judy Easley Mak writes of seeing Flip Eustis Weimer and Ann Barrett Holmes Bryan. Judy's daughter Holly has joined the Washington Office of the International Bank of Abu Dhabi, so her Arabic is still useful. Judy is now a real estate broker, waiting (at press time) to sell her first house.

Nancy McCarthy Jones is lucky to have daughter Kathy and family, including husband John, Allison, 3, and Mike, 1, living nearby. Son John is in sales with Sheraton at Steamboat, CO, and Peter, a junior at Williams, is spending a term in Vienna with the Institute of European Studies.

June Eager Finney reports that eldest son Dan is still with Maryland National Bank as p.r. coordinator; he and his wife Carol have a son David. Next son, Mac, recently moved to Baltimore's number one rated t.v. station as an Eye-Witness News cameraman; his wife works in the greenhouse of a large florist and loves it. Son Angus is a second-year law student, and Lee graduated from the U. of Richmond with a degree in teaching.

Ruthie Garrett Preucel got together with Carter and Polly during the Philadelphia Flower Show, which Bob chaired, for the "second and last time," says Ruthie. Bob shakes 2,000 hands at the opening dinner, leads 1,000 volunteers, and the show draws 20,000 visitors a day! The Preucels' son, RWP Jr., is working for his Ph.D. in S.W. American Architecture at UCLA and will be married this spring. Ruthie and Bill graduate from U. of Pa. this spring, too. A big year for the whole family!

Pat Brown Boyer sends a beautiful tribute to Marcia Fowler Smiley who died last February after a long, courageous battle with cancer.

We all recall Marcia's entrepreneurial instincts, shown by the profitable and welcome sandwich service she ran in the dorm during hours when the Inn was closed. She went on to work for the Readers Digest where she was one of the first women in the U.S. to work with large-scale computer installation and applications. After sixteen years with the Digest, she became a management consultant on computer systems in New York City.

When her husband, Len, retired from his job as appliance testing supervisor for Consumers Report the Smileys moved permanently to Mt. Dora, FL, where they bought and rebuilt a lakeshore property. This was in keeping with Marcia's philosophy of "rejuvenate don't raze." She applied this to several run-down properties, turning them into unusually tasteful business and residential accommodations. Often she did much of the carpentry and masonry herself. After breaking a hip in 1980, she was back on the job in six weeks, directing the work from a wheel chair.

A three-time recipient of the Chamber of Commerce Beautification Award, she still found time to participate actively on the library board and in other community efforts, to follow developments in the business world, and to pursue her lifelong interest in music.

Dale Hutter Harris was sworn in as the 24th Judicial Circuit's first female judge on March 29. In a newspaper article in the Lynchburg News, Earl Wingo, the man Dale replaced, says of her, "She is exceedingly bright, dedicated, and understanding of children. One of my greatest joys in retiring is knowing that my job will be capably filled." Dale said, "It is a tremendous responsibility, but it is not my responsibility alone, for young people need help and support from the entire community, including facilities for rehabilitation. This is the time in their lives when perhaps we can make a difference, and I find that exciting. The hardest part of being a judge is maintaining a high level of concentration. You have to listen — I mean really listen. As the day wears on that can get harder, yet you have to pick up on the subtleties that can affect your decision."

Dickie Wellborn Hopper has three new grandchildren born in 1981 — total of five. Her youngest enters college in the fall.

Mary Kimball Grier writes that she had a marvelous trip to China in October. Daughter Betsy graduated from Skidmore in May, having completed requirements for certification in special education. The Griers had dinner with Ken and Mary Stagg Hamblett last fall.

Patsy Phillips Brown received an M.Ed. in Guidance and Counseling from Lynchburg College in May.

In November of '81 President Reagan conferred the personal rank of Ambassador on Louis G. Fields (husband of Kitty Guerrant Fields) in his capacity as the Dept. of State's representative to the first committee meetings on disarmament during the 36th Session of the U.N. General Assembly, which opened in Geneva, Switzerland, on Feb. 2. I talked to Kitty after their return and she said that she had never worked so hard in her life and it is not the glamorous job that it sounds like. Daughter Frances has returned to the East and is platform assistant at Dupont Circle Branch of First American Bank of Washington.

Joan Brophy Tyree had lunch with Kitty and Lou in New York before they left. Oldest son Tom took a semester off to work for Peat, Marwick and Mitchell on a project for Morgan Guaranty Bank. Second son Bill is at Dartmouth and planning a medical career. Joan and Tom are going to Joanne Holbrook Patton '52 and George's 30th anniversary weekend with all of the members of their wedding party.

Dolly Wallace Hartman and Jack's son John graduated from Davidson in May, and Elizabeth finished her first year at Princeton. Dolly is teaching art at the U. of Charleston.

I saw Mary Ann Mellen Root at Alumnae Council in October. The Roots are moving to Greenville, SC, as soon as their house is sold, as John's business is now there. M.A. was at SB for the Executive Board Meeting in April. Frances is with E.F. Hutton, and Randy is at W&L.

C.J. Nager and his committee had a surprise birthday party to celebrate Katzy Bailey Nager's entry into the second half. Bailey is considering law school, and George is college shopping in the West.

Anne Green Stone and family moved to Carson City, NV, in June of '81 and are delighted with the riding, the scenery, and the people, but the climate is wild most of the winter (12 feet of snow in one storm in the nearby Sierras!). Sara and Grace are doing well in school. Anne keeps busy as secretary of the GOP Women's Club of Carson City, which as state capital is a center of activity. John is the manager of a new subsidiary of Hanna Mining.

Ann Vlerebome Sorenson, Northfield, MA, is involved in the effort to save our world from nuclear war.

Jane Yoe Duggan's daughter Wendi Wood graduated from SBC in May. She was a varsity swimmer all four years and headed Sports Council her senior year. Daughter Randi is a junior at U.Ga.

Sarah Swift Harrison's SBC daughter Harriet '81 is an accountant in Houston and is getting married in September. Frances, the oldest daughter, lives in Austin, where she is a sales rep. Carter has just completed her freshman year at Sewanee. Sarah is on the United Way Board of Trustees and is president of the Women of St. Paul's in Waco. Morse is in the highway construction business.

Perry Liles is a freshman at SBC, rooming with Frances Clardy, daughter of Frances Shannonhouse Clardy '56, and one of their favorite friends is Laura Morrisette, daughter of Vaughan Inge Morrisette '54. They go somewhere all the time. It is not like when we were there. It is still as beautiful and happy. The new dining room is magnificent, and all the plans for the old Refec are very exciting.

Start planning now for No. 30 next year. Send me now your three favorite recipes, housekeeping hints, shortcuts and fabulous ideas gathered over the last 30 years, and we'll share the bounty in May.

Our 25th Reunion will be past by the time this reaches you — and my deadline is before reunion — but perhaps I can sneak in a few paragraphs about reunion at the end. Having written about you in alphabetical order twice, I'll try it geographically this time.

Dagmar Halmagyi Yon, San Diego, CA, sends very late word of first "date" in 23 years — seems she was more nervous for that one than the very first one, but at least it was more fun than working. Her two youngest were still in college and living at home.

Lainy Newton Peters and Gregg were planning to come all the way from Pacific Palisades, CA, for reunion, for a grand tour of Pennsylvania for Gregg to fly fish, to Princeton to see son Mark — there for the summer as a local D.J. on the radio, and to New England to visit friends. Lainy was finishing a year of docent training at the L.A. County Museum of Art so she can give tours this year for school children.

Elaine Floyd Fisher's daughter Evangeline was a freshman this year at the Vivian Webb School there in Claremont, CA, a newly established coordinate high school with the Webb School of California.

A recheck of my mail reveals that Carolyn Swift Fleming wrote from Omaha, NE, of her work for the Visiting Nurses Asso. for the past five years, on a hospice team, and serving schools. Daughter Alice was a sophomore at Wellesley; William Swift will enter Carleton College this fall; and Ed is a sophomore in high school. Carolyn finished her master's in July '81 and felt honored to represent SBC for the Centennial Celebration of Creighton U., wearing her pink and green hood in the procession.

Zan (Dorothy) Engh Moore, Houston, TX, has gone back to Southern Bible College to get a Master's in Theology. She teaches three Bible classes a week and a seminar called "Eve Reborn." Their two oldest are both training in a mission college in Dallas, and their son works with "Teen Challenge." Bari Baker Hart hoped to make connections to reunion from Athens, TX, where she teaches, is on church vestry and is choir director. Bill is gone quite a bit doing oil leasing. Oldest son Lindsay was a junior at U. of Texas in Austin; son Baker was to enter this fall at A&M U. in Bryan, TX, with bike racing as a sideline. Heather is a high school junior active in band, piano, Young Life, and Little Theatre.

For the first time in years, Frances May Burton writes from Lawrence, KS, where she just finished a master's in social work and her husband is a professor of cell biology at U. of Kans. Fran is now a medical social worker in a hospital, plays tennis and trains and shows dogs in obedience. In pre-grad school days, she and Paul owned and ran a tennis shop summers in northern Wisconsin. Julie, 20, a junior at Baker U. in Kansas was to be married a few days after reunion, so Fran couldn't come then. Mike, 18, was a freshman at Trinity U. in San Antonio and on the j.v. tennis team at that tennis-proud school — quite an accomplishment.

A change-of-address card from the Alumnae Office tells me that Elaine Kimball Carleton moved last year from Tacoma, WA, to Lake Charles, LA, but gives no news. Several other moves I've learned about the same way and will note later.

Natalie (Lee) Wittich Morrow's daughter Virginia (Ginger) is not an SBC student but went on the SB January term European tour, "International Business and Finance," with Prof. Reuben Miller, also according to the Alumnae Office. Lee will be hosting all the Eastern relatives for Ginger's graduation at our reunion time, and hoping for a job or a grad school. Don't we all! Dodgeville, WI, had a beastly winter, says Lee, whose only trip was to Texas to help Paul's mother in her illness. She and Paul hoped to celebrate their 25th in style this summer between her check-ups every three months.

From Lake Forest, IL, Nannette McCurney Crowds reports a March Alumnae Magazine

trip to Vienna, Budapest and the Danube, and meeting their son Warren who was on a Fulbright at U. of Hamburg. He starts at U. of Chicago Law in Sept. '82. Carol continues at Colgate, a junior Eng. major this fall, and at 5'2" was varsity women's ice hockey goalie. Sydney Graham Brady, Galesburg, IL, reports business as usual in her bank's Trust Dept. but has been organizing an area chapter of Nat'l Assoc. of Bank Women and is Vice-Chair. She also became a board member of the Guild and the Board of Directors of the Knox-Galesburg Symphony Orchestra. Heavy home improvement was underway in advance of their daughter's August wedding, but Bill planned to accompany Sydney to reunion, leaving behind a pile of administrative duties as Chairman of the English Dept. at Knox College.

Diane Duffield Wood says her life doesn't change much now, except for getting older and grayer. Living in Oak Brook, IL, she substitute teaches health education classes for grades 1-5, plays tennis, golf and bridge some. Pam, 23, is married; Kay, 21, is a junior at Miami of Ohio "trying to learn to be a great teacher who will make millions"; and Chip, 18, will begin at Hillsdale Col. in Michigan in August. Maybe the empty nest will inspire Duffy to great things, while Sandy continues trying to keep Sears afloat.

Prize for the most mysterious correspondence goes to Cynthia Wilson Ottaway of Grosse Point Farms, MI, who wrote lots of news and left out her own name. She was remarried in August 1981 to John P. Ottaway, Jr., a Detroit attorney, and moved from Indiana to Michigan. Cynthia had spent two weeks this spring in Aspen with her daughter Allison and husband Emerson Scott (married June 1981) and her daughter Elizabeth, then a couple of weeks in Florida with John's family. He has four children: John III, sophomore at Wm. & Mary; Michael, to enroll at U. Richmond this fall; Andrew and Amy, who were then a high school sophomore and freshman respectively. To accommodate this family they've bought a new home and planned to redecorate and put in a new kitchen this summer. She also reports graduations May 16 and 17 for her twins, Elizabeth (SBC) and Otto (Wharton School, U. of Pa.).

George, Marguerite (11), and Marguerite McDaniel Wood, Montgomery, AL, plus two other couples chartered a boat this spring at St. Lucia for two and a half weeks and had loads of fun sailing the Windward Islands, being captain and crew, swimming, snorkeling and dancing to steel bands. "Came back tan, tired, and tantalized by hot showers!", says Marguerite.

Nashville, TN, to Fort Payne, AL.

Anne Melton Kimzey, Lookout Mt., TN, wasn't sure about reunion since her older daughter's graduation from UNC-Chapel Hill was the weekend before, and then she had to fix up a beach house in South Carolina for rental until the day of reunion. Her second daughter is making her debut this Christmas in Charleston, SC, with Carroll Weitzel Rivers' daughter. Rhonda will also be presented in Columbia, SC.

Lynn Ulrici McGarvey moved from Ridgefield, CT, to the Canallwood area of Tampa, FL, as close to country as they could find. Meghan, Sean and Bryce are still at home. Lynn took a Master Gardener's course at the county Extension Service to learn about Florida horticulture and volunteer there. They've put in a big vegetable garden with lots of popcorn, and she also enjoys Tampa Symphony Guild fundraising activities.

Saynor Johnson Ponder finds things quieter at home with two in college: Eleanor, a freshman at Hollins; Bert, a junior at W&L. Bill and Saynor are still in school there in Macon, GA. At Johns Island, SC, we find Chris Smith Lowry managing the Equestrian Center for Seabrook Island Co., a resort community just south of Charleston. They were to break ground in May for a grand new stable with full facilities for boarding, lessons, beach rides etc. Her assistant was going to the riding instructors' clinic the end of May. Britt still manages an Episcopal camp and conference center. Daughter Tina was finishing a master's in social work at UNC-Chapel Hill in April. Son Brink is in Germany working with computers for the Army. Chris says Nancy Shuford Garrison was with her all the way for a month this winter during Chris' mother's final illness in Hickory, NC, and "It's wonderful to have friends like that!"

Dot Duncan Hodges, Charlotte, NC, (and I) expected to need large name tags for everyone at reunion to compensate for failing eyes and empty heads. Her divorce was final in March, "with relief and regret." One child was graduating from Williams; the younger one is a carpenter's assistant, and Dot drew a little frowning face. The Alumnae Office sent word Dot had been nominated for the Board of Directors of the N.C. Art Society, N.C. Museum of Art in Raleigh.

On up the East Coast in New Canaan, CT, Lee Haskell Vest reports that Graham was to graduate from Hobart Col. in June with honors in a comparative religion type honors program complete with orals, etc. Sallie was then a freshman at Franklin and Marshall and played varsity girls' soccer. Lee works with Marty Heckman Buckingham '55 in a local travel bureau, if I am reading the card right.

(Only two of you ladies typed your responses!) She has been on the Mississippi Queen and to Hawaii and some other exotic islands this year.

Anne McGrath Lederer still lives in New York City but spends vacations and long weekends in Warrenton, VA. Son Andrew was finishing 3rd grade at St. David's, and daughter Sloane was finishing junior year at Chapin. Anne and Sloane had visited SBC in March and had a marvelous time. Anne is involved in the kids' schools and various boards concerning their school activities.

Chips Chao Pai, Livingston, NJ, sent news of four classmates she'd seen lately. Carolyn Scott Arnold and new husband Mark have moved to Bronxville, NY. Jane Dunn Godsland and husband Dudley had spent the night and hoped to make reunion. Ceci Dickson Banner is now a management consultant. Virginia Marks Paget will get her Ph.D. this year, in education management, Chips thinks.

From Bryn Mawr, PA, Char Heuer DeSerio reports her marriage in July 1981 to Francis W. DeSerio in historic Christ Church, Philadelphia, and a two weeks honeymoon in Ireland. Her oldest son, Bob, moved to Vermont, bought a home, started a master's degree and ended up buying the "Chez Moustache" restaurant in Jeffersonville, VT. Younger son Bill was spending his junior year in England, and Char and her husband were sailing on the QEII to visit him before flying back for reunion. Jane Fitzgerald Treherne-Thomas continues working for the Pittsburgh Symphony, arranging parties for visiting performers; represents two artists (painters) from New York there in Pittsburgh; and is half way through a two year stint as finance chairman of the Garden Club of America. Summer visits to Nantucket and monthly trips to NYC are not too hard to take, I gather, the latter in connection with the Garden Club job. Jane Campbell Butler is now back in Kittanning, PA, teaching high school English nearby. Anne's at a different college now and one son is selling, we learned on a visit last summer with Jane.

Susan Ragland Lewis, Bethesda, MD, typed lots of news for me. Jennifer finished Georgetown U. with a B.S. in languages, is a buyer at Bloomingdale's in NYC in their executive training program, and was to be married in June to an ass't treasurer at Bankers Trust, a "great computer type brain who finished at Dartmouth, then master's at Stanford." Jim, Jr. is working on an MBA at Indiana U.; Chris is at UVA, 2nd year, heading toward law, like his brother. Husband Jim is Headmaster of Holton-Arms School outside of Washington, DC (600 girls). Sue has been doing freelance public relations and speech writing for several years and now works for a management consulting firm in D.C. creating a PR component for them. She also still teaches painting and has a one-man show (one-woman?) hanging locally. Jackie Ambler Cusick is in her class. She had dinner for Mona Ghantus Namon with several classmates. Mona still lives in Beirut and has a son in school in the U.S.

Jane Best Wehland has missed not having Jane Lee at home in Elkridge, MD, this year since both she and Chuck are at UVa, which they both enjoy. Makes visiting them simpler! Jane was hoping Elaine Floyd Fisher could fly in from California for reunion. Helene Perry, Baltimore, MD, was feeling really challenged by her new position as Physics Dept. chairman at her college, but was beginning to see the light in the tunnel even if she couldn't get to reunion. Lisa Morton Ordahl has moved from Fredericksburg, VA, to Annapolis, MD.

Joel Russell is now Mrs. Josel Williams and lives in New Orleans, LA, but I have no other details.

Jane Dunn Godsland, Rehoboth Beach, DE, noted that her daughter Carolyn Ennis graduated from SBC in 1978 magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa "which delighted her 'drop-out-' mama!" Jane has been living abroad for most of the past 20 years — mainly Britain and Malta. She is now extraordinarily happily married to Dudley Godsland, an Englishman, and they are living in the U.S.A. part of each year and spending summers away.

From Alexandria, VA, June Heard Wadsworth writes that Rob, 22, was to graduate from UVa at our reunion time, so she'd miss that. Jay, 17, would be graduating from St. Stephen's School and going in the fall to UVa, where Steve, 19, will be a junior — all in the Engineering School. There was also the possibility of the men sailing their yacht, Sundance, in the Annapolis to Bermuda race in June, with June meeting them there, since those races "are a little much" even though she loves sailing. In the fall, Rob is to be married to "a darling girl he's been dating for six years." June's busy with hospital volunteer work, a couple of boards, bridge, tennis, etc. Betty Murden Michelson still lives and practices law in Virginia Beach, VA, where David is 16 and very much "into surfing and trucks."

Three replies came from Richmond, VA. Mary Anne VanDervoort Large and Bob claim they went into training for both their 25th reunions (his at W&L) by taking their three girls to Disney World during spring vacation. Anne Gwinn Fox and Jan also were to take in reunion at W&L, but not SBC since their son John would get then his first weekend leave since September from Ft. Rucker, AL. He graduated from W&L in June '81 and is a second lieutenant, by now probably nearly through flight training. Sarah was a sophomore at Duke, a scholarship student, and a computer science major. Teddy and Andrew were in 8th and 6th grades when she wrote, at Collegiate Schools in Richmond, where Anne is a full-time librarian in the upper school, she expected to see her brother and his wife from Houston for his 20th reunion at W&L also. Jody Raines Brinkley has kept busy working on our big reunion gift since last summer, having a home reception for the oldest Brinkley daughter's wedding in September (Betsy), serving on three or four boards, being garden club president, AND going to Africa with Art for a month. They had 2½ weeks in Kenya on a tenting safari, went up to Egypt for 10 days, and had two days in London.

Goochland, VA, is just west of Richmond, I find, and Joy Peebles Massie was just about to move into their new home there. Son Jimmie, III, was married Jan. 1982 to a classmate at UVa from Newport News and they're living in Houston.

Ninie Laing wrote from Sweet Briar that her summer will be spent collecting new information for student internships in art related fields. She'd like our help with new people and places to contact in NYC, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. She will also be organizing their farm and setting up new lines of communication following her father's death this spring.

The Kenmore Association, the second oldest preservation group in the country, began its year recently under Sweet Briar leadership. President of the association is Betty Clapp Robinson '34 of Kansas City. Chairman of the Board of Regents is Sally Shallenberger Brown '32. Even the gentlemen officer, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, is Josiah Rowe, husband of Anne Wilson Rowe, Fredericksburg, VA.

There was also news from abroad. Clare Harrison Greenman sent a nice letter from London with her gift, and Jane Rather Thiebaud wrote a note from Geneva offering to help with recruiting students from Europe. She is a free-lance consultant and editor of Geneva Portfolio.

We're still farming in the Finger Lakes area of upstate New York. I enjoyed preaching and leading worship services in seven different congregations on nine occasions during 1981, but can't figure how ministers can write a new sermon every week and still run a church besides. Our two oldest have new jobs: Laurie, 24, works at Geneva Agricultural Experiment Station on disease resistance in green beans, towards the development of resistant varieties. Nancy, 22, is a sales representative for Arico Chemical Co., selling fertilizer and chemicals to dealers and farmers, taking soil samples, scouting fields for problems, etc. The other four continue in grades, 6, 8, 12, and RPI junior this fall.

REUNION NEWS: If you didn't come to reunion, you missed a great time and exciting news about our class achievements. For starters, we not only exceeded our goal of $50,000 for our reunion gift — we went over $60,000 and gave the largest reunion gift in Sweet Briar's history. Nancy Dowd Burton '46 sent a telegram of congratulations. Flo and Jody did a great job.

Sumptuous fare was featured at the class picnic at the Boathouse, scene of many of memories. Kim McMurtry Fowler made a giant bowl of Texas chili for us, a trifle tamer than usual in deference to untrained tongues, and we loved it. Flo Barclay Winston, her husband Chuck, and their sons, and Margie Scott Johnson's husband Earl barbecued chicken and beef ribs and pork ribs for us, with Flo having made salads and cookies already. The Winstons have been operating restaurants in Raleigh, NC, for years to prepare for this occasion and the practice really paid off. Many thanks! It turns out that Kim and her husband run riverboat tours and she does lots of catering among their other enterprises, so we had several "pros" at work. Really beats a box lunch picnic!

We are grateful to Sandra Stingily Simpson and Jody Raines Brinkley for serving as class president and fund agent for five years. New officers will be Diane Duffield Wood, president; Char Heuer DeSerio, fund agent; and I will write the class notes and try not to "burn out." This was my third set, so I'm sure that will be long enough.

Sandra chaired a panel discussion featuring the career paths of Ninie Laing, Nannette McBurney Crowds, and Chips Chao Pai, which proved most interesting. We were greatly moved when Chips told us what her Sweet Briar friendships meant to her, especially having grown up as an alien right after WWII. She says she got her Ph.D. to avoid deportation; Nannette says she went back to "peddling" after the move to Lake Forest, IL, because her kids wanted her out of the house and their hair; and Ninie went to Art History from biology because taking one free course per semester was a fringe benefit offered with the job she had at the time. So much for careful career planning for our class.

There were 40 or so classmates, 18 husbands, one male friend, and one son signed up to come, and I think that's about who came. We didn't quite have coed showers in the dorm, but sometimes it was a near thing.

Some of the less adventurous stayed at motels.

I wish we could afford to send copies of all the questionnaires out to all of you. Answers on "compatibility" were mostly either "our 25th anniversary is coming soon" or else "zero — I'm divorced," but there are a number of very happy second marriages and one classmate wrote "pats a lot, but not like the old days." Regarding how do we look, Kim says she is an 11 (better than 10, right?); several have mixed reports, "depending on the time of day," and "compared to what?" Some assured us they looked great but did not come or send current photos, which was cheating a bit. Achievements ranged from "surviving" to "becoming a middle-aged sex symbol." Ambitions include "beating my youngest child at Pacman," "swim with the tide," "keeping the art gallery," "bounce grandchildren on my knee," "run 50 miles/week," "to visit the US more often," and "get through the 50's gracefully." Start saving your news from April 1, 1983.

We felt that everyone has been inspired by seeing news of our classmates in print. The response to our request for news was very satisfying. Keep up the good work! You'll be hearing from us each spring and our class notes will be in the fall issue of the Alumnae Magazine.

Sara Finnegan Lycett has been appointed president of the Book Publishing Division for Waverly Press, Inc. She is also director and secretary of The Passano Foundation, a group which awards research grants to outstanding medical researchers and serves as a trustee of St. Timothy's School in Stevenson, MD.

Elinor Scherr Mosher is enrolled at the U. of Cincinnati.

Martha Holland Bartsch is on the faculty of Pace U. (Art Dept.) and recently illustrated a book which was published, A Haggadah for Shabbat, The Joy of Shabbat. Husband Don is a stockbroker and she has one son at the U. of Montana and another at a local high school.

Sally Mathiasen Prince owns five boutiques in the Washington area — four "Lemon Twists" and one "Whale's Tail." Her daughter is at Yale and she has two boys at the Landon School.

Barbara Ann Horton Carr earned a Master's degree in Speech, Language and Hearing Science in 1974 and is in the private practice of Speech-Language Pathology (Durham, NC). Son David graduated from UNC and daughter Heather Ann will be entering UNC this fall. Barbara is also active in the Durham Debutante Ball Society and in Hospice.

Judy Greer Schulz's daughter Cecily is a student at SBC and son Garth is into tennis and school musicals.

Celia Williams Dunn was in the Savannah Board of Realtors Million Dollar Club in 1981. The first year of Celia W. Dunn Realty Co. was a great success. Her son Lawrence is at Episcopal High and daughter Celia, Savannah Country Day.

Kay Prothro Yeager's daughters are both at SBC. Elizabeth is attending St. Andrews and has been a Sweet Briar Scholar, on the Dean's List and Freshman Honors. Linda also made Freshman Honors during 1981-82. Husband Frank is chairman of the President's Parents' Advisory Council.

Mary Denny Scott Wray is on the boards of the Houston Symphony and Child Guidance Center. Husband Michael is CFO for domestic operation of an oil company. Children and step-children are in schools from Texas to Maine.

Polly Chapman Herring has a daughter at UVA, a son "looking toward UVA" and 12-year-old Hilary. She says her shop, husband and family are all "obnoxiously normal."

Lousie Cobb Boggs is practicing law, and husband John is in the insurance business. All this, plus two active children, makes them "busy, well, and happy." After seeing SBC for the first time, daughter Alice (12) is wearing Louise's old college sweat-shirt! Louise feels this is a very positive sign!

Ann Hammond Dure vacationed in Greece and Italy last year. Son Beau (12) took SAT's under a special program at Duke for 7th graders and did well enough to be admitted to many colleges. Step-daughter Jane graduated from SBC last year.

Lucy Giles Richey has a daughter at Colgate and a 13-year-old son. She is working part-time in an antique shop.

Nancy Coppedge Lynn has a son at the U. of Georgia and a daughter who's a senior at Oldfields School. Nancy is president of the garden club and active in the interior decoration business. She saw both Suzie Phillion Babcock and Stuart Bohannon recently and says they both looked "wonderful."

Barbara Billo Alexander has owned a knitting shop in Richmond for the past two years. Her son Charles is the National Cross-Country Champion and was interviewed in Sports Illustrated. Daughter Jenny is a student at Collegiate.

Diane Stevens Creedon is the assistant to the Public Relations Director at Food and Wines from France. Last year she vacationed in Eastern Europe with Jane Garst Lewis and her family. The group cycled from Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, to Novisad, Yugoslavia, along the Danube. Jane lives in Warnford, England, which is southwest of London. Husband Don runs a chain of language schools, "Linguarama" in 32 countries. Their daughter Caroline will be going to Oxford to major in Japanese (which she already speaks fluently), and they have two sons, Richard and David.

Penny Stanton Carter lives in South Royalton, VT. Her oldest child, David, is at Deerfield.

Susie Prichard Pace is in Richmond and her son is a freshman at the University there.

Marion Lucas Fleming is in law school at Stetson U. and her three sons are all at the U. of Florida. Husband Peter is the Rector of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church in St. Petersburg.

Winifred Storey Davis received an M.B.A. in finance from Georgia State U. in June. Her oldest son, Frank, is a junior at Vanderbilt; Frederick is a high school senior and Gordon is in 7th grade.

Paige Wilkerson Pruitt has enjoyed a year of traveling since husband Neil is President of the National Association of Retail Druggists. Daughter Paige is a sophomore in college and Lisa is in prep school in Maine. Son Neil, Jr., (8) is at home.

Margaret Gwathmey spent three weeks at Oxford last summer, studying twentieth century British poetry under the Oxford-Berkeley program.

Fran Brackenridge Neumann is on a six-month leave of absence from working with disabled college students. She is on the board of the California Association of Postsecondary Educators of the Disabled.

Judith Harris Cutting has lived in Austin, TX, with husband Tom and children, Sam (15) and Heather (19) for six years. She is a test examiner for the U.S. Office of Personnel Management. Judith's freshman roommate at SBC, Pat Scott McHargue, is also in Austin.

Simone Aubry has completed the renovation of her home in Sudbury, MA, during the past year. She has gone back to work as the secretary to the innkeeper at the famous Longfellow's Wayside Inn.

Jill Babson Carter lives in NYC where Marty is a senior physician and professor at Rockefeller U. Jill is a free-lance writer. Daughter Anna is at Yale; Christopher, at the Lawrenceville School; and Lissy, at the Chapin School.

Linda MacArthur Hollis lives in Millwood, NY, with husband Robert, Jennifer (13) and Scott (11). Linda works with the Chappaqua Drama Group. Last summer the family went on a 10-week trip to the West Coast which included a raft trip on the Colorado River, as well as stops at many points of interest along the way.

Maria Garnett Hood's daughter, Garland, is a sophomore at SBC. Maria and Bob still run Camp Greenbrier.

Fund Agent

Peggy Davis Mildner (Mrs. Peggy D.), Director of Development, Friends School, 5114 North Charles St., Baltimore, MD 21210

I thank all of you for the postcards and "fund flaps." Your support of this endeavor is greatly appreciated. Congratulations to those of you with new husbands, babies, degrees, and careers. The accomplishments of our class are quite impressive. Here goes...

Dr. Bryan Alphin Bente and husband Paul are the proud parents of their first son, Paul Frederick, IV, born March 19th. During her maternity leave Bryan will be giving a crash course on obedience to her 90 lb. lab puppy. Paul and Bryan still reside in Landenberg, PA, where they design chemical instruments for Hewlett-Packard.

Ann Arnsperger Canipe, husband Kent, and daughter Ginny (5) remain loyal Atlantans. The famous Atlanta "Playgroup" has disbanded because of the activities and ambitions of both the children and mothers. Ann accepted a part-time job in the trust department of the First National Bank of Cobb County. She has dropped most volunteer activities with the exception of her Junior League commitment to GATE, a drug education program for schools. Recently, First Lady Nancy Reagan attended a GATE meeting in Atlanta. In April Ann traveled with Kent to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, for a business convention.

Ginny Kay Baldwin Cox gave birth to her third beautiful girl, Ann Stuart, on March 2nd. G.K. reports that she, Tommy, and daughters Elizabeth (6) and Katie (3) are active in water sports, enjoying a motor boat, a dingy (her Christmas present), and next a wind surf board. G.K. and Tommy left their home in Poquoson, VA, to vacation at Hilton Head. They saw Lynn Pottharst McMillan and husband Ricky who still live in New Orleans.

Liz Beach Baker writes from Germantown, TN, that she and Tom have three children: Carrie (9), Hunter (6), and Thomas Frazier Baker, V. (Frazier). Liz devotes her free time to volunteer activities: the Bonheur Club (a children's hospital), a church guild, and the Junior League.

Beth Beckner Henke finished her Master's in Public Health in May, 1981, and accepted a position in Chapel Hill, NC, as Assistant to the Director of Training for INTRAH — an organization training health workers in Africa and the Mid-East. She travels between Chapel Hill and some of the 18 countries now involved. Beth visited Somalia and Kenya in March and April — a total of 13 African countries visited so far. In addition to her business travels, Beth was elected to Delta Omega, National Public Health Honor Society.

I saw Betsy Blackwell Laundon at the fall Alumnae Council meetings. Betsy has returned South after a few years in the far West (Oregon). Husband Walt left Arthur Anderson and took an accounting position with a company in Simpsonville, SC. Betsy is busy with the new home, new schools, etc.

It was so good to hear from Kathy Blythe Southerland who lives with husband Bill and children Liza (10) and J.J. (6) in Charlotte, NC. Kathy spends most of her time volunteering for the Junior League — an executive position last year and the Follies this year. Kathy and Bill often see Blair Josephs Rohrer and husband Ivon, also of Charlotte. Blair and Ivon have three children: Kathrine (16), Ivon, III (4) and Anna Blair (3). Blair is enjoying her teaching of art concepts to elementary school children through the Junior League. Ivon is busy developing shopping centers in North Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Dr. Martha Brewer is now a third year resident in Obstetrics and Gynecology in Jackson, MS. She was elected Secretary-Treasurer of District VII Junior Fellows of the American College of Ob./Gyn. at the annual meeting in Kansas City, MO, in Oct. 1981.

Ann (Snick) Briber can be found in Washington, DC, working for American Express when not traveling around the world. In the past year Snick returned to her favorite vacation spot of Hawaii as well as spending Thanksgiving weekend in Buenos Aires. More trips are in the making for the summer.

Dr. Avis Brown Yount, husband Peter, and daughter Lindsay (2) are permanent residents of Augusta, GA. They spent their winter vacation time in Park City, UT, on a skiing trip. In addition to her dermatology practice, Avis does Glaucoma-Diabetes screening for the Junior League. Next year she will be Career Active Chairman.

More Charlotte, NC, residents include Betsy Brown Tucker, Walter, and Georgia (7). While Walter teaches Emergency Medicine in the residency program, Betsy stays on their farm running a stable. She is also active in teaching CPR in the Medical Auxilliary at the hospital.

Gretchen Buis Jones and Skip live in Richmond, VA, where she just finished a second graduate degree — M.A. in English — in order to resume teaching one day. Gretchen's best news is the birth of their second child/first son, Hamill Dice Jones, III. Their daughter Windsor is now three.

As of February 20, 1982, Courtney Cash is now Mrs. Lloyd Montague Mustin, II. Courtney was recently a technical consultant for Reynolds Metals Co. in Richmond. She will now join Lloyd, who is a U.S. Naval officer in Newport, RI, and go to Europe while he is on a six-month cruise in the Mediterranean.

Mary Chesnutt remarried May, 1981, to Arthur Hunt, Jr. They live in Guilford, CT, with their four children: Spencer (12), Rachel (8), Jeffrey (5½), and Andrew (4). Mary works for Yale U. as a systems analyst/programmer.

Hattie Coons Babbitt finds herself busy campaigning for husband Bruce's second term as governor of Arizona. She is still practicing law full-time (civil litigation) with Robbins S. Green. Hattie and Bruce are enjoying the fact that their sons Christopher (6½) and T.J. (4½) are finally big enough to ski. They love spring skiing in the West!

Judy Daniel Adams is still teaching math at Amherst County High School in Amherst, Va. She and Wayne were planning to tour parts of Spain with a group of students during spring break. Judy has two children: daughter Robin (6) and son Sam (8).

Peggy Davis Mildner divides her time between being Director of Development at Friends School in Baltimore and being a volunteer worker with the Junior League and other neighborhood groups. Last summer she became the owner of a partially renovated 100-year-old house. Her completion date is projected for year 2000! Peggy left the job and old home to vacation on the islands of Malta and Gozo in the southern Mediterranean.

The West End Cafe, one of Washington's hottest dining spots, has a new chef — Linda Donald. She reports that the food is good, hours are long, and the business is successful! In Linda's spare time, she maintains a small but active architectural business. She is currently designing a small downtown office building and doing some residential and restaurant consulting.

Peggy Gibbes Jackson and husband returned from three years in Germany. They are living now in Fayetteville, NC, where her husband is an orthopedic surgeon for the 82nd Airborne Division. Their first child, Joseph Porter Jackson, III, was born March 11, 1982. Peggy is now taking a crash course on "Motherhood."

Elora Gilbert Massie writes from her lovely, rented 1,000 acre farm in Pearisburg, VA, where she owns three horses, two dogs, a cat and cockatoo. Elora works as a juvenile probation counselor in Giles Co. Her part-time work on an M.A. in clinical psychology will be completed next year when she takes an educational leave to attend Radford U. Her most recent undertaking was canoeing lessons which led to a raft trip through the New River Gorge.

Phyllis Girard has moved to Oreland, PA. She is currently a teacher in the Gifted Program for Bucks County, where she teaches 7-12th grade Humanities in Bristol. Phyllis states that both her Ph.D. in Drama from the U. of Texas and her liberal arts background from SBC have been assets in helping develop curriculum ideas. One unit for gifted high school students, "Greek Drama: A Reflection of Greek Society," will be published in G/C/T.

In the far West city, Seattle, WA, Anne Green Gilbert has started her own studio, the Creative Dance Center, with dance and movement classes for children and adults. She has a highly talented faculty of five young dancers. Anne's second book, Creative Dance for All Ages, is in preparation. Husband David continues as an Assistant Professor of Medicine at the U. of Washington. They have three children: Bronwen (4½), Huw (7), and Griffith (1½).

Less Guthrie Ethridge reigns as city clerk in the Chicago suburb of Parkridge, IL. Less writes that the accounting courses she is taking have definitely helped in the rigorous annual job of preparing and passing a city budget. Her free time is spent among Brownies, Cub Scouts, soccer, drama and tap dancing with her two children, Charlie and Anne Lesslie. Husband Ed continues to work with Modern Talking Pictures, distributing films and helping develop ideas for new ones.

The Charlotte SBC Alumnae Club continues to grow with the recent addition of Dr. Claudette Harloe Dalton. Claudette and son Gordon moved in August; both are adjusting well to new friends, school, and job. Claudette has taught intensive care nursing part-time and really does not plan to resume her anesthesiologist practice this year. She loves being in a city with an active SBC Alumnae group.

Cynthia Hays has started her 12th year as secretary to the president at the Christian Aid Mission in Charlottesville, VA. After work she is mostly involved in missionary work among the many foreign residents in town and foreign students at UVA. The big challenge during the past year has been assisting a refugee family from Afghanistan.

Doing lots of winter skiing near their home in Norwich, VT, is Meny Hill Brooks. The entire family enjoys downhill and cross-country skiing. Unfortunately, husband Gary broke his leg this winter and has been on crutches for months. Meny is now enrolled part-time in an M.B.A. program. With no job or school for the summer, she and children Rachel and Coleman plan to head South to Florida to spend lots of time with Meny's parents and friends.

Carolyn Hollister Holmfelt and husband Dick continue to live in the New Jersey countryside with their two children Christine (8) and Carl (5). Dick is a chemical sales trainer and a LCDR in the Naval Reserve. With children in school, Carolyn has found time to start her own nutrition business. She also teaches a Great Books class and does other volunteer work.

Jan Holt finished her B.F.A. at S.M.U. and is supposed to be an artist. However, she writes that she is wintering mostly in L.A. with friends and relatives and traveling around California. She ran her first marathon in Honolulu last December. In the warmer months she returns to Boulder, CO, to enjoy gardening, reading, running, with time out for backpacking, skiing and traveling.

Joan Horowitz Pellaton and husband Charles remain in Muttontown, NY. She had her second child in July, 1981 — Nicholas Charles Pierre. Daughter Victoria turned 3 and is now an absolute joy.

Jan Huguenin Assmus is finally getting her "junior year abroad" in France! Husband Gert is there on a teaching sabbatical; they live in Fontainebleau. Jan reports that it has been great learning to speak and cook like the French. The real adjustment has been living in a three-room apartment with two children with the chicken pox!

Kay Hutton Eadie writes that she is recently divorced but plans to remain in her hometown of Nashville, TN, with her two children Baker (7) and Hutton (3½). She just started working for Caldwell Banker's commercial office. Kay says she is wearing holes in her shoes learning everything she can about downtown office buildings in Nashville.

San Francisco remains the home for Dr. Elizabeth Lewis. She will finish her child psychiatry fellowship in June and begin private practice with four friends. They are all subspecialized in different areas of psychiatry from psychosomatics to child analysis. At the present time Elizabeth works in a day treatment center for disturbed adolescents as well as running monthly support groups for families with children with muscular dystrophy. She is dating a wonderful ophthalmologist; they spend lots of time skiing at Lake Tahoe in the winter.

Mary Mahan Marco remains active with Nursing Mothers in Warminster, PA. She is considering becoming a childbirth instructor. Mary also teaches two math courses at the community college. Husband Bob will be on sabbatical next year so they will be in Florida for awhile. Their son Robbie is now two. Mary reports that Maureen Robertson Baggett is planning to return to the Washington, DC, area.

Another Atlantan, Carolyn Mapp Rogers, keeps busy raising her three boys: Michael (6), David (4), and Paul (1). She is involved in several volunteer jobs, especially the preschool vision screening with the Junior League.

Washington, DC, is blessed with another SBC grad — Lucille McKee Clarkson. She and Bill moved with the two children, Susan (1) and William (4). Lucille loves going to SBC functions and seeing all those familiar faces!

Esther Michel Helm has returned to Connecticut after a recent divorce. She is working as a financial systems analyst for Celanese Corporation in New York City. Esther says that she loves the Big Apple!

Kathy Montz Miller lives in White Haven, PA, with husband Ed and the four children: Jack (11), Billy (8), E.W. (7) and the princess Kiki (1½). Twice a day she feeds 10 ducks, 18 chickens, a cow and her heifer. Montz has entered the working world — selling property and casualty insurance.

I had a surprise phone call from Frere Murchison Gornto this winter. She was visiting her sister who had recently moved to Atlanta. Frere has finished her year as president of the Junior League in Wilmington, NC. With both children in school all day, Frere has reentered the business world on a full-time basis.

In sunny Southern California Lynn Oakes Miller's life is filled with civic and fund raising activities: executive job with the Junior League, L.A. County Transportation Commission, St. Matthew's Church Children's Hospital, and the Ballet Guild. Lynn and Steve have two children: Carolyn (4) and Patrick (2). Lynn's spare time is spent playing tennis, jogging or exercising.

Another graduate in Pasadena, CA, is Carol Osborn. She is currently adding the role of "Nedda" in Pagliacci to her opera repertoire and will be performing it the spring of 1982. Carol's new hobby is writing opera critiques for the Italian newspaper. She has also joined the Junior League of Pasadena.

One more in Washington, DC — J.P. Powell has moved from the suburb of Arlington into the heart of the capital. She has great ambitions of opening her own retail store. J.P. sees a lot of her old friend Lucille McKee Clarkson who also moved to D.C.

Haden Ridley Winborne, John and twins Lizzie and Annie (5) enjoy being permanent Atlanta residents. Haden just completed a busy year as corresponding secretary for the Atlanta Junior League and is planning to take an inactive year in '82-'83. Haden's father surprised her with a Caribbean cruise for her birthday present. She and John cruised for a week in May, stopping at Cozumel, the Grand Caymans, Ocho Rios, Jamaica, and an island in the Bahamas.

Maureen Robertson Baggett, husband and three children are moving from Chicago back to Maryland the summer of 1982. Maureen is still enjoying her non-working status with a few breaks in routine by teaching at a local college. Her long-range ambition is to write a novel — good luck on your venture.

Fran Robinson Boyer's twin girls, Jodie and Paige, have turned one and are now chasing after brother Trey (4). Fran and Parke are tired of long Ohio winters and are seeking a new job back in Dallas. Fran's real escape from snow and children was her trip to the British Virgin Islands in April. She and Parke chartered a yacht for 10 days of snorkeling and sailing.

A new interior decorator hits the Oyster Bay, NY, area — Keithley Rose Miller has gone into business for herself. She now has more time to devote to the kids and especially to Gibby's school.

Jean Rushin Brown is enjoying every minute of being mother to 1-year-old Robert. She is still as busy as when she commuted to NYC every day. Jean is now active in the Junior League and the Wilton Historical Society. Her sporting activities now include skiing, indoor tennis, and aerobics. Jean and Jonathan still enjoy Wilton, CT, and their new mountain place in Vermont.

Connecticut is also the home of Kiki Stoddard Cook, John and daughter Courtney (1). They live in Stamford as John is pilot for Pan Am out of NYC. Kiki and John play tennis and hope to start their own business one day soon.

Where to start with all of Sue Scanlan's news! She has started her fifth year with the Congress Women's Caucus. Scan just ran a fund-raising theatre party at the Kennedy Center with the Board President, Jean Stapleton. To celebrate their third anniversary, Scan and Jared leave again for the Orient, stopping off this time in Korea, Bangkok and Japan. Scan has taken four semesters of Japanese to prepare for this trip! Jared ran a successful northern Virginia race for Lt. Governor Dick Davis. Scan mentions a chance of a four-year Tokyo job as part of the "spoils system." The reward for frantic months on the campaign trail was a three-week trip to Mexico City and Acapulco. I think Scan gets the travel award for the year! Scan reports that Melissa Griffith Manning and husband Duane are living near Williamsburg, where she is selling wood stoves. Scan saw Pam Noyes Engelbrecht in D.C. while she attended a librarian conference. Pam is working at VPI and is horse breeding at their farm.

Jan Sheets Jones, Jimmy, and children Jennifer (7) and Justin (4) are still in St. Louis where Jimmy teaches at Washington U. Jan is expecting her third child in August; therefore, she and the children will not be traveling to France with Jimmy for the summer. Jan has recently reentered the teaching world part-time at a local community college. She is also actively involved with the Church School Board, Girl Scouts, PTA, United Way and the Department of Education and Training at Barnes Hospital Prenatal Classes.

Back down in Nashville, TN, Ginny Stanford Perdue writes that her days are full, nurturing and transporting the three children Meredith (8), Chandler (5), and Emily (2) to the typical afterschool activities and lessons. Ginny and John feel especially blessed to have been a part in the formation of a new church congregation in January 1981. There are now 1,000 members meeting in a high school!

Missy Sumner Huggins has started her own catering/baking business out of her home in Atlanta — Missy's Madness is its name. Missy, Bob, and children Samantha (5) and Drew (1) spent last summer vacationing at Amelia Island. However, Bob and Missy went sans children in February to Roatan, a bay island of Honduras, where Missy made her first attempts at scuba diving. In addition to her spring and fall tennis leagues, Missy will work at Elestoh Children's Hospital for her Junior League Placement. In December, she will help chair the bake sale business at the annual Festival of Trees, a fund raiser for Egleston Hospital.

The good news from Ann Rhett Taylor Merrill is the birth of a son Charles Goodwyn Rhett (Rhett) on April 13th. Ann's husband Tony has been promoted to executive officer on the aircraft carrier Independence. They have moved from D.C. to Norfolk, VA; however, when Tony leaves in June for a six-month tour of duty, Ann and Rhett plan to spend a lot of time in Jacksonville, FL, visiting family. Ann hopes to get over to the Mediterranean in the fall for a reunion with husband.

Ginger Taylor Lopez was expecting her second child in April; thanks to an amniocentesis she knew it would be a boy. Ginger, George and son Mark (2) still live in Woodbridge, VA, where George works for the Federal Reserve Board. The entire family takes annual treks to their cottage in Ocean City, MD.

Elizabeth Thomas Colaneri writes from New Jersey that in January 1982 she graduated from Seton Hall Law School and is now practicing law with her father in the Atlantic City, NJ, area. Her husband Joe is nearing completion of his doctorate in education. They both long for the end of the college days!

According to Ann Tremain Lee, it has been a great year for the entire family. With Allie in preschool, Cameron in 1st grade, and Maria in 4th, Ann finally has some free time for her own volunteer activities. Ann and Saint love living in Newport News where Saint practices medicine. This year they will return to UVA to attend his 10th reunion from medical college.

I had the best reunion in Chattanooga, TN, in April with my good friend Nancy Trotter Kendall and her two boys Scott (7) and Willie (4). Nancy and Skip will forever live in Arlington, VT, where he runs the old family business company. They love skiing with the kids in Vermont but vacationed alone this winter in Aspen. Nancy enjoys playing platform tennis and decorating their newly constructed home.

The report from Atlee Walker Wolf in Richmond, VA, is that nothing changes! Atlee is still teaching at the Florence Crittenton Home and singing in the church choir. Husband John is still a partner in the firm of Ober, Grimes and Shriver. Daughter Jessica is in the second grade and is singing in the junior choir. The entire family vacations in Maine every summer.

Win Waterman Lundy survived the winter in Bettendorf, IA, by taking a trip to the family home in Florida. David is still in the real estate business, son David, Jr., enters 1st grade, and son Peter is finally ready for preschool. Win and David made two additions to their home — new kitchen and bedroom wings. She is still very active in the Davenport Junior League. Win promised the kids a trip to Disneyworld next year and promised me a stopover in Atlanta.

Betsy West Drupp is not lost but just very busy. Betsy, Craig, and children Marion (9), Wes (11) and Heidi (5) still live in Berwyn, PA. Craig was just made head of the Math Department at The Haverford School, where he also coaches the varsity tennis team. In between carpools, Betsy plays field hockey in the fall and lacrosse, squash and tennis in the spring and summer. She continues to teach movement exploration three days a week and swimming at the Y one day a week.

Pat Winton Schlingmann and new husband Carl are busy restoring and driving classic cars. Pat writes proudly of her daughter finally entering 1st grade and her step-daughter Karen entering college. Karen made the U.S. Jr. Olympic Equestrian team and competed in Alberta, Canada. An open invitation is extended to anyone visiting Wilmington, DE.

Elizabeth Wyatt and husband live in Brooklyn, NY, where they are restoring an old brownstone home, Elizabeth is presently manager of the business development for the animal health and agricultural division of Merck & Co. with responsibility for European and U.S. licenses, acquisition, and distribution agreements. She loves the pharmaceutical industry of which this is a part. She is also a member of the Financial Women's Association of New York, an excellent network for middle and upper management financial women.

Alberta Zotack Baigent is currently working in the personnel field for a medium-size law firm (85 attorneys). In addition she is coordinator of recruiting legal personnel. She and Peter have a beautiful daughter, Blair Carruthers, born Jan. 17, 1980.

Finally, Nancy Wendling Peacock from Atlanta will close with a few words about her year's events. Tom and I and the two children Jenni (5) and Josh (2) moved into our newly built home before the holidays. I have completed my year as president of SBC Alumnae Club and as a political lobbyist for the Atlanta Junior League. Next year I will be a member of the Provisional Committee for the League and chairman-elect of the Junior Committee of the High Museum of Art. When not carpooling, volunteering, or house building, I wrote my first book with a friend — Atlanta's Best Buys, a comprehensive shopper's guide for below-retail stores in Atlanta. It has been selling well in Atlanta and now in neighboring towns; therefore, an updated version will be printed in the fall of 1982.

I thank you all for another successful response. If you ever hear from the classmates not mentioned in the magazine, send news of them along with yours on next year's postcard.

Secretary

Weezie Blakeslee Gilpin (Mrs. Robert P.), Goodwin House, 300 Centre St., Milton, MA 02186

Fund Agent

Diane Dale, 1517 Seven Pines Rd., Schaumburg, IL 60193

Our column is proof that the saying, "No news is good news," is not always accurate!

Abigail Allen Rennekamp and Nick had their first child, a girl, on Mar. 3, 1982. In addition to operating a thoroughbred breeding farm in Prospect, KY, they own four Norwich terriers.

Rita Anelmo remembered to send news because of yogurt! She bought some at a food co-op and, reading the label, discovered it came from SBC's dairy! She still works for USDA — and on the ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

Alison Baker and Gary live in a renovated warehouse in downtown Atlanta with four dogs (and a litter on the way!). While still producing television and radio commercials for J. Walter Thompson, Alison started her own business called "Alison's Baskets." Woven out of grapevine, reed and willow, they are already represented at two galleries in Atlanta and Albuquerque.

Gypsie Bear van Antwerp has been teaching in a Montessori School this past year. She attended Cary Davis' wedding last summer and plans to see Emily Garth Brown and her tribe at the beach this summer.

In Omaha, NE, working as a real estate broker, Cindy Bekins is considering graduate school but is struggling with business law. She writes that the renovations on her house are progressing.

Helen Bertles and Richard Anthony Pearce were married last October in Bermuda, where Helen, a watercolorist, was director of the Bermuda Society of Arts. They will live in Johannesburg, where Richard is financial director of a security company.

Anne Billings McDougall was planning to leave her job at AmeriFirst Mortgage Corp. by May 1 as she and Ed were expecting their first child in June. They have been busy fixing up the new house in Miami they moved into last fall.

Lee Brennan Kidd gets the brevity award, writing, "Not much is happening here." "Here" is Atlanta.

Joyce Cameron Harder is active with church work, a home business with Shaklee Corp., and "being Mama" to Cameron, 1, and Walt, 4½. Howard will receive his Ph.D. in August and already has a job with a Columbia, SC, consulting firm. They stayed with Anne Billings McDougall and Ed for the Orange Bowl.

Betsy Cann Akers and Scott are expecting their second baby in September. Meanwhile Betsy is looking forward to the trip she won to Holland by selling SBC bulbs.

Creigh Casey Krin and John had twin girls on Feb. 16, 1982: Lindsay Jane and Heather Elissa. Master of the understatement, Creigh writes, "My days are hectic!" Jane Lucas visited them in January.

Peggy Cheesewright Garner is taking a sabbatical from the classroom but continues to act as a health (mainly nutrition) and developmental consultant, as well as president of the Seattle SBC Alumnae Club. John's business now has offices in Dallas, Houston, and NYC.

Terry Christovich Gay is finding lawyering and mothering keep her busy — "frantic, really." Kearney (20 months) amuses himself by destroying her SBC tulips! Terry, Debi Ziegler Hopkins and Cary Davis meet for lunch on a regular basis.

Anita Clarendon Ledsinger and husband Chuck (UVA '72) are having a great time with Leila Grace, born Nov. 18, 1981. Anita is a working part time at a suburban weekly newspaper, and she and Chuck are in the process of looking for a larger house in Memphis.

Justine Cobb is executive director of the Northside Readiness School in Atlanta, a therapeutic preschool for 3 to 7-year-olds with moderate behavior and learning disorders.

Dede Conley and Gerard have moved to Korhogo, a bigger Ivory Coast town. Dede is teaching seniors for the first time, and Gerard now has a physics/chemistry laboratory so he can show and explain experiments. They continue to explore Africa but spent last summer in the States and plan to spend this summer in France (Gerard's family live near Nice).

Cathy Conner Strobel writes from St. Louis that 2-yr.-old Emily and tennis keep her busy. After the winter's disastrous snowstorm, the Strobels were looking forward to their March trip to Florida.

Rene Conover Reed and Nat were expecting their first child in early June and were busy with nursery preparations!

Mac Cuthbert Langley and Johnny were occupied with arrangements for Johnny's private pediatric practice (nice alliteration!) opening scheduled for June. In an effort to combat chocolate caloric intake, Mac jogs daily, takes aerobic dancing and chases

3-yr.-old Will. The Langleys' yearly beach trip with Nan Robertson Clarke and family was canceled this year because of Nan's expected summer arrival. Johnny was in Boston for medical meetings in March and we had a fun reunion, though Mac was sorely missed!

In Charlottesville, Susan Dabney Smith reports, "There is never a dull moment" with Max (12), Ellis (9), Hilary (2½), and Lucy Haden, born Jan. 26, 1981! A strange double coincidence: Susan and Clement Virgin Durkes share a birthday as do their daughters, Lucy and Frances.

Diane Dale writes that 1982 finds her happily single (with a West Highland Terrier for company), selling freight for Flying Tigers. Diane still travels as often as possible.

Dabney Dalton Jacob lives in New Orleans with Clyde and their 20-month-old Margaret Blair. Clyde is a partner in his law firm; Dabney runs a small import business.

Mary Danford has a new job as both an appellate and trial attorney — a welcome change after 3½ years of doing workers' compensation work. Running injuries have Mary doing "disco bicycling" — stationary bicycle plus loud music! Michael is teaching high school English, coaching cross-country and running. He qualified again for the Boston Marathon!

Sue Dern Plank and Dave continue to housesit while they work on their own house. Sue remains at the Canajoharie (NY) Library and Art Gallery as curator of Historical Collections. She had two projects funded by NEH, a historical exhibition and a walking tour brochure, and is back cataloging and working on an oral history project. She has seen Laurie Norris Solywoda and daughter Stephanie, and she met Ginger Woodward Gast's daughter Caroline in October.

Molly Dunn Martin, William, and Cameron (4½) are living in Montgomery, AL. Molly's "consuming interest" is showing and breeding Dalmatians. The Martins hosted John Lee (now teaching at U. of Texas-Arlington) last summer, "which brought back a lot of SBC memories."

Glenys Dyer Church is juggling her full-time job in logistics at TRW and raising 1-yr.-old Douglas.

Christine Eng Leventhal and Peter are building a solar house in Pound Ridge, NY. Peter's health food store is thriving and he is studying for an M.S. in Clinical Nutrition. Christine is teaching exercise classes, taking ballet, freelance editing, and raising 2-yr.-old Amy Christine. They often see Dede McIntyre Porter and John.

Ann Evans is in medical school at USC in Columbia, where she is the oldest woman in her class. (Ann said there are older men!) One of her classmates is also an SBC graduate — Cammie Bethea '81! Ann speculates that by our 20th reunion she may be a practicing physician.

Alison Fifer Stonecipher, Daniel (a TWA pilot) and 2-yr.-old Will live in Santa Barbara, CA. Alison just completed her first year of Jr. League work and now owns a business called "Shopping Unlimited," a personal shopping service.

Lisa Fowler Winslow and Bill had their first child, Russell, in June, 1981 — a redhead! Lisa is active in the Los Angeles Jr. League and with her part-time job as a law librarian. She and Bill had just returned from a tennis ranch vacation.

Emily Garth Brown reports there is no news — hard to believe with three little ones!

Janie Genster and John Buckley had a daughter, Emily Burke Buckley, on Oct. 15, 1981. With this "rich addition," Janie decided to leave her law practice and is now teaching one course as a lecturer at UVA Law School. She writes that the DC-C'ville route is now very familiar (ah, Route #29!)

Chris Hegarty Savage and Pat became parents on Nov. 8, 1981: a boy, Clay Patrick. Pat works for Central National Bank as a corporate banking officer; Chris has a new job (still as a medical technologist) three days a week at the University Suburban Health Center in Cleveland. Jean Platt Spencer, David and their baby visited the Savages last May.

Carter Heyward Morris and Hampton had their second child, Wade, last September. (Heyward is 3½). Carter is doing volunteer work in child advocacy; Hampton is a lawyer. Carter had a fabulous trip to Holland last spring — "well worth all the bulb-selling efforts to win it."

In Tallahassee, Susan Kirby is single again, making pottery and working part time as a pharmacist. She was planning to leave in September on a year's trip to the South Pacific and Indonesia, working part time in third world medically deficient areas. Susan spent a month this winter skiing in Colorado and while there spoke to Sue Rockwell Patten, who is living in New Mexico with Malcolm and their two children.

Janie Knutson James and Michael received an early Christmas present with the arrival of Patrick Michael on Dec. 23, 1981. Their Great Dane, Waco, is a self-appointed nanny! Janie runs daily, has no immediate plans to return to paid employment and reports she's never been happier. She and Michael were looking forward to a two-week vacation on the Chesapeake Bay.

In June Magee Leigh moved to North Carolina to begin a three-year fellowship in pediatric pulmonary and infectious diseases at UNC-Chapel Hill. While in New Orleans for her pediatric oral boards, she had a visit with Betsie Meric Gambel and her family.

Nancy Lenihan Conaty keeps busy fixing up a new house in Little Silver, NJ, working part-time in a children's clothing store, and being class mother and board member of 4½-yr.-old Matt's nursery school; your typical "no full-time job" agenda! Jay is a V.P. at Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. in NYC.

Jane Lowrey Tierney had a son, Douglas Lawrence, on Nov. 30, 1981.

In Boston Jane Lucas changed architectural firms and is designing for corporate space and commercial firms in the downtown area. She is teaching an advanced level design studio at Boston Architectural College and is a board member for the N.E. Chapter of the American Society of Interior Designers. She is finishing a private residence on Martha's Vineyard, the design of which she hopes to have published. Last spring Jane chartered a sailboat in the Grenadines; this spring she was planning a trip to Florida.

Jane McCutchen McFadden, Barclay and their two boys Barclay (4½ Yrs.) and Thomas (2 Yrs.) live in Bratlesboro, VT. Barclay is in a wholesale business and Jane runs a retail gourmet/natural food store.

Marion McKee Humphreys and Hunter were expecting their second child in June. Marion is "keeping busy as mom and wife and exercising."

Ann Major Gibb, Ernie and 3-yr.-old Emily welcomed David Randolph to the family on Nov. 11, 1981. In September, en route to Las Vegas for a medical meeting, they saw Diane Dale. Ann is active with Sunday School teaching and several international health projects.

Lisa Marshall Chalmers and Davis remain in Atlanta having a wonderful time with 10-mo.-old Marshall. Emily Garth Brown is Marshall's godmother.

After receiving her M.L.S., Celia Ann Martin returned to Gulfport where she is extensions librarian for the Gulfport-Harrison County Library, in charge of two branches. In addition she has operated a catering business for two years. She and her friend Scotty managed to find time to attend Cary Davis King's wedding. Celia also keeps in touch with Linda Lipscomb.

More babies! In Glen Rock, NJ, Joan May Harden and Rick's second was due June 15. (Meredith is two.) Joan is active in several women's clubs — she stars as an apple in one club's play produced for elementary schools; she is chairing a luncheon for 350 women for another. Rick is now a partner in his law firm.

Lois Means is both office manager for the Flynn Corp. and legal secretary to an admiralty attorney. In addition she is working on a Master's of Education in School Psychology at the Citadel, while remaining active in Young Republican work: chairman of the Charleston County Y.R. and first vice-chairman for the South Carolina Y.R.

Betsie Meric Gambel and Greg had their second son, Thomas Meric on Aug. 30, 1981, one day after Gregory's fifth birthday! Betsie is active with volunteer work: she remains co-chairman of the PBS auction, board chairman of Children's House Montessori School, a member of St. Francis Xavier Board of Religious Education, and SBC Admissions Representative. Meanwhile she has returned to work at Sacred Heart part time and tutors in the afternoon. Greg's office is busy handling the Las Vegas MGM fire. In his spare time Greg sails his new sailboat and planned to be in Newport, RI, in June for a race. They spent Mardi Gras skiing in Snowmass, CO.

In Dallas, TX, Liz Mizell Schoen-voegel and Bob had their third child in October, Emily (their boys are 5½ and 4). Liz "dabbles in golf, tennis and the Jr. League." Bob, a urologist, has opened his own practice.

Janis Merritt married David Bethany on Aug. 17, 1980. She stepped down from the board of the local SPCA and the chairmanship of the arts council to travel with David's band, The Killer Whales (new wave and original rock 'n' roll). She is learning how to do sound for the band and loves the erratic life but still finds time for her own writing.

Rosalyn Monroe Killgo and Keith had their second daughter on Jan. 10, 1982 (their first is almost 4). Keith is part of the Blackbyrds (Walking in Rhythm), formerly associated with jazz great, Donald Byrd, and is embarking on a solo career. He and Roslyn co-wrote songs on their last album, Better Days. Roslyn is working on a children's book called Tibby, Tenna Weena and the Great Gazmoley and is looking for a publisher.

Laura Montague Cross and Jeff had their second child, Katharine Montague, on Mar. 26, 1982. Laura predicts that 19-month-old Fred and the baby will have her in shape in no time!

Lisa Montgomery remains in NYC practicing law. She sees fellow New Yorkers Susan Miller, Melinda Williams and Betsy Perry occasionally and Gina Conley visits from Philadelphia.

Sara Moran Lemmer and Joseph Peter Lemmer were married on May 2, 1981. Following Joe's completion of a rheumatology fellowship at MCV in Richmond, VA, they moved to Temple, TX, where he is senior staff physician at Scott and White Medical Clinic and Associate professor of Medicine at Texas A&M. Sara misses her job as a transportation planner but is now active in the local cultural activities center.

Betsy Oakley Smith, Smitty and 3-yr.-old Harrison have moved to Birmingham, AL (Smitty's hometown), where Smitty has joined a law firm.

Judy O'Keefe Vindici had her first baby, Desmond Henery, on Feb. 14, 1982. Judy works for Occidental Petroleum Corp. managing commercial development projects; she recently received a promotion.

Scottie O'Toole is in her second year of recruiting for General Electric in Syracuse, NY. It involves enough traveling to keep Scottie happy, yet allows her time in her new house — a two bedroom Cape in Dewitt, NY. She planted 80 SB bulbs and couldn't wait for spring.

Stephanie Paporozzi Williams and Bruce had their second son, Bruce, Jr., on Dec. 15, 1981, in Oklahoma City.

Debbie Pollock Meyer was offered a new job last August, finished her M.B.A. on Sep. 4, and moved to Portland, OR, on Sept. 11! She is now in the Treasury Dept. of NERCO, Inc., the fifth largest U.S. coal mining company, and responsible for cash management, some financing arrangements and pension monitoring. On the trip cross country Debbie and her sister visited Yellowstone and Jackson, WY. Debbie can see Mt. St. Helens from her balcony and planned to ski Mt. Hood in July.

Jane Potts married Donald Keith Sutherland, Jr. (Bud) on Aug. 30, 1981. Jane and Bud met on Ted Turner's Tenacious (Bud was his captain). He now works for Ted's Cable News Network station in Atlanta. The '73-ers at their wedding included Betsy Perry, Terry Christovich Gay, Deborah Ziegler Hopkins, Melinda Williams, Lacey Williams Nasteff, and Carol Stewart Harper. Jane has enjoyed seeing the Atlanta '73 contingent — Lee Addison, Lee Brennan Kidd, and Carter Heyward Morris. Jane's only criticism of Atlanta is that there's "not much water around!"

Carol Anne Provence Gollivan and Mills had a son, Henry Mills, on May 11, 1981 (Anne Genevieve is 5½). Carol Ann is active with the Jr. League, church work, and the Greenville, SC, SBC Alumnae Club; Mills remains happy with his 12-man law firm.

Living in Milwaukee, Pam Rasche is an attorney with the state of Wisconsin Equal Rights Division handling complaints of discrimination in employment.

Cathy Rasmussen Rentzel has a new job: coordinating half-time events, pep squads and promotions for the SMU basketball program. In addition she is playing tennis in a neighborhood league and is coaching her fourth season of K-1st grade soccer.

Char Reed-Miller took a month off to show her horse, Spruce Goose, on the Florida Winter Circuit, managing to win enough to pay expenses. She returned to Tallahassee, FL, to find that three of her research papers had been accepted for publication. With NIH funding her work, the "publish or perish" syndrome is a constant worry. Char's new hobby is pumping iron. She started lifting weights to help with her injured leg and realized the "all-over" benefits, though she claims, "I'll never be a '10.'"

Nan Robertson Clarke and Hal were expecting their third child in late August (Boo is 2½; Toby is 10½ months). The Clarkes live in Atlanta.

Robin Rodan became board certified in family practice in August, 1980, and before settling down to medical practice, embarked on a year's trip to include the continental U.S., Ireland,

New Zealand, Australia, Hawaii, and the Fiji Islands.

Dessa Rutter is finishing up her M.B.A. at Tulane, which, she reports, "doesn't leave much room for fun and games." She does see Betsy Marie Gambel quite often; they had lunch with Magee Leigh last fall.

Monica Saumweber Spillias and Ken were expecting their second child in early September (Geoffrey is 3). Monica is still with the U.S. Dept. of Labor in the Wage-Hour Division but will take some leave when the baby arrives. Ken, a lawyer, is running for a County Commission position.

Margaret Sefelt Wilson's two boys will start 2nd grade and kindergarten in the fall. She keeps busy training and showing her Labradors — her oldest dog, Trixie, was Number One Obedience Labrador in the U.S. last year! Jim, an attorney, coached their son Jimmy's soccer team in the spring. They are able to spend some weekends on their farm outside Charlottesville. Margaret visited SBC last April when all the trees were in bloom and said it was gorgeous.

Candy Sheffield Neilson and Keith welcomed Sarah Elizabeth into the world on Aug. 5, 1981. Sarah is a seasoned traveler already, having visited 25 states last fall on a whirlwind tour of all the Neilsons' Eastern relatives! Candy is thoroughly enjoying motherhood and does not miss her job.

Tina Sheris Wood writes that 4-yr.-old Lissa thinks her new brother, Adam Paul (born Oct. 8, 1981) is "the cat's pajamas." They moved in January to Roanoke, VA, where John, an ophthalmologist, is in private practice with an established group.

Lisa Slatten is working (by night) toward an L.L. M. in admiralty law at Tulane U. School of Law, hoping to graduate this spring. By day, she is a practicing admiralty attorney at Hammett, Leake and Hammett in New Orleans. Her schedule has cut down on her real love — traveling — though Lisa did manage a trip to NYC in November to visit Charlotte Battle Robbins. Lisa saw Magee Leigh when she was in town for a pediatric convention.

Carol Stewart Harper writes that life with her 4-yr.-old Alison is "almost normal again." Doug was overseas for six months last year, so Alison and Carol spent Easter in Mexico City with Carol's sister. In the summer of '81 Carol went to Cary Davis King's and Jane Patt's weddings.

Jan Storey-Honick and Eric spent a marvelous two weeks in Spain last spring, but unfortunately Jan's Spanish did not improve! They also spent a long weekend in San Francisco and Thanksgiving in Rome. In December they bought a co-op apartment on Manhattan's West Side.

Betsy Thayer Clough wrote from Maine that she has been enjoying married life since her wedding in June of 1981. She remains in free-lance marketing research with L.L. Bean as her big client. David has started his own public affairs consulting firm.

In 1977 Virginia Thompson was awarded the Thomas J. Watson Foundation Fellowship by IBM to pursue independent study and research in Europe. She then earned a Master's in International Management from the American Graduate School of International Management in Glendale, AZ. She now works for the South Carolina National Bank, where she is an account officer in wholesale banking responsible for Eastern Europe and a portion of the Northeastern U.S. and was recently named assistant cashier by their board of directors. She is SCN's representative for the German-American Chamber of Commerce in Atlanta and the South Carolina representative for the American Graduate School of International Management Alumni Association.

Cathy Towers Hardage and Robert had their third child, Susan Elizabeth Cathcart, on Sept. 8, 1981. Susan will have to share her special day with both her mom and dad, for they were both born on Sep. 8! Cathy still manages to teach Sunday School and help at the boys' (Bobby, 5; Charlie, 3½) nursery school. Robert, a radiologist, has a year and a half left with the Navy after which the Hardages hope to move back to the South from California.

Georgia Tucker Tuttle is keeping fit running — after Laura Beth, 2 years in September. Georgia is thoroughly enjoying her Jr. League work: singing in and accompanying for musical therapy in nursing homes. In June Chris, Georgia and Laura Beth went East for a family wedding and were planning to see Betsy Perry, Tina Sheris Wood, Mimi Bain Haik, and their families. Georgia was looking forward to being the SB Admissions Representative for Houston.

After working for seven years in advertising, Marianne Vandervort Wiggishoff is back in school finishing her first year's work on an M.B.A. in Finance and Accounting at Northwestern U. She still does some free-lance advertising. In April 1980 she married Cyril Wiggishoff, a surgeon born in Paris and raised in South Africa. With her mother-in-law speaking only French, Marianne's SBC major is "alive and well and often-used." She and Cyril live in a landmark townhouse on Chicago's North Side but spend part of the year in Southern France and Durban, South Africa.

Clement Virgin Durkes writes from Illinois that her daughter Frances (2 yrs.), husband Rick and their dog, Angus, keep her busy.

Melinda Williams Davis is a vice president with Bankers Trust Co. in NYC.

Diane Wood Keyser (Mick) has two children — Eric, 4½, and Barbara, 1½. Diane works for a dentist in Raleigh, NC, and in addition is on an action committee to help ratify the ERA. She attended Mary Jane Berry's wedding last year.

Ginger Woodward Gast writes, "I've changed at least 8,000 diapers" since Caroline Janvier was born Aug. 1, 1981. (Her son Michael is 2½). Ginger also does aerobic dancing, counted cross-stitch (She won 1st place in a craft show!) and volunteer work. She and Paul planned to spend a week at Virginia Beach last summer with a babysitter.

In Dedham, MA, Lucinda Young Larson is the manager of productivity analysis for a division of Digital. In addition she is active in the Jr. League with long-range planning, budgeting workshops, and the showhouse boutique. Lucinda is also my successor to the "throne" of the Boston SBC Alumnae Club. She and Dick had a wonderful 2½-week trip to Great Britain last September, exploring 2500 miles from Edinburgh through York, the Cotswolds and London.

Deborah Ziegler Hopkins wrote that the SBC Club of New York organized a Kentucky Derby Day party for the alumni of Virginia colleges. She and George are expecting their first child in October.

Three people wrote cards without names on them. By clever detective work I have identified two, but someone left her job as a paralegal in NYC, went to Pratt Institute Architecture School and has been practicing with Fitzgerald and Partners in Houston, TX, for two years. She spent time in Florence and Paris through Columbia U. for study in architecture. This past year included an "incredible" trip through Eastern Europe, on to Bangkok, Kathmandu and trekking in the Himalayas (Nepal). Back in Houston, she is working on a building by I. M. Pei and Phillip Johnson. Is "Someone" named Cathy Blackburn?

And I, Weezie Blakeslee Gilpin, and Bob are the proud parents of our third child and second son, Christopher Abbott, who arrived April 23, 1982 (5 days ahead of "deadline"). Alexa (5½) and Blake (3½) are coping fairly well. Being dorm director for 36 adolescents this year has been fun, though nine girls have been to the discipline committee in the last two months. I am back in school working on a Master's in Counseling Psychology, though taking the MAT's and writing my first paper in nine years were true tests of my commitment! Alexa will enter Milton Academy next fall — as a kindergartener — though the application process seemed more like college.

And, finally, many of you mentioned plans to attend our 10th reunion next May, so call your closest classmates (long distance!) and talk them into going as well. SBC has a swimming pool, new dining hall, and renovated Benedict. Revisit Reid, Grammer, Glass, and Dew, where we all began our SBC careers in September 1969. I hope to see you, your husbands, friends, and children's pictures in May.

Elaine Arozarena is working for her government (Mexico) for at least two or three years in the Department of Foreign Relations dealing with all kinds of international issues, especially with renewable energy sources or energy in general. She gained valuable experience for this job by studying solar energy in European countries while on Junior Year Abroad in France.

Browning Lee Augustine was working at the newspaper scheduler for Thalhimers' Advertising Department in Richmond, VA, and has been promoted to junior executive. She is the assistant to the director of sales promotion. She has also been seen in some television and newspaper ads for Thalhimers'.

Cammie Bethea is attending medical school at the U. of South Carolina.

Julia Bryan Brooke is enjoying law school at UVA. She spent the summer in Dallas, TX, clerking for a law firm. She says she now knows how it feels to be a "U-chick" when the UVA boys are planning a "roll" to Sweet Briar.

Annie Callahan is working on the Hill for the Clerk of the House and living with four SBC grads. She loves Washington.

Sigrid Irene Carlen is also at UVA attending medical school.

Catherine Stirling Cassidy attended Hollins College's Abroad Program in London and had a superb time with several Sweet Briar girls too. She has enjoyed UNC and will graduate from there in December, but she misses SBC. She is busy interviewing.

E. Windsor Cleveland graduated in June of 1981 from the U. of Tenn. and is currently modeling and making television commercials for Mayfield's Cottage Cheese.

Letha Dameron is currently working for SBC's Admissions Office. She was a bridesmaid and flutist at Helen Whitley Riggs Greene went to London for seven months after graduation and took an art history course at Sotheby's in the autumn. She now is living in Italy, where she is a governess for four children, teaching them English while she is learning Italian.

Anne Grosvenor Evrard was married May 27, 1981, to Walthor Evrard, a Frenchman she met in Paris during her Junior Year Abroad. They are now living just outside Paris and would be happy to see SB alumnae visiting France.

Ellen Willis Hagan is coordinator for alumni affairs for the Washington Center for Learning Alternatives in D.C.

Katherine Ellen Hagan is at UVA working on her Master's in Education, concentrating on counselor education. She is enjoying being there with several other members of the Class of '81.

Nancy Campbell Hagan is living in Richmond, VA, working in wire transfers for United Virginia Bank.

Frances Elizabeth Hudson transferred to UNC-Chapel Hill and got her B.A. in English there in May of 1981. She is now attending the U. of South Carolina Law School.

Karol A. Lawson is enjoying her graduate work in art history at UVA but is too busy to produce any other news.

Susan Leffler Creasy was married to Michael Preston Creasy of Altavista in October of 1981.

Kathryn Sherby Levi is working for Life of Virginia in Richmond, VA. She lives with Charlotte Gay '80 and May Carter; Trish Moynahan '80 lived with them in the summer of '81. Kathy is now busily applying to business schools.

Dana B. Painter will marry E. Robert Parkey, Jr., on Oct. 2, 1982, with Amy Phelps Painter '83 as maid of honor. The Parkeys will live in Houston.

Susan Richeson is an electrical engineering graduate student at UVA.

Alice Rowland works for Edward Rollins, who is assistant to the President for political affairs at the White House.

Mary Hedley Sipe is happily working at two jobs: she works in a gift shop in Hockessin, DE, and in the Legislative Hall for the House of Representatives.

Donna Jane Terry Lee was married in the summer of 1981 to Scott Lee, and they are presently living in Briscoe, NC.

Susan Wilson Lyons was married May 30, 1981, to Robbie Lyons from Ireland. They are now living in Lexington, KY.

I was married to Lucian A. Durham, III, on June 20, 1981. Letha Dameron did a beautiful job playing the flute in my wedding. In September I visited Kelly Jernigan Hunter '80 and her pretty new daughter, Mary Catherine. I was promoted from management trainee to branch assistant in January at Dominion National Bank in Richmond, VA.

Joseph H. Davenport, Jr., was elected to the Sweet Briar Board of Overseers in 1980 and named a Director in 1981. Mr. Davenport is Chairman of the Board of Volunteer State Life Insurance Company of Chattanooga. His other corporate directorships are: American National Bank and Trust Company, Ancorp Bancshares, Inc., Chattem, Inc., Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Miami, Inc., Dixie Yarns, Inc., and Monumental Corporation.

He is a present or past member of the following organizations: Allied Arts Fund, Chattanooga Nature Center, Hunter Museum of Art, Memorial Hospital, Junior Achievement, United Way, YMCA, Benwood Foundation, Community Foundation of Greater Chattanooga, the University of Chattanooga Foundation, Tennessee Higher Education Commission, Tennessee Arts Commission, Tennessee Performing Arts Association, and Tennessee State Museum. He also is a member of Rockefeller University Council, the Public Affairs Committee of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and Friends of American Art in Religion. He was the recipient of the 1973 Kiwanis Club Distinguished Service Award, the 1978 Liberty Bell Award, and in 1981 was the first recipient of the Chattanooga Arts Award.

A graduate of Dartmouth College, Mr. Davenport is married to the former Alice (Hedy) Edwards, of St. Louis, who graduated from Sweet Briar in 1945. The Davenports have eight children — three sons and five daughters — and eleven grandchildren.

A COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Dear Alumnae:

Two years ago it was clear that the College must embark on a major capital funds drive--one which would address needs critical to the College's future. With the full support of the Board of Directors and Overseers, Sweet Briar initiated a $12.1 million Comprehensive Development Program designed to help the College remain responsive to change while maintaining the excellence which has always been its trademark.

With the announcement in the last issue of the Alumnae Magazine of President Harold Whiteman's retirement next June, it seems timely for me as Chairman of the Development Committee to give you a report on our progress toward the completion of Sweet Briar's GENERATIONS Program.

The Development Committee of the Board of Directors and Overseers serves as the National Steering Committee for this campaign. Many alumnae and parents serve on this committee in important leadership positions involving the Alumnae and Parents Funds, Reunion Giving, and Planned Giving.

As Chairman of the Major Gifts Division, I have visited with over 300 alumnae and parents in approximately 60 cities during the last 18 months. This has been a most rewarding experience for me. Not only have I met some fantastic people, but I have been especially impressed by their love for Sweet Briar and how truly meaningful it has been in their lives. I can attest to the genuine interest and affection our alumnae have for the College and realize more than ever that Sweet Briar is extra special!

The primary purpose for these calls has been to explain the major needs of the College and to ask that Sweet Briar be given a high priority on your contributions list. The response to date has been most encouraging as we have received a total of $7.9 million toward the $12.1 million campaign goal. Slightly over $2.5 million of this amount represent annual gifts for both restricted and unrestricted purposes. The remaining $5.4 million are capital gifts most of which have been divided between our endowment priorities for faculty salaries, student aid, enrichment of campus life, faculty and curriculum development, or physical facilities. It is for these capital needs that we seek major commitments extended over a period of years--if desired--in addition to annual giving.

Since the campaign has been so tremendously successful during the past two years, we hope our $12.1 million goal can be attained by June 30, 1983--two years ahead of schedule. This is an ambitious goal and above all would be a magnificent tribute to President Whiteman during his last year on campus.

I look forward to visiting with many of you in the months ahead and urge you to give your College the highest possible priority in your philanthropy, as my spirits soar when your alma mater is getting its fair share!

Yours sincerely,

Joseph H. Davenport, Jr.

Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose

by Robert G. Marshall, Director,
Junior Year in France.

Dr. Robert G. Marshall, Director of the Junior Year in France holds an undergraduate degree from Rice University and Ph.D. in French Literature from Yale University. He was in charge of the Paris office of the Junior Year in France in 1967-68 and has been Director of the program since 1972. He is also Professor of French at Sweet Briar College and author of numerous studies on French literature and study abroad. He was honored by the French Republic in 1980 for his contributions to Franco-American friendship by being made a "Chevalier" in the Ordre des Palmes Académiques.

One could very well paraphrase the title of two Broadway shows of a few years ago to describe the Sweet Briar College Junior Year in France as "alive and well and still in Paris," for like Dolly Levi it is "still growing, still going strong," despite the vicissitudes of the many French political and economic crises and changes of the late 50s, 60s, 70s and early 80s.

1982-83 is the 35th year the Junior Year in France has been sponsored by Sweet Briar College. It was inaugurated in 1948 as a continuation of a program sponsored by the University of Delaware from 1923 until it was interrupted by World War II in 1939. To date over 3500 students from 240 American colleges and universities have spent their junior year in France as participants in the Sweet Briar program.

The French expression "plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose" may be applied in a positive sense to this program, for there have indeed been many changes since that first year and yet the basic pattern remains the same.

Despite changes such as student goals, style of life, dress, hair, changes in French educational patterns, even subtle changes in the French language, the program has maintained its original purpose of providing an opportunity for American students to develop a deeper understanding of the world's problems and to broaden their perspective on those of their own country. The specific aim of the program is still to provide an academic experience which will increase competency in the French language and to permit study of courses in any discipline for which a student may qualify and where adequate opportunity exists.

The city of Paris itself has changed in many ways — encircled now by modern multi-storied buildings such as those at La Défense, the disappearance of the old Halles (the central market place is now a modern shopping center) the separation of the University of Paris into thirteen separate, smaller universities, yet a student from 1948-49 returning to Paris would recognize many landmarks and even a few faculty names.

The old Sorbonne building with its vast amphitheaters still exists. Sciences Po still thrives. The Ecole du Louvre maintains its prestige among institutions of higher education in France. None of the original Junior Year in France special course teachers remain from that year, all having retired or moved on to other positions. The professor with the longest tenure is M. Alfred Simon who, in his popular course in the contemporary French theatre, still holds forth in his inimitable fashion. His youthful enthusiasm is the envy of many of his age group. Mlle. Grange, the program's long-time secretary, retired in 1964 and lives in the southwestern city of Pau.

The number of students in the program is somewhat greater than it was in that first year when seventy-seven women and men sailed for what must have been the most exciting year of their young lives.

In 1948, when the program transferred to Sweet Briar from Delaware, the undertaking was indeed a daring and innovative one on the part of Sweet Briar College. Much credit is due to President Martha Lucas Pate who courageously accepted the responsibility for the move that had been planned and engineered by Professor Joseph Barker of Sweet Briar, an early director of the program when it was at Delaware. The foresight of President Pate proved to be well-founded.

When she left Sweet Briar a short time later she encouraged her successor, Dr. Anne Gary Pannell, to nurture the program to its maturity. President Pannell took that advice and during her twenty years at Sweet Briar was enthusiastic in her support of the program which was then under the able direction of Dr. R. John Matthew, Dr. Barker's successor. President Whiteman has continued to grant his wholehearted support and has often spoken of the contribution the program has made to the educational process at Sweet Briar College as well as to the broader world of higher education.

The program's basic administrative structure remains much as it was at its beginning. There is an overall Director responsible for the entire operation. An Advisory Committee, made up of representatives of some twenty-two colleges and universities — mostly private colleges in the New England/Middle Atlantic states, the South and Middle West — sets policies which the Director implements. Each year the number of students is around 115, coming mainly from those colleges represented on the Advisory Committee. The students are expected to have a high academic standing in their own college and a strong preparation in the French language.

As in 1948, the students still gather in New York before continuing to Paris, but one of the major changes is the mode of transportation. Until 1975 the group went by ship, and certainly students from those years must look back with a great deal of pleasure on the excitement of sailing on a great ocean liner. Today such travel has become an expensive luxury. Air travel has telescoped the six-day trip to Europe into six hours.

SAILING

Three generations of students had the pleasure of sailing to Europe on oceanliners, a luxury no longer enjoyed in the late 1970's. Pictured are members of the 1948 group and the 1959 group seen off by President Pannell, and the 1971 group with President and Mrs. Whiteman.

As in the past, the students spend a preliminary five-week orientation period in the city of Tours where, in addition to taking courses in the language itself, they live with French families to become accustomed to the "douceur de vivre tourangelle" in this French provincial town before they are thrust into the mad pace of the French capital. Upon arrival in Paris, they choose courses at the various institutions including branches of the University of Paris, the Ecole du Louvre, Sciences Po and other institutions of higher learning. Upon satisfactory completion of their courses, they are granted thirty hours of credit or, in the case of Sweet Briar, nine units for the year, which count towards their Bachelor of Arts degree.

In reading alumni evaluations of the program, one becomes aware that the experience abroad provides students a broader and deeper knowledge of themselves and of the world. Almost invariably they refer to it as the brightest year of their college experience. Many of the alumni of the program have become leaders in the various fields in which they specialized in France. Several alumni have served as United States Cultural Attaches in Paris, one has been serving as U.S. Ambassador to the Persian Gulf Emirates; several have created study abroad programs in their own institutions. Some are in international business, and a number have distinguished themselves in art and theatre and literature and have indicated that it was their year in France that inspired them to enter the fields which they now pursue.

There is hardly a major French Department in which there is not at least one alumna or alumnus of the JYF, from Harvard to Berkeley.

As the cost of education has risen in the last few years, the program has made a great effort to increase the amount of financial aid available, so that a well-qualified student will not be deprived of the opportunity to study in France. The program has established a scholarship fund which has grown through contributions essentially from alumni of the program. One SBC alumna, Sally Gump Berryman, '64, wrote a book on her experience in France, A Hillbilly in the Old Country, and has contributed proceeds of the book to the scholarship fund. This last year the program was able to award some $30,000 in financial aid; since its inception, it has awarded $380,700 in scholarships.

Seven years ago the Junior Year in France inaugurated an exchange program so that French students could come to the United States to study for a year. Sweet Briar and Agnes Scott Colleges, Denison University, Mount Holyoke College, Northwestern University, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, The University of Texas, and Vassar College have cooperated in this undertaking and, since its inception, some twenty-five French students have been able to study for a year in our country. In another aspect of exchange, the French secondary school system has initiated a program in which students of the Junior Year in France act as assistants to French teachers of English. Some 200 students over the past ten years have had the experience of teaching English as a foreign language to French students.

As the JYF enters its 35th session, the program is marking the year with three special events. At the September meeting of the Advisory Committee in New York City, a luncheon was held at the Hotel Roosevelt at which time the first Resident Director, Dr. Theodore Andersson, at the time Professor at Yale University and now retired from the University of Texas/Austin, gave a short talk recalling that first year. Sweet Briar College awarded to Dr. Douglas W. Alden, Professor of French at the University of Virginia, a certificate of merit for having served on the Advisory Committee of the program since 1951-52 and as its Chairman since 1967.

The second major event will be a formal reception in late January held at France-Amérique in Paris. Many French dignitaries from the academic world as well as the students will attend.

The third event will be on the campus of Sweet Briar College on March 4 and 5, at which time U.S. Representative Paul Simon of Illinois and author of The Tongue-Tied American will deliver an address on foreign language learning and study abroad. At that time the Alumnae Association has organized a special interest weekend for Sweet Briar alumnae who have studied abroad or who were language majors. There will be two round table discussions on Saturday, March 5; one on study abroad and language learning, and another involving alumnae who majored in foreign languages, studied abroad, and have pursued careers in related areas upon graduation. We all wish the Junior Year in France a happy future and send it "meilleures félicitations à l'occasion de son trente-cinquième anniversaire."

All interested alumnae will be most welcome. If you are not in one of the above categories and do not receive a reservation form, please contact the Alumnae Office.

In Retrospect

by Anne Kilby Gilhuly '55

My year began with the obvious sort of adjustment, that initial crise de foie and the more enduring battle to conquer the language. Otherwise immersion into the new milieu was distinguished principally by its totality. We ate and drank at each meal as if we would never eat or drink again, savoring each morsel and sip; toured Tourraine on our bicycles as if the streets and roads would roll up and away the next moment; analyzed our host families beyond any point of meaningfulness; always listening stunned by the clarity of French sounds.

Much to our astonishment we found the wave of excitement, delight and fascination did not break. It rolled on and the crest rose and rose. We went on to Paris, settled into our families there with irritation or affection or both but never indifference; settled into our classes with great interest, some fear and enormous doses of metro-riding. We explored the streets of Paris, viewed the monuments, visited the churches, shopped a little, and went constantly to concerts and the theatre. We pursued friendships with French acquaintances, and spent hour upon hour in the great art museums. (When I enter a museum nowadays I always picture M. Serullaz berating me for my banal critiques, giving me marks of two out of a possible twenty.) We wondered if an entire year could pass in such mind-expanded fashion, such heightened sensitivity, such a rain of entertainments. Then on we went to new delights during vacation trips: to ski the Alps, to visit Italy, to sail the Aegean.

What but a major depression could follow upon returning home? For most of us, if the depression came, it was short lived. There was satisfaction in turning intently to our studies, gaining respite from our roles as sponges. We were happy to have time to wring out the impressions and sensations we had soaked up and to sort them out. We felt strongly, and talked often about, an increased understanding achieved by the juxtaposition of our two sets of experiences: our lives prior to living in France and then this new set of experiences gained in France. Because the second contrasted so strongly to the first we were, in effect, forced outside both and therefore able to see each more fully. I think this is a notion of learning or understanding concurrent with McLuhan's, epitomized by his remark that although he did not know who discovered water, he did not think it was a fish.

I distinctly remember the satisfaction of focusing this new ease, and it seemed depth, of understanding on a subject; of being able to delve into it effortlessly with much enjoyment. I have thought of that intellectual spurt when each of my children has had a leap of understanding — usually at about four — when he suddenly is able to absorb a seemingly endless amount of information, organize it clearly, and then store it for months and months. Perhaps the child is turning his attention to the life around him, able to concentrate his energies for the first time at a level above the physical. The newness of what he sees is like the newness of life during a first year in a new location and language.

When I look back to that year, I am struck by the lack of a negative aspect. Not only were we vouchsafed this expanded vision, which surely is the heart of a liberal arts education, but we were at the same time amassing a great fund of personal memories and developing in a highly accelerated fashion the interests which makes one's life rich. No doubt we would have acquired these interests in any case at other times; but the substance was so lavishly presented during that year and our age was so right that our attachments grew particularly fast and strong. Some of the passions rose directly out of courses such as those at the Louvre and the Sweet Briar theatre course. Others developed less formally from the new surroundings — architecture, furniture design, fine food, skiing, the taste for travel itself, and many others.

Clearly, my year in France was a marvelous one for me, the effects and souvenirs of which I cherish.

1966-1967: More than Merely Unforgettable

by Barrie Trimmingham '68

The most frequent questions a student is asked when he returns from a nine-month séjour in Paris are: "How was Europe?" or "Did you enjoy your year?" My reaction to the first one is to glare at the person and give an inane monosyllabic answer. When faced with the second, if I think the person honestly wants to know, I sit him down for at least four hours and tell him. The point is, nobody, not even one's parents, could ever fully comprehend the experience of nine months in Paris. Each student returns with something of his very own, a unique experience which has affected him in a special way. I would venture to say that no two of the 106 students on the Sweet Briar Junior Year Abroad program returned with the same impressions or the same experiences.

My home in Paris was chez Mme. Rivière, 25 rue Quentin-Bauchart — a tiny street parallel to Georges V, right off the Champs-Élysées, with le Drugstore, a movie theatre, a cleaner's and le Grisbi Strip-Tease en face. My room overlooked these establishments; from my window I could watch the flowing stream of passers-by on the Champs-Élysées. There were four of us from the Sweet Briar program staying chez Madame, two in each bedroom. During those nine months I never managed to see all the treasures in the apartment. The dining room was the main attraction — filled with antiques and delicate objets d'art which were seen at their best when guests came for dinner, for on those occasions the lights were dimmed and the large china cabinet was lit from the interior. Madame has had a fascinating life and she was a constant source of information for us. Russian by birth and upbringing, she fled from her country with her family in 1917. In Paris Madame met her future husband, a member of the French Ministry, and moved to the Hôtel de Ville when she was married. She was hostess to all the high government officials and spent much of her time entertaining. Her life, however, was not all splendour, for M. Rivière was a member of the Résistance and underwent some hair-raising experiences during the occupation. Widowed for ten years now,

Madame takes in girls from the Sweet Briar program for companionship as well as for financial reasons.

Madame is a delightful person; she has a marvelous sense of humor and feels more at ease with young people than with those of her son's generation. She was a real mother to all of us. Often, after dinner, she would come into our room, sit on one of the beds, and chat about fashion, family problems, our love-lives, her life in the past or about any insignificant event of the day. Her son and daughter-in-law came for dinner almost every night while their baby slept or howled in his crib in the library. Our maid, Maria, was the delight of the household. Born and raised in Majorca, Maria was persuaded by Madame to come to Paris to live about ten years ago. Her entire family lives upstairs and is very much a part of the household. There were four nationalities in the apartment — Spanish, Russian, French and American. Madame's son, while he speaks fluent Russian, has lived all of his life in France. His wife, from Alabama, was a member of the Sweet Briar Junior Year in France program six years ago and had lived chez Madame. Imagine the diversity of foreign accents in French that filled the apartment!

Breakfast was rolled into our rooms by Maria at any specified hour in the morning — such luxury! At lunch each of us fended for herself at a Self-Service, a university restaurant, Reid Hall or the Luxembourg Gardens, depending on which was the most convenient. Madame gave us dinner each night but she soon realized that we often preferred to eat out when going to the theatre later in the evening. The only problem with our chic location was that it was a long way from the student quarter and the theatre district. The métro was by far the easiest, fastest, and cheapest method of transportation. Even so, it took me forty-five minutes on the métro to get from the Champs-Élysées to the Left Bank where my classes were held and where, generally, I spent most of my waking hours.

There was no routine in my life — attending class à la française could hardly be called routine! The Sweet Briar program allows great freedom in choice of courses and institutions. Students on our program took courses at the Sorbonne, L'Institut des Sciences Politiques, L'Ecole du Louvre, L'Institut Catholique, L'Alliance Francaise, and L'Institut Britannique. All the courses organized by the Sweet Briar Junior Year in France administration and given in Reid Hall are taught by French professors who teach regularly at the various divisions of the University of Paris. These professors also held "répétitions," or tutoring sessions, to supplement, or rather, to explicate, the courses we took at the Sorbonne or one of the Instituts. The most popular and, I think, the most valuable course sponsored by the Sweet Briar program is the theatre course. It is taught each year by a prominent French theatre critic who is involved in all aspects of contemporary theatre in Paris. We had two one-and-a-half hour lectures a week (which were spiced with several anecdotes and accounts of cocktail conversations) and we were given tickets once or twice a week to the theatre.

As for the courses at the French universities, I can speak only for those at the Sorbonne and at 'Sciences Po' that I took. In general, those at the Sorbonne are disorganized and confusing. However, just going through the motion of entering the famed halls of learning, fighting one's way into the auditorium with 600 other students and sitting in a pre-natal position on a crowded pew, elbow to elbow with Parisian and foreign students, is an experience not to be missed. Enrollment for the courses always far exceeds seating capacity and it is a struggle to find a vacant patch of floor in the auditorium, regardless of how early one arrives for the class. Each day, as I left the courtyard, I was bombarded with sheets of propaganda that were being distributed by members of active student organizations. "U. S. Go Home" is a disheartening message but it is not to be taken too seriously when one is so hospitably received by close French friends and host-families.

The courses and conditions at Sciences Po' are a great deal more conducive to learning than those at the Sorbonne. One is certain of finding a comfortable seat with a desk. The students do not keep up a running conversation during the lectures and the lectures themselves are, on the whole, well organized and relatively easy to follow. The attitude of the French students at Sciences Po' is also very different from that of the students at the Sorbonne. They organize parties for the foreign students and make an effort to include them in French university and social life. I went to a few of these functions and met several students, not only French but also Nigerian, Algerian, Vietnamese, Lebanese and Red Chinese. All in all, the atmosphere at Sciences Po' is much more intime — we often had tea or apéritifs with students at the café across the street from the academic buildings.

I spoke with several American students whose Junior Year programs were conducted almost entirely in Reid Hall and I found that the Sweet Briar program is the only one that does not require its students to take any specific courses, either those given at Reid Hall by Sweet Briar, l'Alliance Francaise (where courses are oriented to the foreign student) or at any particular branch of the University of Paris. This academic freedom is extremely important because it allows one to explore all the courses available in the city. Several members of our group took all four or five of their courses at Science Po', thereby earning a special certificate offered by that Institut.

Each Sweet Briar Junior Year in France student is allotted a certain number of meal tickets for meals at Reid Hall; the student may exchange these for cash. I asked for half the tickets and for the remaining half in cash because I preferred to take most of my lunches with the French students, at university restaurants or at other inexpensive spots in the city. By January my roommates and I had made several French friends who, to our amazement, found the American atmosphere at Reid Hall delightful — un petit Amérique. Often we each invited a few friends to come to Reid Hall on a particular day to have lunch with us, this being a good way to use up meal tickets and to entertain our friends in what they thought was an unusual way.

Of course, the academic life and eating habits of the American student by no means give a full picture of the Junior Year Abroad. The major problem for every student is how to meet the French, specifically one's contemporaries. One way is to take as many courses as possible with the Parisian students. (At the Sorbonne, however, this method is not terribly successful.) Everyone soon discovers that the French are not running out to meet Americans — rather, they almost try to avoid Americans. Most French students feel that Paris is overrun with our countrymen and, to my dismay, I found this to be alarmingly near the truth. I was fortunate to have been a member of the Experiment in International Living in the north of France three summers ago, and this previous experience helped me immensely. In fact, everyone I knew during this past year I met through my friends from my summer on the Experiment. I was definitely at a great advantage over those who were arriving in France for the first time because I had already undergone the so-called “culture shock” and had several friends whom I could contact. My year really began when I was invited to the wedding of my French “sister” (the daughter of the French family with whom I lived during the Experiment) in late October. At the wedding in Lille I saw all my “old” friends once again and discovered that most of them were either studying or working in Paris during the week. I had open invitations to go to Lille on the weekends to visit any one of several families. All my French friends who were studying in Paris gave me tips on where to eat, what to see and what places to visit outside of Paris. They also took me on trips to Holland and Belgium and to their country homes in Le Touquet and Normandy.

My friends encouraged me to partake of the meals at one of the university restaurants, Mabillon; they even advised me to eat at the third story level, where all the “best” people usually ate. Lunch at any of these university restaurants almost defies description. Conditions are much the same at these restaurants as at the Sorbonne — they serve at least twice their capacity. The French students have nicknamed the university restaurants usines a bouffer, which, freely translated, means “snack factories.” All Americans are astonished by the French push-and-shove system when waiting in a queue. The fact is, they neither wait nor stand in line but make a bee-line for the cafeteria counter, using every trick in the book. Meal tickets for foreign students are approximately 60c apiece (for the French they are 30c). The scene begins as soon as one reaches the counter. A lady grabs your crumpled ticket while you grab an aluminum tray, proceed in haste down the counter, sliding the tray along and watch, in horror, as the food is aimed and thrown at the correct compartments in your tray. About halfway through the process you must deftly swing your tray around so that the serveuses can reach the remaining compartments. I tried in vain to get the system down to perfection in order to avoid a tirade from the serveuses. The battle is not yet over after you reach the end of the counter; once you have wormed your way through the crowd towards an empty seat, you have to compete with the peripheral noise to make yourself heard by your neighbor. The clanging of aluminum trays against a garbage disposal is enough to disrupt anyone’s digestion. However, very nice people do eat there and, although I suffered from acute indigestion after each meal, I usually bumped (literally) into several friends. Every opportunity to see these friends helped, because this resulted in introductions to their friends and to later rendezvous...

Every Sweet Briar Junior Year in France student’s “bible” should be Paris Semaine or its equivalent. This weekly publication (sold for 50 centimes) gives information on everything going on in Paris for the week — all the theatrical productions, movies, concerts, art exhibits and special events, such as performances by the Moscow Circus, the Swingle Singers, the Russian ballet, Arthur Rubenstein. There are always several foreign films showing in the city; I used to love to watch an Italian film with French subtitles and the like. Entertainment is never lacking.

No matter how far I travelled from Paris, I always returned to the city with a sense of joy at being home and a sense of expectancy at the prospect of unexplored territory. I never saw everything on my list; I could not have hoped to know Paris entirely. But I never tired of the familiar spots and faces — the twilight strolls along the quays of the Seine, the tiny streets near Les Halles, frequented by farmers from the provinces, the Greek, Vietnamese, Italian and Chinese restaurants near St. Michel, picnic lunches in the Jardin de Luxembourg, the small boulangeries, with the dogs sunning on the sidewalk, the vibrant atmosphere of St. Germain-des Prés, always alive with students, busrides in the spring from the Pont d’Alma to the Sorbonne...The memories are endless, the friends remain, and the year is more than merely unforgettable.

Junior Year in France Anniversary

What it Meant to Many

by Mary Morris Gamble Booth '50

My only claim to notability is that I am the oldest alumna of The Sweet Briar Junior Year in France. I am what they mean when they say, "ancienne eleve."

My mission tonight is to thank, on behalf of all Junior Year alumni, the people whose foresight and wisdom made our year abroad possible. We shall be eternally indebted to Mrs. Pate who had the vision and temerity to grasp the Junior Year franchise for Sweet Briar College; to Dr. Anderson who guided our pioneer group with such kindness, firmness, and good humor; to Professor Peyre who sent those 14 dashing Yale men with the first Sweet Briar group; to Mrs. Taylor and Dr. Matthew who strengthened the Junior Year program through the years until it is today the model for all other such ventures. And to President Whiteman and Dr. Marshall, the gratitude of future Junior Year alumni will be extended as they guide the program in ever-more-challenging directions.

Only dear Dr. Barker, whose idea the whole scheme was in the first place, is not with us tonight to celebrate this happy occasion. I still remember how his eyes twinkled when he told me the glorious news that The Sweet Briar Junior Year in France was a reality! And I remember what a comfort he and Mrs. Barker were to us when we returned to Sweet Briar for our senior year and had to make the adjustment back to Amherst County from Paris!

When we, the first group, arrived in France in August of 1948, the after-effects of World War II were still much in evidence. Due to a shortage of coal, we had no electricity two days a week and no heat until long after it was cold enough for our fingers to grow numb around our pencils in class. Many foods were rationed and most of the girls in the group had to live at Reid Hall, there being very few French families at that time in a position to "adopt" American students. But "our hearts were young and gay" and nothing could lessen the excitement of being 20 and in Paris!

We went abroad that first year not just in the pursuit of excitement — we did study very hard — but some of us also went in pursuit of the Tennysonian ideal of "the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world." This, I regret to say, we were not able to accomplish during our year abroad. Nor has any of the subsequent 24 groups.

But surely all of us have achieved a greater understanding and appreciation of other people. We have all made lasting friendships with French and American students who shared the year with us — in fact, a good number of marriages have resulted from this venture into international relations. And in unexpected ways, other delightful friendships are fostered by the Junior Year experience. I had the good fortune several years ago to meet the renowned historian, Admiral Samuel Eliot Morison. In the course of our conversation, it developed that we were fellow alumni of "Sciences Po," although our years were different: he was there in 1914. We enjoyed comparing notes on our old school, and he subsequently gave me one of his books inscribed. "To Mary Morris Booth, from her Sciences Po beau, Samuel Eliot Morison."

Many Junior Year graduates have gone into the study and teaching of French professionally as a result of our year in France; all of us have an abiding appreciation of French culture. Due to an interest in French drama first generated by the Sweet Briar theatre course in Paris, I have attended a little French play-reading class at Randolph-Macon Woman's College once a week for the past ten years. In that time we have managed to read almost every French play that is fit to print — and some that are not!

Surely all Sweet Briar Junior Year in France alumni will enjoy things French for the rest of our lives. Not long ago, as I scurried about the Hollins College campus in quest of a speaker for the Lynchburg Alliance Francaise, a member of the administration of the college was heard to remark, "Once a Junior Year girl, always a Junior Year girl." So be it.

This year 12 alumnae had bulb sales of more than $1,000. This puts them in the Sweet Briar society of "Bloomin' Alumnae" with all the honors and perks which go with the title. Because they are bulb sellers par excellence, and because, like E.F. Hutton, when they speak everyone listens, the National Bulb Committee voted this year to make them ex officio members of that committee. We list their names with pride:

The Face in the Red Velvet Frame

Finding Miss Indie

Founders Day
October 6, 1982

by Ann Marshall Whitley '47

I am not used to academic regalia. My working attire is prone to be grubby jeans, sneakers with the heels run over and a cobweb-proof shirt. Digging up Sweet Briar's history has taken me into some rather dark and murky places, and these are not conducive to the hose, heels and white gloves routine.

Digging up the treasures and historic properties of the college has quite literally taken me on my back through the foundations of Sweet Briar House with a hammer in one hand and a flashlight in the other.

The most interesting thing that I have found is Indiana Fletcher Williams, the founder of this college. Without this great lady, and she was a lady to her fingertips, you wouldn't be sitting out there and I wouldn't be standing up here.

Miss Indie used to be a shadowy figure to me, but now, after more than eighty years, she is beginning to materialize nicely. One can learn many things from an individual's personal property...from clothing, jewelry, letters and from what others have to say about a person.

I have walked the lands she owned. I have explored the rooms of her house. I have discovered, mended and restored her clothes. I have handled her jewelry, tried on her hats, read her remaining letters. I have even noted her favorite recipes marked in her cookbooks. Her poems were used to console her in the face of many deaths.

No one had ever seen a photo or picture of Miss Indie. For over seven decades, the rumor abounded that Miss Indie had something very wrong with her that discouraged the making of a likeness. She was rumored to have had a giant goiter; that she had a skin rash or disease that disfigured her. Then there was the damaging evidence in her own daughter's diary in an entry on September 18, 1882 that "Mama weighs 183 pounds."

Apparently the Williams ladies weighed themselves at the railway station each time they made the trek to New York, which was several times a year. There was a freight scales at McIvor's rail stop (currently Monroe) that was very enticing. Knowing the clothing styles of 100 years ago and having discovered a number of Miss Indie's items of clothing, I decided to weigh one of her black faille skirts used for travel. It was a skirt of the early 1800s and could have been the very skirt that she was wearing on the day of the fateful entry in Daisy's diary.

The skirt weighed 12 pounds, but the waist measured 24 inches. Miss Indie was 53 years old at the time. Add a five-pound jacket, three or four full-length petticoats at two pounds each, shoes, corsets (full of whale bones), a hat, blouse, corset covers, heavy stockings, a large purse packed full of everything that a woman carries and most likely a coat over her arm! Stripped of these things, I see a woman weighing not more than 135 pounds! So shame on Daisy for convincing nearly twenty classes of Sweet Briar girls that her Mama was a monolith. A later dress of the late 1880s with leg o'mutton sleeves was too small in the middle to fasten around a size eight to ten dress form.

Early in the search for the college treasures Ann Reams, Director of our Alumnae Association, asked me to find a picture of Miss Indie. I said "Sure, that should be easy. We have only 3,000 acres, dozens of buildings, hundreds of rooms, thousands of closets, as well as basements, attics and lots of little out-buildings all covered over and buried in honeysuckle."

I shrugged it off as an impossible task...After all, in 80 years nobody had found a trace of a likeness of the Founder.

One day, I was in the Library looking for some items for the Alumnae Archives. I happened to find myself in the storage room where I had turned up many interesting things in the preceding months when I noticed a sagging grocery carton lying against a wall in a corner. It was damp and there was a streak of mildew festooning the wall above it. I thought, what a shame. Whatever is in that box will surely be a disaster in a very short time if the contents aren't aired out. I opened the flap and found the beady eyes of Elijah Fletcher staring up at me from a steel engraving.

I rushed the carton out into the Rare Book Room and spread the contents all over the tables. There were several dozen unidentified portraits. There were photographs of houses with people sitting in the front yards. A few faces were recognizable but most I couldn't identify. There was the picture of Elijah, several of his granddaughter, Daisy, and some of her father James Henry Williams. Everything was damp and musty. A note in the bottom of the box said "Found in Sweet Briar House basement by Reuben Higgenbotham-1954." Reuben was general factotum to Dr. Glass and Dr. Pannell.

Sweet Briar College

I decided to take them to Sweet Briar House and lay them out to dry on the wide windowsills in the dining room. They would be out of the direct sunlight and away from the heat of the radiators. First, Mrs. Whiteman and I spread the pictures out on the dining room table where we gave them a thorough examination. Two of the faces were of the same woman, at ages of about twenty-eight or nine and again at about forty.

I had seen that face! But where? It was as if a light suddenly turned on in my head...The Face In The Red Velvet Frame!

This was in the Library among the Fletcher-Williams books. I shot out the side door of Sweet Briar House and made it to the Library and back in what must have been under the four-minute-mile with the red velvet frame clutched tightly in both hands. I laid it next to the two other portraits. It was the same woman!

The people in the Library had always identified it as Daisy, although I had had doubts about that for a long time. It did not look like any of the known portraits of Daisy Williams that I was familiar with. Now the acid test. I slid the photo from the red velvet frame and flipped it over. It had been photographed in Paris, France, and Daisy had never been abroad. Indiana was there when she was sixteen! We had found the Founder, and she was lovely...just what our Founder should have been.

Now that I have given you some vital statistics, who was Indiana? She was a city girl, born and raised in Lynchburg, She was born on March 10, 1828, and was either the fourth or fifth child of Elijah Fletcher and his wife Maria Antoinette Crawford Fletcher. When I say the fourth or fifth child, I mean she was one of a set of twins, and I don't know which was born first. Her twin died before he was a year old. She had two older brothers, Sidney and Lucien, and a younger sister Elizabeth, born in 1831.

Miss Indie first appears in print in a letter written by her father, Elijah, to his brother Calvin in Indianapolis on August 3, 1828. "Our little babies are both hearty and well children. We have not yet decided on any names for them. Sometimes Maria talks of calling one Elijah and the other Maria Antoinette but then again she will call them something else. Names are of little consequence, a short name suits me best." We theorize that the name Indiana was subsequently chosen because of Calvin Fletcher being such a mover and doer in Indiana. He was a founder of the city of Indianapolis and, of all of Elijah's fourteen brothers and sisters, Calvin was closest to him in spirit and temperament. They were also close business partners and their correspondence was frequent and brisk which helps us to understand the Fletcher motivation.

On May 25, 1829, when our Founder was fourteen months old, her father wrote, "Our little girl is beginning to run about and chatter very spritely."

In 1830 her mother Maria wrote, "Puss grows very fast and talks a great deal to her papa, who she is getting fond of. She will always have her chair set beside his." By the time she was three years old, her family still called her "Puss." It was at the end of that year that Elijah

Indiana Fletcher Williams c. 1844

Fletcher bought a plantation called Locust Ridge. Maria decided it would be a good place to spend the summers and she renamed it Sweetbrier because of the profusion of wild sweetbrier roses that grew on the nearly 1000 acres.

I will digress for a moment from little Puss because she so early attached herself to her father that he entirely filled her horizon. I think it is important to point out that this shrewd Yankee businessman, Elijah Fletcher, was also an educator. He had put himself through Dartmouth, Middlebury College, and subsequently graduated from the University of Vermont where he obtained his teaching degree. He had determined that if education was of paramount importance to him he would be an educator himself. I will also point out that all of the diplomas awarded at Sweet Briar College since the first class graduated in 1910 are copies of Elijah Fletcher's 1818 diploma from the University of Vermont. This document is now housed in the Library Archives.

Fletcher came to Amherst in 1811 to be the headmaster of the New Glasgow Academy in New Glasgow, since renamed Clifford. It is the village where Winton Country Club is and where the Sweet Briar golfers play.

It was there that he met his wife, Maria, who came from a distinguished family. She was raised on the Plantation, Tusculum, whose land adjoined the Academy land and the village. Her father was an outstanding attorney and a graduate of Princeton University. There was never any question but that any Fletcher offspring were going to have the best educations to be procured at that time. The Fletchers were married for eight years before their first child, Sidney, was born in 1821. By then Elijah was a man of substance. He had moved with his wife into Lynchburg and was the owner of the newspaper The Virginian; he was involved in several banks and businesses including real estate. He was on the Board to bring the James River Canal from Richmond to the tributaries of the Ohio River and so join the Tidewater to the great river networks of the mid-section of the country. He had business and banking interests in other states. Yes, he was a man of substance and also a man of rigid standards. He set the standards and his children measured up. If not, they suffered the consequences.

Our Founder, Miss Indiana, was educated in Lynchburg as were her siblings. They attended St. Paul's Episcopal Church and, when the time came, Sidney and Lucien were sent to Yale University. Indiana and Elizabeth were sent to the Georgetown Visitation Convent in Washington, one of the best schools for young women on the East Coast in the early 1840's. When young Elizabeth, several years behind Indiana, was studying there, Miss Indie was doing advanced work at St. Mary's Hall in Burlington, N.J. This was also known as Bishop Doane's School.

Following her time at St. Mary's Hall, Indiana enrolled in a boarding school in Philadelphia to perfect her French, which she spoke with fluency, and also her Italian. She graduated from both schools with the highest honors in her classes.

Her father wrote to his brother Calvin in December 1843, "Inda is disposed to be a scholar. She is very ambitious of excelling, much self-dignity, but, like many of the Fletchers, modest, retiring, and not disposed to dash." He continued in another letter, "She writes with great care and some elegance, is very happy in describing scenery and passing events. Her mind is bent on improvement and little occupied by the the light frippery and foolish fashions of the day." Indiana Fletcher measured up.

On Oct. 24, 1844, Sidney, Indiana, and Elizabeth sailed on the packet Burgundy for Le Havre, France. This was the grand tour for those who measured up. It would last for two years.

Their travels were extensive. It was proposed that the trio remain in Paris for one year so that Sidney could complete his medical studies and the girls perfect their French.

Brother Lucien didn't make the trip as he was at William and Mary studying for his law degree.

The children had letters of introduction to the American Minister in Paris, our chief Consul, and the Secretary of our Legation. The girls were presented to King Louis Phillippe's Queen Charlotte Amelie on New Year's Day, 1845, and attended her ball three days later. They were wined and dined but did not spend the whole of the first year in Paris. They decided in the summer of 1845 to trek off to Greece, Italy, Spain, Egypt, and the Holy Lands.

Elijah demanded weekly letters from the three of them and then proceeded to publish their experiences and travels in the Lynchburg paper. Their travel stories are to be found in our Sweet Briar Archives and make very interesting reading.

After their southern travels the children returned to Paris and then headed north to the Lowlands, to the German city states, on to Scandinavia and into the Russias. Returning to LeHavre they went over to England and Scotland and finally sailed home at the end of November of 1846. The return trip took forty days and their father described the Atlantic crossing as a perilous journey. He said they came directly home to Virginia and the girls "are as simple and unaffected as I could wish; school children with polish of manners and intellectual improvement."

At this time in the late 1840's Elijah and his girls decided to make Sweetbrier Plantation their year around home. Mrs. Fletcher spent most of her time at the home in Lynchburg on Elm Street. She like the lights of the city, her friends and church. Sidney took over his grandparent's plantation, Tusculum, and became a planter rather than a medical doctor although he had a practitioner's license.

There was a great flurry of activity. The old six-room central entrance hall farm house was remodeled. It was doubled in size and became a large Tuscan villa. Indiana, Elizabeth, and their mother were dispatched to New York and Philadelphia for the latest in furnishings. These are now our Sweet Briar antiques. They spent a fortune and had a lovely time. I have found bills from this period amounting to several thousand dollars for silver alone. Life was comfortable and good. Their needs were looked after by 67 slave families consisting of 115 people. The records are on file in the Amherst County Court House.

In 1853 Mrs. Fletcher died of a fever. It took ten days and happened while she was visiting Sidney at Tusculum, so she was buried on the plantation on which she had grown up. I suspect it was typhoid, as the old news clips indicate a lot of that in the county in 1853, as well as smallpox. Elijah was stricken with a massive heart attack in February of 1858 and died in Miss Indie's arms in Sweet Briar House. She was devastated.

The following year, in 1859, Elizabeth married W. Hamilton Mosby of Lynchburg and they began plans to build an estate at Mt. San Angelo. Indiana was alone. Could she run the plantation and did she want to? She thought not, so the Sweet Briar Plantation was advertised for sale in the Lynchburg paper on Jan. 6, 1860. I found the advertisement in the back of one of Miss Indie's notebooks. Before she even had a nibble on the lands, the Civil War struck and our Founder had to carry on alone while the war raged around her for four long, bitter years.

Two weeks after the war was over, a handsome redheaded gentleman arrived on the front porch of Sweet Briar House — the Rev. James Henry Williams, pastor of Zion Episcopal Church in Dobbs Ferry, N.Y. I do not know where these two met, but two weeks after that Miss Indie and Mr. Williams were married in St. Paul's Church in Lynchburg, very early in the morning so they they could catch the 10 a.m. train to New York. From that time on Miss Indie spent most of her time in New York. She loved the intellectual stimulation, the galleries, museums, lectures, and above all the operas, concerts, Alumnae Magazine symphonies. She was a gifted musician...a harpist. The Sweet Briar harp was hers. She bought it in London in 1845 and paid a very dear $1000.00 for it at that time.

Her only child Maria Georgianna, "Daisy," was born on Sept. 10 of 1867. Daisy was adored by her parents as well as by her Uncle "Sing" and Aunt Elizabeth who remained childless. Daisy was their hope and the light of all their lives. She was a bright, diligent child and loved Sweet Briar above all places. She was educated in some of New York's finest schools but she loved her summers at Sweet Briar.

Daisy was a delicate and frail child and of great concern to her family. Apparently she was tubercular, but that is not what carried her away. She died in the cold damp of a New York January day in 1884 of pneumonia. She was just 16 years old. Her parents were heartbroken. They brought her home to Sweet Briar and laid her to rest with her grandfather, Elijah. Mr. Williams joined his child in 1889 and Indiana lived out her final remaining winters in Lynchburg with her friends, the Paynes. She made only a few more trips to her much loved New York all alone. She died in her bed at Sweet Briar. Those who found her wondered what was to become of the land and the estate. There was no one left. Miss Indie was the last.

When her dear friend, Mrs. Payne, found Miss Indie's will in a small sewing basket, she carried it to the Reverend Gray rector of Ascension Church in Amherst, who was in the Sweet Briar House parlor. They held their breath as they read it.

It held a directive, "Procure the incorporation of Sweet Briar Institute, for the education of girls and young women. It shall be the scope and object of the school to impart to its students such education in sound learning and such physical, moral, and religious training as shall, in the judgement of the directors, best fit them to be useful members of society." It was very simple and very clear.

Miss Indie measured up, and wanted it for you in memory of Daisy.

I have now come to the conclusion that the word Founders should have an apostrophe before the s. Miss Indie was THE Founder.

The face in the red velvet frame planted the seed and left the fertilizer. Others have tended the plant. Here we all are.

Ann Marshall Whitley had a busy Founders Day last October 6. Rising at dawn, she set a watch in clear view and went through a final reading of the Founders Day speech she had prepared (with just a week's notice) to make sure that it did not exceed the allotted time allowance.

Then, after a short drive from her home in Amherst, where she lives with her husband Jesse W. Whitley, Chief Administrator of the Lynchburg Fine Arts Center, to the Sweet Briar campus, she checked the newly opened museum of College memorabilia which she and Helen MacMahon have organized.

After her speech and a quick lunch, Ann presented her slide program, The Treasures of Sweet Briar, to visiting alumnae and guests in Tyson auditorium.

*Mrs. Whitley studied painting and design at the Cincinnati Art Academy after her graduation from Sweet Briar in 1947. She has served on the staff of the Cincinnati Art Museum, as a docent and lecturer at the Nelson Gallery in Kansas City, MO, and as a lecturer and researcher at the Detroit Art Institute. She was president of the Washington, DC, Alumnae Club and is currently actively involved with the work of the Amherst Presbyterian Church, the Amherst Woman's Club and the Amherst Historical Museum Board. # Connect, only connect...

Opening Convocation
Address by Fontaine Maury Belford
Dean of
September 14, 1982

My late and much lamented grandmother was a lady, like many in her generation, who combined great elegance and high cultivation with a certain pungent earthiness of expression. Every significant condition which beset the human species had its appropriate articulation. If one of my uncles rolled in unusually merry, he was "Drunk as a skunk;" if my aunt brought home another wild idea from that bastion of madness (and coarseness, my grandmother would say, shaking her head, Yankee coarseness) Mt. Holyoke, she was "Crazy as a road-lizard;" if my sister or I, or for that matter any of her other houseful of friends and relations, tried her beyond endurance she would threaten, in dire tones, to "Jump flat-footed into the creek;" if all else failed, the threat beyond reclamation was, "If you miserable children don't hush up I'm going to snatch you bald-headed." She was a clearly redoubtable lady...

Now she had also a set of neatly encapsulated moral precepts to guide you on your life's way. "Pretty is as pretty does" was one, partner to "Pretty never hurts and is never uncomfortable." "Don't look at a full moon backwards." "Always carry a clean handkerchief." "Don't make mayonnaise on a stormy day." "Don't cross your eyes, they might stick." "Don't make grown-ups cry." "Don't be a tattle-tale." "Don't, whatever you do, speak to strangers." Now we never asked Granny why skunks were drunk, or why it was so bad to jump into a creek flat-footed. And I don't think we ever really believed that pretty was as pretty did, having far too much evidence to the contrary. But we did, I know, quiz her closely on her other wisdom — not because we doubted, because around her doubts were rare and brief, but because her answers were always so wonderful.

"Why, Granny, why not talk to strangers?" "Well," she replied, her brows knit, "well," she went on, "well," she said, "Don't talk to strangers because," she paused, "it's embarrassing."

So here we are — you are strangers and I'm embarrassed, and I'm telling you about my grandmother, who understood about that sort of thing. I hope you won't be strangers for long, and I hope I won't stay embarrassed, but I plan to keep on talking about my grandmother anyway. And the reason I want to keep on talking about her is because what I really want to talk with you all about tonight is connection.

Deep into his novel Howard's End, E.M. Forster describes an encounter which almost happens, one of those near misses which come to shape our lives more deeply perhaps than our successes. Margaret Schlegal has, oddly, become engaged to the rather stuffy and much older husband of a dear dead friend. She discovers, more oddly yet, that she has come to love him — that she yearns above all to reach him! "Only connect!" [She cries out.] That was the whole of her sermon. Only connect the prose and the passion and both will be exalted and human love will be seen at its height. Live in fragments no longer. "Only connect, only connect!"

To connect is the hardest and most human thing we ever do. It is the urge to art. For me with these words only, these few words, to make you see what I see, to make you feel the iambs which metre my blood in my veins, to hear the song which sings to me in the spirals of my ears, to connect with you, only connect, is art. Hear the poet Howard Nemerov as he speaks of the 17th century Dutch painter, Vermeer.

If I could say to you, and make it stick,
A girl in a red hat, a woman in blue Reading a letter, a lady weighing gold...

If I could say this to you so you saw.
And knew, and agreed that this was how it was
In a lost city across the sea of years,
I think we should be for one moment happy.
In the great reckoning of those little rooms
Where the weight of life has been lifted and made light,
Or standing invisible on the shore opposed,
Watching the water in the foreground dream
Reflectively, taking a view of Delft
As it was, under a wide and darkening sky.<sup>1</sup>

To connect is to participate not only in our own lives but in all life, under skies which we all share, which are both wide, and darkening. The ecologists confirm what the poet preacher John Donne said some 300 years ago. Can you guess it?

“No man,” but he meant all of us, “is an island, entire of himself.” We are indeed a piece of the continent, a part of the main. Newspapers spell out what our minds would rather miss, our hearts would surely muddle. A strike in a Bolivian tin mine cripples a factory in Japan, which is no longer able to supply machinery to a sugar-refinery in Georgia which then must lay off workers who can no longer afford to purchase beef raised in Argentina, which causes the A&P in San Francisco to raise the price of milk... You cannot do just one thing. Everything is connected to everything else. We see this now more clearly, because it is now more true. We live on a small planet, which is becoming smaller. We live in a Global Village. We live on Spaceship Earth. We are our brother’s keeper. But must we keep our sisters? There is starvation in Guatemala. But if we feed those baby girls they will grow up and have more baby girls who will in time grow up and... Guatemala cannot feed itself. It may never be able to feed itself. Population grows geometrically, 2, 4, 16, 32, 64, 128, 256, 512, 1024. You figure it out. Do we feed the baby girls?

We, the comfortable people of the world, we Americans who live a wealth unguessed in human history, produce 6% of the world’s goods and consume 60% of what the earth produces. Yet people starved to death in Virginia last winter and we have one of the highest rates of infant mortality in the western hemisphere.

We are in a tiny lifeboat on high seas on a small planet in an insignificant solar system in a galaxy we hardly know in a universe we know not at all — and some will live and some will die and some will decide who and some are deciding who now. Find out who and find out what.

Suppose your eyes
 Stared into time’s heart for a moment
 Finding under the hill
 The cavern where he drowns still Beneath the heather roots, hearing the centuries run slow;
 Suppose that what you saw
 Among lost rivers, stony trees,
 Was the old veritable king,
 Gold-helmeted, the great cross-hilted sword
 Quiet on his knees,
 His iron peers round him in a ring;

Taught by this vision
 Suppose you grope your way
 Through pot-hole and dripping vein
 To his sunk monarchy,
 And put the question, is not our ill day
Dark enough yet to call him out again —

Do not imagine he will let you know
 More than you know now
 Which way the dice will fall.
 He will choose his own day,
 Not yours or mine; waken to the call
 Not of yours or mine but his own passion,
 Know his own enemies, not yours or mine,
 Order the battle after his own fashion.

What if he cares no more for such posterity
 As you and I?
 Maybe it is for the badger and the water-rat,
 Mirkwood again and the encroaching
 salt-flat,
 That he spells victory.<sup>2</sup>

Who knows to what purpose the universe turns. But to whatever purpose, connect only connect.

We live in a time when the energies of history thrust us to disconnection. From the beginning of recorded time until the American revolution there were only two major inventions (if you don’t count the wheel) — gun powder and the printing press. Aside from these, not inconsiderable, events, not much changed. The GNP didn’t change, life expectancy didn’t change, sources of energy didn’t change, building materials didn’t change. Life was passed on, complete and entire, from generation to generation. In the last 200 years the world population has increased 6 fold, GNP 80 fold, the distance one can travel in a day 1000 fold, killing power 1,000,000 fold, the amount of energy that can be released from a pound of matter 50 million fold, the range and volume of information technology several billion fold. In the midst of a world where survival, if not salvation, is predicated on our capacity to live in flux, how then, my to-be friends, do we connect? Where does love lead us? How do we find the still point in the twirling universe?

"This shaking keeps me steady
I should know
What falls away is always, and is near.
I wake to sleep, and take my waking slow
I learn by going where I have to go."<sup>3</sup>

Our capacity to connect, to put into relationship, determines the size of the world in which we live. And it is only the capacity to live on a very large scale inwardly, which enables us to live in a world which outwardly has become very small, very fast and very fragile. And it is the development of this capacity for large living which is the very reason for being of educational institutions like Sweet Briar. Back in the '60s when I was in college, and in the '70s (which is when what we know as the '60s really happened) when I was teaching in college, the great demand of students was for relevance. Now I believed in relevance and I worried about relevance and I struggled to find ways that Medieval Lyric Poetry might be relevant to my delightful, demanding, and occasionally defiant students. And then one day, as I was browsing through the Oxford English Dictionary, magnifying glass in hand, the gods smiled on me. The words I read were an answer, not only to my teaching, but to my life. For the etymology of the word relevant is not, as one would assume relatio, to relate, but relevare, to lift up. A relevant education, then, is one which liberates us from the trees, which lifts us up high above the forest, which enables us to connect, only connect, and that is the end and vision of it all, of all relevant education, of all relevant life. To put Picasso in the caves at Lascaux; to see the carnage in Beirut with eyes that have seen (in the mind's eye which is where seeing matters) Marathon, Runnymede, Appomattox; to know our language, which is our mother, source of life, body of sustenance, — through centuries of speaking — from the word salads of Carlyle to the couplets of Pope, from the conundrums of Donne to Marlowe's mighty line, to Chaucer who invented us and back, and back to Beowulf where we can, in a word or cadence, find the shadow/foreshadowing of our tongue, our language our mother... Connect, only connect. We live under skies both wide and darkening. Celebrate life, birth — as it occurs, miraculously, in a test tube, or more miraculously yet, at Bethlehem. Connect.

Be connected to yourself. That is where education, where connection, begins. Life costs. The more you live the more you will have to pay for life. All acts have consequences, consequences are costs. Sometimes, when we are lucky, we pay the costs. Sometimes others pay them for us. But a life without costs is a life of panic and emptiness. Connect! Connect self to deed to consequences, consequences to self. In that circle lies the moral life, the consciousness and caring which make us human — if we are, or are to be.

As we move to carry to its close this century, I feel, as many of us do, a great convergence of energies. We discern signs, portents, but we do not know to what they point. Certainly, a certain history is drawing to a close, and with it the forms which named its function, and marked its shape. In a justly famous scene from Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest, the baffled Algernon implores his aunt, Lady Bracknell, to tell him the truth, pure and simple. "The truth, my dear Algernon," she responds with disdain, "is never pure and seldom simple." We can no longer rest easy with what it means to be a man, or what it means to be a woman. We are all, the psychologists tell us, both, and must explore what that means in the working out of our lives. We can no longer distinguish, the scientist Heisenberg tells us, between the self and the other. What we observe as we observe the cell is our self observing the cell. The cell we see is not the cell itself but the cell observed. Where do I stop? Where does the world begin?

The medieval world view, which for so long defined us, was constructed around a series of dualisms. Man (but this time they meant women too) was god-like and beast-like, he was angel and animal, flesh and spirit, body and mind. The great human enterprise was that of marshalling the forces of the one to suppress the power of the other. But there is a new hope in the air, or an old hope re-discovered: to connect, only connect. The act of integration, of forging the bonds of relationship, is the great spiritual task of the late 20th century. But we did not invent it, we did not bring it first into hope.

Margaret greeted her lord with peculiar tenderness on the morrow. Mature as she was, she might yet be able to help him to the building of the rainbow bridge that should connect the prose in us with the passion. Without it we are meaningless fragments, half monks, half beasts, unconnected arches that have never joined into a man. With it love is born, and alights on the highest curve, glowing against the grey, sober against the fire. Happy the man who sees from either aspect the glory of these outspread wings. The roads of his soul lie clear, and he and his friends shall find easy going....

Only connect! That was the whole of her sermon. Only connect the prose and the passion, and both will be exalted, and human love will be seen at its height. Live in fragments no longer. Only connect, and the beast and the monk, robbed of the isolation that is life to either, will die.

Nor was the message difficult to give. It need not take the form of a good "talking." By quiet indications the bridge would be built and span their lives with beauty.

But she failed. For there was one quality in Henry for which she was never prepared, however much she reminded herself of it: his obtuseness. He simply did not notice things, and there was no more to be said.

"I haven't the strength to fritter away on such things," he said.

"It isn't frittering away the strength," she protested. "It's enlarging the space in which you may be strong."<sup>4</sup>

Notice things. Time paid attention to is never wasted. Live largely. Be lovers of everything. Connect, only connect. Life is not a race to be won or lost, it is a series of connections to be lived through. There is nothing, Einstein tells us, to which we are not relative. My grandmother was of the theory that there were only ten people in the world, that everything else was done with mirrors. What then do we not reflect? There are, in fact, no strangers — say I, to you. And yet, I am, you are perhaps, still somewhat embarrassed.

This is a world of strangers — your roommate, the freshman down the hall, me. Matthew Arnold may still be a stranger to you, likewise the Peloponnesian Wars, likewise Sigmund Freud. Hunger may be a stranger to you, rejection, loneliness, death. Connect, only connect...

We are all different, each unique, but in 100 years when we have been rendered to our mortal bone, who will know us? Sometimes I confuse what I have read and what I have dreamed. I think I dreamed this. Archimedes sits in his bathtub. The water rises. It comes to him — the answer he has been seeking. "Eureka!" He shouts and leaps from the tub. "Eureka! I've found it!" He runs ecstatic down the streets of Syracuse, naked, dripping soap. Small boys laugh. Elders smile and tap their heads. A man, standing by the side of the road nods, "I know," he says, "I know. Me too." Connect.

Shelley speaks of sorrow too deep for tears. Honor the connection that cannot speak itself. Silence is the space by which we move and see, it is our doors and windows. Honor it. We live under wide and darkening skies. Do not face them in fragments. Honor what is whole. Honor what connects. We are travellers, moving on. Some of us are coming, some of us are going. What falls away is always and is near. A college is a community of connections — honor it, honor what binds us to one another. Resist whatever breaks, whatever consumes, love.

We seek what we already have and mourn what we have not lost. We wake to sleep and take our waking slow, we learn by going where we have to go.

Good speed, Go in peace, Thank you.

The Parcourse

by Jennifer Crispen

Associate Professor of Physical Education

On a recent sunny Saturday, Professor of English Ross Dabney was driving on the lake road when he passed one of the eighteen exercise stations comprising the new Parcourse. Unable to resist temptation, he jumped from his car and began a series of pushups. As he finished, two students ran up on their way through the Parcourse. "Mr. Dabney," said one, "You can't do the Parcourse in a car!"

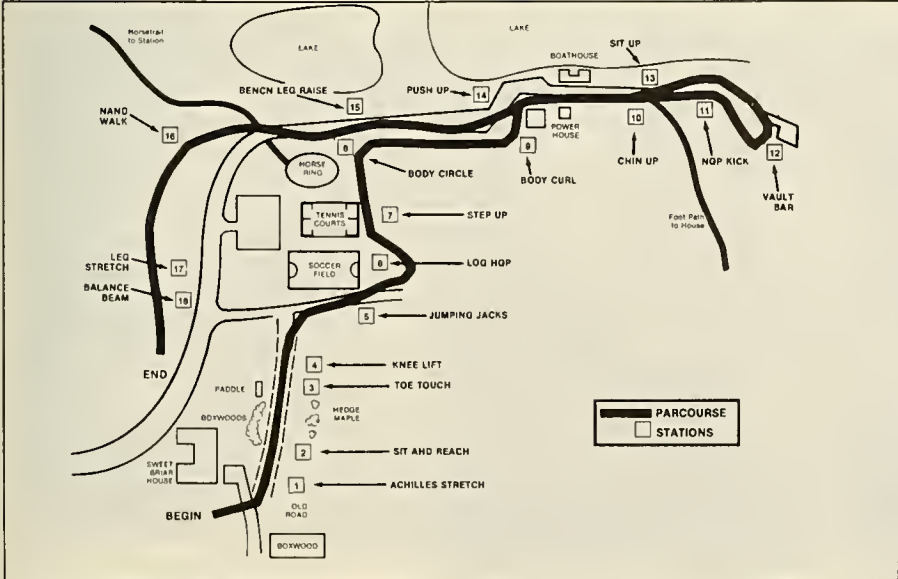

"Doing the Parcourse" is the newest activity on the Sweet Briar campus, and refers to walking, jogging, or running the 1.3 mile Parcourse Fitness Circuit. Combining exercise with the natural beauty of its campus setting, the Parcourse promotes cardiovascular fitness, utilizing the principles of aerobics to strengthen the heart and improve its capacity. Participants also notice better muscle tone, weight loss, improved flexibility and stress reduction. Dedicated users include students, alumnae, faculty, staff, children and campus visitors. Each station includes three levels of activity: Beginner, Sporting and Championship, and the exerciser chooses the appropriate level.

The Parcourse was made possible by a challenge gift from John Rogan of Charlottesville, Virginia, a former member of the Board of Overseers. Construction was supervised by Athletic Director June Booth.

Parcourse stories abound on campus, and perhaps the best is the day Professor of Economics Reuben Miller decided to try the course on horseback. When he dismounted at the body circle station, his horse ran away. Professor Miller caught his mount an hour later. Both report considerable improvement in their aerobic capacity.

During last fall's Council Meetings, several returning alumnae enjoyed running the Parcourse as relaxation either before or after the meetings. The early morning runners met with some unexpected encounters. Through the dense fog that lay upon the landscape at dawn, some black angus cows trespassed from a neighboring farm, causing a few hasty reversals.

Other alumnae joined President Harold Whiteman, who has changed his regular morning routine since the Parcourse has been established: he now swims in the pool alternate mornings, and runs the Parcourse on the others, then breakfast at eight in Sweet Briar House, arriving at his desk before nine.

Florence Hague

by Jane Belcher

Examine the cast on an academic stage. You will find, as in any human group, the strutters, the posers, the jokers, the prima donnas, the holier-than-thou-ers, the politicians, the boasters, the sycophants, the shy, the aggressive, the people-pleasers.

Most of us, on occasion, will demonstrate one or another of these traits and still, believe it or not, may be valuable teachers and members of the academic community.

But look further. Ultimately you will find the quiet one, the one who manifests none of these all-too-human tendencies and, furthermore, doesn't seem to recognize them in others.

You have at last found Florence Hague. I worked with her for fourteen years and saw her frequently during her early years of retirement. Like a good clock, she was unobtrusive, visible when needed and dependable. Her life was orderly and her work was thorough, whether she was preparing for class, grading papers, setting up apparatus for labs or caring for lab equipment and museum materials.

She was always game for a bird trip, a picnic on the Blue Ridge or at the lake, and chats with members of her department, students and alumnae.

Once, several years after her retirement, I stopped to see her at her home on Dairy Road. She complained of aching joints. After I had left, it suddenly dawned on me that never before, in all the years I had known her, had I seen her draw attention to herself.

I often think of this when I catch myself being a strutter or poser or joker or prima donna or any of those other characters. And often I think of how blessed I was to live through my maturation process as a teacher in association with Adeline Ames and Florence Hague, both of them people of character, perspective and patience.

I'm only sorry that more people didn't know them as well, and couldn't appreciate how well the job can be done without histrionics.

Dr. Florence Sander Hague, 93, emeritus professor of biology at Sweet Briar College, died July 17 in Charlotte, NC. She retired in 1954 after teaching at the college for 28 years.

A graduate of the University of Kansas where she also took her master's degree, Professor Hague held a doctorate from the University of Illinois.

She was for several years secretary of the Virginia Society of Ornithology and of the Biology Section of the Virginia Academy of Science. She was president of the Lynchburg Sigma XI Club from 1947 to 1949.

Following her retirement, Miss Hague continued to live at Sweet Briar for a number of years. In 1966, she moved to Charlotte, and at the time of her death was a resident of the Wesley Nursing Center there. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church and is survived by her sister, Edith Hague.

Winifred Walker

by Helen McMahon '23

Miss Winifred Walker, the last of that wonderful Walker family, known and loved by many Sweet Briar girls from the first class in 1910 until 1967, died on November 2, 1982.

"Miss Winnie" as she was known to students was born in Manitoba, Canada in 1886, one of nine children. The family emigrated from England to Canada in the 1880s, moved to Florida in 1895 and then settled at Sweet Briar in 1909 where they lived at Mount Saint Angelo until 1924.

The Walkers are happily remembered by many alumnae who were students in the era when their home was a center of warm hospitality. Many faculty members and students never missed their regular weekly tea parties. The family orchestra, in which "Miss Winnie" played the double bass, often gave musicales, beginning with the first Commencement in 1910.

From 1933 until 1967 "Miss Winnie" was a valued member of the Book Shop staff, which her older sister "Miss Ruby" managed for 20 years.

Letters to and from her scores of friends all over the world, gave her the greatest pleasure. Those fortunate enough to know her looked forward to her long detailed letters with news always of the campus, friends and her garden.

"Miss Winnie" is survived by 20 nieces and nephews, including Kathleen Ward Allen, Sweet Briar 1940, of Green Valley Arizona and several great nieces and nephews.

Services were held on Wednesday, November 3 in The Sweet Briar Memorial Chapel, conducted by The Reverend John Pedlar of Amherst.

Magazine editors are very apt to sit in their ivory towers (or, in my case, in a suburban New Jersey kitchen) deciding just what their readers want to read. Sometimes they get a professional team to do a "reader-interest-survey" to tell them what their readers really want to read.

We hope you will take the time to complete the questionnaire below, clip it out and mail to the Alumnae Office, Sweet Briar, VA 24595. The results of this survey will help us to bring you what you want to know about Sweet Briar.

Special Honors and Awards Announced at Opening Convocation

Manson Memorial Alumnae Scholarship

This scholarship was established in 1925 by the alumnae in memory of N.C. Manson, Jr. (1858-1924), who was the first legal counsel for the College and for many years chairman of the executive committee of the Board of Directors. The annual scholarship recognizes an upperclass student of high academic standards who shows qualities of leadership and makes constructive contributions to student life. The recipient is named by the Committee on Financial Aid in consultation with the Director and one other representative of the Alumnae Association.

Recipient: Elizabeth Glenn, '83 of Lexington, KY. Major: Economics. Activities: Chairman of Curriculum Committee, Judicial Committee, Church and Chapel Committee, Freshman and Junior Honors, Tau Phi, Sweet Briar Scholar, Bum Chum, McVea Scholar her junior year, listed in Who's Who in American Universities and Colleges, Dean's List, Ryan Nursing Home volunteer.

The Mary Kendrick Benedict Scholarship

This scholarship was established in 1945 by former students, colleagues and other friends of Mary K. Benedict, first president of Sweet Briar College. Income from this fund is used as a scholarship for an upperclass student of high academic standing and personal integrity who has shown in her college experience a purpose for service. The recipient is named by the Committee on Financial Aid in consultation with the Director and one other representative of the Alumnae Association.

This scholarship was established in 1979 by the class of 1939, the husband and friends of Mary Mackintosh Sherer Alumnae Magazine

'39. The scholarship is awarded to a rising junior who is both a leader and a scholar and who performs her duties with dignity, fairness and devotion to Sweet Briar. In addition, she should demonstrate the outgoing and cheerful qualities associated with Mary Mackintosh Sherer. The recipient is named by the Committee on Financial Aid in consultation with the Dean of the College and the Director of the Alumnae Association.

Recipient: Wendy Birtcher '84 from San Juan Capistrano, CA. Major: Economics. Activities: Dean's List, Sweet Tones, cheer leader at W&L, is spending this year in Florence, Italy with the Syracuse University Program.

The Alumna Daughter Endowed Scholarship

This scholarship was established in 1974 by the Executive Board of the Alumnae Association to honor an alumna daughter in either the junior or senior class who has demonstrated while at Sweet Briar the traditions of sound learning and social responsibility which have characterized the alumnae of the College since its founding. The recipient is named by the Selection Committee, which consists of the scholarship chairman of the Association's Executive Board, the president of the Alumnae Association, the College Dean, the first vice president of the Alumnae Association, the national bulb chairman and two faculty members appointed by the College. In addition, the presidents of the rising junior and senior classes submit names to the Selection Committee.

Recipient: Mary Ware '83 from Richmond, VA. Major: Studio Art. Activities: Freshman and Junior Honors, Dean's List, Judicial Committee, Vice President of Junior Class, and Senior Class. Daughter of Patricia Coxé Ware '59.

The Virginia Ranney Award

This scholarship was established in 1981 in memory of Virginia Ranney '70 by members of her family, friends, and the New York Sweet Briar Club. It is awarded to an incoming freshman who has among other qualities, integrity and a warm, outgoing personality.

Recipient: Mary McNeil Johnson '86 from Portsmouth, VA. Granddaughter of Mary Hatton Mason '20.

Margaret Cramer Crane Memorial Scholarship

This scholarship was established in 1980 in memory of Margaret Cramer Crane '27 a loving and beloved person who cared so much about her College. The recipient should be a daughter or a granddaughter of a Sweet Briar alumna.

Recipient: Beth M. Slayman '84 of Alexandria, VA.; daughter of Susan Hendricks Slayman '60, and granddaughter of Helen Closson Hendricks '34. Freshman Honors.

Juliet Halliburton Burnett Scholarship

This scholarship was established in 1974 by R. Walker Martin to honor and recognize the outstanding and devoted service to Sweet Briar College of Juliet Halliburton Burnett Davis '35, former Overseer, Director, and President of the Alumnae Association. The income is used to provide a merit award to an outstanding upperclass student chosen from participants in the Sweet Briar Environmental Studies Program.

Two recipients were named this year: Amy Linda Boyce '83 from Keedysville, MD. Major: American Studies. Activities: Freshman and Junior Honors, Dean's List, Sweet Briar Scholar, spent junior year in France.

Deidre Alexandra Platt '83 from Mery Sur Oise, France. Major: Human Ecology. Activities: Freshman Honors, Dean's List, Sweet Briar Scholar, winner of Jean Besselièvre Boley Prize in creative writing (1981).

Everingham Rickards and Captain Garrett V.S. Rickards Memorial Scholarship

This scholarship was established in 1974 by Mrs. Everingham Rickards '10 in memory of her son who died in World War II and her husband. This award is given to one or more members of the rising sophomore class who best demonstrate potential for leadership, academic excellence, and community involvement, which have distinguished the College throughout its history.

Alumnae Award 1982

Preston Hodges Hill
Class of 1949

Preston Hodges Hill of Denver, Colorado, was honored as the recipient of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Award for 1982 at the College's Annual Founders Day celebration in October. The award recognizes an alumna who has given outstanding service to Sweet Briar in a voluntary capacity.

Mrs. Hill served as president of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Association, 1974-1977, was alumnae representative on the College's Board of Overseers, 1977-81, and is currently a member of the Alumnae Association Executive Board as chairman of the Annual Fund.

She also served three five-year terms as president of the Class of 1949 and has served on the Sweet Briar Alumnae Executive Board as chairman of Region VI (the Midwest) and chairman of Region X (the West). She has been president of the Denver Alumnae Club and over-all director of alumnae clubs.

During her student years, Preston was president of Student Government. She was a member of Q.V., Tau Phi, worked with the Sweet Briar News, and held other offices. She was a Modern History major and graduated cum laude.

The description under her picture in the Briar Patch was accurate: "A delightful combination of Southern charm and Northern efficiency, along with that never failing sense of humor and proportion, have made her a capable and understanding president of Student Government. Able to take most anything in her stride, she somehow fits top marks in with everything else. An excellent diplomat, a sympathetic listener, as well as an enthusiastic talker, she has that rare quality of being a good follower as well as a good leader."

In Denver, Pres has been active with the Rocky Mountain Planned Parenthood Association and the Denver Art Museum. She and her husband, Eugene Dubose Hill, Jr., are the parents of three grown children.

Because Preston was unable to attend the Founders Day ceremonies, Ann Morrison Reams, director of the Alumnae Association, accepted the award for her. Gwen Speel Kaplan, president of the Alumnae Association made the presentation.

Nominee for Board of Overseers

The Executive Board of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Association submits the name of Elizabeth Trueheart Harris '49 of Richmond, Virginia, to the members of the Association as a candidate for election to the Board of Overseers of Sweet Briar College.

A biology major at Sweet Briar, Libby was on the Dean's list all four years and graduated cum laude. Her student activities included being president of the Board of Publications, business manager of the Brambler, Cabin leader, and membership in Tau Phi, the French Club and the Glee Club.

As an alumna she has been active in the Richmond Sweet Briar Alumnae Club, serving for many years as an Alumna Representative (now called Admissions Representative). She was elected to the Executive Board of the Alumnae Association in 1978 and served two terms as chairman of the Alumnae Representatives Committee. In 1982 she was elected to the Executive Board for a third term, and is currently the chairman of Region III. In 1981 she was appointed by President Harold B. Whiteman to serve on the Search Committee for a Director of Admissions for Sweet Briar.

Libby's volunteer work in Richmond has included membership on the Boards of The Retreat Hospital, The Collegiate Schools, and the Richmond Home for Boys; the Council of the Virginia Museum; various offices in the Junior League of Richmond; United Givers Fund Campaign; membership in the Woman's Club, Tuckahoe Woman's Club, and Colonial Dames of Virginia; treasurer of Historic Garden Week in Virginia; and active participation in the Presbyterian church.

Libby is married to H. Hiter Harris, Jr., a graduate of Woodberry Forest School and Princeton University, who is chairman of the board of Southern Bank and Trust Co. and chairman of the board and president of Southern Bankshares, Inc. Their three children include twin daughters, Mary Lawrence (SBC '79) and Elizabeth Robinson (Hollins '79) and a son, H. Hiter Harris, III, who is a senior at Hampden-Sydney.

Other names may be added to the ballot if they are sent to the Director of the Alumnae Association, Sweet Briar, Va. 24595, accompanied by 15 signatures of members of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Association, and written consent of the nominees, within two weeks after publication of this notice. If no additional nominations are made, the Director of the Alumnae Association is instructed to cast a ballot to elect the proposed slate. The elected candidate's name will be submitted to the Board of Overseers as the nominee from the Association.

A Rose is a Rose?

When I read Tom Hartman's interesting article in the Fall issue, including the section on the Sweet Briar rose, I was puzzled to see the sweetbrier rose referred to as Rosa rubiginosa instead of the usual Rosa eglanteria — until I realized that the illustration used was from the long-out-of-date Britton and Brown's Illustrated Flora, which uses this nomenclature.

I'd like to make a plea for the return to Rosa eglanteria. Even B. and B. describe the sweetbrier as "the Eglantine of Chaucer, Spenser, and Shakspeare [sic — as he himself signed his name]."

An attractive framed watercolor of the Rosa eglanteria with a historical note about it, owned by Mrs. Whiteman and now hanging in Garden Cottage, reads as follows:

"Robert Cecil, first Earl of Salisbury, to whom John Tradescant was gardener from 1609 to 1614, ordered 3,200 sweet briars for the glorious gardens at Hatfield House. Referred to as eglantine in A Midsummer Night's Dream, its leaves give off a deliciously sweet scent — especially after rain."

I suspect that it was "sweetbriers" that the Earl ordered, and it was probably more than the leaves that Shakespeare referred to as "eglantine," but it is nevertheless an interesting and decorative picture. Incidentally, John Tradescant was later gardener to Charles I and had the honor of having the spiderwort genus, Tradescantia, named for him.

Whatever we call the sweetbrier rose, we owe Tom Hartman a vote of thanks for discovering the specimen along the old Sweet Briar entrance road.

A Note of Thanks

Thanks to the generosity of so many alumnae, we now have a complete run of Antiques. Sarah Bumbaugh '54 has the honor of filling in the final issues. Antiques is a periodical used by several classes and it is lovely to know that what we want is readily available. Once again, you have all done a magnificent job of coming to the aid of our alma mater. Thanks.

Picture Plaudits

The Fall Magazine has a beautiful picture on the cover, but I can find no acknowledgement of the photographer. Can you tell us who it was?

Louise Dreyer Bradley '34

Editor's note: The gremlins got us! That lovely fall photo on the cover was taken by David Abrams of Monroe who has so often captured the beauty of the Sweet Briar campus at all seasons of the year. And, speaking of pictures, those on the inside front cover of freshmen moving in, "A new beginning," were taken by Thomas M. Withenbury, the new Assistant Director of Public Relations.

Class Notes, '49, A Correction

Congratulations on a terrific issue of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine. From the full-color cover to the calendar of events, it was classy all the way — and I don't mean just the class notes! You and your staff did a superb job.

I am also writing you as our class secretary for I thought you might like to know I am still married to Hervey Evans, although I had two roommates who married Joneses, so the mistake is pardonable. At the great milestone age of "55 and holding," I have decided to keep Hervey and let the Joneses keep up with themselves!

Carolyn Cannady Evans '49

Editor's note: It's those gremlins again, Carolyn, or maybe Kermit the Frog put his foot in it this time!

One Need Not Agree

I was a little puzzled by Carolyn Montgomery Lange's recent letter objecting to political references in Professor Roach's article. A major function of the Alumnae Magazine, I had always thought, was to present something of the intellectual life of the College. As a first-rate liberal arts institution, Sweet Briar has always kept itself open to all matters of responsible intellectual inquiry. These concerns will, of course, be political as well as ethical, scientific, and social. One need not agree with all the subjects that appear in the Alumnae Magazine to hope that it will continue to reflect what Sweet Briar essentially is: a forum for the exchange of diverse, many-faceted ideas.

Class Notes

1910

Frances Murrell Rickards sent the following report.

I am the only one left of the first five graduates. I graduated from the Lynchburg High School in 1906 and entered Sweet Briar the first day it opened. I have lived in Norfolk since 1916 and, now a widow, have been in Algonquin House, a condominium, for ten years.

My daughter, Murrell Rickards Chadsey '44, lives in New York and Vermont. She visits me twice a year, and I spend Christmas week with her in New York. Because of being in New York at that time, I miss the Dec. 28 luncheon meeting in Norfolk.

I have two grandsons, one, 32, and the other, 27. One lives in New York, and the younger, in Woodstock, VT — both college graduates doing well in business.

There are seven or eight Sweet Briar graduates who attend my church. The one I call my Guardian Angel, Margaret Williams Bayne '27, takes me to church every Sunday.

When Mrs. Taylor, then Mrs. Pannell, came to Sweet Briar as president, she honored our class by becoming our honorary member. The last time the five were back, Commencement 1968, she introduced us at dinner, one at a time, to the students and returned alumnae, and she honored me by coming to Norfolk for my 90th birthday party, Jan. 20, 1978.

I am trying to live long enough to see Halley's Comet, which my math teacher, Dr. Morenus, and I watched from Sweet Briar House in May 1910!

1922

In 1974 Alice Miller Bly moved with her husband from their home in Winchester to a three-room apartment in a lovely retirement home in Muncie, IN. The wonderful friends they made there have been a great comfort to Alice since Neil's death last September. They had no children, but three generations of nieces and nephews have compensated. She reads a great deal, knits, plays bridge, and is keenly interested in politics and science of all kinds.

Lillie Maddox Whitner, Charlotte, NC, wrote of "loving every minute" of her 60th Reunion, although only she, Gertrude Dally Massie, and Margretta Carper MacLeod were present to represent the Class of 1922. Jeannette Kidd Sheridan, Baltimore, had had a nice talk with Gert about the Reunion, but previous plans kept her from coming. She is doing some traveling in the States and keeping busy. Julia Benner Moss wrote from Media, PA, that she was distressed at not being at the 60th.

Maylen Newby Pierce, Coral Gables, FL, published her second book of poetry and was included in two other anthologies this year. She attended the graduation in New York City of two granddaughters (daughters of son Bill). Maylen visited son Walter, Jr., for a month in Bedfordshire, England, and his son Philip is now visiting her while he looks at U.S. universities. Her third son, Staples, has an estate planning business in Miami and vacations in his Blowing Rock, NC, summer home. His two sons have new homes, and his daughter is at Salem Academy.

In Little Rock, AR, Emma Davis Kuykendall, now a widow, lives alone but enjoys her friends and spends much time with three devoted grandsons and three great-grandchildren. She also plays bridge.

Martha Falk Shaffer and husband have sold their winter home in Sun City, AZ, and moved back to Wadsworth, OH, near their two sons and their families. Despite arthritic knees, Martha gets around beautifully on a walker, but for her 84th birthday, she received a handsome blue leather wheelchair and was wheeled in to dinner at the club. Martha enjoys her flower garden, which she has had kept up. She has good memories of Sweet Briar, as well as an on-going interest in it.

Aline Morton Burt writes from Villa Valencia retirement apartment-hotel in Laguna Hills, CA, that hers would be a great life if only she could RETIRE. Good health allows her to be active in church, DAR, Colonial Dames 17 Century, Phi Beta Phi Alumnae, etc. She drives up and down the California freeways giving programs and visiting family. She says she supports the greeting card industry keeping in touch with her three children, 14 grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren.

Selma Brandt Kress let us know that at age 83 she had decided to move into the United Presbyterian Home in Pittsburgh.

Virginia H. Ranson, Huntington, WV, had to cancel a trip to Ft. Lauderdale and Naples, FL, which she had planned to take with her sister Katherine, because of a back injury.

In April we had a note from Emily Moon Spilman about her enjoyment of a two-month visit to their children in Peru, but we were saddened to learn from her husband that Emily died in June.

Fund Agent

Ellen Newell Bryan (Mrs. W. Wright), P.O. Box 470, Clemson, SC 29631

It was a supreme moment for Frances McCamish McNeel when she saw her granddaughter receive her degree from SB in May. Frances says the campus was beautiful and she always hates to leave. Her winter has been painful with arthritis, but she hopes to give up her cane soon.

Gudun Eskesen Chase's life in her retirement community in Del Ray Beach is great. She had one setback, a broken hip, followed by a hip replacement in March, and she was not looking forward to a cataract operation.

Dorothy Goff Frisch writes from her home in Waukesha, WI, that her stay at SB was all too short. She has been back only once since 1924, but from all the pictures, she thinks it is even more beautiful. She has happy memories of those years at Sweet Briar.

Mary Elizabeth Stoddard Fray says that her life is not wildly exciting, but she keeps busy and is having fun. She winters in Florida and had a marvelous trip to Yugoslavia two years ago and a grand trip to the British Isles a year ago. Her five grandchildren are all boys.

Margaret Krider Ivey (Peg) had a marvelous trip to the U.S.A. with her son Jim. They traveled from Darien, CT, to Washington, DC, including two-night stands in New Hampshire and New Jersey and climaxed her great trip with four nights in Haddonfield with Betty Moore Rusk. They experienced everything from 15-foot snowdrifts in New Hampshire to blackouts in New Jersey. Betty gave a "super" party for Peg and Jim. Peg Reinhold Mitchell drove up from Wilmington, DE, and the three 26-ers had such fun reliving memories. Peg Ivey is still active for her community and enjoys her many friends. She wrote of the many jobless in England and the closing of many firms.

In a letter to Ellen Newell Bryan congratulating her on being '26 Fund Agent and praising her for the great job she is accomplishing, Elizabeth Moore Rusk (Betty) writes how much Ellen and Wright were missed at our 55th Reunion. Betty went to Houston in January to visit her son and family for three weeks, then off to Palm Beach with her sister, and hoped to go to SB in May. She told of her joy in having Peg Ivey and her son for a visit. Betty keeps busy with Red Roses, her church, Needlework Guild, and a group of wonderful friends, most of them widows. She hopes to come to the '26 Mini-Reunion in '83, unless she goes to England to see Peg then. (We hope you will all come to SBC in May for this special occasion!) Betty sees Marjorie Shepherd and Peg Reinhold Mitchell when she visits her daughter in Laurel, MD, outside Washington. (Peg reports that Marg's Washington apartment is very attractive.) Marg and Betty have seen Frances Dunlop Heiskell and Jim. Frances talks often to Elizabeth Cobb Sutherland in Dallas, PA, via long distance.

Mary Bristol Graham, Batavia, NY, expects Lou Bristol Linderman '28 to visit her from East Orleans, MA.

Mary Lib Loughery Arthur writes, "It has come to this." She entered a retirement home in Winston-Salem on July 1. She adds, "Believe I'll like its new security, people, and no maintenance." Knowing Lib, her interest in everyone and everything, and her active mind, we are all sure she will like it. She had reservations for the Fair in Knoxville but "busted" her knee while packing, storing, and throwing away.

Kitty Blount Anderson writes that her spring has been most interesting with three mallards and one Canadian choosing her place to nest. Altogether they produced 16 ducks and three geese. Kitty said summer was slow in arriving in Minnesota, but gardening, boating, and swimming were in full force when she wrote. In late September most of Kitty's family were planning to join her for a trip up river on the Delta Queen. She was also hoping for a visit from Wanda Jensch Harris and a trip with her to their spots on Sand Island in Wisconsin. Wanda is doing a great job of recovering from a hip replacement in March. Kitty's life is full with philanthropic, community, and church activities, and she finds life most rewarding and interesting.

Our class is a traveling one. Carolyn Martindale Blouin and Maurie on a trip saw Flo Brown Elton and Charlotte Brown Harder too in Huntington, WV. Further west they spent a night with Betty Boone Willis in Albuquerque. Bob had been ill but is back playing golf. Their son has married a lovely girl and now Betty and Bob have two grandchildren — much to their delight. The Blouins went on to Leisure World where they saw Mona Stone Green near Phoenix. She and Thornton are very fit. The Blouins also saw Mary Bruce Dailey Dawson in Sun City, AZ. The Dawsons were planning a trip abroad and a visit to SBC — the first since graduation. Carolyn and Maurie went on to see Phyrne Tanner McKennan in California, then to Hawaii, and to Alaska where their son had spent some time. En route west and back, the Blouins spent some time with Jo Gibbs Du Bois '31 in Delavan, WI. Via Carolyn too came word that Nancy Worthington '31 sold $600 worth of tulip bulbs! Wonderful!

Mary Huntington Harrison has been visiting Wilmington, NC, and Baton Rouge and baby sitting with her 11-year-old granddaughter.

Serena Ailes Stevens — also a traveling alumna — went to China in 1980. She had been to SBC's anthropology symposium and enjoyed it so much she returned this year, combining it with a Detroit Art Institute visit to Natchez for the House and Garden Week.

Phyrne Tanner McKennan wrote Carolyn Blouin that she and her husband had taken a train trip from Salt Lake City to Denver on the Zephyr, one of two old trains left still running. It was breath-taking, according to Phyrne.

Marge Sturges Moose, our president, wrote that they have had terrible storms in Alabama. She keeps very busy — as chairman of the W. and M. of the Women's Club and tutoring a boy in Latin to help him go to Choate. She did so well at the latter that she was asked to spend a day a week doing it, but she hesitated since her husband was retiring. Instead, they took a trip to the Orient. Marge added that those who have seen On Golden Pond might be interested in knowing it was filmed on Squam Pond where she has spent many summers. She regrets that the public has found out about it and taken over. Two of my children urged us to go see the film. It reminded them of our place here in Maine on Long Lake, where I am writing this letter. We have two of our children with their families here right now. It is fun!

Nancy Gaines Jaeger is proud of her grandson. He has been accepted at all six colleges he applied to. He is going to Middlebury.

Ruth Hasson Smith reports a successful hip operation.

Helen Beard Huntington, who used to live in Amherst, reports she has retired from her job with the Florida Red Cross, lives in Leesburg, FL, near her son, and is fine.

Katryne Blake Moore sent a fascinating letter about their seven-month 50th wedding anniversary trip in 1980-81. It included some time in Portugal, where they saw Emma Riely Lemaire. The trip went on to Paris and many other places in France, the British Isles, and Italy. I have sent it to the Alumnae Office to be put in our scrapbook so more can enjoy it.

We hope Jean Saunders has fully recovered from her knee operation.

Betsy Williams Gilmore sent a fascinating letter concerning Betsy Embrey Houston. On June 7, 1981, The Betsy Embrey Houston Room was presented to commemorate her devoted and dedicated service as Directress of the Mary Washington Branch of the APVA (Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities) 1958-1980. This room is an addition to the cottage where Mary Ball Washington, mother of George, spent the last 19 years of her life. Betsy helped in the renovating not knowing it was to be named in her honor. The annual reception to honor the volunteers was enlarged to include the local members, and a resume of Betsy's accomplishments was read preceding the presentation of the plaque — a complete surprise for Betsy. This information has also been sent for the scrapbook.

You were all very good about replying and I am grateful. I saw Helen Hanson Bamford and Bill Bamford briefly in Daytona Beach in April and they both looked marvelous. They are considering stopping for Reunion on their way home from Florida in '84.

Nancy Russell Carter and Jim, together with Mary Lee Ryan Strother and Porter, let me share again with them a few wonderful days in June at the Stratford Festival. Nancy had just lost her brother, Dr. Nelson Russell, Jr., who lived near her at Clarksburg. I have had a busy summer working on the program for the Women's Forum of the Council of Foreign Affairs and finding players for the Women's Interclub Tennis teams at Canterbury. In September of last year I had an interesting but exhausting trip to the southern tier of Eastern European countries. I was delighted to reach Vienna and find that civilized living had not departed this world.

Connie Burwell White says her only idea about our 50th is "to compose a lament to its happening." She and her husband continue to do public relations work but enjoy fly fishing more.

From southern California Eleanor Cooke Easterly writes that there is an active group of alumnae there who meet twice a year. She sees Betty Carter Clark and Marie Lange Gaskell often. Her four children all live nearby. Lucky!

Since losing her husband, Nancy Butzner Leavell has been acting as substitute guide at Monticello. She would be delighted to see any classmates touring with grandchildren. She has been visiting but only alumnae of other years.

Rosemary Frey Rogers sounds busier than when she was working. Her great love seems to be The Preservation of Tennessee Antiquities, but she is also on the Humane Society Board and houses nine dogs herself.

Lydia Goodwyn Lorentzen and I must compare notes on her trip to Hungary, Yugoslavia, and Austria — a trip she took in early spring. She had a mini-reunion with Marge Thuma Kotte in Cincinnati and "picked up where they left off 50 years ago."

Retiring in 1973, Louise Greenwood Lippitt has busied herself at the adult center, the Wilton Library, etc. as a volunteer. She lost her husband in 1970 but enjoys her stepdaughter and three proxy grandsons.

I wish I could claim a relationship to Golfer Alcott, as Helen Hoeffcker Roehm asks, but I cannot, as I don't know. She reports that Kitty Means Neely called and they plan to drive to our 50th. She says she is settled in but is ignoring some unpacked boxes in favor of playing with a six-year-old grandson.

From New Canaan, CT, Nancy Hotchkiss Boschen reports that she is volunteering for a number of agencies, but the only one I could read was the Darien Book Aid which sends books all over the world. She has three children and seven grandchildren.

Dot Hutchinson Howe states that her youngest child was married at Christmas, and the other two are successful, each in his own way: one is president of his company, and the other, the adoptive mother of a young Korean baby.

(Therese) Tess Lamirum Beck keeps busy golfing, gardening, and volunteering at the F.N.A. She wishes someone from the area (Milwaukee) would join her in going to the 50th.

It seems hard to picture Marjorie Lasar Hurd enjoying a pleasant but uneventful life. My recollection is of her causing events to happen. She had just visited her son David in Houston. She sees a few other SBC alumnae not in our class. She further reports that after some resistance she went to her 50th prep school reunion and can scarcely wait for ours at SBC.

The West Coast called Martha Lou Stohlman where she visited her daughter in Seattle before stopping in Springfield, MD, to visit with Tacky Williams McCollum and hear about her trip around the world on the Q.E. II. At the airport in St. Louis, Martha Lou lunched with Marge Van Evera Lovelace, who was just recovering from a trip to the Grand Canyon with another grandmother and two 8-year-old grandchildren.

Liz Mayfield Chapman reports the sudden death of her husband June 22nd. She was visiting her son and her grandchildren in July.

I feel much better knowing that Mary Walton McCandlish Livingston is still at the National Archives! (She had just returned from a week's visit in France with a granddaughter.) She looks forward to her annual trip to Nantucket with relatives. Her latest interest is in Scottish country dancing.

Kitty Means Neely confirmed her plan to come to Reunion with Helen Hoeffcker Roehm. She spent the winter in San Francisco again and saw a good bit of Cecilia Birdsey Fuesle.

At a Federal District Judiciary Conference at the Greenbrier Jane Morrison Moore entertained her three lawyer sons and their wives (one from SBC). She also tells us that her godchild, Anne Leavell Reynolds '63, Nancy Butzner Leavell's daughter, is off for a year in Paris with her husband and three children.

A pleasant way to celebrate their 45th Anniversary, going to Europe for the month of May, was chosen by Ruth Myers Pleasants and her husband Clif. They are now known at home as the parents of so-and-so who just did this or that. It comes to us all.

Mary Ann Page Guyol is welcomed to the land of the communicants! We do hope you make it back to SBC for our 50th even if the preservationists have been pushed aside by progress. It can't change us!

Mary Rogers Moser says she took an Elder Hostel trip to England for three weeks last summer — different and strenuous. Husband also went. This year she plans to attend two universities alone. Husband begged off.

We learn that Nancy Russell Carter has been preparing for our 50th by attending her husband's 50th at Williams. They played tennis too! She had a family gathering at Clarksburg for July Fourth.

Mary Lee Ryan Strother tells of a wonderful sailing trip on the Chesapeake with Porter and two sons before her trip to Stratford, Ontario. I should add that her liturgical dancing keeps her in excellent shape.

A trip to Charleston, SC, to visit her daughter resulted in a meeting in Macon, GA, with Cecil Birdsey Fueselle and Marion Gwaltney Hall for Lib Scheuer Maxwell. Both Marion and Cecil have lost their husbands within the year. Lib plans to visit her son in Toronto in August and will see Bonnie Wood Stookey at Cotuit, MA, in August.

Becky Strade Lee sadly reports the death of her husband after a long illness. They were in a retirement home where Becky will stay on. Her children are scattered but not too far.

Dottie Turno Gardner had a nice visit with Lou Dreyer Bradley as she and her husband Jack were driving up the West Coast to see their daughter. Then on the East Coast they talked to Betty Suttle Briscoe at Hilton Head. We do get around.

Volunteering as a gallery instructor and school volunteer for the Boston Museum of Fine Arts occupies Bonnie Wood Stookey as she awaits the completion of her new house at Cotuit, designed by her architect son. She says she sees Mary Moore Rowe once in awhile, and Lib Scheuer Maxwell will visit her in July.

Katherine Hanna is retiring this year as director of the Taft Museum in Cincinnati. She left for a brief vacation in the Carolinas in August but will serve in her post until a successor is found. Coming to the museum as curator, she became director in 1952 when the Taft was separated from the Cincinnati Art Museum, of which she also for a time served as acting director. During her tenure at the Taft, she initiated the restoration of the gardens, the in-school program for children, and the chamber-music series, in addition to mounting noteworthy exhibitions — including the award-winning "Best of Fifty," a display of choice works lent by the nation's top museums in honor of the Taft's 50th anniversary in 1977.

Betty Clapp Robinson, Kansas City, is president of the Kenmore Association, the second oldest preservation group in the country.

So we come to the end of your reports, all of which I enjoyed and hope will double before next year.

We are to celebrate our 45th Reunion in May. Check your calendars, and each of you plan to drive, fly, bus, or train to Sweet Briar College May 20-22.

News from and for the Class of 1938:

Mary Brown-Serman Walke celebrated her 65th at her summer home in Raquette Lake, NY, with son Stephen, his Judy and grandchildren Peter (1) and Elizabeth (3) plus daughter Marion and her Al and sons Jeff and Andy (12 and 10). Other daughter Muffy is a widow and working at Kinston, NC, as a social worker. Muffy has two sons, Tacker (20) at UNC and Steamer (18), a senior at E.H.S. Mary and Betty Barnes Bird '39 went to see Mary Jeff Welles Pearson '39 and John in their new house in Lexington last spring.

Eylese Miller Latham tripped to the Greek Islands and Greece in August after an earlier summer outing at Sandbridge Beach with their son and wife and daughter and husband and three grandsons, 7, 10, and 12.

Becky Kunkle Hogue and Fred celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary June 20 in the mountains at Murphy, NC, with 13 of their clan present for five days — four generations, as Becky's mother joined them.

Pollyanna Shotwell Holloway and Bob are great-grandparents! Is anyone else? They are really on the go! They were in Alaska flying up a glacier in a small plane to view Mt. McKinley, then headed to Bermuda to get thawed out, and will be in San Francisco in November. She saw Amelia Hewlett Bowers for a good visit.

Brownie (Marion Brown Snider) says you all come for reunion! She is president of the Florida State Ass'n of the National League of American Pen Women. There are 22 branches of NLAPW in Florida that Brownie visits. One day her Datsun broke down on an interstate and she was towed to Yeehaw Junction to wait 48 hours for repairs! (The Travels of an American Pen Woman will soon be off the press.) Brownie joined the SBC Mediterranean Cruise on August 2.

Billy Helzer Hickenlooper had an SBC meeting in Cincinnati in the spring. She says Betty Dail Windeler and she meet frequently. Billy and husband Bo flunked retirement, as they began their own business three years ago. They manufacture a permanent pothole filler, and at 65 Billy is a factory worker shoveling gravel and loving it. Billy and Bo have ten grandchildren.

Carolyn Staman Ogilvie has seven Texas grandchildren as her two sons are in Houston and her daughter, in San Antonio. Where do they all vacation? Why Maui, of course! How marvelous for all to share the Hawaiian sunshine and surf and daily mist.

Kay Hoyt did retire from Bryn Mawr School — and reactivated six weeks later at College of Notre Dame in Baltimore at the Adult Division. She dreams of living in Maine. You are close enough to hop to SBC on May 20-22, 1983, Kay. Plan now, everyone, for our 45th!

Pauline Womack Swan and husband George write from beautiful Lake Higgins in Northern Michigan. (They winter at Lost Tree Village in North Palm Beach, FL.) Their four children and seven grandchildren are all in Michigan, and they all celebrated Pauline and George's 45th wedding anniversary in August.

Lucy Taliaferro Nickerson writes that M. J. Miller Hein is shuttling between Hilton Head, Maui and New Jersey (where her children live) since her husband's death. They keep up with Macky Fuller Kellogg and Moulton who are busy with children and grandchildren. Lucy T. and Charley have been a-traveling to Amsterdam, London, and Paris. She says Lew Griffith Longstaff is with a government agency in Baltimore.

Jessie Silvers Bennett and Ed began his retirement with a private jet trip to South America, South Africa, Cairo and London and home via Iceland and Labrador — a once in a lifetime experience. In the month of September they stayed in an apartment in Spain. They will travel to visit children after their happy relaxation.

Babbie Derr Chenoweth and Arthur were in Maggie Valley, NC, for summer cool and golf. August took them to Alaska for two weeks, and in the spring they'll be in the British Isles.

Genevieve Marsh Fisher and Yule have had a fascinating August on a three-week Elder Hostel program at two universities in England and in Wales. Topics of study are English seaside resorts, Celtic culture, and English country homes! What pleasure! Their older son is a pharmacist, their daughter is working on the Ph.D. in archaeology at the U. of London, and their younger son just received his Master's from Harvard Business School and is with Price Waterhouse in Boston.

Dot Selbert Smith and George love their retired life and are busy with golf, swimming, bridge and visits from teenage granddaughters to their house and garden in Venice, FL. They have been on cruises through the Panama Canal and Alaska, and on the Danube River.

Frannie Bailey Brooke and George departed Lexington for the British Isles in August — spending time in Ireland, Scotland and Wales. They are plotting to join the SBC trip to Russia later. Love Frannie because she asked for news of the reunion in May '83! Write down May 20-22! The Brookes' three grandsons teach their grandparents new games — we all need to keep up.

Molly Talcott Dodson is striving to "outdo" us all — she's going to gain her Master's from Hollins in June '83. She says her children can put on her tombstone "Sweet Briar 1938, Hollins 1983. She was a slow learner." Their fifth grandchild was due in October. They love one-floor honeymoon cottage living.

Dolly Nicholson Tate had a superior 65th birthday gift from the Charlotte SBC Alumnae Club. They gave her a big surprise party and made gifts to the SBC Alumnae Fund in her honor — a marvelous sign of love for Dolly and for SBC.

Mary Ann Housel Carr wrote from her summertime house on Cape Cod. She sees Fran Samuels Fellows and Carl. I also heard from Fergie (Barbara Ferguson Hill) who sees them and Janet MacFarlan Bergmann. All are within 15 miles of each other for tennis, golf, and beach. We are sad to learn that Fergie's older son, Jake, died suddenly of a heart attack at age 40. Fergie was busy entertaining his three children from Texas.

Josephine Happ Willingham went with Cecil Birdsey Fueselle '34 on a "Friends of Canterbury Cathedral in America" tour called "In the Footsteps of Becket" — a lecture tour that sounded exciting. Jo, Rose Hyde Fales, Carolyn Potter Ryburn and Frank, and Blair and I met for a pre-dinner drink in London last September. 'Twas fun to have a reunion so far from the U.S.A. Pictures will be visible on May 20-22 at SBC. Start saving the best of your photographs for our tell-all scrapbook. Letter of directions will be mailed.

Ida Todman Pierce writes that Jane Kent Titus and Rex have a new summer home just outside of Richmond. Jane, Gene Brock Hawley, Jo Sutton McCandlish and I met for a noisy lunch in June. Ida and husband Stewart luxury-tripped on an African safari in September.

Gene Brock Hawley wrote of the Richmond S.B.C. luncheon. She is still working for a doctor and is associated with the Medical Affairs Dept. of Charter Medical Corp. On top of all that, she enjoys family and swimming, vegetable gardening, bridge, tennis and grandson Brock,

Gertrude Alexanderson "Alex" Young and her retired husband have been enjoying the world — Egypt, Greece, Spain, Portugal, Morocco, France, Florida, and last summer a total tour of our U.S.A.! They head for a Northern Cape Cruise in May. She saw Ida Todman Pierce and Gene Brock Hawley in Richmond.

Marti Mooney McGrath is now living at 11 Elmwood in Chiswick, London. I may see her there.

Louisa Grace Prince is in San Francisco. Her son Prairie Prince is a drummer with the rock band, "The Tubes," and brought his mother an SBC sweat shirt after his visit to campus.

Margaret Weimer Shephard's Tony was running for State Senate. We hope he made it and is now a West Virginia Senator.

Marge Thaden Davis has daughter Linda in Boston who in January 1982 presented Marge with a grandson, Mark Davis Nexon. A second daughter, Ann Wheeler, is V.P. of the Texas Commerce Bank in Houston, and her oldest daughter, Suzanne, is in charge of the world-wide news desk for Time!

Dee Armfield Cannon and doctor husband are delighting in golf and relaxing in Asheboro, NC.

Carolyn Poffier Ryburn, her Frank, my Blair, and I returned to the excitement of London and England the first two weeks of September. Then we flew to Pisa for a brief stay in Florence and Venice. A treasure of memories! Come see us in Dallas!

Plan to gather on May 20-22!

Sudie Clark Hanger, Jan Darby Cranfield, Eloise English Davies, Betsy Gilmer Tremain, Nancy Goldbarth Glaser, Betty Hanger Lippincott, Ann Hauslein Potterfield, Shirley Hauseman Nordhem, Ruth Hansley Camblos, Dot Malone Yates, Rene Mitchell Moore, GeGe Moomaw Hall, Ann Morrison Reams, Patty Peyton Turner, Gloria Sanderson Sartor, and Douggie Woods Sprunt. Those present without husbands or May Court credentials who rounded out our attractive group were Laura Graves Howell, Di Greene Helfrich, Susan Greer Hendrick, Jean Hedley Currie, Alice King Harrison, Frannie Meek Rowe, Stony Moore Rutherford, Helen Sanford, Si Walke Rogers, Daphne Withington Adams, and Vive Walker Montgomery.

Bouquets first of all to Helen Sanford, our inspiring fund agent, who raised 42 (thousand dollars) for '42. We are not only beautiful, but generous. And then to Margaret Preston Moore, GeGe Moomaw Hall, Stony Moore Rutherford, and Ann Morrison Reams, who planned, worked, and made it such fun for us all. Dorothy Malone Yates' husband Charlie delighted us with slides of past reunions and took lots more for the 45th. Vive Walker Montgomery and Susan Greer Hendrick looked exactly as they did when they left us 42 years ago. We all pored over the scrapbook pictures and data, and here are some of the facts we learned.

An overwhelming number of us reported happy marriages, wonderful children and grandchildren, and some told of other fascinating jobs and accomplishments. Cynthia Abbott Dougherty says she's a "working grandmother — working on getting her 17-year-old into college and keeping the 15-year-old in school." Visits to her 91-year-old mother, commutes to Long Island on the weekends, and keeping husband Dick on lean cuisine meals are also part of her work.

In a more serious vein, Florence Bagley Witt described two brilliant daughters, one a girls' prep school teacher and one a part-time writer for the Congressional Quarterly, married to an associate editor of U.S. News and World Report, and mother of three, plus a married son in Palo Alto, CA, on a Stanford fellowship. Flossie herself is a full-time volunteer.

Mary Alice Bennett Baumburger lives in Geneva, Switzerland, grows orchids, has three married children and six grandchildren.

One of Grace Bugg Muller-Thym's achievements is "keeping a 1740 house in Darlington, MD, in running condition, plus serving dinner for eight at 8:00 with no help."

Eugenia Burnett Affel's granddaughter has the distinction of having had two of her great-grandmothers graduate from SBC — in 1910 and 1926.

"Army" Case Wendelken says one of the good things about SBC was the fact that she met both of her wonderful husbands, now both deceased, because of it.

Betsy Chamberlain, mother of three, writes from Greenbrae, CA, that she hopes to retire next year from the U.S. Dept. of HUD. She has taken back her maiden name.

Nancy Davis Reynolds reports a good life in Asheville, NC, with four grandchildren and one due at reunion time.

Eloise English Davies has managed a husband, four children, and two grandchildren while holding the responsible position of appellate trial attorney for the U.S. Dept. of Justice. Eloise's son Ron is an assistant professor of theatre arts at SBC this year.

Another outstanding girl (I'm prejudiced!) who has successfully combined family and job is Betty Hanger Lippincott. She serves as chairman of the board of Delbar Products and chairman of every volunteer group in Chestnut Hill while having four children, a husband, and one grandchild.

Betsy Gilmer Tremain and Mike still live in Charlottesville, but their three daughters and seven grandchildren live in Atlanta, Texas, and Portsmouth. So they travel, play tennis, and stay young.

Di Greene Helfrich is another who is full of vim, vigor, and vitality at age 60. She's a ham operator, book seller, maker of doll house furniture and mother of three engineers and a real estate entrepreneur.

Ann Hauslein Potterfield wins the prize for the most children (eight) while growing younger all the while.

Ruth Jacquot Tempest ("Rut") started a new career after 50 as editor and publications coordinator at the U. of W. Florida after many years of successful fiction writing, raising a family, and living in 25 different homes in 37 years all over the world.

Alice King Harrison reported a fifth grandchild.

Frannie Meek became Mrs. John Edward Rowe in Jan. '82. She does portrait painting in Ft. Lauderdale, FL, where she is active in the arts and civic life.

Dot Myers Morehead sent a picture of herself looking gorgeous and husband "Moose" at daughter Ann's recent wedding.

"Rene" Mitchell Moore has done an outstanding job of selling SBC bulbs in Greensboro, NC.

Carolyn Monteith Clarke is looking forward with enthusiasm to her new volunteer job as president of the board of trustees of the Institute of Religion in the Texas Medical Center in Houston.

Ann Morrison Reams reports that "her cup runneth over." Her four children are all married and living in Lynchburg where she and Bernie can enjoy them as well as delight in their 7½ grandchildren. She also continues to enjoy her job as Director of the Alumnae Association where every day is different and interesting. It also gives her the opportunity of staying in touch with old friends and making many new ones.

Marion Mundy Young's daughter was a magna cum laude, Phi Beta Kappa, Tau Phi, Who's Who graduate of SBC in '82. She also has a '78 Hollins graduate and a son at Tulane. Flu at the last minute kept her from reunion.

Polly Peyton Turner's husband Carol "thinks SBC reunions are more fun than homecoming at Annapolis" and we all think he's one of the reasons they're so fun. Of their three daughters, one is a doctor and one is an attorney. They have three grandchildren.

Janet Quinn Eichacker writes that she is taking care of a 90-year-old mother, a 16-year-old cat, and a very active doctor husband in Setauket, NY.

Margaret Preston Moore (our able past-president) reports three daughters and three grandchildren.

Eleanor Ringer Linn received an M.A. from UNC and did further work at Cornell and UVA. She now lives in Manhasset, NY, where she works with a child guidance center and manages a re-sale shop. Her son was to be married in the summer.

Barbara Ripley Furniss is a career development specialist in Washington, DC, and also has a valuable ministry in bereavement counseling. One of her claims to fame was a solo train trip through Europe in 1977.

Marion Robbins Alexander writes of a happy life in Houston. She and her retired husband have recently moved into a highrise near the golf course. They have one daughter who is a speech pathologist, another who is a V.P. at Sakowitz firm, and a banker son.

Diana Stout Allen is another happy housewife and grandmother, in Memphis, TN. Ditto for Phyllis Sherman Barnes in Chappaqua, NY; Alice Sweney "Swede" Weed in St. Paul, MN; and Eddie Syska Peltier in Naples, FL.

We were deeply saddened to learn of the death of P. Goff Beach, husband of Mary Ellen Thompson Beach, which occurred in August, 1982. Mary Ellen lives in Madison, WI.

Margie Troutman Harbin, Rome, GA, has a record five doctor sons.

Jane Taylor Lowell and husband Bob spend the winter in Cape Coral, FL, since his retirement and the rest of the year in Indiana.

Sally "Si" Walke Rogers has had a fulfilling life as resident director of a home for adolescent girls in Marshall, MO, while raising her own three children. And along that line, Toppin

Sweet Briar College

Having just returned from our 40th Reunion, I can report there's good news and lots of it for the Class of '42. All May Court beauties who were there, i.e., Ruthie Hensley Camblos, Cynthia Abbott Dougherty, Grace Bugg Muller-Thym, Eugie Burnett Afel, Lucy Call Dabney, Eloise English Davies, Betsy Gilmer Tremain, Dorothy Malone Yates, Margaret Preston Moore, Gloria Sanderson Sartor, and Sally Schall Van Allen, are not only still beautiful but more so. Even the rest of us seemed to have improved with age. Many of us were showing off our darling husbands, i.e., Cynthia Abbott Dougherty, Lucy Call Dabney,

Wheat Crowell became a registered nurse and worked two years toward a M.A. in music while she and her husband raised two girls.

Alice Williams Mighell has three girls, six grandchildren, a summer home at Grandfather Mountain in North Carolina — and was on a trip to England during reunion.

Jeanne Sawyer Stanwood announces a granddaughter, a son who teaches at Choate-Rosemary Hall, and a daughter who is a senior financial analyst, "a talent she never got from me," says Jeanne, who is still "scribbling" and hoping for publication. She and husband Chris divide the year between winter on the Cape and summer on an island in Maine.

Daphne Withington Adams was director of activities for a non-profit home for the elderly for 11 years. She has now retired and just returned from a trip to Holland.

Debbie Wood Davis' daughter (one of five) was married the weekend of Reunion.

Others reporting their greatest achievement as "loving family" "lovely children" were Laura Graves Howell, Shirley Houseman Nordhem, Jean Hedley Currie, and Pattie Rose Early Trippet. Margaret Leonard Baker found hers to be "surviving widowhood and a new happy life as Mrs. Proctor."

For a grand finale we have an article on past Jr. League presidents of Washington, DC, in which one Douglas Woods Sprunt is acclaimed for her role as originator and chairman of the City of Washington literary project — a book now in its 4th printing — plus her part in finding a new home for the Jr. League headquarters, plus her work with the National Trust, plus her presidency of the Homemakers Service of the Board of United Givers Fund, etc., etc. "She has indeed been tireless in her commitment to help others," it said. I think that could be said for just about all the grand ole Class of '42!

Many Thank-you's for your responses to my postcard plea for help! Without your assistance, these notes would have been more than brief.

Louisa Lloyd has just retired from Alumnae Magazine hospital nursing in the Labor and Delivery Department of Fairfax Hospital and 15 years as Head Nurse on the 12 p.m. to 8 a.m. shift. She wished to become more involved in the work of the Church of the Apostles and to help "hungry, hurting people." She is currently sharing with another woman the care of a woman paralyzed from the neck down since having had polio 28 years ago.

Martha Titterington Leonard is busy preparing for the wedding of daughter Carter (who was at SBC for our reunion in '81) to Allen Beaky on Sept. 25. He and Carter are in the interesting position of working for competing newspapers in Washington, DC.

Suzanne Criswell Bornschein took her youngest daughter, Samantha, on a tour of Williamsburg, SBC, W. and M. and UVa this past spring. On the return trip to Michigan, they spent the night with Ray and Helen Graeff Ellerman, and Ray served his own baked sausage in brioche for breakfast.

Louise Crawford Moorefield is president of the board of the S.C. Episcopal Retirement Center and says that she is totally committed to its success. Their son Chuck is a resident in orthopedics, daughter Jessie is a resident in internal medicine, and son Crawford is a junior at Princeton. Lou also reports one grandchild, Charles Henry Moorefield, IV, born a year ago.

Dorothy Corcoran Hartzler traveled to England in April on the Q.E.II, just before it was transferred for Falkland Islands duty. All went well with Joe during the absence, so she had an especially good trip. Tody reports that son Jeff has moved to Tacoma and that Jonathan is a senior at UVa.

I learned from Ellen Thackeray Wilson that Betty Ann Bass Norris, by for a weekend visit, and Mary Lou Holton Eftler are going to Russia in December on the SBC trip. From Bass herself, I learned that she is just completing her 21st year in real estate in Greenwich. Since her husband's death in 1976 she has been living with two sons, two dogs, and three cats. (Bass often sees Patricia Arms Brown, who lives in Rye, NY, only 10 minutes away.) I agree with the sentiment expressed in her card that 1946 is a unique class and that being the war class probably made us even closer to one another.

The youngest daughter of Frank and Charlotte Dinsmoor Olin has just begun TCU's M.B.A. program after graduating from Vanderbilt. Charlotte says her own museum library post was a budget casualty and that she has now joined the staff at the TCU Library. Frank is recovering from a bad auto accident. His convalescence continues, and he will have no permanent disabilities.

Her school for 160 2-8 year olds has just opened for another year, so

Beatrice Dingwell Loos is very busy. She and her husband have just delivered their sixth and youngest child to Dartmouth to begin her college career. Bea says she can't believe that after 31 years, there will be no children at home.

Jennie Keeling Mansfield writes from Knoxville that their fair is fantastic, that she feels like an innkeeper and loves it, and that she wishes we all would come. She also reports that she lunched with Betty Bass Norris and Carter Vandeventer Slattery this past year. She also sees Betsy Bowman Townsend and Marilyn Mandie Dick frequently. Her daughter Keeling is a U. of Tenn. honors graduate in fashion merchandising; daughter Laura and son Randy are current U.T. students.

On the subject of the Knoxville fair, Carolyn Rudolph Sellers says that she and Phillip, together with their daughter, son-in-law, and grandchildren from Richmond, went and enjoyed it thoroughly.

Word from Helen Murchison Lane brings the sad news of her mother's death on July 7. We send our love and sympathy to her at this especially painful time. Her good news was that daughter Anna was expecting twins in September. Husband Ed and Helen's father were planning to accompany her to Charlottesville for the event. Her daughter Palmer Lane Middendorf '73 will receive her Master's in architecture in May. Son Edward is an attorney, and Charles is with the Atlantic Bank in Jacksonville.

Hallie Tom Nixon Powell says she feels she has just been to school all over again. She has returned from a 10-day trip to N.Y.C and D.C. with her 13-year-old granddaughter and 11-year-old grandson; they visited everything from the United Nations and the Rockettes to Mount Vernon with many museums in between.

Betsy Gurley Hewson reports that she and Tom have been boating quite a bit this summer (which comes as no great surprise to us!). They expected to see Grif and Anne Hill Edwards at the U.S. Open around Labor Day. They have also just opened a new shop at Scott's Corner, NY, which is "sort of like a tree house." Anyone passing through should be able to spot it.

Jane Pickens Church together with her mother, former husband, son, and niece spent varying periods of time last winter in Sri Lanka (Ceylon), Malaysia. She and her mother were abroad for more than four months looking at animals and birds in national parks. Jane says that Arizona, where she lives, is one of the best places for seeing a wide variety of birds and that everyone she knows who is interested in birds turns up there sooner or later. She also reports that Susie Landis Newland '44 and her husband visited Jane's mother while on a three-month tour of the country with car, motor home, and two dogs.

Sarah McDuffie Hardaway went on the SBC-RMWC tour of France in September and Meredith Slane Finch also went. From reading the description in the brochure, I judge that it was an exceptional trip. Sarah and Wistar Watts King are also visiting Winterthur and Philadelphia as part of a tour arranged by the Columbus, GA, Museum. Sarah currently chairs the Acquisitions Committee at the museum, while Wistar's daughter Ann is Director of Education.

Another classmate who recently went birdwatching in Maine and Nova Scotia is Ellen Robbins Red. Her interests include ecology and conservation, a grandson (age 2), and a husband, who has retired from teaching to start his own business.

Candy Greene Manbeck reports that living in New York is great. She has recently seen Anne Owens Mueller, Bob and Polly Vandeventer Saunders, and Dave and Rosie Ashby Dashiell. She was planning to visit Rosie at Virginia Beach in September. Candy's son is a third-year student at Columbia Law, and her daughter Caroline had a son two years ago, so Candy is enjoying being a grandmother.

Helen Graeff Ellerman's summer musical schedule is intimidating. It includes playing at the Virginia Annual Conference of the United Methodist Church, music camp for 40 students in grades 3-11, national convention of the American Guild of Organists in D.C., a week at Westminster Choir College in Princeton, and choir school at her church. Her career in church music dates back 33 years at this point. Ray is manager of a music store and directs music at the Presbyterian Church. They will give a harpsichord and organ program in Petersburg, VA, this fall.

Jim and Ariana Jones Wittke spent last year's vacation at the Princeton Geology Field Camp in Montana at alumni college. The subject was the geology, plants, and animal life of the Beartooth Mountains. They will vacation this year in Scotland.

Vange and I had a lovely day here with a visit from Lucy Charles Jones Bendall, her husband, her sister and brother-in-law (Susan and Jim Teller), and their daughter Katie. Cholly and I didn't get in quite as much SB talk as we would have liked, but it was marvelous to see them. They were on their way to New York for their son's marriage to Wendy Tasch of that city.

Bami Rollins Napier lost her husband last November. She says that the adjustment takes even longer than when their son died many years ago. Her older daughter, Julie, lives with her, and her younger daughter has gone to Chattanooga, where, as Bami puts it, "She is, of all things, a cocktail waitress in a discotheque."

Jack and Jean Love Albert are now living at the farm permanently, since he retired in Oct. '81. Their son Jim married Kim Martin Thanksgiving weekend of '81, and their son John has made a miraculous recovery from a car accident. Jean and her daughter Barbara are about to embark on a tour to visit Jim and Kim in Dallas, son Michael in Denver, son John in Oregon and daughters Cecelia and Patricia in L.A. Then Jean "hopes to settle down for the winter."

Margo Sibly Lewis and her husband are retired and have discovered that cruising is a delightful means of seeing the world — and have been doing just that. Their son is an orthopedic surgeon, and their daughter has just received her M.B.A. from Harvard and is director of corporate planning for DSI in Houston.

Julia Bristow "retired" after 30 years with the Federal Government. She was editor and principal writer for Liteline, the Navy and Air Force safety and occupational health magazine. She is now a full-time painter in water colors, doing commissioned works and getting ready for a one-person show. She is also attending classes at Old Dominion.

Katherine Brooks Augustine reports five children and three (four by the time you read this) grandchildren. Tassie is busy with the Episcopal Church, the Thrift Shop, and the Colonial Dames. "All five children have good jobs and are good citizens."

The very sad news is that we have lost a classmate. Alice Eubank Burke died early this past year after a long illness. She will be long remembered for her charm and gaiety and gentleness. We extend our love and sympathy to her family.

Marilyn Hannah Crocker's card announced the addition of two prospective SBC students, both of whom have already paid their registration fees. They are Carey Crocker Wodehouse, born Feb. 1, 1981, to Chuck and Camilla Crocker Wodehouse '71, and Lindsay Hannah Bedzendahl, born June 17, 1982, to Richard and Constance Crocker Bedzendahl '75. Carey will be in the Class of 2002 and Lindsay will be in the Class of 2003. Congratulations to all of you!

As for me, after 20 years at Educational Testing Service in Princeton, where I have been director of the Center for Occupational and Professional Assessment, I am looking for a management position in the private sector if I can find one! Our son Jacques is teaching French at NYU and Fordham; his wife Shelley is in film production, currently working on a new Sidney Lumet production, Daniel. Our daughter Carey graduated from Princeton in '76 and is now the candy buyer for Bloomingdale. (I am gaining weight!)

Please keep the news coming next year. I'd like to get "better and better."

Elisabeth Elmore Gilleland (Mrs. Guy W.), 1098 McKean Circle, Winter Park, FL 32789

I'll begin with the A's which means those of you in Alabama. I have my own "Deep Throat" in Birmingham. News is that Tink Springs Shannon is moving from house to house, decorating each gorgeously as she passes through for a nice bit of business profit. The same source vouches for Ellen Wilkerson Given as a prominent and efficient club woman. Friends of Art experience helped us all. Evie Woods Cox sent her new address in Birmingham. She and Pete hope to travel more than the business trips to NYC visiting the distributors of Pete's statuary. Their eldest son, Robby, finished graduate study at the Fine Arts Academy in Philadelphia and now works in that city. Son Charley and wife are parents of Evie's 2-yr.-old granddaughter. Daughter Lyn graduated last year from nursing school at Samford U. (named for the father of Ann Samford Upchurch '48), went to Europe to celebrate, tell in love with a Scot who is now the new son-in-law in business with Pete. Son Dorsey (23) is studying design engineering at Auburn.

Betty (Hot) Hutchens McCaleb, and Pud, in Huntsville, now have a year-old grandson, John William, IV. Nothing else printable, says Hot.

In Knoxville, TN, Marilyn Ackerson Barker expects lots of visitors this year to the World's Fair. Last September, she and Hank visited Ireland. Marilyn is head of a local branch library. The work, she loves, but not the annual budget struggle. In May, Kane McKinney Barker joined sister Elisabeth (3) to be grandchild #2.

Susan Tucker Yankee is still in Tennessee but now sees the world from her newly-built home on top of Signal Mt. after seven years as a Memphis flatlander. Her two grandchildren, Matthew (1) and Marcia (4), are in Corpus Christi, TX, with son Mike and wife Marilyn. Daughter Ellen, a psychiatric social worker, lives nearby. Susan and Dick have high praise for the first Alumni College at W & L they attended this spring.

Nell Lee Greening Keen returned to Tampa, FL, sells real estate, and serves as president of the Jr. League sustainers. Son Hampton (16) attends EHS. Son John (22) and daughter Elinor (20) are at UVA.

Achsah Easter Henderson writes from Charlottesville that hers is not the first grandchild in the class but may be one living farthest from home — young James Carrier, a year old in June, living with his mother Achsah Henderson Carrier and father Jim at the University of Papua, New Guinea (Port Moresby). Achsah says she travels vicariously through her family. The baby has been around the world twice, and son Edmund is taking a break from work at UVA to travel to New Zealand this fall.

It would seem that all the UVA parents could get together. Mary Walker Berkeley Fergusson, in Richmond, VA, has just the place and will choose the mocha shortbread dessert when she returns to check on her remaining son at UVA. Waller met Jane Munnerlyn Carter and Margaret Munnerlyn Haverty '47 at The Gallerie on Rt. 250 West of C'ville last spring when Jane came from Atlanta for Garden Week and to see her daughter Janie, a junior transfer from SBC to UVA. Waller says Jane has at least three grandchildren and looks great. For her part, Waller has several housekeeping fits a week, but otherwise is fine. She poked Terry Holland with her umbrella at the UVA graduation of her son Berkeley in May. Could this Terry be any relation to you, Marianne Delacarte Holland?

Debby Freeman Cooper journeyed from Wallingford, PA, to Winter Park, FL, to see their youngest son graduate from Rollins. While Newbie golfed, Debby visited B.G. Elmore Gilleland in her "lovely house on a canal" to discuss 32 years' worth of news in one hour. Debby was in Atlanta in February to help daughter Sally and husband John Atwell following the birth of the first grandchild, Rebecca Wills Atwell.

B.G. and Guy are back from a 6-week tour which began with daughter Lynn's graduation from Harvard. With Lynn, they checked into Greece, Italy and the British Isles. B.G. just missed Nancy Storey White who was taking a three-week seminar at Oxford. This trip cooled B.G.'s inclinations for a travel business. Leasing a car in Britain saved the day in the face of British train strikes, but there were bank, airline, and ferry strikes in Greece and airline employees' strikes in Rome. B.G. will go up to Durham, NC, to help her daughter settle into an apartment to begin Duke Law School.

Veda Brooks Norfolk's daughter

Nancy, who is a freshman at Brown U. and expects to play on the women's tennis team there, competes at the state, regional, and national level in tennis. Daughters Lynn, a travel agent, and Claire, in sales/catering for the Hilton Hotel, are both in Baton Rouge. Son Billy is a tennis pro at a sports club in Waco, TX.

Now for the Texans. Kata Edwards Crain and her husband are planning a trip to Europe in October "while he can still get on and off tourist buses." Their daughter is a senior at U. of Tex-Austin; their son is at South Texas Col. of Law-Houston.

Seasoned traveler and linguist Helen Missires Lorenz, Dallas, will be off to Egypt, her husband's birthplace, if the world is still in one piece at Christmas. Their son Charles went on the Grand Tour of Europe's Hostels following his graduation from U. of Tex.-Austin with a major in finance-management. Son Bill remains at U. of Tex. majoring in aerospace engineering. Helen spied Margaret Lewis Furse in Austin and Fan Lewis Jackson in Corpus Christi. Small world department: Helen will have the daughter of Lucy Regester Goode '51 working with her at Hockaday School.

Mary Dame Stubbs Broad, Hampton, VA, had a wedding in April. Their daughter Susan, a teacher in Va. Beach, married James Coper, an apprentice pilot (VA Pilot Ass'n). Son Doug may go to graduate school if the job market for architect grads fails to improve. Mary Dame and Doug went skiing at Lake Tahoe in February and visited San Francisco for the first time.

Edith Brooke Robertson did indeed go to Bethesda, MD, from Norfolk for Dolly Clark Rasmussen's daughter Cindy's wedding. Kay Lang Gibson and Gib missed that boat in order to meet the plane carrying home their daughter Kit '83 from her Jr. Year in France. Dolly's son John and a "beautiful soprano" sang the "Hawaiian Wedding Song" from the church balcony. Quickly Edith, in Colorado hiking boots, and Peyton, sporting kilts, sped to the Scottish games in Grandfather Mt., NC. While clinging to rocks and grabbing for the scaling ladders, Edith shrieked, "If only Lola could see me now!" Those boots will meet another test if Edith visits her son Brooke in the Peace Corps in Nepal.

Dolly calls it a marvelous year. She and John cruised on the Argonaut in March, stopping in Egypt and Jordan, and saw their son John graduate from USNA in May. Son David (22) attends U. of Md.

David Carey, son of Lucy Kreusler Carey, Lutherville, MD, will enter the same U. of Md. this fall as a freshman. Lucy's job is even more taxing after the so-called "fewer regulations" out of Washington. More regulations come forth. Each is more cumbersome than the last. Lucy uses any spare time helping the many newly arriving Polish refugees.

Stokie Kyle Kimpel, D.C., may not have taken up flying after all. If you recall, she said her husband preferred sailing. They now own a houseboat and cruise contently along the Potomac. Stokie works at a Silver Spring, MD, newspaper and printing company. Their two sons are AF pilots. Gordon flies the F-15 in New Mexico; Tom trains NATO pilots on the T-35 in Texas.

Next for New Jersey, to find in Verona that excellent typist (21 lines to a postcard) Sally Bianchi Foster. The children are "all delightfully normal, attractive, bright and a little "kooky" like me" and have left the nest. Sally and Bob plan to retire from their full-time jobs in four years — she to travel more and he to sit more. Eldest daughter Meg toured China and returned to her job at the French Embassy in NYC and a fashionable Upper West Side address. #2 daughter Kate is ass't planner, San Luis Obispo County, CA. Son Andy is a para-legal at Covington & Burling in D.C. and is wondering what to do next. Sally is quite happy in this new easier lifestyle and volunteers at the library, writes lots of letters to the kids, house-keeps and plays tennis.

Ann Peyton Cooper is found living in Summit, NJ. I last heard of Ann 30 years ago when she took that low-paying job with the Washington Post I had snubbed — to my grief. My job at NBC paid even less. Ann reached great heights, I can tell. She says living with two teenagers — Jim (16 and 6 ft.) and Nancy (13) — is a joy. The family climbed the Grand Tetons two summers ago and hope to make a walking tour of England next summer. Husband Jim is happily retired from the "crunch" of Wall Street. Ann works three days a week as an editor of their local newspaper.

Dottie Barney Hoover works part time in Darien, CT, for a gourmet kitchen shop and does work for a local needlepoint shop, but August will find her on vacation on Cape Cod. She was quite happily surprised to see Kitchie Roseberry Ewald '52 visiting her beach club in July — which leads me to you two — Garland Hunter Davies in Atlanta and Anne McNear Blanken in Chatham, NJ. Surprise Mary Dame and tell her what has become of you.

That barn in Weston, VT, belonging to Bill Bailey Fritzing is filling — 4 sheep, 2 cats, 4 kittens and a puppy. Bill cultivates a big garden and with Fritz runs a small business — an educational (leisure learning) tour of Vermont Life this fall.

Out of the woods came Frindy Burden Gronen. Frindy moved to an apartment in Dubuque, IA, proper from her country cabin amid the wild birds and animals she loves. Being snowbound most of last winter helped in her decision to be in town and near friends and activities.

Other mover, San Veach Brooks, moved to New Haven, CT, from Cambridge, MA.

As for me, we went back-packing in Yosemite and Sequoias in June looking for Pete McCloskey. Turned out he was in Beirut. And I like Town Like Alice better than Noble House which went on and on and on. And I jog with a cassette of "Chariots of Fire."

There you are, dear ones. Get together and watch thirty years of lines and wrinkles vanish.

Our condolences to Liz Helm Lawson whose husband Jim died suddenly in March. Their oldest son is in the Navy; the three younger boys are still at home.

Our best wishes to Lib Wilson who is now Mrs. Ralph J. Brown and living in Newton Square, PA. We have some other moves: Joyce Miles Ruhe to Louisville, KY; Hattie Hughes Stone to Sparta, NJ; Betty Cushman Collins to Pound Ridge, NY; and Joyce Walmsley Wellford to Warsaw, VA. Anne Brooke is back in Norfolk after being in Wales, where she wrote books for children in Welsh to help keep the language alive. She lived with a Welsh family to perfect her accent.

Mary Anne Bowns Bell is back in Wilmington, DE. She and her brother are running the family lumber business, so she goes to New Brunswick, Canada, a lot. Mary Ann and her husband are also involved in the development of Tortola, British West Indies.

Kitty Wilcox Reiland is director of patient representatives at the Cape Cod Hospital and has served two terms as president of the Massachusetts Society of Patient Representatives. They hope to make "caring part of the cure."

Ruth Sanders Smith is working in husband Norman's office — as is their oldest son. The younger boys are in Fairleigh Dickinson and Hampden-Sydney.

Anne Sheffield Hale and Bradley stay so busy it's tiring. They are on all sorts of boards and community projects and involved in all phases of their church. They're excellent fund raisers. Both of their children are outstanding at the U. of Ga.

Speaking of active on boards, etc., I must mention Joy Parker Eldredge — working for the opera, blindness, restoration, etc. She and Charles did have time to go to Europe hoping to find a condominium in Switzerland. They sold their summer place in North Carolina. They plan a wonderful trip in the fall through the Suez Canal and around Africa. I hope they enjoy South Africa as much as we did. Bill and I were there in November for him to have a job interview. It's a gorgeous country with a wonderful, friendly people. They get awful press here, of course. If you want an exciting, beautiful trip, I heartily recommend it. We came within an inch of moving to South Africa and would be gone now except that Bill's company was purchased by local people and Bill got a very nice promotion to VP of International Markets — a job he's always wanted. He's just returned from a week each in England, France, and South Africa. I was with him in England and France. The nicest part was a stay at the summer villa in Royan of the parents of the French boy who stayed with us last summer.

Bev Bragg Smith and husband had a wonderful trip too — three weeks in Egypt. Cindy Sinclair Rutherford and Bill visited the Smiths en route to and from D.C. and Wichita. The Rutherfords decided to move back East, sold their house much quicker than expected, and now are in a townhouse. Joan Potter Bickel and Henry also visited the Smiths. Look for Henry in some national G.E. ads — he's the handsome one with the white beard! The Bickels had Thanksgiving in Pipestem Park, WV, with her sister and family. The Jean Gillespie Walker family visited with them there also. Jean and George have built a home at Sea Island, GA, to which we're all invited! Sea Island was the scene of a mini-reunion last summer at Dilly Johnson Jones and Paul's place.

Vaughan Inge Morrissette and Taylor, Ruthie Frye Deaton and Hugo, and Ann Collins Teachout and Bill came, and they had such a good time they decided to do it again in '82. I thought, "Good. Sea Island is only a few hours from here — I'll drive down and see them." Ha! The next reunion is at the Morrissettes' place in Mexico! Dilly also had lunch with Doreen Booth Hamilton and Peggy Jones Stewart in Washington. Peggy's sister Elizabeth, whom many of us know, is now the chief engraver for the U.S. Mint. She has just finished designing a new coin which will be out soon. Vaughan's son "Tay" was King of the Mobile Mardi Gras and several '54ers came for the party: Dilly and Paul, Page Anderson Hungerpillar and Jim, Anne White Connell, and Barbara Chase Webber and Temple. Anne sees Betty Orr Atkinson, Sissy Morris Long, and Peaches Davis Roane a lot in Memphis.

It was nice to hear from Ann Venable Rogers after a long time. She's a grandma now and still enjoys teaching at the Planetarium in Wichita Falls. Another Ann — Ann Thomas Donahue — and her husband have remodeled, inside and out, her childhood home. Joan Potter Bickel and Joy Parker Eldredge also live in the homes they grew up in. Jane Keating Taylor doesn't! Ardsheal House, the inn she and Bob have in Northern Scotland, had an excellent write-up in the New York Times by renowned food and travel reviewer, Craig Claiborne. He praised the manor house, the decor, and food, especially the soups. Have any of you been there yet?

Lynn Carlton McCaffree's husband Mike was on the first list by the Navy for promotion to the new rank of one-star commodore. Congratulations!

In September, on our way home from taking our youngest son, John, to start at Berklee College of Music in Boston, we plan to attend Louise Major's wedding. (She's Meri Hodges Major's daughter.) The reception will be at Meri's Belle Air Plantation.

I really appreciate the Christmas letters — especially those from people I don't hear from often during the year. I'm sorry most of our article is a year old. Be sure to put notes on your Fund flap. They're forwarded to me.

Happy — ugh — fiftieth birthday to you all!

By the time you read this column, I hope that each of you will be making plans to return to Sweet Briar for our fabulous 25th Reunion! Mark the date, May 20-22, 1983, on your calendars, go on that diet you've been postponing, and make your reservations because SBC is the place to be in May of 1983!

Betty Rae Sivals Davis has a daughter working in New York City and a son playing college football. She is serving on the Vestry at her church and is involved in a 2½-year Bible study course as well as taking French. The Davises still live in Midland, TX, and B. Rae says she "can't wait until May of '83."

Another Texan, Linda McGuire Last, is now a grandmother. The Lasts' oldest daughter Lisa had a son in June; Pam is also married. The twins are seniors in high school and in the National Honor Society. Husband Bob has been made president of his company, so all is well in Duncanville.

Winifred Winter Cocks stuffed a lot of news on one small card, post-marked San Antonio. Her children are son Reagan, a sophomore at the U. of Penn., son Bart, a freshman at Dartmouth, and daughter Martha, 13, at home. Windy is also active in her Episcopal church and is taking a 12 weeks' course called "Path of Life." Bart and Martha compete with Lynne Morris Barnett's two daughters in swim meets. Lynne and her husband run in marathons. Another friend in San Antonio is Camilla Mueller Parker; she has had extensive training in hospital visitation and works two days a week as a volunteer.

Winnie Leigh Hamlin and Davis live in Dallas. They have three sons; Jeff is entering the engineering school at U. Va.; John is a high school senior; and Frank is entering his freshman high school year. The live Hamlins took a delightful trip in June to England, France, Switzerland and Germany. Winnie says that Caroline Sauls Shaw gave her invaluable advice on restaurants, hotels and sight-seeing.

Jane Oxner Waring lives in Charleston, SC, where she is head of the Museum Board. She and her 16-year-old daughter DeDe took the SBC trip, "Grand Mediterranean Passage," in August. Jane visited SBC in the spring, which whetted her appetite to return in '83.

I received two notes from Columbia, SC. Betsy McCutcheon Williams' catering business is "booming" and she adds that things are "apoppin'" with so many of our children off to school this year." Mary Heyward, daughter of Flo Buchanan Heyward, is going to U. Va., and Eleanor Cain Pope's sons, Joe and William, are both at Wofford. Eleanor writes that she had a great trip to Israel and Egypt in Sept. '81.

Alice Eller Patterson has opened her own law office at 41B N. Trade St. in Winston-Salem. She says, "Being a sole practitioner is always exciting, sometimes frustrating but never dull!"

Susan Davis Briggs has three children, all tournament tennis players; so much of her free time is spent on the junior circuit. Adrienne, 18, is a freshman at Sewanee; Dow, 16, is a high school junior; and Daniel, 13, is an 8th grader. Susan's husband Dick is Professor of Medicine at the U. of Alabama-Birmingham. They both also play tennis — on the senior circuit. Susan ended with, "Hope to see you next year."

Marian Martin Mealing is once more in the U.S. Before returning, she taught learning disabled students in an American school on an RAF base near Cambridge, England. Her daughter Mary finished her A-level exams at a girls' school nearby and will enter either Oberlin or Duke in Feb. 1983. Marian has applied for an M.A. program at Georgia State U. so will be back in Atlanta for at least two years. She's hoping to make reunion.

Mariette Eggleston Burleigh is an office manager for a firm of trial lawyers in Memphis; she time-shares and recommends it highly because of the job flexibility. Her twins, Kathryn and Stephen, will graduate on either side of our reunion. Marietta attended her husband Bob's 25th reunion at Vanderbilt and saw Gertrude Sharp Caldwell and Bee Macey Graham '57, both from Nashville, and Norma Davis Dwen '56, Tunica, MS.

Judy Graham Lewis and Jim are moving to Ann Arbor, MI, where Jim will be rector of St. Andrews Episcopal Church, a large downtown parish. Their son Stephen is finishing four years in the Navy; daughter Beth is a junior at William Smith College. The twins are college freshmen, Kathy at Denison and Debby at Wooster. Judy continues her nursing career.

Shirley McCallum Davis assures me that English/Liberal Arts majors can get good jobs. She organizes and teaches short courses to Federal employees and foreign and U.S. scientists who wish to know about remote sensing. She hopes to develop educational materials in this field for general distribution. Shirley and Gene have two children, Todd, 13, and Becky, 10; they are involved in music and scouting, and Shirley is a Girl Scout leader. The Davises will go on sabbatical in 1984.

Adele Scott Caruthers returned to Tufts in the spring to take two additional courses in Occupational Therapy.

Julia McCullough Shivers attended a Faulkner conference at the U. of Mississippi in July as the guest of Lynn Crosby Gammill. Lynn is a leader in the state and is developing an arboretum in memory of her father, Julia wrote. Julia, living in Atlanta, has three children: young Julia graduated from Princeton in June and will work in N.Y.C. until she enters law school; Olin, a senior at Yale, spent the summer doing research at M.I.T. in the artificial intelligence laboratory; Mary, a freshman at Vanderbilt, will be a classmate of Priscilla Craven, daughter of Waldo Latham Craven, of Jacksonville, FL. Priscilla just graduated from Madeira School. Waldo and Julia spent a few days with Dotsie Woods McLeod in Nashville when they took their daughters to school.

Ethel Ogden Burwell packed a lot of news into one card. She has a part-time job as Admissions Coordinator for the University-Liggett School. She serves on the Gross Pointe Friends of the Library Board and is also involved in the Colonial Dames and the Jr. League of Detroit. Armisteads (father and son) are into building plane models of all kinds. The Burwells have two Sweet Briar daughters. Young Ethel graduated Phi Beta Kappa this spring and will serve on the SBC Alumnae Board with her mother this year. Lisa is a junior.

Nancy Hawbaker Gilbert writes from Gainesville, FL, that she enjoyed being in Virginia again when taking her son to enter Virginia Tech (VPI to us old-timers) as a freshman in electrical engineering.

Carol McClave Mercner's daughter Barb graduated from Penn State with honors. Carol, who lives in West Chester, PA, has been promoted to marketing manager for Farm Credit, and Dick's business is thriving.

June Berguido James was a social worker in Buffalo for five years after graduation and without a social work degree. She is finally completing her Master's in Social Work in May, 1983. Guite's 18-year-old daughter Rebecca is a sophomore at U. Va. and Molly, 14, is a high school sophomore. Ceci Dickson Banner visited overnight in April. Over Parents' Weekend '81, I enjoyed seeing Ceci and her lovely daughter Jenny, an Albion sophomore. Ceci works for a professional fund-raising organization and goes all over the country consulting in the field.

Hope Sparger Hanbury is writing in the campaign sales promotion department of Avon Products. She and her husband Harry are new co-op owners in N.Y.C.

Ruth Mackie Gabay has returned to teaching math part-time at a small Episcopal girls' school, St. John Baptist School, in Mendham, NJ, her home. Ken is a senior marketing representative with IBM in the Data Processing division. The Gabays have four children: Mark, 19, is a sophomore in electrical engineering at U. of Rochester and is in NRDTG; Allison, 17, is a high school senior who studies flute and attended Interlochen this summer; John 14, is a high school freshman; and Matthew, 7, is a second grader. Ruth, Ken and family planned to spend the month of August camping on Martha's Vineyard.

And speaking of Martha's Vineyard, Bessie Smith Flynn teaches elementary school in Edgartown. My older girls are her "backyard" neighbors and have been glad for a friendly face far from home.

Lee Cooper van de Velda is already planning the activities for our reunion.

Coopie stayed with Claire Cannon Christopher in Winston-Salem on her way home to Philadelphia from the World's Fair.

I had a wonderful memory-jogging letter from Carol "Bird" Hall. She has two children, Susannah, 17, at Brown and Daniel, 15, at the George School. She is married to film maker Leonard Majzlin and lives in N.Y.C. Carol calls herself a "songwriter," but I would call her a composer, for to her credit is the Broadway hit The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas. She wrote both the music and the lyrics. Her musical, which has run in New York for five years, has two touring companies, is in summer stock and has just been released as a movie. Carol occasionally sees Margie Ritchey Toole and Peggy Mozur Grossman.

There is quite a lot of news from Richmond. Mary Johnson Campbell's daughter Margaret enters U. of N.C. this fall; daughter Wendy is still at St. Catherine's and her son is at boarding school. Ruth Carpenter Pitts and daughter Berry spent a night with Mary and David in the spring. Tibby Moore Gardner talked to Lynn Prior Harrington when she and her daughter were college hunting. Tibby and Bill's son Rod just got his Eagle Scout award and is spending the summer bicycling around Puget Sound and Vancouver. Bill III is at Hampden-Sydney and is taking a summer course at the U. of Madrid. Pat Williams Twohy's daughter Patricia also enters U. Va. this fall and Elizabeth is a sophomore at Collegiate School. My daughter Anne and I stayed with the Campbells in their lovely home in October when Anne was looking at Virginia schools. Mary and I went to the Symphony in the evening and Anne enjoyed going to classes in the afternoon at St. Catherine's with the darling Campbell girls while Mary, Tibby, Patty and I had lunch together. We talked non-stop about Sweet Briar!

Joan Nelson Bargamin and Paul had a wonderful trip to Hawaii in 1981, and were planning an October trip to Fiji, Australia, New Zealand and Tahiti this year. I am glad to report that Joan is recovering after a month in the hospital in May. Her oldest son, Paul, will be a junior at William and Mary; second son, Paul, is a dean's list scholar, and Stephen, a National Honor Society member, will enter U. Va. Joan's husband Paul is an attorney for Traveler's Insurance Co. and Joan is training as a volunteer cancer therapy counselor for the Cancer Society. She is into Tahitian dancing and aerobics to keep fit.

Carolyn McIvor Dews, who lives in Crewe, VA, continues to work in the family roofing business. Her oldest son Carl is a freshman at James Madison U.; Chuck, 13, is active in football and baseball, and Andy, 11, is musically inclined.

Lois Seward Kumpers and Axel live in the Paris suburb of LeVesinet; they also have a farm house in Normandie. "In July we're swimming in cherries and raspberries and in the fall, apples and pears." They have an old black cocker spaniel and a young Irish terrier which they use on hunting trips to the Vosges. Lois ends her card with this message: "If any old friends with whom I've lost track are in Paris and want to get in touch, they should do so through the Merrill Lynch office here. Would love to see ole [sic] buddies of the Class of '58. 'Til then, I send you all my best wishes for the 25th reunion in May — have fun and kickup your heels."

Although I have not seen Eleanor Humphrey Schnabel for some time, Hank calls us when he is in town visiting his family. El has a gallery and framing business in Hingham, MA, Schnabel's Galleries, which is now five years old. Hank is with the Talbot's, expanding their retail outlets throughout the country. Daughter Ellie is at U. of Mass., has taught sailing in Maine and was an AFS student in Switzerland. Liza, a high school junior, sails, plays varsity tennis and, most recently, was in Haiti with the Diocese of Mass. on a work project. The Schnabels had an AFS "son" from Portugal in '80-'81 who was a "pure joy."

Life has been hectic for the Kuntz clan in the past year. Lee and Martha will be seniors at Albion College; they have both played varsity hockey and were officers of their sorority, Kappa Alpha Theta. Martha will spend her first semester off-campus in an internship program in Philadelphia. Last summer they worked on Martha's Vineyard and had a marvelous time. Anne graduated from high school in June and is attending St. Mary's College in Raleigh, NC, this fall. For six weeks this summer she taught oral reading, language arts and social values at Alpha School, our local independent school for children with learning disabilities. We spent Anne's spring vacation in Sea Island, GA, visiting Eddie's parents and are soon off to northern Michigan for a brief holiday. I have retired as Development Director of the Alpha School and am looking for a full-time job. I still sing in my church choir and have just completed a two-year term as president of the Oakwood Youth Commission, a local community board. Although we will miss the girls, Eddie and I are looking forward to the "empty nest" after 22 years!

I have found that one of the bonuses of visiting colleges is the opportunity to see old friends. Besides Anne's and my delightful sojourn in Richmond, we had a wonderful stay at Sweet Briar in the fall. The College did an outstanding job for the prospective students and their families. On our spring college trip, Anne and I had dinner in Winston-Salem with Claire Cannon Christopher and her lovely daughter Ashley. Claire's husband Hudnall and son David declined the evening of Sweet Briar talk. In Raleigh, I called Margery Scott Johnson '57 and had a quick visit with her by phone. Margery is on the Board of St. Mary's College, where one of her daughters will be a sophomore (12th grade), and is very involved with the symphony. In Atlanta, we spent the afternoon with Caroline Sauls Shaw. Her two sons are both delights; young Alex, 13, has a great sense of humor and is very bright and poised; Thomas is a charming and active 5-year-old. Caroline looks great, leads a very busy life, and travels extensively with Robert. The summer tour includes Westminster Choir College in Princeton, NJ, Saratoga Springs, NY, where Robert conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra, and, later this year, a trip through several European countries rehearsing both orchestras and choruses for a major combined concert. They plan to slip away to the south of France for a vacation while they are abroad.

This is my last column; I have loved being Class Secretary for "lo these many years." Your letters, comments and support have made this job more fun than work — but it is time to replace me. Think about it and come up with a new scribe in May. I will be writing you about contributions for the class scrapbook, so please respond.

Secretary

Marie (Patsy) Carney Reed (Mrs. J. Bradbury), 231 Deer Park Dr., Nashville, TN 37205

Fund Agents

Nancy Fleshman Bowles (Mrs. Bowman T., Jr.) 11 Amphill Rd., Richmond, VA 23226

Ann Miller (Millie) Anderson Stuckey (Mrs. George C.), 4201 Oxford Circle, E., Richmond, VA 23221

Reunion was simply wonderful with a turnout of 26 alumnae, 12 husbands, and 7 children. We missed all of you who couldn't come! Happily catching up Friday night at the Daniels' were: Anne Allen Symonds and son David, Millie Anderson Stuckey and George with children Julie, Andrew, and David, Ann-Bruce

Boxley Burgess, Patsy Carney Reed and Brad, Betsy Cate Pringle and Johnny, Andrea Denson Wechsler and John, Douglas Dockery Porteous, Elizabeth Farmer Owen and Doug, Mig Garrity Sturr and Dixon, Brooke Hamilton Cressall, Mimi Molander Moss and Mike, Allison Moore Garrett and Tom, Jocelyn Palmer Connors and Tom with their son Mark, Anne Parker Schmalz, Betsy Person Griffin and Buzzy, Ann Percy, Ann Ritchey Baruch, Jane Roulston Schottker and daughter Lisa, Mary Jane Schroder Oliver and Loren with their son Jasper, May Belle Scott Rauch, Sally Sharrett Perryman and Paul, Julia Shields, Adele Vogel Harrell, Chris Christie Cruger, and Nancy Fleshman Bowles. Fontaine Hutter Hettrick came by Saturday.

This tremendously successful reunion was due to the efforts of our class president, Elizabeth Farmer Owen, Jocelyn Palmer Connors, who was head of all reunions and works closely with SBC as 2nd vice president of the Alumnae Association, and Anne Allen Symonds. Anne has agreed to be our next president after doing a fabulous job as class secretary. She generously provided all '62 alums with Screwpulls, the fabulous corkscrew her father invented.

From the scrapbook assembled by Anne, we find in the 42 questionnaires returned that there have been 40 interim name changes, 187 address changes, 28 schools since 1962, 96 children (2.3 each), 18 mid-life crises, and that real estate investment is the most recommended use of discretionary capital.

Anne will be seeing Rosalie Smithy Tallman at the Fancy Food Show in New York. Rosalie is president of an export company, A Taste of France. She and Chuck also have a summer camp in the Dardogne region of France for boys and girls aged 10-15. They offer a great program of drama, French, crafts, and sports plus educational excursions. They'll be in Charleston, SC, this winter and Smithy McIntosh, 14, will be at Episcopal High School.

From Cupertino, CA, Sarah Adams Model writes that she received her B.A. from California State and is busy with Fritz, 10, and Heidi, 6. Her husband Klaus is with Hewlett-Packard. Grey Baird McCarroll is currently a librarian, and Michael, her husband, is vice president of D.C. Heath Co. They live in Concord, MA.

Chris Christie Cruger's daughter Laura Jane, 18, attends the Sorbonne. Daniel, 16, and Peter, 14, are in school in Richmond. Chris is presently public relations consultant and copywriter for J. Christie, Inc. Besides holding many public relations positions, she has done a great deal of acting, writing, and directing. Watch for her!

Elizabeth Farmer Owen — our wonderful leader at reunion — is heavily involved in volunteer work in Louisville, plus keeping up with Douglas, 14½, and Elizabeth 12½. Doug is in the Mortgage Loan Dept. of Capitol Holding Co.

From Rochester, NH, Patsy Cox Kendall writes that she is involved in all sports, Junior League, and community work. Her husband Skip is president of Kendall Insurance. Sheldon, 16, is at Phillips Exeter Academy, Rusty, 14, and Stephanie, 11, are at Berwick Academy.

Ann Blake Campbell writes from Houston that she and Sandy, who is with Merrill Lynch White Weld, have just bought a farm. Their girls Ann and Helen are 15 and 12 now.

The list of Addie Kamke Cook's involvements is incredible — a new big old house which needs restoring (they're moving to Canandaigua, NY), sculpture, watercolor, writing school curriculum, a garden column, lecturing on ERA, starting a fine art program in the public schools, board member, guest lecturer, and much more! She says she is going to simplify and see us at the 25th!

Still happily ensconced in New Orleans, Douglas Dockery Porteous is a full-time volunteer for the Metropolitan Opera. She also enjoys Will, 10, and Keith, 4, and extensive travel with Bill.

Andrea Denson Wechsler writes from Santa Fe that although she's given up her law practice, she's contributed to four dictionaries and a thesaurus for Houghton Mifflin. Carol Davis Wells' oldest child, Leslie, is attending Stanford this fall. Carol will still have John, 16, and Peter, 14, to keep her busy, as well as her work toward an M.B.A. at St. Louis U.

Fran Early is director of personnel administration and general manager of Prudential in Houston, TX. She has traveled all over South America, to Greece, and Bequi. "Carpe diem" is her advice for discretionary capital.

Linda Emery Miller is living in Des Moines, IA, and working as a special education consultant. Her husband Clark is in sales with Sears, and daughter Jocelyn is 6.

In Atlanta, Solwyn Evins Simmons' husband William is regional credit manager with Kaiser Aluminum. Daughter Elizabeth, 19, attends Auburn, and son Dan, 17, Henderson High.

Mig Garrity Sturr, husband Dixon, and three children live in Littleton, Co, where Dixon is an oceanographer and senior staff engineer with Martin, Marietta Co. Mig is involved with high school counseling and beginning a Master's degree.

Judith Hartwell Brooks is an artist working in several media. She and John (who is with CBS-TV) and David, 15, and Timothy, 11, live in Katonah, NY.

Easily the most distant address is that of Nancy Hudler Keuffel in Taiwan. Will, 12½, Eric, 10, and Susan, 5½, all attend Taipei American School. Nancy reports she is too busy for a mid-life crisis!

Four hundred miles a week is Beth Johnson Phillips' carpool average with Angela, 13, Eleanor Anne, 11, Sandy, 9, and Jimmy, 3. Her husband Jim is an orthopedic surgeon.

Lati Rhett Kennedy Dunn, who left SBC after sophomore year to marry, lives in Alexandria, VA, where she's part owner of a boutique. Her husband Stewart is an attorney, and children are Rhett, 19, Elizabeth, 17, and stepsons, 20 and 24.

From Crossett, AR, Ann Cai Meredith Hilgeman writes she is happy tending the needs of 4-year-old Ernest Richard, her roses, her church, and her husband Ernest. Since graduation, Gloria Mederer Coleman has acquired children aged 28, 26, 24, 22, and 8! She says for us to watch for son Chris, 24, who is a guitarist for the Backstreet Society Trio and plays in many different cities. She and Wilby, who is an attorney, live in Valdosta, GA.

We were all so happy to see Mimi Molander Moss and her husband Mike, who came to Reunion all the way from St. Paul, MN! She reports full-time involvement with volunteer work and also with Charlie, 13, and Bill, 11.

Our exchange student from Japan, Kyoko Ohara Asakawa, lives in Tokyo with her husband Kohji, who is president of a chemical manufacturing company. They have boys 10 and 13 and girls 8 and 6 — and they all would like to visit the U.S. and SBC.

Fran Oliver Palmer, who is a systems analyst in Houston, writes that her stepson Tom will be a freshman at UVa this fall.

Anne Parker Schmalz is busy keeping up with children aged 13-18, as well as being president and owner of Horticultural Curators, Ltd. and co-president of the New Haven League of Women Voters.

It was fun seeing Betsy Pearson Griffin and Buzzy at Reunion. Their son Edward is at W&L, where he pledged SAE, along with Anne Dunlap Youmans' son. Betsy is executive director of Rice Design Alliance, a non-profit organization. Anne works in Macon, GA, as a travel consultant, which she highly recommends, since she has traveled everywhere! Her other two children are 9 and 15.

Ann Percy has moved 15 times since graduation! She is currently a museum curator in Philadelphia, having earned an M.A. and Ph.D. in History of Art.

Bureau of the Washington Post. She and her husband Basil Terence Carmody and children, Lycia, 13, and Nathaniel, 11½, have lived in London, Brussels, and Rome.

Julia Shields is teaching 12th grade English in Charlottesville.

Janice Smith Stearns lives in Lake Park, FL, and manages an apartment complex.

Judging from the photos, I advise all teenage girls to watch for Katsie Webb Ragsdale's two boys, Hugh, III, 19 (at Stanford) and James Webb, 15½ — handsome guys! Katsie is program coordinator of the Human Resources Institute at U. of Ala., and Hugh is professor of history there.

Susan Rasmusen Ide writes from Mehoopany, PA, that mid-life is a time for sorting out top priorities and simplifying. Her children are 11 and 9, and she teaches at Keystone Junior College.

Mary Steketee MacDonald and her husband Jerry live in Bay Village, OH, where he is with G.E. Their children are Kathy, 12, and Chris, 13.

Lydia Taylor (who kept her maiden name when she married and is now divorced) has an M.A. in history and graduated first in her class from William and Mary Law School! Her girls were 3 years and 18 months when she entered law school. She clerked for Judge Walter Hoffman and, as of Jan. 1, works for the City Attorney's Office in Norfolk.

In D.C. Adele Vogel Harrell plans to finish her Ph.D. in sociology in '83 and is working as a research sociologist at George Washington U. Her girls are 15 and 16.

May Belle Scott Rauch and Ted are building a house at Caesar's Head, SC. They and Teddy, 14, Scott, 12, and Brearley, 10, will enjoy a spot down South, and we're thrilled to have them nearer!

Alice Allen Smyth's two oldest children will be attending Andover this fall. Ritchie Baruch, 14, son of Ann Ritchey Baruch has been playing soccer in Europe this summer. The whole family will be traveling out West in August.

Macon Wintree Hilton is chairman of the Symphony Support Drive in Nashville for next year and is playing a lot of tennis. Her children are Betsy, 16, and Rob, 13. Bob is chairman and CEO of American Health Corp. The Hiltons' latest project is the restoration of a 200-year-old house in Bath County, VA.

Barbie Ross Goode's daughters are Anne, 17, a junior at St. Margaret's in Tappahannock, VA, and Amy, 12, at home. Barbie loves the excuse to visit Richmond and see classmates and friends, particularly Fontaine Hunter Hettrick and Millie Anderson Stuckey.

Brooke Hamilton Cressall is finishing up 30 hours toward a middle grades certification. She loves teaching Math. Hunter is in the 9th grade. Brooke had talked to Margie Caine Brown, who has joined the ranks of the working world as a travel agent. She lives in Florida.

Barbara Sublett Guthery, who has been active in United Way and other endeavors in Ridgewood, NJ, is a newly elected member of the YMCA Board. She lists her occupation as stockbroker. We would love to hear her opinion on use of discretionary capital at present.

Ginger Borah Slaughter has her own planning/analysis firm, Lefkoff, Slaughter, and Cardwell. She is still active at St. Anne's Church and singing with the Atlanta Choral Guild (rave reviews at Kennedy Center and Lincoln Center). Sixteen-year-old David is at Woodberry Forest.

Laura Connerat Jelk's son Freeman is at Sewanee and Lotty is a freshman at Connecticut College. Laura has moved from Savannah to Chapel Hill, having returned to being a full-time student. Fran Oliver Palmer's stepson will be a freshman at UVa this fall. He lives in NYC.

Two address changes of note: Iris Coggins from Pennsylvania to the Big Apple and Jane Aldrich Karr from Montana to Arizona.

Allison Moore Garrett and Tom have just built and moved into a beautiful new house in Memphis. Their son, Murray, 16, travels all over the world playing tennis.

I look forward to hearing from all of you. Please help me by keeping in touch!

Secretary

Lin Campbell, 35 Willow Place, Brooklyn Heights, NY 11201

Fund Agent

Nancy Conkle Swann (Mrs. David C.), 800 Raintree Court, Winston-Salem, NC 27106

My annual "job" must get itself done again, and you all are most obliging in helping me complete it. All I have to do is to join your words together, and that is a treat for me, although I believe the finished product may look like fine pearls strung on kite twine. Ah, well...here you have it for this year. Some of you elected to stick to the traditional kinds of write-ups, some spoke to issues, and others volunteered parodies. Almost everyone commented on liking options, and I will try to continue that approach in the future. Now, the news:

Kit Baker Sydnor, Kendall and daughter Jennifer (7) are happily growing horses, ponies and puppies on Steep Forest Farm in Forest, VA. Kit teaches riding part-time at SBC, judges horse show and teaches riding on a free-lance basis, all of which she enjoys.

Gracie Butler Johnson has been running son Tommy's (4) nursery school and preparing her house for a local historical house tour. She is so busy, that's all she wrote. They are still in Blauenberg, NJ.

Frances Butt Slaughter married Greg Fische in August, 1980. They are in Cambridge, MA, where Greg is in school at MIT.

Margot Brown Bucale writes that she is back in the U.S. from Turkey "working as a rag seller for a women's apparel importer." She says, "Spending the day writing telexes and being manipulated by a chauvinist with slide rule makes it hard to go home to communicate with computer-literate, denim-clad kids who could care less about my polyester problems."

Kathy Carroll Matthews, Dave, Heather (12) and Carrie (8) are also in the U.S. — in Alton, IL. Dave is the manager of Winchester operations in Japan. Kathy is involved in the Junior League and church, and mostly in house redecoration. They are enjoying the St. Louis area.

Vicki Chainski Verity wrote that she finds her existence as amusing in concept as she finds the idea of me in New York: "Can you see me, world traveler and gypsy at heart, land-locked on a farm in the middle of Ohio? For diversion and the latest in entertainment, we travel to a nearby mall in pick-up trucks." Do you think that one might have been a parody? News? One never knows...

Jeannine Corbett Squires, Jay, Jeannette (12) and Margaret (9) are in their fifth year in Asheville, NC, where Jay is a pathologist and, thankfully, just added a 3rd pathologist to his group. Jeannine spends most of her time carpooling and in various community activities. "I have finally found MY hobby — photography!" She has taken classes and special trips and truly enjoys this new interest. Jeannine says she would like to find something other than expensive recreation to do with her photography and says she is envious of today's SBC grads who seem to have more options than we.

Cynthia Craig Bliss says that her news rivals most parodies when perceived by the persons involved. Last spring "I opened a gift shop and met Bill the next day! We were married in October. He has a lovely 12-year-old daughter. I closed the shop in January. And guess who is expecting her first this October!" That's happy news, if you ask me.

Randie Cutler Maw and family moved to Washington, DC, "a nice change from Manhattan. Our daughters, Carlyn (7) and Elizabeth (9) are thriving and enjoying having a house, with a yard, etc. They're at Cathedral Elementary School, and Elizabeth will enter NCS next fall." Randie is a project director/producer of an historical film being made for public tv and is looking into academic or administrative jobs for next year.

Makanah (Nancy) Dunham responded to the issues idea: "I feel the most important issue to women and men today is to help the world take its next evolutionary leap — from 'having' (material goods, etc.) to 'being' (sharing with all, helping all to have needs met and equal opportunities, guaranteeing peace for all). Each of us will work on this in our own individual ways and will thus help create the 'rainbow of promise' for all humankind."

Louise DuRona Sklower and family — Al, Olivia (9) and Jededia (1½) are still in Paris where they are happily ensconced in a new apartment. Louise continues to make customized children's clothes — particularly vests — which are special order items, and she is interested in the possibility of assembling a folk arts display for the Museum of Decorative Arts in Paris. Folk art has not been assembled in a display or museum in France before, as I understand it. The Sklowers came to East Hampton for July and August, which afforded me a wonderful visit with Louise and the children.

Deanie Finch Hampton has two children, Tommy, 13, and Julia, 10, and has been married 17 years in June to Dr. Tom Hampton. She is in PTA, of which she is president and volunteer chair, for elementary and middle schools, respectively; is a Campfire leader; and is head of art competition at a district level. "Also, I am a housewife with normal daily driving. I play the guitar, weave, etc," she writes.

Marilyn Garabrant Morris and family moved in June to Hong Kong, where David will be head of Banking for Morgan Guaranty. "We're very excited about our 3-4 year stay and look forward to enjoying the Far East. In case anyone is interested, I have a daughter, Blair, 2, and a son, Anthony, 7 mos. Hong Kong offers lots of live-in help, so I'll start Chinese language lessons, soon." We're interested, Marilyn, we're interested, silly.

Vi Graveure Patek said she only had time to give bare facts. If these are the bare ones, I can't imagine an annotated version. This group clearly is busy and talented. Vi just finished a year of Latin study at S.U.N.Y., which landed her a part-time job teaching Latin and French in Bedford, NY. "Fortunately, I will always be home in time for the girls' (12, 9, and 7) arrival home from school. They are all busy with musical instruments — Sarah was 3rd chair flute in the Westchester All-County Band, Sheila is busy with her first big Mozart sonata on the piano, and Emily is still deep into Book 2 of the Suzuki method. I am taking violin, too, and am working on 3rd position. Mark (husband/father, IBM Communications pricing manager) is taking recorder lessons from Sarah. The entire group plans a cruise in the Newport area this summer." On that note...ouch)

Sandy Hatten Hartwell writes that she and Billy were feeling confused at the surfeit of riches — a chance to write a parody on the kind of life they often dream of parodying. "We could write that we have two children, one of each, ages 10 and 8, with appropriate names starting with J, soccer and tennis stars, etc." All in all, however, they decided that their life is a parody of the exciting and seemingly picture-book perfect existence of the rest of the world. Theirs is also a happy parody, if it be one. "How can I possibly write that I tend my three children, work in my yard, drive the car a lot, and have a few good friends and lots of family here to tend to. I jog, not enough. I cook, but more hot dogs than nouvelle cuisine." The Hartwells recently moved back to the Gulf Coast of Mississippi, after 12 years in the San Jo/San Francisco/Saratoga area and a brief stint in Kuwait. (I keep feeling like this is real life for the multitudes, and probably one too difficult for me to manage. I'm sure the Hartwells have secret 11th C. Castles in Majorca they are redoing and that their children go to summer camp in spots like Tibet and Machu Picchu).

Peggy Henning Minnick says that she and Jeffrey have three children — Linden (6), Duncan (3½) and Margaret (1). "That will be eight straight years of changing diapers by the time we finish. Finding time to read a book is very difficult, but I love having them all close together, although sometimes I feel like a referee." Issues important to her are family health and nutrition and part-time paid work options for women. They are in Locust Valley, NY.

Harriette Horsey Sturges says that her main accomplishments since reunion last year are staying under 200 lbs. and under 40. "How much longer can I keep it up?" She and Buzzy and the two boys are still in Louisburg, NC.

Carey Judy Weathers wrote that she, like Sandy Hartwell, is struggling at how to write a parody of her life — it could be that she is restoring a castle in France, or some such exotica. The facts are that she's a mother of four, who "does minimal placement with the Jr. League, who goes to the grocery store a lot...I love my life. Dallan has been teaching at Hall Episcopal School, where our children go, and pursuing a Master of Divinity degree at Southern Theological Seminary in Columbia." Carey also reports that Ann Dreher is still teaching at the University there in Columbia and is fine and fun. The Weathers are preparing to add on to their house in order that everyone, including Dallan (8), Louisa (almost 6), Susannah (almost 3) and Kay (14 mos.) can each have some privacy and sanity. Carey says that at 37 she can tell that she doesn't look like she's of collegiate age — "Mostly skin and hair tell me." She's lucky, I'd have to say, "Skin, hair, shape, joints, creaks and such." Isn't aging fun!

Ann Kerr Praeus wrote a traditional update from New Orleans where she is teaching cooking classes to female children 8-12 (there are all those Weathers girls over in Columbia, Ann — ever take that on the road?) Also, she is having fun as a member of the AJL Area V Council; "this means a lot of work, but also fun and travel. Gene and I love to travel and just got back from Mexico (we sent our 13-year-old son and 10-year-old daughter to Mexico City to live and study with a Mexican family for three weeks prior to our trip — they loved it!" Also, they will go to San Francisco in August for the Bar Assn. meeting.

Midge Lundy clearly is alive and as funny and irreverent as ever in Denver: "I am a 37-year-old old maid living with a golden retriever and a Scottish terrier in my own lively house in Denver. When I'm not climbing rocks or getting hit on the head by them, I sell new homes for a developer. I drive an old Porsche and a brand new Volvo wagon and terrify everyone on the road. I am obnoxious, occasionally charming, and quite independent. I miss only Virginia's red clay and horses. Most of this is true!"

Cindy Michel Blakely claims she wrote out of self-defense because I overacclaimed her accomplishments last year. "The more ridiculous aspects of my life are the ordinary — never get around to needlepoint, exercise, good works or making money. — just coping. We're happy in Houston, despite floods and heat waves." Cindy reports that I, particularly, would appreciate 5-year-old Ian's "gettin' religion" at his school — his new scapegoat is The Devil. Colin is grown up at 9. And all seem to have made the Brooklyn-Houston move without visible scars. I made the reverse move, I'm sure with more difficulty.

Patty Martin Rodier wrote a wonderful letter, but made me promise not to report most of it. Reportable facts are that Donna Martin Zahork is moving from Ithaca to Nashville, but their younger brother now is moving to Ithaca, which is fairly close to Patty in Rochester, where she teaches at the medical school. Patty reports that Sheila Mahoney has moved from Rochester to NYC, and that she, Patty, and her two bassets will be moving in December to another "warmer" house...

Randi Miles Long says that an issue of special concern to her is child abuse. A woman of action, Randi has put her concern into a concrete attempt to address this problem through a volunteer program called "court appointed special representative," through which she will investigate abuse cases and give the judge her reports. "I will be an advocate for the child!" Randi and her family are still in California.

Lee Mackubin Miller is having a busy summer, what with both Macon (6) and Patrick (11) on swim teams, her own work as president of her churchwomen's group, mission work, and over commitment at their children's schools. If that weren't enough to make you lie down, Lee is expecting a third child in February — "Much excitement over this event!"

Martha Madden Swanson may be combining news with parody (often difficult for me to distinguish in my own life) with issues of concern: "The last year has brought two major changes in my life: 1) I was introduced to Clairol Loving Care (why does gray hair look so distinguished on my husband and dowdy on me?) and 2) decided to stop volunteering and teaching LaMaze, and to make some money. I was the only mother in the neighborhood left to make cupcakes. Who would have thought that at 37 I'd be in a classroom with kids young enough to be my own trying to discover the inner workings of price earning ratio." Martha is going to hatch into a full-blown accountant soon.

Jody Moore Griffin, Chuck and their three boys — 14, 10, 3½ — are all well and happy in Caracas, Venezuela, where Chuck works with Eastman Kodak and Jody's work is school administration. The children are multi-lingual — "the little one speaks English, Spanish, and Portuguese equally and shames us all." The Griffins were in the Outer Banks of North Carolina for the summer, where Jody was studying via Old Dominion. They hope to remain overseas and, also, to bump into some SBC people.

Suzy Moseley Helm, Nelson and their two boys — 12 and 6½ — are still in Louisville, where Suzy is preparing to return to work for the first time in 13 years. She will be director of special projects for the Louisville Presbyterian Seminary, a job she says will be mostly P.R. The boys are "all I could every want them to be and more. Nelson is still lawyering and computerizing on the side. Issues with which I've been involved recently are ERA, the pro-choice cause, various anti-poverty programs, and other social issues."

Judy Mundy Fowler wrote a happy note from Shaker Heights, OH, where she is happily ensconced with Paul Fowler, her husband since May, which is also the month in which they both received M.B.A.'s from UVa. They honeymooned in the Caribbean and moved to Cleveland, where Paul works for Sohio as a crude oil trader and Judy is in manufacturing technology for General Electric. Her children, Gray (13) and Cynthia (11) "are busy adjusting to their new home."

Janie Patton Browning and Wilson, who owns and directs a coal and shipping business, remain in Nortolk with their two children, Will (13) and Laura (11). Janie raises, shows, and judges Lhasa Apsos, which she has done since school. She has had the number 1 dogs in Japan, England, and the U.S., and currently is on the Board of the National Dog Club and the American Lasa Apso Club. Impressive!

Marcia Pace Pennewill wrote after returning from the spring Annual Conference of the Junior League in San Francisco, where she saw many SBC alums, to her pleasure — Diana Rediker Slaughter, Laura Haskell Phinizey '65, Georgia Graham Carroll, etc. Marcia is president of the Pensacola League. She and the boys seem to be doing well with busy schedules.

Andrea Pearson Pennington writes that the ridiculous is also part of the key issues which she sees facing all of us — she spends every day "prosecuting all the juvenile criminal offenders of Mobile County, which is ridiculous in some cases in its pettiness, but in most cases pathetic and abhorrent in what I see young people doing to others without regard for the lives they damage. I look to my own child and wonder and hope that our family is giving the guidance to Kate (2½) to help her be a worthwhile human being as she grows older. Al is in private law practice and Katy is a delight to us both."

Laura Penick Felt, Bob, and their girls spent an "interesting" year in Newport, RI, where Bob attended the Naval War College: Now, they're off to Yokosuka, Japan, where Bob will be meteorologist for the Seventh Fleet. Laura and her daughters plan lots of traveling and shopping.

Peppy (Dianna) Yaeger Rankin sent a short outline of their long family: "My husband Tom is a neurosurgeon specializing in microneurosurgery and the use of the laser in surgery. We have four children and expect the fifth in September. The four are Alexandra-12, Caroline-10½, Tommy-7, and Ruthmarie-1½. We are happy on our horse farm in Maryland."

Diana Rediker Slaughter sent "real" serious info which she says should be a parody, "since life is always punctuated by the absurd! I am a professional volunteer with a special emphasis on child advocacy and child welfare. I would also like to return to the publishing business as a paid professional. I am serving as president-elect of the Jr. League and take advantage of the great range of training opportunities offered by this remarkable organization. We have terrific SBC alumnae in Birmingham, AL — I am proud to be one of them."

Linda Reynolds, a.k.a. Peavine, is still in Washington, DC, when she is not off galavanting in some romantic corner of the world. The galavantings and postcards from Biarritz, Bretagne, etc. are so frequent, I'm not at all sure she is in Washington much. When there, she is with the National Opera Company at the Kennedy Center. Their season is opening with Carmen. "As for my greatest accomplishments, I don't think I've accomplished it yet. At least, I hope not!" I have the same hope for myself...

Susan Kjeldsen Roos, Billy, Casey (9) and Jennifer (13) are still remodeling their wonderful Victorian Brooklyn Heights brownstone, amidst early adolescence and several incompetent or disappearing contractors and plumbers. This is a major issue in the Roos'es' life which they would like not to see as that. This, too, will pass...

Sandy Streett Hamrick is in St. Louis teaching French through the Alliance Francaise. "The school is being considered for a possible Midwest center for the development of Alliance schools. I will be lecturer in French at Washington U. this fall. This summer the French Government has offered me a two-week institute in Commercial French at the Chamber of Commerce, Paris. Family — Mark (1½) and Robert (10) — keep us in good physical health with their various activities."

Joanna Sabalauskus Lehane writes: "As Manager of Regulatory Affairs for a $2.5 billion multinational corporation (true), my life in D.C. is a zoo. Every try to regulate affairs of 535 Congress-persons while giving speed reading on the side so that some of them can get up to ten PAGES a night? Volunteer help graciously accepted."

Kathy Sheehan Reid and Peter are in the Boston area where Kathy is the chief administrative officer at M.I.T.'s Psychiatry and Social Work Services at the new medical center, which serves the student and employee community of the Institute. Peter is tenured at Tufts U. and has published another book on Tenth Century Latinity. They are looking for a child to adopt.

Ph.D. in Finance and is an Assistant Professor of Finance at the U. Notre Dame, in South Bend, IN. She will be teaching Investments. Her husband and daughter "are here, too, of course."

Sally Thomas Hoffman wrote a parody, inspired by the infusion of all the sci-fi she has ever read upon her own life. "I live in Washington state where the public power commission is called "WHOOOPS" and deserves it for all the cost overruns on nuclear projects. My career is in microelectronics, where we are busy moving atoms around in orderly ways, at least when equipment and process are under control. One of the production workers left me this message — "Everything ran smoothly today — twilight zone." I have found my personality type in a science fiction called Adune — I am a Bene Gesserit — scientific women that can force people to do their bidding by the tone of their voices. And, of course, I have a cat named Spock. Real life is for those who can't hack science fiction."

Eleanor Thomson Thomas claims she is very easy to parody. "This semi-straight, sedentary scholar (some would not remember me thus, but it's the probable image) turned into a 38-yr.-old jock. I bounce from lap swimming pool to running the local track, to yoga, to Tai Chi, to ballet, to scuba diving in quarries. In between, I walk many miles (ridiculous it is that, would you believe, I still don't own a car!). Occasionally I still write or read a book. I'm my preppy daughter's hippie mother. By the less charitable I am called everything from dilettante to teeny bopper to... "We know what we are, but know not what we may be!" The family still gets fed. I work part-time jobs, e.g., teaching A.M. swimming, P.M. childbirth. A fascination with marine mammals has me hankering to return to school someday and to the sea. I never felt better!"

Anne Ward Sterns says that her greatest concerns currently are: 1) sanity! Chasing two boys, Robbie (4) and Ward (9 mos); 2) Reagonomics — Trying to sell our house in this depressed market place and move to NY. We're still in Indianapolis. Most recent accomplishments — teaching 12 inexperienced actors to ride bareback as an 'equestrian' for Blue Jacket, a new outdoor drama Ed directed in June in Ohio [note: Ed is husband hereof]. On a more traditional note, I am Program Director for Young Audiences, which brings music, dance and theatre programs to schools in Indiana. Ed is directing the first American production of RSC Nicholas Nickleby (8½ hours) at Great Lake Shakespeare Festival in Cleveland this summer." They hope to move to New York soon. I hope they will, too.

Penn Willets Mullin and John, who is with Wells Fargo Bank in San Francisco, have three children: Lucy Penn, 1¾; Hadley, 7; and Brannan, 11 — all healthy and thriving. Penn is very successful with free-lance editing and writing books for teenagers (a remedial reading series). She has had three books published this year! Penn enjoys working with the SB Club there in S.F.

Rab Willis Findlay's news was that she and daughter Gwathmey had a wonderful trip to SBC in the fall — "The campus was lovely and the students so pleasant! I still am at Benedict College, teaching a lot less and doing more research and administration. I plan to spend part of next spring at NIH in Bethesda, and hope to see some of my classmates there" (I hope she means in Bethesda, not NIH or NIMH, but who am I to say?). "Kirk will probably run for a second term as mayor of Columbia this fall. Kirkman is 12; Gwathmey, 10." Rab and Kirk are enjoying a few childless weeks while kids are in camp; then, the family will vacation in Maine. (I have great expectations that Rab will write a sequel to "The Secret of NIMH" while at NIH, and that Anne Ward and Ed might produce it, or something).

Judy Wilson Grant invoked the spirit of beloved Dr. Nelson: "Lavinia, forgive me, but if I am to respond about the ridiculous in my life, does that not compel me also to discuss the sublime? Well I must say that they are one and the same, these days. (Constant confusion or reality in our age group...) Not only do we have three children, Margaret, 5, being oldest, but we are expecting #4 in December — at Christmas!" She is praying for a real, fat Santa to make things a little exciting. As if all this were not enough, they are adding on to their house. "I keep saying 'yes' to the children's schools for everything from chocolate chip cookies to Board positions, 'yes' to projects at the Children's Hospital, etc. Newell is busy as ever with commercial real estate, currently developing a golf course and huge shopping center." [That's where we'll open Rab's and Anne Ward/Ed Ward's movie on NIH]. Judy says that Newell frustrates her constantly with his practical wisdom — he never puts her favorite stores in his shopping centers.

As for me, I agree that the sublime and ridiculous are indistinguishable a good bit of the time. Take New York, for instance...I have, and I am hog wild about it, except when it smells, is dirty, violent, expensive, rude etc. One of my friends' children commented that even the pigeons are rude. True, I suppose, but not always. And there are all those flip sides of those old coins. I continue to work, which is now more of a struggle and a fight, for Planned Parenthood. Because of the commitment we have to helping people make responsible choices about whether to bear and when to bear children, we are now audited frequently by the Federal Inspector General's office, etc. I find this strange and sad, but I honor the opinions of those who disagree. I am just completing (this week) my book for kids with diabetes and, I hope, for many with no diabetes. I received a small grant for the book, and that was a marvelous ego booster. I will need that next week when I turn the manuscript over to the agent. In my volunteer capacity, I continue to believe that I can help the world with its problems — I'm just a little idealistic. I am active with several health and welfare organizations and spend a great deal of time attempting to create peer support for people with diabetes and other chronic diseases. A parody of my life would be a life of quiet order, no surprises and a super serious, grim struggle for fame, wealth, and glamor. Give me a break!

Fund Agent

Debra Denemark, 1255 New Hampshire Ave., Washington, DC 20036

Greetings once again as, incredibly, another year has flown by. The news has poured in, and I have enjoyed hearing from all of you.

Susan Hampton VerNeoy and her family are living in San Jose, CA, with 16-mos.-old Dean and Justin, who begins kindergarten this fall. They dream of moving to a smaller town. Barbara Offutt Mathieson and Tom had a son, Skye Cassidy, on Sept. 4, 1981, in San Francisco. Also there, is Sally Taylor, who reports that all is well and that her business of publishing winery maps and little guide books of California wine country is doing well. The magazine she has been running has "grown up and moved out" of her house and is now cared for by her partners. Anyone visiting the California wineries is eligible for a free wine map upon request. Sally spent last fall in Kyoto, working with a Japanese potter in his studio and entertaining a succession of house-guests from the U.S. She got the royal treatment from her Japanese friends, including having her own apartment. She says that the toughest part of going to Japan is coming home — and she looks forward to another three months there this fall, reporting on wine activities in Japan, as well as other free-lance work.

Alumnae Magazine

Marty Paul Andersen and Rick, Kate (4) and Hans (2) hope to have seen the end of corporate moves and will finally make a home in Cody, WY. Rick bought part of an insurance agency there. They are about 50 miles east of Yellowstone, and Marty would love hearing from SBC tourist out in Cowgirl Country.

Deborah Warren Rommel says that the only way to survive the Houston heat with children is to wear them out swimming! With Emily (5), Andy (3), and #3 expected in early December, Deborah stays busy, while husband Ross works hard with a small law firm. She enjoys docent work at Bayou Bend — a collection of 17th, 18th, and 19th C. American furniture and paintings.

Cindy Cocke Hill lives in Harlingen, TX, with her two sons Garrison (10) and Duncan (9). Cindy was divorced last year, graduated from the U. of Tex. last May, and toured Europe that summer. She loves her work as a financial representative with E. F. Huton Financial Services. Also in Texas is Michelle Perry Gonzalez, living on a horse farm with her four daughters and husband; they breed Arabians. Michelle is working on her Master's in Art and Art Education at Corpus Christi State U.

Out in Denver, Lori Harris Amass has had another son, Tyler.

Kristin Herzog loves life in Bloomington, IN, where she has recently become art director of the KAPPAN, a national journal for educators. She thinks it'll be fun, but a tremendous amount of work. Kris is also in the Ph.D. program of the Instructional Systems Technology Dept. (Educational) at I.U. — it should take her about 10 years to finish, but she says she isn't in any hurry.

From Louisville, KY, Barbara Brewster Miller sent news that she was expecting her second child in early October. Brewster is now 4. Also in Louisville is Stuart Davenport Simrill and husband Spenser, who enjoys being cannon at the Cathedral. They are adjusting to the death of their infant daughter Susan Sawyer, a victim of SIDS on Jan 3. Joanne Hicks Robblee has moved to Ft. Knox, KY, where her husband is a lieutenant colonel assigned as a lawyer. Clay (9) and Jessica (6) keep her busy with Scouts, swimming, gymnastics, and Little League. Joanne is also currently working on her Master's in counseling.

Cathy Louis Lovell writes from Atlanta that she teaches Latin full time at Lovett. Husband Wood is a real estate broker, with his own company that deals mostly with buying, selling, and managing apartments. Life seems hectic with two sons, ages 7 and 4! Kathy Barnes Hendricks spent last spring getting used to motherhood with Nathan VanMeter, IV, born April

6. She is working on an English garden in her backyard and will resume cooking classes this fall. Kathy continues to serve on various boards and will be in charge of a symposium on Chinese Export Porcelain in connection with the High Museum Antiques Show in November. Kate Schlech is still with the DOJ Antitrust Division in Atlanta and, so far, has been mercifully spared the Reagan pinch. Work is keeping her very busy, but she enjoyed a ski week in Aspen over the winter and wants to try Vail next.

Betsy Edwards Anderson and family are fine in Charlotte — enjoying new baby Caroline Edwards, born in May, along with Charlie and Claire. Betty Brewer Caughman traded the glories of single life for the greater joys of married life on May 8, 1982. Husband Jerry (UVA M.B.A. 1971) is a division manager for Coastal Lumber Co. in Weldon, NC. They live "on permanent vacation" on Lake Gaston, 15 miles outside Roanoke Rapids, NC. She sees Suzu Yates frequently. Kay Parham Picha "reunions" more than any classmate I hear about! She got together in Dallas with Karen Hartnett, Sue Lykes Mueller, and Pam Piffath Stills — did everything from Mexican food and a night at "Billy-Bob's" to a drive out to J. R.'s house and a make-over at Lord and Taylor's. She and David attended the wedding of Courtney Cash '69 and Lloyd Mustin, III, in February in Richmond, where they saw Betty McLemore and Betty Brewer Caughman. When not meeting classmates, Kay lives near Greensboro, NC, where Tom (5½) will begin kindergarten and Mandy (6½) will start first grade at Greensboro Day School. Kay is still bookkeeper and secretary for Dave's business, Classic Dyestuffs. Stuart Cambles Royall has gone to work part time as a coordinator of the Host Homes Program at Duke U. Medical Center, which places relatives and friends of patients in private homes. She is enjoying the administrative duties and public relations it involves. Stuart's girls are Jennifer (8), Margaret (4), and Caroline (2).

Terri Eoff Walsh reports from Harrisonburg, VA, that motherhood is a delightful change — even though she stopped working for pay and traded in her high school algebra books for baby books. Her son was one year old in September. This past June Terri helped at a local music camp, run by fellow SBC-er Helen Graeff Ellerman '46. Husband David is still Commonwealth's Attorney for city and county. Jean McKee Carmichael writes that she works part time for husband Norman's wine importing and distributing company, selling wine in the Charlottesville/Lynchburg area. Jean also teaches aerobics at the YMCA and plays tennis, when time allows, with Jan (8) and Ross (4½).

Tracy Savage is now associate director of development at the Foxcroft School near Middleburg, VA, an independent secondary school that lists Carter Burns Cunningham '71 among famous alumnae! Tracy also teaches music and theatre. She has written and produced several of her own stage musicals over the years — and received her law degree from W&L a year ago. She is happy to be back in education and is busy directing amateur community theatre groups in the area. In Richmond, Betty Glass Smith and Bill are thrilled with their son Wesley Randolph, born May 26 — an eight-pounder. They are working on finishing rooms in their home — three rooms down, two to go, with the basement their current project. Bill does a lot of the work himself, with some help from Betty. She recently heard from Barbara Lalance Kelly — she and family are moving back to N.Y.S. from Tennessee. Katie McCordell Webb had her second child, Spencer Hancock, on April 20 — another eight-pounder. She is also enrolled in the Master's in Health Administration program at MCV in Richmond. Katie still works at the Va. Health Dept. as a program analyst. Debbie Ohler Bowman is living in Lynchburg and saw Mimi Moore over New Year's. In January, 1982, Betty Rau Schewel had her third child, Matthew Adam, who joined Sara (3½) and David (6). She plans to participate in the Jr. League self-esteem puppet program for 5-6 year olds in the schools this fall. Her new car's license plates read "SBC 70."

Susan Pond has become a Montessori teacher in McLean, VA, where she hopes to have more free time for friends, writing, painting, and music than the business world gave her. Also in the Washington area, but in Fairfax, VA, Claudia Forman Ostrander has left her position teaching banking and rejoined the banking industry as a commercial construction loan officer with Maryland National Bank. Her offices are in Silver Spring, MD, and she spent two months training in Baltimore at the bank headquarters while husband Bill took care of Ross (2)! Claudia heard from Tauna Urban Durand, who is now remarried and has three boys. Susan Helbrook Daly and Skip have moved from Wright Patterson AFB to the Pentagon. They have bought a home in Lorton, VA, and love being back in the South. Susan has gotten her real estate license and is working with Mt. Vernon Realty in the Springfield office. Her daughters Andrea (9½) and Stephanie (6½) have adjusted well to their third Christmas move out of the last four years. This past summer Elizabeth Smith married Robert Fletcher Adams at the Great Choir of the National Cathedral. They honeymooned at Kauai and Maui in the Hawaiian Islands. They'll be living in a house they bought across from the Cathedral, which they are fixing up and used for their reception. Anne Adare Wood is also in D.C., working hard as a lobbyist with a small firm which represents about 18-20 clients — primarily major corporations. She says it is exciting business, although the pressures of the Hill do get intense. While Congress recessed, she spend a week at the N. C. Outer Banks. At the end of August Anne hoped to go to Egypt, down the Nile, see some ruins, and spend time in Kenya on a safari. Missy Ball is looking for work in D.C. while taking courses at the U. of Md. and completing repair projects on her house in Silver Spring, MD. Jane Gott has just relocated to the D.C. Metropolitan Area to take a position as pharmaceutical sales representative for Winthrop Labs, Sterling Drug. Baird Hunter Campbell and Bill are settled in Annapolis, MD; now after four years they have Neal (2) and another child expected in February 1983. Bill works in D.C. for American Hospital Supply, and Baird stays busy with tennis and as fund-raising chairman for the Jr. League. Wild horses couldn't drag Louise Hayman away from Annapolis — she loves it! She is raising her 13-year-old daughter while fighting the "Cinderella complex" and is still working with historic preservation. She stays close to SBC by spending lots of time with a nephew of Former President Pannell.

Sandy Hamilton Bentley announced the birth of Matthew Lawrence, born Jan. 22, in Exton, PA, between snowstorms. Frances Dornette visited in April and stood as godmother at his christening. On April 2, Jane Richley Rafal and Marshall had Julia Louise, who joined ranks with Alex (7), Andrew (3), and Rachel (12). Jane and Marshall are involved in duplicate bridge and the ballet and spent last January in London. They hope to be in Australia the end of September — baby and all!

From NYC Fran Griffith Laserson writes that she is still keeping up with the rigors of wife, mother, career woman, and volunteer. She has stopped trying to furnish their apartment, as a guest can barely make his way around with out bumping into stroller, rocking St. Bernard, rocking horse, baby buggies, etc. for Tenley (2). Mary Jane Hipp Brock's son Walker and Pat Swinney Kaufman's Lily Hayes are frequent playmates. Fran became godmother to Mary Stewart Cunningham (Maisie), daughter of Carter Burns Cunningham. Both Pat Swinney Kaufman and Fran will be 1982-4 V.P. of the NYC Jr. League. Alexandra Weyant de Bruyn delivered a paper entitled "Irenic Thought in 17th C. Dutch Literature" at the Interdisciplinary Conference on Netherlandic Studies held at the U. of Md. at College Park in June. She is also the recipient of a doctoral research grant from the Center for European Studies of the CUNY Graduate School and University Center. Elizabeth Wilson has emerged from oblivion and given an account of her past 12 years: before living in NYC for the past six years, she was "rather casually" enrolled in Art History Graduate School at UVA. Since then, she has worked for the auction house, Christie's, then for a private American paintings dealer, and presently with the Terry-Engell Gallery (17th C. Dutch and 19th C. French). She is meeting with reasonable success in explaining that Dutch Old Masters are not necessarily a brand of cigars! Also in NYC, Page Kjellstrom is always a great source of news. She has seen Betty McKee Werlinich and Doug. Betty is at Estee Lauder in the International Dept. Page is public relations account executive with Letitia Baldrige — "one fascinating lady!" She works on Baker Furniture and Manuel Canovas — "divine French fabrics." Page traveled to Utah when doing some work for the Osmonds. She recommends the Baker's Stately Homes openings in SBC-ers' cities and loves the Southern accents at the Furniture Mart in High Point. She has talked with Miffy Walton Bright, who now has her own interior decorating business.

Joan Hennessy Wright and Artie have bought a new house in West Hartford, CT, and are really enjoying hiring the help instead of being it for all the painting and repapering. Artie is assistant V.P. of General Reinsurance, and Joan loves her job as regional marketing representative at ESPN, the 24-hour sports cable network. Ann Gateley is teaching clinical internal medicine and has a group practice at U. Mass. Medical School in Worcester. She hopes that their next move will be away from the New England winters and back to the Southwest. Candace Buker Chang was clearing off her desk to move from Boston to Hillsboro, OR, when she wrote. She finished her M.S.W. in May and has been recruiting foster homes for the Dept. of Social Services in Massachusetts. She wrote and produced a filmstrip for recruiting, which is being used statewide, and also had a "Life Book" for foster children published this year. Daughters Jean (8) and Sonia (4) went with Candace to Disneyworld, where they camped with Jo Shaw Robinson and Saunders (3). They ran into Bonnie Palmer McCloskey at Disneyworld with her family — all looking tanned and wonderful. Elsa Jones Foster has been working on call at Beverly (MA) Hospital in the Radiology Dept. doing echocardiography (ultra sound of the heart) and hopes to expand to other hospitals in the fall, as Alexandra will be in kindergarten and Roddy is 2. Elsa is involved in numerous community activities, including serving as V.P. of the League of Women Voters. They are working on their antique colonial home — reclapboarding, reroofing, and insulating. Connie Haskell is making big changes this year — after nine years of teaching, she'll be at B.U. in Educational Media and Technology. She would like to work in business with "adult toys," such as computers and cameras. Connie saw Kim Muller-Thym, who was on her way up to an island in Nova Scotia with a friend for 5-6 weeks to paint, photograph, and unwind.

Mary Beth Halligan Griffin wrote of a rough winter in White River Junction, VT, when their son Vaughn (6) died on Jan. 4. He had a very serious congenital disease, but they had expected him to live longer. Mary Beth feels fortunate to have Lindsay (3) and Garrett (1).

Jenny Williams wrote that the Toadstool Bookshop, owned and operated by her brother and Jenny, celebrated its 10th year this June. She has two wonderful sons, Murdoch Linwood Hatfield (3) and Asa Williams Hatfield (6 mos.). Jenny stays busy with them, the bookstore, a small quarter horse breeding operation with her own stud and several mares, as well as giving riding lessons and competing at horse shows. Heather Tully Click is in Milford, NH, happily raising their daughter Amanda (1). She has been riding with Pam Piffath Stills several times and enjoys getting back in the saddle again. Her daughter has received pint-sized SBC tee shirts from Suzanne Elkins Major's and Kay Parham Picha's offspring.

It is with sadness that I note that Mary Pat Cogan Rankin died in May. We all can recall how lovely she was, and I speak for everyone when I extend sincere sympathy to her family, including husband Tom and sons Matthew and Jamie.

Mary Scales Lawson and family are doing fine — with Joseph Scales Lawson, born on Thanksgiving Day, 1981; Margaret and Roselle (6) start first grade this fall.

Bill and I are enjoying life with three pre-schoolers — Will (5), Elizabeth (4), and Emily (1). I am volunteering in Greenville, but mostly stay on the homefront as a "side-tracked home executive" — too many projects, too little time. I did go to an SBC Admissions Representatives Chairmen's Workshop on the Campus in September.

Thanks for all of your news, and keep it coming.

It's becoming very apparent that no matter what season of the year it is, members of the Class of 1974 are very busy. The following news makes that quite clear.

EAST: From the metropolitan Boston area: Beth Meyer Costello is pregnant and the baby is due in November. She is on leave of absence from her stockbroking job.

Marcia Brandenburg Martinson is expecting her second child — also in November. She and her mother were at the SBC Ewald Symposium and saw Eileen Rubin there. In May she spent an evening at Lucinda Young Larson's ('73) home with Pat and Suki Hearne Kirkpatrick.

Maureen Hynes Binder had a girl, Allison Hagan Hynes Binder on Jan. 16, 1982. She and Jeff and Allison visited SBC in September. She keeps tabs on Pam Cogghill, Sarah Clement '75 and Suki Kirkpatrick as well as continues her job of writing speeches and editing publications.

From the Rochester area Mary Lee Burch Weil was expecting her first child on Sept. 1. She is also writing the tenth year reunion letter of all the Jr. Year in France participants.

Sandy Taylor is working for Eastman Kodak Co. after getting her M.B.A. from the U. of Rochester. In spite of the frequent cool weather, she likes Rochester.

Betsy Biggar Hellmuth and Ted are still in Upstate New York (Manlius) when they are not traveling — Ted as far as Montreal on business and the rest of the family, including Katie (5) and Teddy (3), for pleasure. Besides a spectacular skiing trip to Switzerland, they had visits to Cleveland (to visit "Grandma"), the Adirondacks, Lake Lanier in Georgia, and Christmas Cove, ME.

On July 10, Kristin Swain married Charles W. Swain, a photographer in Corning, NY, with Tana Meier Parseliti her matron of honor and Mary Lee Burch Weil also present. Kristin has just completed the coordination and execution of relocating the Rockwell Museum in the renovated 1893 city hall and fire station of Corning.

When Checka Robbin Delle finds extra time from looking after young Paul in Hempstead, she cooks baked goods and Italian specialty dishes for her husband's delicatessen. She joined a weight training club and jogs when possible.

In New York City Mary Shaw Halsey continues as an architect with I.M. Pei & Partners.

Laura Lou Elkins is looking for a new loft for her painting activities. She has hung some of her work at the Betty Parsons Gallery. She keeps in touch with Beth Jones Elkins.

Alethea Lee will be teaching children in a special education setting this fall. Her painting continues. She and Jane Piper got together at the Metropolitan Museum in January for a day. They also talked to Alison Irwin who continues teaching at her alma mater.

Pam Coghill goes on selling corporate bonds on Wall St. and during business travels catches up with friends like Cotty Matheson Wallace and Libby Stough Rush '75. She spent two weeks last November in Bangkok and Hong Kong and loved it.

Bonnie Chronowski Dixon has moved to Upper East Side Manhattan and is now married to James John Brophy, a corporate bond salesman on Wall St. She sees Helen Travis and Sue White frequently. Her son Christopher, age 4, recently underwent successful open heart surgery.

Helen Travis is now Assistant Personnel Manager at Doyle Dane Bernback Advertising in NYC. Helen has bought a spinet piano, sings in the St. Cecelia Choir, walked 30 miles in five hours around NYC to raise money for March of Dimes and has just welcomed home her sister who had just escaped with her children from Beirut.

In New Jersey, Donna Slingerland Gallery has a new daughter, Lauren Brooke. She now has a Clinical Certificate of Competence in Speech Pathology-Language. While up in Boston she saw Nancy Nields.

Sally Brice-D'Hara and Robert, both officers in the Coast Guard, had a baby, Robert Charles, born on July 4. They have both been transferred from Connecticut, where Sally was assistant director of admissions at the Coast Guard Academy, to Cape May, NJ, where she was scheduled to begin involvement in the training of Coast Guard recruits in September.

The latest from around Pennsylvania is that Laurie Krecker Stulb and Edwin have a daughter Lydia Willard Stulb born July 31, 1981. Laurie continues as a paralegal. Also in Flourtown is Robin Christian Ryan who finds banking and motherhood a fascinating, rewarding, but very busy combination. She and Jerry were at Lochrane Coleman's ('76) wedding in April and saw Mary Combs. They went on to New Orleans and saw Ann Prichett Van Horn and Marion Van Horn Eagan.

Pat Carroll Bankstein and Bruce had Alumnae Magazine

a girl, Jennifer Deland, born Mar. 19, 1982. Bruce is now a partner in his law firm along with Ceill Linebaugh's brother. They are still renovating their home near Lancaster, PA.

MIDWEST: Sarah Johnston Knoblauch, Shaker Heights, OH, illustrated a cookbook for the Shaker Nature Center last summer. She had a teaching fellowship at Hollins Humanities Institute and loved being back in Virginia. In May her 2nd annual "Great Kids Race," a two mile run for kids from first to sixth grades, attracted 200 kids. She has retired from teaching.

Christine Weiss Pfeil writes from Rocky River, OH, of the week's cruise on the Inside Passage to Alaska that her mother invited her and her husband to join in July, along with her sisters Cathy Weiss Thompson and Wendy Weiss Smith '71 and their husbands. Chris says she saw whales and bald eagles, did lots of hiking, and took loads of slides — as well as enjoying the family reunion.

Debbie Hart Eiserle now has a B.S. in Education with honors from Indiana U. and will be teaching third grade in Ft. Wayne this fall. David is now senior process engineer at Phelps Dodge Wire Co. Daughter Jeannie is now a very talkative 18 months.

Bill and Jan Reene Kile have forsaken California for Port Huron, MI. Bill does much sailing and Jan is on the Port Huron Yacht Club race committee. She plans to visit California and see Carol Ann Kroese and Julie Shuer.

Kathryn Telfer is going into her third year as legal researcher for a large Detroit firm. Most of her work involves complex litigation, preparation for trial, and various research tasks, and it also takes her to various areas of the U.S. She is considering beginning law school at night so that she can continue her work.

Karen Pennell Holly writes she is riding and training horses in the Chicago area, and Don is opening a new restaurant in Chicago.

Laurie Epstein was in a minor earthquake in Hawaii while there on vacation. In Chicago she ran into Melissa Greenwood Reimer '75 at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. She hoped to see Wanda Cronin Dess in November down in South Carolina.

In St. Louis Mary Witt is busy doing clinical research at Children's Hospital. She presented a paper to the Society for Pediatric Research in Washington in May and two papers in San Francisco in June for two different associations. Her research, which she thinks will continue for another 1-2 years in St. Louis, deals with diabetes in children and young adolescents. She and Jane Piper communicate by phone, but managed to miss each other at the Old Dominion Schools Alum party in December. Jane headed back to Britain in September for three weeks and in May was up in Boston, where she saw Nancy Nields, who enjoys living in Salem, where she shares an old house with three others. This year Jane is co-chairman of the Jr. League Boutique in St. Louis, which has kept her from traveling as much as she usually does.

WEST: Out in Colorado Barb Hansen Smith had a girl, Kelly Curzon Smith, on July 24, 1981. Though she and Bill live in Boulder, Bill practices law in Denver. In the spring Barb and Kelly went east and saw Mary Killorin in Washington and Holly Hoffman Frazier and Susan White in Charlottesville.

Also in Denver, E.V. Shaw is writing brochures for landscape architects and real estate firms. In January she and her husband Michael Albanes were in Washington seeing Paul and Jane Olmstead Murphy '73. The day after they arrived, Jane had a daughter, Moirra Jane Murphy.

Val Gordon reports she is commuting between California and Wyoming, combining ranching and film production. She was field producer for James A. Mitchner's U.S.A.

Up in Anchorage Christine Cummings Bass and Wayne continue to be successful in real estate and they expect their second child this fall. She also confirms that they are receiving $1,000 checks from the Alaska oil revenues.

BB Wheelock Zavell has been a full time student in graphic design at the Academy Art College in San Francisco. Stephen is a patent law attorney for Standard Oil there. On her way to the Dominican Republic for a vacation, BB stopped in Washington and saw Mary Killorin, Tinka Pritchett, Karla Kline, Ceci Kirby, Sally Clary, Sally Randolph and Laureen Sherlock.

Jeanne Manning Schmidley and James are also still in San Francisco, where she is associate counsel with Bank of America and he is on the faculty of the Neurology Dept. at the U. of Calif.-San Francisco. In 1981 they enjoyed a three-week summer holiday in Europe, and now they are anticipating the birth of their first child in January.

In Jan. '82, Hannah Pillsbury was transferred from Maine to Beverly Hills by Smith Barney, the brokerage firm she has been with for four years. She loves her work and life in California, where she is involved in tennis lessons, exercise club, hiking, and yoga. She has discovered that Phyllis Becker lives 10 minutes away, and she talks with Ann Smith and Jane Maloney occasionally.

Lisa Martin loves Pasadena. By Christmas she plans to complete her master's in Speech Pathology. She wants to specialize in Child Language Development and Disorders.

Julie Shuer writes she and Carol Ann Kroese spent a weekend together in May. Julie's practice in occupational therapy keeps growing. She now has five employees so that she can do some research.

Andy Francis has moved to Monterey, CA. She now has a Ph.D. from New York U. and is now a doctor and psychologist in psychoeducational measurement and evaluation. She is now working for CTB/McGraw-Hill supervising the development of certification and licensing exams for health-related professionals. She has a three bedroom house on the ocean and loves it. She also bought her NY apartment so that she has a home on the East Coast as well.

SOUTHWEST: In Las Vegas Debbie Pelham Bigum and Randy will have a baby in February of 1983. Meanwhile they are traveling around the Southwest when they can.

Though she's busy being a wife and mother, Nancy Lea Houghton was back in Virginia in late July seeing her family. She also planned to see Ann Van Horn while there. Though Jim ("Hoot") is much involved with law and real estate, they still broke away to Hawaii for a vacation and saw Barb Ashton Schiller and Scott in Angel Fire, NM, in the spring.

There is much happening in Houston. Ann Stuart McKie is still at Neiman Marcus, but hopes to eventually transfer to the Dallas store. She keeps in touch with Missy Hubbard and Cindy Sorenson Suitherland. She saw Cheryl Battin McKinley when she was in Houston visiting.

Mary Combs says she's in Houston for keeps. She has a real estate license in Kentucky and is now getting one in Texas. Susie Harrison's sister lives across the street from her, another Sweet Briar alum.

Though still at Baylor College of Medicine, Mary Ann Reese is now working in the Obstetrics and Gynecology Department. She sees that all manuscripts to the Journal of Clinical Ultrasound are reviewed and edited for publication. Mary Ann is engaged and plans a small spring wedding.

Mitch Ore finished her teaching certificate at the U. of Houston. She is teaching art to children in the K-3. This fall she plans to go to Cranbrook in Detroit to work on an M.E.A. in metal smithing. She wants to get involved in knife making.

Sherrie Snead McLeroy has changed jobs down in Galveston. She is now shop manager at Ashton Villa, a historic house museum. She and Bill bought a house in nearby Texas City and are putting the finishing touches on it.

Barbara Moore can still be found in Ft. Worth being a psychologist with Texas Christian U. and in her own private practice.

From Barb Ashton Schiller comes news of a cruise that she, Scott, son Christopher, her parents, sister and the babysitter took on the Sun Viking in the Caribbean in February. Scott is still with Phillips 66, and Barb is involved with Newcomers and church activities.

Up in Dallas Melanie Porter became marketing manager for the Horchow Collection as of May 3.

Susan Stephens Geyer and Mark had their first child, Mark Stewart Geyer, Jr., on Feb. 13, 1981. The second baby is due in December. She has stopped working, but plans to volunteer for the Jr. League's Art-reach program. She is also writing dental brochures for Mark's office.

To Cheryl Willis Booth and Brian was born Abigail Elizabeth Booth on Oct. 10, 1981, in Tulsa, OK. Cheryl resigned her job and Brian has started his own insurance agency. Cheryl becomes a provisional with the Tulsa Jr. League this fall.

SOUTH: Though Cyndi Hardie McCabe and David are forging ahead with their seminary studies, they also had a daughter, Tiffany Kristen, on Dec. 19, 1981, in Louisville, KY. She joins big brother Brian. The McCabes are transferring from Presbyterian Seminary to Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, VA.

Down in Nashville Nancy Nunnolley is busy working, but spent the summer in a brace after breaking her back in June from a riding fall. She is also secretary of the homeowners' association of a complex where she bought a condominium last January. She occasionally sees Susie Fitzgerald Dahl whose office is in the same building as hers.

From Mary Lib Holman Williams comes the news of a new home in Berwick, LA, and they are awaiting their first child, due in January.

In Jackson, MS, Ruthie Willingham Lentz reports she's been traveling seeing Robin Ryan, Lee Wilkinson Warren, and members of her family around the East. Ruthie is taking a computer course and hopes to use her knowledge in getting a job in the insurance area.

Gabrielle Urbanowicz Wehl and Marvin have kept busy in Mobile, both continuing their law practices. For their fourth anniversary they went to Mexico and like Puerto Vallarta especially.

Helen Sockwell wrote from Huntsville, AL, that she had exhibited art work in Brooklyn at the Williamsburg Show in April, had been accepted into the Pratt graduate program in sculpture, had been offered a computer terminal at Intergraph to "play with," attended a sculptor's conference in San Francisco in August, and was inclined to go back-packing in Europe!

Cheryl Viar Upchurch keeps busy with her three daughters in Birmingham, AL. Sam is with a law firm there.

The Atlanta crowd has gained new arrivals in Emory Furness Maxwell, Charles, and their family which includes a new daughter, Christian Key Maxwell, born July 29, 1981. Another new Atlantian is Ellen McMillan Herman and her husband Jeffrey Greg Herman. Ellen plans to take the Georgia bar exam as she practiced law in Los Angeles.

Rossie Ray is no longer Rossie Hewitt and is now the proud owner of an Atlanta condominium. She works for an Atlanta insurance agency and plays lots of tennis. She was at Alumnae Council this fall as v.p. of the Atlanta SBC Club, and she hoped to visit Beth Franke Lynn while in Virginia.

Liz Thomas Camp and Jack have a son, Thomas Henry Camp, born Dec. 13, 1981. They have a new old house down the road from their last home and are still in Newnan, GA. Liz is still district office manager for a Republican Congressman from Georgia.

The news from Florida is that Edwin and Suzanne Williams Click are proud parents of another son, William Thornton Click, born June 22, 1982.

Susan Piper Nagle Hesse, Calvin, Katherine Brooke (2), and Erin Morgan (born Jan. 22, 1982) have moved to the outskirts of Tampa, FL, where Calvin is district sales manager of Eaton Corp., Hoisting Division. Nap time furnishes Susan with a little time for sewing or working on stained glass projects.

The South Carolina contingent reports that Patricia Barnett Greenberg suddenly has more time for community work and bridge now that Barnett is in nursery school and Andy is in "mother's-day-out."

In Charleston Colleen Shannon Robertson is still Director of Recreation for Charleston County Park, Recreation and Tourist Commission. She and Sally Rebenish Randolph got together last year when Sally and John were in Charleston. Dwight is a family doctor in Mt. Pleasant, SC.

Between Drea Peacock Bender and Wanda Cronic Dess, things are busy in Columbia, SC. Wanda has begun a master's degree at the U. of South Carolina in Secondary/Business Education and has a graduate assistant ship at the McKissick Museum. Wanda planned to be at Alumnae Council this fall, but in the meantime was helping plan a joint alum party for SBC and W & L alums. She continues as co-president with Drea of the Columbia SBC Club. Drea has also been very involved with the Richland County Legal Auxiliary Golf Benefit which she chaired this spring. This summer she chaired the ad sales for the AISD Designer Showhouse. She saw Cindy Conroy when Cindy was in Columbia on business. Drea has started a company that makes soft-sculpture dolls,

Betsy Redwine Garner and Reg had a son, Heyward Evans Garner, born May 22, 1982. Alison Irwin is his godmother. Alexander the Cat is coping with the new dog, General, as well as with the new baby.

VIRGINIA: From Amherst, Sandra Stella Horwege writes she attended an Art Slide Curators workshop in Kansas City in June. She is now in charge of art exhibitions at Sweet Briar.

Nancy Blackwell Marion and Dave were married on May 1 and spend their spare time (She is a partner in The Design Group, and he is an accountant) searching for antiques and renovating their 20-room, 1849 house in Lynchburg.

In Charlottesville Linda Hogle is beginning her seventh year as a speech and language pathologist.

Debbie Ryan Cairns and Scott love Richmond. Debbie is awaiting her second child. She sees Mary Satterfield Worrell, Kathy Vuicich and Cindy Craighill.

Ellen Bass Brady and Chuck have a third boy, Mark Barksdale Brady, born Oct. 21, 1981, in Chesapeake, VA.

Lee Wilkinson Warren writes that when school time begins, she plans to resume her pipe organ lessons. Other free moments she reads or smocks dresses for Paige. She and Ruthie Lentz made a short visit to Ann Van Horn earlier this year.

Fondie Mangum Sanderson is now Fondie Rittman. She and Marc were married in Norfolk Botanical Gardens on Aug. 15, 1981. Marc teaches at her alma mater, and they have just bought a house in Virginia Beach. She is still program management specialist with the Stanwick Corp.

Debbie Griffin Tanner and Allen have a girl, Courtney Patricia, born Apr. 9, 1982. Allen and two others now have their own law firm in Newport News. Debbie does volunteer work for the local Planned Parenthood.

Elizabeth Andrews Watts and Bobby announce a daughter, Elizabeth Tomlin Watts, born Mar. 10, 1982, in Norfolk.

In Tappahannock, Elizabeth Nicholson Lewis and Bill adopted a son, William Carrington Lewis, on Sept. 23, 1981.

Daun Thomas, Arlington, has opened her own firm, Daun Veitch Thomas Interior Design, and did a room for the Women's Committee National Symphony Decorators Showhouse. She sees lots of Karla Kline.

This fall Karin Lawson and Keith Teel traveled to Greece and Yugoslavia for three weeks. Both are attorneys in Washington, and they like living in Old Town Alexandria.

When last heard from Linda Kemp was a chartered financial analyst. Having bought a townhouse, she is now learning about home repairs and do-it-yourself bookshelves. She plays tennis with Cindy Conroy, Sharon Mangus and Jody Anderson Wharton '75. She spent two weeks in Egypt last fall and hopes to go back next year. In town she also sees Nancy Mortenson and Terry Lear Evans.

D.C. AREA: Winton Smoot Holladay reports her third child was due in August. She and Hap are renovating an old house in Washington.

The good news from Edie McRee Whiteman and Mac is a son, James Iredell McRee Whiteman, born June 12, 1982. She plans to return to her work at the Smithsonian on a part-time basis in the fall.

Deborah Camalier Walker and Dick had a son, Matthew Davis, on Feb. 8, 1982, in Potomac, MD. Sheila Connor Kerber and David, who just moved back to the Washington area (Bethesda, MD), were expecting a child in October. David is an attorney.

Vicki Bates Roy has finished her B.S. in computer science and now works full time for the National Bureau of Standards in Gaithersburg. She and Daniel are buying a house in Columbia, MD.

ENGLAND: Jane Hutcherson Frierson and Allen have more than memories to bring home next year. Their son Laurance William Frierson was born July 13, 1982. This fall Elizabeth and Bobby Watts plan to visit them over there.

CANADA: Mimi Hill Wilk and Kenny have settled down in Calgary, Alberta. They were married in Beverly Hills on November 14, 1981. Attending were Lou Weston Rainey, Mary Killorin, BB Wheelock Zavell, Karla Kline and Candy Casey '73. BB and Stephen came up to Calgary for Christmas and visited.

A closing note of interest to those of you who are counting. As of this report, between July 1981 and February 1983 there will have been 30 known children born to members of our class.

In the Sweet Briar Tradition

"For several years prior to the Generations Campaign I had been interested in Sweet Briar's Pooled Income Fund," says Lyn Dillard Grones '45. "It was one of those things that sounded like a good idea. Then after becoming aware of the future needs of the College through the Generations Campaign and having decided to put Sweet Briar at the top of my list of philanthropic priorities, I asked the College for a personal illustration."

Lyn found that a contribution to the Pooled Income Fund would allow her to support the College to a greater extent than she ever thought possible. By contributing securities having a low yield, she managed to double her income. She had been advised against selling the securities and reinvesting the proceeds because of their low cost basis which would have resulted in a capital gains tax. By donating them to the Fund the capital gains tax was entirely avoided, and she got a sizable income tax deduction at the time of the gift.

"I had Sweet Briar in my will for this amount anyway. By joining the Fund I got an income tax deduction that I would not have received by making a bequest. Normally," says Lyn half jokingly, "you want to go now and pay later, but my stubborn self wants to give now and go a lot later."

"It is really so simple. I get inflation-proof income for life, save income taxes, reduce estate taxes, and support Sweet Briar's Comprehensive Development Program. When I compare the income I am receiving from the Fund to the actual cost of my contribution," she says, "my return is as good as any investment today. And, best of all, I have the pleasure of giving now."

Lyn, who lives in Virginia Beach, Virginia, is a tree farmer by occupation and a do-er by nature. She is very active with the Red Cross on the local, regional, and national level, and received the Red Cross Clara Barton Award in 1978. She is a member of the Board of Trustees of Stuart Hall and the local Board of the United Way, and she has also been a leader in various church and community groups.

For Sweet Briar, Lyn is Chairman of the Planned Giving Committee, a Life Member of the Boxwood Circle and the Indiana Fletcher Associates, on the Executive Board of the Alumnae Association, and on the Council of the Friends of the Library. She has three daughters, two of them alumnae: Keedie '76, Kathie '79, and Linda.

The Indiana Fletcher Williams Associates was formed to recognize those who support the College with a bequest or other form of deferred gift.

ALUMNAE MAGAZINE      SPRING 1983

VICTOR W. HENNINGSSEN, JR.
2 CORPORATE PARK DRIVE
WHITE PLAINS, NEW YORK 10604

February 11, 1983

TO: ALUMNAE AND FRIENDS OF SWEET BRIAR COLLEGE

It is with the greatest of pleasure that I advise you that Nenah Elinor Fry, Dean of Wells College and Professor of History, has accepted our invitation to be the seventh President of Sweet Briar College. This invitation was extended by the directors on the recommendation of the Presidential Search Advisory Committee.

Dean Fry, a summa cum laude graduate of Lawrence College, received her M.A. and PhD in History from Yale and has served in her present position since 1975. Dean Fry brings to Sweet Briar great academic and administrative skills gained through many years of experience in women's higher education. We are confident she will continue the spirit and efforts of her predecessors in keeping Sweet Briar College at the peak of excellence in women's education.

I know you will join me in extending a warm welcome to Dr. Fry when she comes to Sweet Briar and that we will work together for the future growth and success of our college.

Sincerely,

Victor W. Henningsen, Jr.
Chairman of the Board of Directors and Overseers

Integrating Computer Usage into the Liberal Arts

By Robert L. Chase

Late last summer, President Whiteman was notified that the IBM Corporation had generously donated $25,000 to help increase the use of computing in coursework at Sweet Briar. Why we feel this is an important need and how we are spending the money are two interesting stories.

The computer revolution is upon us. In the near future, the person who is not "computer literate" will have difficulty functioning in our society.

Even though "computer literacy" is a topic worthy of an article in itself, we will try to say what we mean by literacy. It is easy to say what it is not, or rather what the lower limits are. We do not mean that a person literate in computing must be an expert programmer, conversant in several computer languages. Rather, the literate of today should have enough familiarity with computing to utilize some of its benefits without getting bogged down in the details.

The ability of a student to sit down at a terminal attached to our DEC-20, "log in," and run a biology program to teach her about cell membranes is one level of computer literacy. The ability to use a data base management system to organize information, selectively retrieve that information as desired, and generate reports represents a higher level of literacy. A similar level is the ability to use a word processor to enter text and to edit that text by moving words, sentences, and paragraphs around. The machine can then check spelling and forward the whole document to a formatter which sets up pagination, generates a table of contents and an index, and combines different type fonts to print the opus as desired. In short, Sweet Briar wants to provide several paths by which our students can become "computer literate;" these paths break down into two categories, computer science courses and experiences which utilize computing in the traditional liberal arts curriculum.

So, how do we accomplish this integration of computer usage into the liberal arts? Primarily by providing opportunities for our current faculty to acquire the expertise, equipment, and software to use the computer to assist them in teaching in their own areas of specialization. The $25,000 provided by IBM is one such vehicle for those opportunities. Other grant proposals are in process and will be used to supplement not only those projects supported by the IBM grant, but also new projects as well.

The IBM grant was allocated to the following faculty and projects:

John E. Savarese, Associate Professor of English, will conduct a seminar series for faculty entitled "Computing with Text, Ideas, and Language." In this seminar humanists will learn to use the computer as a symbol-manipulation tool as opposed to its typical "number-crunching" uses. There are many components to this seminar; we list a few below:

- Using the computer to manipulate textual symbols — editing, searching, analysis for content, and machine readable text as a resource.
- Natural language analysis and applications to foreign language teaching.
- Tools for symbol manipulation: appropriate languages such as LISP (a "string" or text processing language) and LOGO, etc.

Robert L. Chase is Director of Academic Computing Services and Associate Professor of Mathematical Sciences. He received his B.S. degree from the University of Maine and his Ph. D. from the University of Virginia, taught at Piedmont Virginia Community College and the University of Virginia, and came to Sweet Briar in 1979 as Associate Professor of Physics. He recently completed a National Science Foundation project to develop teaching programs in Astronomy, and a project on electromagnetic scattering for the Army Research Office. As part of his current duties Professor Chase is directing the IBM funded project "Integration of Computer Usage into the Liberal Arts."

Byrd W. Stone, Associate Professor of Education, James L. Alouf, Assistant Professor of Education, and Judith M. Elkins, Charles A. Dana Professor of Mathematical Sciences, will start a long term project which has two aims: expose our education students to the use of computers, and the use of a microcomputer by students in the campus nursery school and kindergarten.

Professor Elkins will work with the Education faculty to acquaint them with microcomputers and their uses, and initiate them into the workings and mysteries of the computer language LOGO — a language specifically developed for learning and teaching — more about this in a moment. Professors Stone and Alouf will then adapt and integrate the microcomputer and the LOGO system into Education courses and into the nursery school and kindergarten.

LOGO is a language developed at MIT's Artificial Intelligence Laboratory to enhance the learning process. It is very easy to use, and in fact has been used by four-year-olds to begin to explore shapes and relationships among shapes and geometry.

Ronald Horwege, Associate Professor of German and Chairman of Modern Languages, will direct a group of faculty who are investigating and adopting commercially available programs for the APPLE microcomputer in Spanish, French, German, and Italian. Students in Spanish have already begun to use customized review programs and are very enthusiastic.

Susan Piepho, Associate Professor of Chemistry, will be furthering her work in computer graphics which will be used in conjunction with design courses in Studio Art.

Brent M. Shea, Assistant Professor of Sociology, will investigate "marrying" a video-tape player and a microcomputer to provide students with an anxiety-free introduction to computers while clarifying and expanding upon material presented in introductory sociology texts.

George Lenz, Whitney-Guion Professor of Physics, is working on using our new color graphics system for teaching and simulations programs, while Margaret Simpson, Professor of Biology, will be working on teaching programs and on using microcomputers in the laboratory.

The remaining funds are being used to sponsor a faculty lecture series entitled "Computing Practices," workshops for faculty new to computing, and to purchase some equipment to support a "Computers in Business" course.

All in all, we feel we are making good use of the money IBM so generously gave us, and we hope to persuade other corporations and foundations to help us further the integration of computer usage into the liberal arts.

Computer Operations at Sweet Briar

By Leif Aagaard, Jr.

It was a year ago, Christmas 1981, when the new Computer Center went on-line at Sweet Briar College. The renovation of the current location and installation of the computer took months of careful planning which paid off royally. The end result was a functional Computer Center centrally located to students, faculty and administration.

The Computer Center is located in The Mary Helen Cochran Library with entrance from the east terrace. Under the advisement of Leif Aagaard, Jr. (Technical Director of the Computer Center) and Dr. Robert L. Chase (Director of Academic Computing) special computer-related equipment was purchased to provide the computer with an excellent environment. A special raised floor was installed for three reasons: 1) for the computer to sit on; 2) for electric and data cables to be placed out of sight and easily moved; and 3) for the distribution of air conditioning. Speaking of air conditioning, the environment is a very critical element in the operation of the computer. Poor electric power or inadequate air conditioning can result in a computer that is unreliable and goes down frequently. A special environmental air handler was purchased in order to maintain a constant humidity and temperature level. The computer room is maintained at 72° and 50% humidity year around. In order to provide clean electrical power to the computer, a power management system was purchased to distribute computer grade power. The system filters out sags, surges, and spikes. The unit will essentially protect the computer from anything shy of a power outage lasting more than 2 cycles. This means the computer can run through thunderstorms with minimal chances of damage from lightning.

Special surge suppressors were installed on all terminals which protect them from lightning and other electrical disturbances. The time and additional expense invested in this added protection were worth it. The end result proved to be cost effective in reduced computer downtime and maintenance costs. In fact only one terminal had to be repaired last year, and the malfunction was not due to a thunderstorm. With the computer equipment adequately protected against power fluctuations, no second or third shift operators were needed for our 24-hour per day, 7-day per week operation.

The computer is made by Digital Equipment Corporation in Massachusetts. It is a DECsystem 2040 with 512,000 (36 bit) words — about 3 million characters of main memory. It has an on-line storage capacity of 528 million characters in disk storage and 32 access ports for terminals and printers. If and when needed, the DEC-20 can be increased in memory 7 times, internal speed 3-4 times, access ports 4 times, and disk 5+ times. This means the computer can grow to meet the ever increasing needs for computing at Sweet Briar. The DECsystem 20 family of computers is considered a main-frame vs. a mini-computer. Many leading universities world-wide utilize DECsystem 20s. Based on studies conducted last fall, Sweet Briar College today owns more computing power with its DECsystem 20 than any other college its size in the United States.

Administrative computing has seen tremendous change during 1982. All computer systems have been converted from batch to on-line. Computer terminals now collect information to be updated and inquire into data files throughout the day. Cards, which were used for all data input, have been eliminated. Video terminals (CRT'S) and hardcopy printers have been located in various administrative offices to provide direct access to data files. Administrative systems currently on-line include Payroll, Accounts Payable and Receivable, the Student Record Information System, the Alumnae Gift System, and the Prospects-Admissions System. In addition the Department of Security and Office of Student Affairs have developed small systems utilizing our dew data base management system. Security now maintains parking decal information on-line and Student Affairs used the data base to assign student housing last fall.

All systems have been converted to the System 1022 data base which provides quick retrieval and data management facilities. It has been the goal of the Computer Center to develop systems in such a manner that information can flow easily from one system to another with minimal effort (ie. a student is added to the prospect system, then becomes an applicant, then a student, then an alumna). Under the old system the name and address was entered multiple times into the computer, whereas now it is entered once.

Users are becoming more independent in their use of the computer. They now inquire into their data bases and obtain information whether it be on the CRT or hard-copy printer in a matter of minutes. Throughout the day it is quite typical to see 8-10 administrative users on-line interacting with their data at any one time. The trend evolving is for each department to manage its own data and generate its own reports, when it needs them. This is possible since the DEC-20 can run many jobs simultaneously.

Last summer the Computer Center conducted a week-long workshop for first-time users to the computer. Since it was received so well, a second workshop will be conducted during the spring. One of the goals of the Computer Center is to provide training and small workshops/clinics on specific subjects to the administration, faculty and staff. These workshops serve two purposes: 1) to train many people at one time, and 2) to stimulate more and better use of the computer. The computer provides each user with tremendous power, but that power can only be released with proper commands or tools. A good understanding of these commands or tools will allow a user access to that power contained within the computer.

Futures — where are we going? That is a good question and largely depends on how the computer is used. Now that all the major administrative systems are on-line, the next step is to develop new systems and add enhancements to the existing ones.

In addition to this development, Office Automation will play a key role in 1983. Software products are currently being evaluated that will run on the DEC-20 and bring the power of word processing and office automation to each person having access to a CRT terminal. Some of the components offered in the O/A software will be: electronic mail creation, forwarding, distribution, filing and retrieving; word and list processing which provides each user with most features found in stand-alone word processors costing $6-$12,000; a spelling feature to identify and change misspelled words in documents and letters; document folders to store mail, letters, and other documents (ie. electronic filing cabinet); document formatting to provide special formatting features like index creation, table of contents creation, chapters, sections, sub-pages and pagination for special reports.

The Computer Center staff consists of three full-time and three part-time employees. Seven students are employed to assist in operation. The full-time staff consists of Leif Aagaard, Jr., Technical Director of the Computer Center, Teresa Pace, Programmer/Analyst, and Ronald Driskill, Operations Supervisor/Programmer. Part-time employees consist of Professor Robert L. Chase, Director of Academic Computing, and Jackie Beidler, secretary/receptionist. We have an excellent team, all working to provide Sweet Briar College with the best computing center possible.

In conclusion, it is quite evident that great advances have taken place during the past year in computing at Sweet Briar College. 1983 should be even more exciting. When you are on campus, please stop by for a visit!

Majors in Computer Science

By Robert L. Chase

The breakup of the Tri-College Computer Center in December of 1981 brought more to Sweet Briar than the DECsystem 2040 main-frame computer. It brought the spirit of a new direction academically — that of a major effort in academic computing. The faculty felt, during the planning process, that our own on-campus computer center would serve to expand computing by having the resources (both people and machinery), close at hand. This expansion has taken two forms: the new courses and new majors offered by the recently renamed Department of Mathematical Sciences, and the beginnings of a program to integrate computing further into the liberal arts. Here we will talk about new offerings in the Department of Mathematical Sciences.

This Fall saw, for the first time, computer science offered as part of a major at Sweet Briar, the major in Mathematics-Computer Science. Rather than offer what the academic and industrial community recognize as a pure computer science major with the required engineering facilities to support the large number of “hardware courses,” Sweet Briar has chosen to present the basics of an education in computer science in such a way that they may be integrated with other interests to form “combined majors” such as Mathematics-Computer Science, Economics-Computer Science, and Studio Art-Computer Science.

The New Courses:

Math. Sci. 191: Programming Methodologies

This is generally the second computer course taken by Sweet Briar students. After completing the FORTRAN course, our students are ready for more advanced topics such as top-down structured programming in which programs are developed by refining the problem into smaller and smaller pieces until each piece is simple to program. Other advanced topics include programming in a structured language, such as Pascal, in which the language itself is broken into blocks which are complete in themselves, and the topic of iteration versus recursion. Iteration is merely the repetition of a procedure while some parameters (numbers) in the procedure are changed, while recursion is the definition of a process or procedure in terms of itself. A simple example of recursion is the factorial function. The factorial of 4, for example is  $4 \times 3 \times 2 \times 1$ , and the factorial of 3 is  $3 \times 2 \times 1$ . So we can say that the factorial of 4 is 4 times the factorial of 3. And, in general, the factorial of N is defined as N times the factorial of N-1.

Math. Sci. 214: Discrete Structures

This course takes many topics common in mathematics and applies them to the study of computers and computer science. These topics primarily include the algebraic and combinatorial methods of pure mathematics.

Math. Sci. 236: Computer Systems and Organization

A study of how computers are organized internally, using assembly language as the vehicle for the study. In addition to the computer's hardware organization, the course covers how numbers are represented within the computer, and how the arithmetic itself is carried out.

Math. Sci. 238: Data and File Structures

How can information be organized within a computer and how should it be organized to most efficiently solve the problem at hand? Data structures usually refers to the organization of data within the computer's memory, while file structures is concerned with information on external storage devices such as magnetic tape or magnetic disk.

All of the combined majors have as their core one year of calculus, linear algebra, FORTRAN, and the new courses described above with the exception of Math. Sci. 214. A student who completes any one of these majors is in a position to put her skills to work immediately as an employee or in graduate school in computer science. ■

SALLIE MULLINS THOMPSON, '65

I have been an IBM Systems Engineer for nine years. I never had any formal training for the job, but I believe the company was attracted to me by my background: two years of teaching experience, a masters degree in guidance and counseling, a good liberal arts education and my performance on tests given by IBM.

IBM has an extensive training program for new employees, so technical knowledge is not crucial. They are looking for people with aptitude who relate well and communicate effectively.

As for the teaching of computer techniques, the most important concept is how to solve problems in a logical, effective and timely fashion.

The computers of the future are going to help us solve problems more effectively. I think the average person will use the computer as a tool in many phases of life. The computer will eventually be a commonplace item in many areas, as the calculator has become.

VICTORIA BATES ROY, '74

Sweet Briar's acquisition of a DEC-2040 computer and the establishment of a new mathematics-computer science major are important contributions to the realization of the College's goal of providing its students with an education for a productive life in today's society.

More and more, computers are becoming an integral part of our daily lives. Today's children grow up using computers from an early age. Like our grandparents, who sometimes feel overwhelmed by the technological advances of this century, those of us who do not learn something about computers are likely to feel surpassed by our children and grandchildren, for whom dealing with computers will be second nature.

Moreover, the 1980s promise to be exciting years involving the integration of computers into society. Advances in the area of artificial intelligence will result in the design of what are known in computer jargon as "user friendly" or "human engineered" systems, i.e. systems which will bridge the gap between computers and users by greatly reducing the amount of knowledge and effort required to make the systems meet users' needs. It will be a stimulating and challenging time for those in the field of computer science.

This is not to say that everyone should major in computer science, although some of today's students will choose to make their careers in this exciting field; but even those whose interests seem far removed from the world of computers have everything to gain by taking a few computer science courses. A computer is a tool which has useful applications in any field, and a Sweet Briar graduate with a knowledge of programming has a built-in marketable skill when she begins to look for that first job.

Having taken no classes in computer science myself, I decided three years ago to go back to school to earn a B.S. in computer science. My preparation for the degree included programming classes in FORTRAN, PASCAL, and assembly language, as well as courses in data structures and run-time structures. These subjects were supplemented by more theoretical courses in logic and theory of computation plus two semesters of calculus and one of combinatorics and graph theory.

One of the more rewarding aspects of being a student again was my participation in the Cooperative Education (or Coop) Program. Under this program I alternated semesters of full-time study with semesters of full-time work in a computer related position at the National Bureau of Standards. At NBS I gained experience which would have been impossible to obtain in the classroom and, upon graduating, I accepted a full-time position there.

There are several points which I think are valuable for students of computer science to keep in mind. First, structured programming, which is the modern approach to programming, is a way of thinking. Learning top down design, that is, the process of breaking a problem down into successively smaller and more detailed tasks, is made easier if good programming habits are established from the beginning. For this reason, it is best that the first language one learns be a structured language such as PASCAL.

Second, in any programming project the design phase is the most important. Students (and professional programmers) are often tempted to begin coding a program, or writing it directly in the chosen programming language, without going through all the steps of top down design. However, the more time spent in the careful design of a program, the less time will be required for debugging and modifying it later. In the classroom, failure to remember this can mean failure to complete an assigned program before the due date. On the job, the results can be very costly in terms of time and money.

A third point to remember is that emphasis should be placed on producing clearly commented code. Every programming language provides a means for the programmer to insert comments or explanations about the program. These comments are not processed by the computer, but serve solely to aid programmers in debugging and maintaining programs. Whether a program is to be maintained by its original designer or by someone else, helpful comments are indispensable. To become convinced of this, one need only attempt to understand a program written by someone who is not available to furnish explanations or even a program written by himself some time before.

Finally, it is important to realize that programming is a skill learned by doing. No amount of reading, studying, or listening to a professor can teach one how to program. The only way is to try it, again and again.

The computing facilities provided by the DEC-2040, combined with the excellent student-faculty ratio at Sweet Briar and the desire of Sweet Briar faculty members to make computer science enjoyable and rewarding, ensure that Sweet Briar students will be spared the hardships faced by computer science students in large universities. These students must often contend with overcrowded classrooms, extremely limited access to computer facilities, and teachers who, being students themselves, rarely have sufficient time to devote to their students' needs. I sincerely hope that Sweet Briar students will take advantage of and enjoy this unequalled opportunity to become acquainted with the fascinating and fast growing field of computer science.

EUGENIA DICKEY CALDWELL '65

EUGENIA DICKEY CALDWELL, '65

My husband, who has his own computer system, says that he should write these comments. He tells me that in 10 years as many Americans will own home computers as own television sets; that they'll cost less than television sets; that we'll all use them to pay our bills, buy bicycles, look up information, order groceries, get the stock market report.

I can't think of any more compelling reasons for everyone to take one basic computer course. If you're going to have to feed the monster, you might as well learn what it likes to eat, and what to do when it acts up.

When I went to Sweet Briar, there weren't any computer science courses, so I majored in math — a happy choice. I didn't have to go to graduate school; every company for whom I've worked has paid me while they trained me.

For the last eight years, I've worked as a data base management specialist at the National Finance Center of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

We're well paid; I read recently that only 1% of American working women earn more than $25,000 a year. All of the women I know who have been in data processing for eight to ten years earn more than that. Also, at least in my present office, I've seen no discrimination or prejudice against women.

Data processing is a good career for women who plan to establish themselves, then drop out for a few years to raise a family, then return to work.

I would never waste time and money taking a Master's degree in computer science unless I intended to teach; I do wish I had been able to take a few hours of business courses in college. Not that I don't appreciate my liberal arts degree! The further I advance in my career, the more time I seem to spend writing and speaking. In my group of five data base specialists, only two of us can string words together to form an intelligible sentence, and it really gives us an advantage.

I would encourage the Sweet Briar faculty to emphasize business, not scientific programming. Look through the want ads in the New York Times and you'll see that ninety percent of the data processing jobs are for business applications; processing a payroll, doing accounts, keeping up with an inventory. They all want COBOL programmers.

One note of caution to students: the editor of Working Woman magazine recently wrote that she had stopped accepting speaking engagements on college campuses because she had found that most of the young women were making no career plans, but expected Prince Charming to ride up one day and carry them off. Like it or not, the odds are excellent that someday you'll have to support yourself, so you'd better train yourself now to do something lucrative.

MARGARET MILLENDER HOLMES, '63

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Magilicuddy, the computer must have made an error." Don't you believe it. The principal values of a computer are speed and volume. These enable one of Ma Bell's operatives to handle thousands of calls and also enable one low horsepower billing clerk to send out zillions of incorrect invoices.

Twenty years ago computers were small, expensive, spooky, and recalcitrant. The government and General Motors had them. A decade ago the "mini's" came to the business world in a big way, and moderately small companies reluctantly joined the computer age. Computers that fifteen years ago were multimillion dollar machines are now sold by the corner store. The bookshelf in your local Radio Shack has treatises of "assembly-language programming," ten years ago a topic for advanced graduate students who agonized over it, but today a subject mastered by twelve-year-olds just for fun.

"Computer literacy" has become the new buzzword in elementary schools and should become a requisite for college graduation. Only by understanding the new technology do we have the tools to use it wisely and well. Don't become a slave to the billing clerk with the computer. Take a computer course and find out what's going on. If nothing else it will help bridge the generation gap between you and your child. He may be so impressed with your creaky old noggin that he will even take the time to show you some really nifty programming tips.

KAREN STEINHARDT KIRKBRIDE, '56

I graduated from Sweet Briar College with a major in mathematics in 1956. (Later, I obtained a Masters Degree (1971) from Georgetown University in Philosophy.) Although some universities offered computer courses, when I graduated from SBC I obtained my first position without any formal training in the computer field. At the time employers were eager to hire students who had obtained a degree in mathematics. The degree in mathematics represented both an interest and an ability to pursue a computer-related career. It is interesting to note that the mathematical background was necessary for the ability to perform scientific programming of computers, but not necessary for data processing applications which make up the greater percentage of problems faced by most managers in industry and government.

My training has been acquired primarily on the job in two different ways. The first and most significant type of training has involved self-education by means of learning how to accomplish the objectives of assignments given to me. The second has involved attendance at related computer courses sponsored by universities, industry and government.

During my career I have been employed in several capacities: (1) A Computer Systems Analyst for the Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) performing a function for the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs); (2) A Statistician for OASD (HA); (3) A Computer Systems Specialist for the System Development Corporation; (4) A self-employed consultant to the National Institute of Mental Health; (5) A Programming Analyst for the General Electric Company; (6) A Programmer for the Council for Economic and Industrial Research; (7) An Engineer for the Martin Company; and (8) A Mathematician-Programmer for Technical Operations, Inc. Thus, my knowledge of Automatic Data Processing Systems is based on 24 years experience in the ADP field (17 as a contractor and 7 as a government employee). My experience as a Contractor was primarily of a technical nature, while my experience as a Federal Government employee has been at the Management Level; this experience has been primarily gained on the job with the exception of courses I have elected to attend.

My suggestions for the teaching of computer techniques at the college level are two-fold. First, there should be, and probably these already exist, formal courses offered in computer technology. These courses should be both general (at least one survey type) and particular (specific computers, and data base management systems and computer languages) in nature. Any Mathematics or Science major should be required to take several hours in computer technology courses. Other majors should be urged to take a survey course because of the strong influence of computers in today's world. Secondly, with the availability of a Digital Computer Center at the College there should be open hours of computer use by any student who has been scheduled for time in the center to observe, utilize or/and learn from the facility first-hand both what computers can and cannot do.

My ideas and thoughts about how computers are going to affect the lives of today's (and tomorrow's) Sweet Briar graduates are based on the observation that almost every school child today already has mastered some elements of computer technology and is comfortable with the computer environment. All facets of life (both professional and personal) do and will mean understanding at least the basics involved with the modern tool of digital computers. We can solve conventional problems easier (with less time and manpower — not less brain power) and explore new areas hitherto too time-consuming (expensive and/or impractical due to time frame of results) to pursue. Computers are here to stay for better (and worse sometimes)!

LIZ SWEARINGEN, '80

During my four years as a Fine Arts student at Sweet Briar, I had acquired no aptitude for math, had admittedly spent as little time as necessary in Guion, and hadn't a clue as to how to speak FORTRAN (a scientific computer language designed for engineering problem-solving).

When I was offered, by the communications/marketing firm with which I had been working since graduation, a position as "systems operator" with our newly begun Computer Graphics division, I was apprehensive. Maybe Computer Graphics meant drawing with a typewriter!

I am pleased to report that, after two years, I am still employed at VisCom (an acronym for visual communications), and have grown accustomed to manipulating a Digitizing Pad and Cursor in a way similar to that of a drawing pad and pencil. Our computer is used in the production of 35-millimeter slides which our clients use in audio-visual presentations.

A computer-generated illustration of our system.

Our system consists of several components enabling a single operator to design, create, save, re-display and record images. These are the Touch Monitor, a Digitizing Pad and a Color Monitor. Our computer is designed for the creation of visuals, and it recognizes the English language; it processes information faster than people can and expedites the generation and revision of visual imagery.

Speed and accuracy are two great advantages to the use of computers. I am happy to learn that art students may now benefit from their installation at Sweet Briar.

A Woman, A Mathematician, A Model

By Karen Hunger Parshall

"In the judgment of the most competent living mathematicians, Fraulein Noether was the most significant mathematical genius thus far produced since the higher education of women began."

So wrote perhaps the most significant creative genius in physics in a letter to the editor of the New York Times shortly after Emmy Noether's death in 1935. That physicist, Albert Einstein, went on to explain that "in the realm of algebra, in which the most gifted mathematicians have been busy for centuries, [Noether] discovered methods which have proved of enormous importance in the development of the present-day younger generation of mathematicians."

Her methods and, in fact, her entire philosophical approach to mathematics have inspired some of the greatest mathematical talents of the twentieth century and have served to establish Emmy Noether as one of the premier mathematicians, male or female, of all time.

When Emmy Noether was born in Erlangen, Germany, on March 23, 1882, however, not even the possibility of her rise to the absolute pinnacle of her chosen field was a foregone conclusion. At that time, and up through the academic year 1903-1904, women were not permitted to enroll formally in university courses nor were they able to obtain German university degrees (although auditing specific courses was possible). This limited their education to the secondary or Gymnasium level and necessarily restricted their later career options.

Like so many other daughters of fairly well-to-do families, Emmy Noether attended the local girls' school to prepare for the state secondary school teachers' examination. Unlike so many young women of this period, however, Emmy Noether was born with mathematics in her blood.

Her father, Max, reigned as one of the grand old men of late nineteenth century German mathematics and taught at the hometown University of Erlangen, one of the European centers of mathematics at this time. Emmy, then, not only had mathematics in her genes but also lived in an intense mathematical environment. She concentrated primarily on modern languages in high school, but after graduation she continued her studies at her father's university, this time pursuing mathematics.

During her first semester at the university, the winter term of 1900-1901, Emmy was one of two women auditors among 984 male students and sat in both her father's classes and in the courses offered by his famous colleague, Paul Gordon. Gordon, one of the major forces in the then active area of mathematics known as invariant theory, so impressed the young Fraulein Noether that when women became eligible for degrees in 1904, she enrolled at Erlangen and wrote her doctoral dissertation under his direction. Later she would denounce both her thesis and her related publications as too computational and lacking in abstraction, but in 1907 when she earned her Ph.D., Emmy Noether was still a student under the sway of her powerful advisor and his ideas. By her own admission she did not reach a state of mathematical maturity and independence until 1919 when she published her first completely original paper, not in invariant theory, but in a totally different area, the theory of ideals.

By this time, 1919, Noether had thoroughly established herself both in Erlangen and in Gottingen, the center of European mathematics, as a serious and extremely capable mathematician. In fact, in the spring of 1915, she went to Gottingen at the invitation of none other than Felix Klein and David Hilbert, the former

Karen Parshall came to Sweet Briar last fall as an Assistant Professor in the Mathematics Department. She earned her B.A. degree in mathematics and French, as well as an M.S. in mathematics, at the University of Virginia, and then received a Ph.D. in history from the University of Chicago.

"Although this sounds like a pretty varied program," she says, "it really does fit together pretty well, since my speciality is the history of nineteenth and early twentieth century mathematics."

She also does research in the history of biology and recently published a paper on the work of Charles Darwin.

an important nineteenth century mathematical figure and the latter considered even today as the greatest mathematician of the twentieth century. Even at this time, though, women were not permitted to teach at the university level, so Klein and Hilbert tried to secure Emmy's Habilitation, or right to teach, by virtue of her outstanding post-doctoral research. They hoped that, if granted, she could at least hold the teaching position of Privatdozent or unpaid lecturer. Unfortunately, the faculty refused her bid on the grounds that German academic law only gave men the right to Habilitation. This denial prompted Hilbert's now-famous retort: "I do not see that the sex of the candidate is an argument against her admission as Privatdozent. After all, we are a university and not a bathing establishment." To circumvent the pigheadedness on the part of certain factions within the university, Hilbert had various courses and seminars listed officially under his name even though they were actually taught by Noether. This was one way around the administration's ban on women professors, but it still did not provide Emmy with any sort of salary.

After the first World War, however, the political and social reforms which swept Germany made it possible for women to be granted Habilitation. During the early part of the summer of 1919, Emmy Noether earned her Habilitation, the position of Privatdozent, and the right to teach under her own name. Still, it was not until 1923 that she held a position which actually carried with it some sort of remuneration.

This period, beginning in 1919 and extending until 1933 when she was forced to leave Germany, marked the apex of Emmy's scientific career. Her research in abstract algebra drew a large number of mathematicians to her side in Gottingen where they formed such an obvious society that they were dubbed "the Noether boys." This group consisted not only of her students but also of other like-minded mathematicians, like-minded in the sense of a shared belief in the need for greater and greater abstraction in mathematics. Their weekly and often daily meetings centered either in the classroom, the office, Noether's apartment, or the forests around Gottingen. They were intense and lively exchanges where new ideas sprang forth and developed into new theorems.

At these get-togethers, Emmy Noether was unquestionably the master. By virtue of her imposing ideas as well as her imposing presence (for she was a large, plain, almost mannish woman who had been described as crude and overbearing on more than one occasion), Noether commanded the loyalty of her followers. She argued vehemently against those who denounced her abstract methods as "so much theology," but at the same time she looked out for her students with almost motherly zeal. Often criticized for her teaching methods (her critics claimed she had none) and disorganized lectures, Emmy Noether captivated the members of her group who found her words both powerful and inspirational.

Noether and her "boys," mathematicians of international repute such as Claude Chevalley, Max Deuring, Bertel van der Waerden, and Ernst Witt among at least two dozen others, worked together in a mathematical microcosm and altered the lay of many mathematical lands. As Noether herself once explained in a letter to a colleague: "My methods are really methods of working and thinking; this is why they have crept in everywhere anonymously." This sentiment was later echoed by two specialists in topology, a very different branch of mathematics from Noether's. In the preface to their famous treatise entitled Topology, Heinz Hopf and Pavel Alexandroff explained that "Emmy Noether's general mathematical insights were not confined to her specialty — algebra — but affected anyone who came in touch with her work." In the eyes of many of her colleagues, the dissolution of this dynamic and creative society at Gottingen was one of the many tragedies of the Hitler takeover of Germany.

Emmy's problems relative to the Nazi regime began shortly after the International Congress of Mathematicians met in Zurich in September of 1932. At this meeting, she had scored a definitive coup, being the first woman ever to be invited to give one of her major addresses. Unfortunately, neither this honor nor the prestige associated with it prevented the Prussian Ministry of Education, on April 7, 1933, from withdrawing her right to teach. Emmy Noether, like so many other of her very visible Jewish colleagues, had fallen victim to the Nazi persecution of Jews. Since the attempts of her many influential friends to have her reinstated failed, she had little choice but to seek employment as a visiting professor outside Germany. So, in October of 1933, she left Germany for America and a visiting position at Bryn Mawr.

In the United States, Emmy benefited not only from the congenial atmosphere at her host school but also from the close proximity of Bryn Mawr to Princeton. As she herself noted, however, it was not the "men's university where nothing female is permitted" which attracted her but rather the newly-formed Institute for Advanced Study located just next door.

The Institute, a brainchild of Abraham Flexner and the mathematician, Oswald Veblen, had been founded in 1930 as a center devoted solely to research. The faculty consisted of a core of permanent members, such as Einstein and Hermann Weyl. It was supplemented annually by visiting scholars, but there were no teaching duties. Research was the sanctioned activity although seminars on various specialized topics were held on a weekly basis for any or all to attend. These working, research-level seminars lured Emmy each week from Philadelphia to Princeton. Once again, at the Institute as in Gottingen, she made her presence known through her ideas and her enthusiasm. Undoubtedly, the American phase of her career could have been as stellar as the Gottingen years of 1919-33. It had certainly gotten off to a strong and active start.

This however, was not to be. On April 14, 1935, Emmy Noether died in Bryn Mawr from post-operative complications. The entire mathematical community mourned her death. No fewer than eight obituaries and tributes appeared around the world. From Spain to Argentina and from the United States to Russia, the impact of this loss to mathematics was felt. Although her career had been hampered from the very beginning by the fact that she was a woman and then later by the fact that she was a Jew, Emmy Noether rarely let these prejudices interfere with her life's work. First and foremost she was a mathematician and, to the vast majority of her colleagues, a mathematician of the highest possible caliber. Perhaps nowhere was this better expressed than in the obituary written by her South American colleague, Sagastume Berra. In his words, "the veneration which the intellect of this admirable woman generates is no less ardent than the reverence and love she inspires in her students by her personal qualities. This may be a lesson to those who still today follow the medieval practice of judging women as intellectually and psychologically inferior."

Knowledge-Based Computing

By John E. Savarese

Can we endow computers with knowledge? If that question bothers you, perhaps it would be better to phrase it this way: is it reasonable to apply the label "knowledge" to any of the tricks we can make computers do? In a way, the answer is yes. First let's examine the use humans can make of their knowledge, particularly when they are trying to make sense out of a message. Try the experiment in figure #1.

[Experiment: cover the boxes below and examine them one at a time. Try to guess the words by filling in the missing letters. In later boxes, more help is provided by the way the words are presented. This experiment reveals how people use their knowledge to fill in missing parts of a message.]

The experiment in figure #1 demonstrates how we use information that is not contained in a message to make sense out of it. You needed knowledge about movie marquee and the habits of pirates to take advantage of the clues. Note that you were never given a picture of a treasure or an island. Also, you were probably unaware of the search strategy that your mind was using to solve the puzzle: at one point you just "saw" the missing letters. This is the phenomenon that Martin Gardner of Scientific American called "aha" or "insight."

By way of contrast, let's look at a computer trying to solve the same kind of puzzle. I will take an example from a forthcoming book by Elizabeth Ferrarini called Confessions of an Insomniac. Ferrarini describes her humorous frustration in trying to use a computerized encyclopedia. Her first inquiry is a simple one. She wants to look up the entry on "telephone," but she mistypes the word as “telephone.” The computer is baffled. It finally admits defeat, but not until it has slogged through everything its unimaginative mind can think she might have really meant:

TL

Here the computer reveals its basic limitation. It can only work by pattern matching, painfully comparing one letter at a time, looking for an exact correspondence. In contrast, humans possess a power that is called “pattern recognition,” and catching on to “telephone” is a snap for us. But actually pattern recognition is just a name for something we don’t understand. It is like “phlogiston,” the name of a substance invented by early physicists to explain what happens when things burn. It may turn out that pattern recognition is just as mythical. It may be that what the human brain does is just extremely complex pattern matching. And then again, it may not! Don’t expect that question to be answered soon, certainly not here. But computer pioneers have been figuring out ways to make the pattern-matching computer do some of the tasks that humans use pattern recognition for.

This feat relies on what we learned from the Treasure Island experiment. Humans augment their pattern matching abilities by applying their knowledge about the world. In case you think that principle only applies to rebuses and word puzzles, here is another example.

At the height of rush hour one day, a woman who had left her driver’s license home turned the wrong way up a one-way street and went three blocks, right in the view of a policeman. Yet he made no attempt to arrest her. Why not?

Because she was on foot. Riddles like this one, from Martin Gardner’s Aha! Insight, demonstrate that we aren’t even aware of much of the filling-in-the-blanks that we do when we make sense of the simplest message. And it doesn’t have to be an ambiguous or puzzling message: “The policeman raised his arm and stopped the car.” That sentence activates knowledge about traffic regulations and what it takes to halt a car. How do we shoehorn that kind of knowledge about how the world works into a computer?

The solution is models. If you are thinking of remodeling your kitchen, you don’t lug the refrigerator around to see if it will fit where the stove is. It is easier to cut slips of paper to the scale of your appliances and move them around. A model consists of symbols which correspond to the things you are modeling in some important way (like scale), plus rules for manipulating those symbols in a sensible way (the pieces of paper can’t overlap).

Since computers are primarily symbol-manipulating machines, they are ideal for making models. The computer game Zork is a good example of what is entailed in implementing a model, since it tries to make a reasonable facsimile of an entire imaginary universe. Zork belongs to the Adventure family. In case you don’t have a thirteen-year-old handy to explain Adventure, the player is imagined to be finding her way through a maze of rooms, passages, and paths, searching for treasures like platinum bars and gold wands while vanquishing evil gnomes with axes and surmounting other obstacles. To make the game seem lifelike the computer must keep track of where you are, what you are carrying, and where you will end up if you go through a certain door. It must behave sensibly, not allowing you to pick up a gold coffin if you are already toting a heavy load of weapons and treasure. If there is a precipice to the east of you, and you insist on going that way, it must inform you that you have broken your neck.

It turns out that there is a simple but very powerful notion that comes to our aid here: objects and their properties can be represented as lists of symbols. For instance, a door can be open or closed, locked or unlocked. If it is made of wood, it may be possible to force it with an axe. The list that keeps track of a particular door is shown in figure #2.b. Locations can be lists too (figure #2.a.), showing what room you will enter if you leave in a particular direction (there are only six directions in Zork: up, down, north, south, east, and west).

LOUD ROOM	N	S	E	W	UP	DOWN
	PUMP ROOM	NO EXIT	PRECIPICE	TREASURE ROOM	NOTHING	TRAP DOOR

INVENTORY	SWORD	BROWN PAPER SACK
-----------	-------	------------------

SWORD	WEAPON QUALITIES		WEIGHT
	CAN KILL	CAN BE BROKEN BY:	10 LB
	DWARVES	AXE

	NO	TWO HOT PEPPERS
		SANDWICH BOTTLE

BOTTLE	CONTAINER QUALITIES		WEIGHT
	CAN HOLD FLUIDS?	PRESENT CONTENTS	8 OZ
	YES	WATER

An even more powerful notion is the list of lists. In the inventory of what you are carrying, for example, there might be containers which have a list of other objects as their contents (see figure #3). The list of lists can represent this in a way that is handy for computing the total weight of what you are carrying, and it also makes it possible to drop the paper sack without explicitly saying that you want to drop each object inside it too.

It is time to put these concepts to work on something that sounds more serious than Zork. Let's go back to the problem Elizabeth Ferrarini had trying to look up "telephone" in the computerized encyclopedia. At Sweet Briar we have a much smarter program which was developed at the Stanford Artificial Intelligence Laboratory for checking the spelling in a document. If it comes across a word it doesn't recognize it tries dropping and swapping letters to unscramble the letters into words that do exist in its dictionary. But remember, it can only rely on pattern matching, so at this point the program turns to the user for help. It asks you to tell which of its guesses is best. Once when I was demonstrating the spelling program in class I ran a paper through it in which the student had mistyped "female" as "famale." The Stanford speller came up with two guesses, the correct one and "tamale." You see, the program has no sense of what the words mean or the context in which they appear. Sometimes of course the results show a sense of humor, like a ouija board: in response to the typo "English Department," the program guessed both "English Department" and "Anguish Department!"

Even a spelling checker would be much more helpful if it had an idea of what the words mean, and this is true in many practical applications of computers. Legal cases have been indexed on computers, for example, but such systems are plagued by multitudes of false alarms. How do you specify a complex legal issue in terms of key words alone? Think how many irrelevant entries you would find if you asked for all the cases in the Uniform Commercial Code that dealt with bad checks. Researchers at the University of Michigan have applied the idea of object and property lists (which we saw in action in Zork) to describing legal concepts. Their system "knows" for example that a check is a kind of draft, which in turn is a kind of negotiable instrument, so that decisions about the endorsement of one class of instrument may apply to another.

Even more important than knowing about objects and their properties is the power to manipulate them according to sensible rules. In Zork such a rule would be, "If the door is locked, you need a key to open it." Providentially, it turns out that such rules can be represented as lists of lists too! Every such rule consists of three parts: a test, what to do if the test comes out true, what to do otherwise. At Sweet Briar we have a program written in LOGO on an Apple microcomputer which embodies enough knowledge about familiar animals to play twenty questions at the level of a pre-schooler. The knowledge is organized as a list of lists. In figure #4 these lists are displayed in the form of a tree. When the program runs out of guesses (which it does pretty often) it asks the player for a question to recognize the unknown animal by, and adds new knowledge to its tree. You might want to try to figure out where it would add a new question for "unicorn."

This technique is powerful enough to prospect for minerals, diagnose diseases, synthesize chemicals, recognize molecules, and configure computer systems. So-called "expert systems" are being developed which capture that special knowledge of human practitioners. Perhaps the most exciting possibilities are in the field of education. Tutoring programs have been developed which possess two sets of knowledge. They know a specialty like medicine, but they also understand something about how people learn, and how to get at the misconceptions which underly their mistakes. A program called BUGGY trains teachers of basic mathematics to perceive the mistaken rules which young children are often applying when they seem to be getting their arithmetic "wrong." I believe we will see this pedagogic principle applied to programs for the teaching of writing skills.

Industry and government are bankrolling research into programs which use large amounts of knowledge about the world to imitate human problem solving. One conspicuous example is the expensive Japanese quest for the "Fifth Generation" of computers. Commercial products are already becoming available, such as Intellect, a program which allows managers to ask their computer questions in natural-sounding English sentences. The office will probably be one of the first places we will directly experience knowledge-based systems. I predict (and predictions about the future of computing are never wise) that such systems will draw more and more people into contact with computers. There will be an increasing demand for computer experts, but also for "alien experts," specialists in areas outside computers who will assist "knowledge engineers" in feeding knowledge into the machines in a form they can understand. Many Sweet Briar graduates (and this is a safe prediction) will be found among all these experts.

John Savarese, associate professor of English at Sweet Briar, received the A.B. degree from Fordham University, College of Philosophy and Letters, and the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Princeton University. He is working on the development of computer usage for language study and was awarded Cabell and Mednick Memorial Grants to study natural language processing systems at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University this past summer. During the Winter and Spring terms of 1983 he will be studying the semantics of natural language in the computer science department of Stanford University.

Hortensia Tyler Gemmell, director of the Mary Helen Cochran Library from 1947 to 1969, died on October 31, 1982, in the Wilson, NC, Memorial Hospital. She was 78.

Sweet Briar had been her home for 33 years before she left two and a half years ago, to be near relatives in Smithfield, NC.

Born in Pulaski, VA, daughter of Andrew Hamilton Gemmell and Annette Tyler Leache, she had one brother, John, whose wife and four sons survive. A graduate of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, where she was called Hortensia, she earned both her Bachelor and Master of Sciences degrees from the Library School of Columbia University in New York.

Before coming to Sweet Briar, Tyler had worked on the library staff at Randolph-Macon, in the Bedford County Library, had organized the Pulaski County Library, was for seven years assistant cataloger at Vassar College and for two years was chief cataloger in the library of the New Jersey College for Women, now Douglass College.

Her summer positions included teaching courses at State Teachers' College, Trenton, N. J., and in the Graduate Library School at George Peabody College in Nashville, TN. During her sabbaticals, she was twice a Fulbright Scholar, in 1955-56 she was a lecturer at University College, Mandalay, Burma, and in 1966-67 she was a lecturer in librarianship at the Isabella Thoburn College and consultant for the United States-India Woman's College Exchange Program.

Her outstanding achievements as director of the Mary Helen Cochran Library included increasing the volumes from just under 67,000 to more than 135,000 cataloged items, the establishment of the Kellogg Educational Laboratory Library (a valuable tool in teacher-training as well as service to families in the community), the completion of the Charles A. Dana wing of the main library and the establishment of the departmental libraries for art, music and the sciences.

Among the honors she was accorded were election to Phi Beta Kappa by Randolph-Macon Woman's College in 1966 and an Honorary Life Membership in the Virginia Library Association in 1974. Mrs. Pannell-Taylor, as president of the Friends of the Library, paid a glowing tribute to Tyler's unparalleled professional competence, and the Friends honored her with a gift to the Library of La Catalogue Generale de la Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris, 197 volumes, something she had long coveted for the Library.

Tyler was very independent and determined to stand by her convictions. She was among the first to build her own home on the campus so that she could take care of her mother. When she met with discouragements from the Board of Overseers, she became more determined than ever not to give up the idea. She and Bernice Lill and Laura Buckham were a formidable trio. They kept at it until a place was found which didn't disrupt too many cows, and thus Woodland Road was born.

At retirement in 1969, Tyler was not about to be put on anybody's shelf. Appointed visiting cataloger at Washington and Lee University, a post which she held from 1969 to 1973, she enjoyed the companionship of the students there. It was not unusual to see some of them from time to time at the lake, taking a respite in preparation for their next forays into cooking and conversation as her house guests.

All during her library years, you could set your watch by the regularity with which she covered the distance on foot four times daily between library and home. After she was free of family and work responsibilities, she traveled as far and as often as possible, even though she never got beyond the mastery of a Model-T Ford. They tell me that many of the show-stoppers in early Faculty Shows were her creations. Her quiet manner, sly sense of humor and keen perception made her an ideal companion who enriched the lives of all those privileged to invade her privacy.

Her health began to fail several years ago, at a time when many of her friends and contemporaries were staging a general exodus from Woodland Road. It was to her devoted family, her brother's wife and sons, that she turned, and she found a suitable place very close to Andy and Em in Smithfield, NC. Her last illness was long and painful. We can rejoice that she is at rest.

We can see again that twinkle in her eye, hear that low-pitched chuckle and take delight in the positive example she has provided for us. In all the phases of her life...as librarian, traveler, friend, daughter, sister and aunt...as far as I can tell, she never missed a lick.

New Life for the Old Refectory

By Janet Lowrey

The Sweet Briar Refectory is perhaps the College's best-loved building. One of the four original buildings which opened their doors to the first students who arrived in September 1906, the Refectory served as a dining hall until the elegant new Prothro Commons was completed and opened for use in September 1981.

This handsome building, like the others designed by Ralph Adams Cram during the early years of the College, was built of brick fired from Sweet Briar's own red clay. With its Georgian facade and tower, it has long been recognized as the architectural focal point of the campus. Literally thousands of alumnae remember with fondness its paneled walls and vaulted ceiling and reminisce about finally "sitting on the Golden Stairs."

Now the Refectory is about to enter upon a new and fully as illustrious a role in providing a spacious environment for a long-awaited art gallery, art library, and for the activities of the Department of Art History.

The art gallery, which will be used both for Sweet Briar's permanent collection and for temporary exhibitions, will be housed in the old dining hall. The space will also lend itself to further use for receptions, lectures, concerts, and other functions. The small mezzanine will be converted into a seminar room with a faculty office on either side and with rooms for catering services and furniture storage below.

The rear of the building will contain the Shallenberger Art Library and reading areas, as well as other faculty offices. On the bottom level, in the former kitchen area, will be located classrooms for art history and a new archaeology laboratory. The north entry of the building will be remodeled to provide public access there as well as at the South end.

the major goals and opportunities of Sweet Briar's $12.1-million Generations Campaign. The cost of the project is $1,600,000, of which $1,134,000 has already been raised. The Kresge Foundation has awarded the College a $200,000 challenge grant which requires that the final $466,000 be raised by June 15, 1983.

The need for a secure gallery for valuable travelling exhibits, as well as for Sweet Briar's own collection, has long been recognized. The renovated Refectory will meet this need. It will also release space in the Babcock Fine Arts Center needed by the Studio Art, Theatre, Dance, and Music Departments. The Refectory plan provides a rational and creative use of existing space, which should significantly enhance Sweet Briar's academic program.

Already major gifts have provided for the Johnson Entry, given by Mr. H. Clay Johnson in memory of his wife, Betty Mead Smartt '58 and Dr. Joseph W. Johnson in memory of his wife, Margaret Austin '33, and the Griffith Art History Seminar Room, given by Mr. and Mrs. Stephen A. Laserson (Frances Griffith '70) in memory of Mrs. Laserson's mother. The Shallenberger Library will be moved from Babcock to the Refectory. Other seminar rooms, offices, the archaeology laboratory, the art gallery, and the building itself are still to be named.

The total impact of this project on the campus will be most significant, says President Harold B. Whiteman, Jr. "Through this renovation a new major learning center will be created, with elegant and spacious new quarters at the very heart of the campus, to house the College's art work and world."

As the time narrows before the Kresge Foundation's deadline of June 15, raising the final $466,000 still needed is a top priority for Sweet Briar, its alumnae and friends.

Annual Report of the

By Peter V. Daniel

Sweet Briar College experienced a satisfactory financial year in 1981-82. Thanks to the generosity of the alumnae, parents, and many other friends of the College the annual giving results were most gratifying.

As seen in the accompanying statements on operations, we continue to show a fairly constant reliance on the various sources of income. Although the reliance on student fees did have a two per cent increase, private gifts and grants increased by one per cent. The College's total income was just under $10,000,000 (the total budgeted income for 1982-83 is well over this level at $10,645,800) and the assets increased by $2,909,000 from $45,971,000 to $48,880,000. The financial stability of a college or university can be measured by the size of its endowment and in this category Sweet Briar's endowment continued to increase in book value although there was a decrease in market value from June 30, 1981, to the same date in 1982. (Incidentally with the resurgence of the market, the endowment market value increased from $19,932,000 on June 30, 1982, to $23,465,000 as of October 31, 1982.)

With the exception of last year our reliance on student fees as a percentage of total income has continually decreased and one of the principal reasons this has happened is due to the wonderful generosity of those supporting the annual giving program of the College. The largest share of this essential income for operations comes from the alumnae. This support is now more important than ever, because as interest rates have fallen, we are no longer able to earn the higher rates of return on our Current Fund investments as we have in the recent past. In fact, the $793,000 shown on the revenue statement as "Other Sources" (which is primarily the income we earn on short term money market investments) may drop to as little as $530,000 during 1983-84. We are truly grateful for this support, because without it Sweet Briar would not progress and be in the forefront of women's education.

THE NEW COMPUTER

I appreciated receiving a copy of the Alumnae Council report from the October, 1982, meeting. The computer center is especially appropriate for today's education and well-being in business. However my enthusiasm was dampened when I noted the Deck 20/40 system. DEC 20/40 is the correct designation of the equipment produced by Digital Equipment Corporation. Please correct this for future mailings with the Alumnae Office or other division of SBC helping in the preparation of this letter. The "Deck" designation gives the impression that SBC is throwing around names without education backing up the computer center. Computer lingo is essential to convey the academic superiority of SBC.

Since I work to import engineers for high tech industries, I am familiar with the computer lingo. I've learned to put a computer scientist at ease and equally how to expose a superficial knowledge of the subject.

Thank you for the overall fine report.

RIDING WEST!

I am a Senior majoring in American Studies. Upon my graduation, I will begin a two-year horseback ride across the country and back.

The most significant parts of my trip will be along the Santa Fe Trail and the Lewis and Clark Expedition Route.

I am hoping that any of you who live somewhere along my path might make some suggestions concerning areas I must see, should avoid, or am not allowed. I plan to camp along my route either at campsites or, with permission, in fields near houses or stables.

On June 11, I will leave Rochester, NY, and head for the western border of the state. I will pass through Erie and cut diagonally across Ohio, passing near Columbus, continue on close to Indianapolis and straight to St. Louis. Then I will cross Missouri and begin the Santa Fe Trail in Kansas City which will take me through Topeka, Dodge City, Garden City and Syracuse. Here I will enter Colorado and begin looking for a place to stop and work for the winter either as a riding instructor or in any capacity at one of the ski resorts.

If the passes clear by March, I will head north, crossing the Divide and riding for Salt Lake City, then due south passing through Nevada to reach Los Angeles for the Olympics.

If all goes well, I will continue up the coast and stop in the Pacific Northwest for the next winter, then begin the Lewis and Clark Expedition Route eastward in the spring.

I would appreciate any advice from alumnae who live along my route; or if you know of anyone who would like to join me I would be grateful for the information.

ELDERHOSTEL — “STUDYING THERE IS HALF THE FUN.”

This summer Sweet Briar College will sponsor, for the first time, two sessions of Elderhostel, a residential academic program for adults sixty years of age and older. During the weeks of June 5-11 and June 12-18 small groups of hostlers will live on the Sweet Briar campus and study with some of our dynamic faculty. The daily schedules will combine stimulating academic courses (no homework or testing) with recreation centered around the beautiful natural resources of Sweet Briar College. Alumnae and their families are encouraged to apply! Registration is handled through the national office in Boston.

GUEST HOUSE

The Mary Clark Rogers Garden Cottage has been refurnished. A limited number of guest rooms are available for alumnae, parents and friends of the College for $8.50 per person per night. Semi-private baths, kitchen privileges. Contact the Alumnae House for reservations.

POSTER ART

In 1978 for her class's 30th Reunion, Martha Rowan Hyder made available a group of very attractive prints to be used in offices and parlors around campus. The idea was to give other alumnae the opportunity of contributing to the aesthetic beauty of these areas by providing prints for purchase at a relatively modest cost. Some of the posters have been framed and are adding a great deal to the decor of the areas where they hang. Some prints are still available. They range in price from $8.00 to $25.00 and the framing cost is around $45.00. The prints are from the works of such artists as Tantra, Mucha, Hoffman, Stomas, Rothka, Rousseau, Cheret, Picasso, Eacher, Defeure, Masson, Byrd, Calder and De Kooning. Anyone interested in this project may contact the Alumnae Office where a list of the prints and their prices is available. It would be wonderful to have all of them on display when the Class of '48 returns for Reunion in May.

Congratulations and Many Happy Returns to Frances Murrell Rickards '10, who celebrated her 95th birthday on January 20.

Fund Agent

Anne Schutte Nolt (Mrs. Leroy H.), 1301 Homestead Lane, Lancaster, PA 17603

Rosalie ("Cricket") Feder Sarbey celebrated her 90th birthday with a fireside dinner at her cottage on Lake Erie, where she spends the summers. Now she is wintering in Key West at a home owned by her daughter and son-in-law. Her older daughter writes travel brochures for the California Travel Bureau and has had a textbook on tour operations accepted for publication in a few weeks. Her other daughter has just co-produced a musical at Willoughby Fine Arts in Cleveland.

Frances W. Pennypacker has been fairly well and feels well cared for in the community of Kendal at Longwood. Recently she attended a church benelit wine and cheese party at Betsy Campbell Gawthrop's ('39) in West Chester. Frances' sister Mary Pennypacker Davis '16, after initial improvement from her stroke, has shown little change lately, in spite of physical therapy, but she is able to use a walker to go to the dining room. Her three sons visit frequently. Frances reports that Anne Schutte Nolt is far from well, but she continues to live alone and does a lot of the work and cooking in her large house in Lancaster, PA.

Isabel Luke Witt, who still lives in Richmond with her youngest son as protector, has just returned from a three-week tour to China with her daughter. After 30 years as Altar Flower Chairman at church, Isabel has turned over that job to her daughter-in-law, but she remains on the Retreat Hospital Board and works regularly as a volunteer. She also plays bridge regularly and enjoys her family, including four grandchildren, who all live near.

Jane Byrd Ruffin Henry reports that she is well and busy. Four generations are living in her home right now, since her granddaughter (who is Army) is there temporarily with her little boys. They are all enjoying the situation.

Alma Trevett Gerber is living in a homelike condominium in Champaign, IL. For the first time in over 50 years she is on no volunteer committee. She says she is in her second year of polymyalgia rheumatica — which can last from one to ten years. She hopes to visit Sweet Briar again in apple blossom time.

Elizabeth Eggleston says she "lives the ordinary life of an old person at Westminster-Canterbury" in Lynchburg. She recalls her three years at SB (especially work with Prof. Hugh Worthington) after her transfer from Agnes Scott. Later she was a teaching fellow at Syracuse U., where she earned an M.A. degree. Then she received both the B.A. and M.A. degrees from Oxford U. in England. In spite of long bouts of mild tuberculosis, she organized and directed "The Globe Theatre" at Hampden-Sydney, for which the campus children made their own marionettes. She also wrote a good deal of verse — some published — and painted a good deal.

1923

Fund Agent

Helen McMahon, Box B B, Sweet Briar, VA 24595

Marjorie Thomas Reeves is living in Savannah, where she has spent all her life. She has a wonderful family — one son, two daughters, three grandsons, and four granddaughters. She writes that she is having a happy life and thinks fondly of her Sweet Briar days.

Margaret Wise D'Neal and Fitzallen Kendall Fearing, both of Macon, GA, spent three weeks in September in Blowing Rock, NC, at Margaret's son's home while he and his family were away. They especially enjoyed having lunch with Helen McMahon at her Little Switzerland home.

Lorna Weber Dowling's husband died July 28, 1982. Their grandson, Robert A. Dowling, was married in February with his grandfather as his best man. Robert received his M.D. degree in June, graduating with honors. Virginia, the youngest grandchild, is a freshman at Vanderbilt.

Elizabeth Mason Richards and her husband attended his 60th Reunion at Harvard last June. With six grandchildren, they seem to have a graduation every year — first Dartmouth, then Yale, this year Middlebury, next year Medical School, and then Syracuse, with more graduate schools to come. She writes, "We are slowing down, but surrounded by youth, we are not rusting!"

came to Westchester, IL, from New Orleans to spend seven weeks, they went to Birmingham, MI, for a week and then to Upper Michigan to spend over a week in Eagle Harbor with son Mack and his wife Ruth, who were there from Takoma Park, MD. Then Muriel and Mel drove to Kansas City to see son Keith and his wife Judy. In September they spent two weeks in Ireland, which turned out to be cold and wet — but beautiful. Muriel also reports the weddings of two grandsons in July — one in Delaware and one in Illinois.

Katharine Hagler Phinizy, though widowed three years ago, still lives in the same home in Augusta, GA, she moved into when she married 56 years ago. Her daughter lives next door and her grandchildren visit often.

Virginia Thompson McElwee wrote as she was leaving Maine for her annual stay in Florida. This was the first year since leaving SB that she hadn't seen her college roommate, Polly Goodnow Blackall. (Polly wrote that she was pleased and proud to be one of the alumnae of SB.) She has heard from Ellen Paige Lemon each year and has seen her once or twice in Florida. Virginia is still active in gardening, which she describes as "a consuming hobby for old ladies." She wishes she could be at Sweet Briar for her 60th but is doubtful about coming.

Marie Klooz happily continues her busy life in Sandy Spring, MD. She swims two to four times weekly; goes to exercise class once a week; attends study groups on Quakerism, spiritual life, and mind control; participates in worship — sharing with Patuxent, MD, State prisoners; and is active in FISH, Senior Citizens Club, and the local Civic Association. She says that she enjoys her friends and independence while she can.

Emma Mai Crockett Owen, Jackson, TN, also continues to be involved — as a member of the board of the Jackson-Madison County Library, the Jackson Humane Society, the Association for the Preservation of Tennessee Antiquities, and the Youth Town Auxiliary. Youth Town of Tennessee, near Jackson, is a home for boys and girls from broken homes or other tragic situations. The Auxiliary sponsors an annual Bingo Party to raise funds for Youth Town and also has an annual picnic for the residents.

Lillian Everett Blake, Baltimore, is happy to be a great-grandmother. Her granddaughter, Frances Stuart Blake Mutschler, named for Lillian's late sister, Frances Everett, has a son, Michael Blake, now live months old and a fine boy. Lillian wishes they lived closer than New Jersey.

Another great-grandmother, Frances Rouse Insley Carroll, has six grandchildren, as well as the new great-grandson. She is living in her own apartment in Newnan, GA, with a companion. She gets out to the beauty parlor and lunch occasionally but prefers staying at home for the most part. She would love to hear from classmates.

Helen McMahon had a visit from Jane Guignard Curry in Little Switzerland last summer — as well as the one from Queenie and Fitzallen mentioned above. Helen and Dan Boone '27 enjoyed a two-week course, sponsored by Mayland Community College in Spruce Pine, NC, in which they learned about the three surrounding counties through daily field trips. Thirty people from all over the country participated. Back at Sweet Briar, Helen was pleased to have a great-niece returning as a sophomore. (Jane Curry also has an S.B. great-niece who is a sophomore.) A great deal of hard work on the part of Helen and Ann Marshall Whitley '47 is finally bringing into being the Sweet Briar Museum in the completely renovated ground floor level of Boxwood. What an exciting development and a real service to Sweet Briar! Come for our 60th Reunion in May and see for yourself!

When Margretta Tuttle wrote, she was busy campaigning for her favorite candidates for the November election and taking part in international relations groups and various clubs — not to mention running the house in Midland, MI. She says, "I knew Sweet Briar when it was young and sun-lit."

Midred Baird White finds her home in Asheville, NC, too big now, but after sixty years there she doesn't want to live anywhere else. When not busy with house and yard, she is involved in community service. She has just received her 40-year pin from the U.S. Veteran's Hospital Red Cross, and she works with Meals on Wheels and her church. Her love of bridge has continued since days at SB.

Phyllis Payne Gathright's grandson graduated from UVA Law School in May and is with a law firm in Norfolk. Phyllis lives in Salem, VA.

Katharine Weiser Ekelund is still in her house in Pontiac, MI (without help except for her large yard) and still doing the usual things — volunteering at a hospital gift shop weekly, selling nuts ($1,000 worth!) for a Guild, serving on the Altar Guild two months a year, and belonging to lots of organizations, but no longer accepting an office. She has nine grandchildren, of whom four are married. While in Germany recently, she was honored for her age (82).

Jeannette Boone, Box B B, Sweet Briar, VA 24595

"The" drove me across the mountains to our 55th last May and again to the Alumnae Council in the early part of October. We had a lovely visit with Dan Boone and Helen MacMahon '23 who had just returned from the North Carolina mountains.

Elise Morley Fink had a summer visit to Northern Michigan. She was really missed at the reunion. Gretchen Orr Hill is to have a hip replacement in January. Alice Eskesen Ganzel's mental challenge now is "recovering money from Medicare and Blue Cross," the result of Eddy's failing sight. She still plays tennis every day and works for Planned Parenthood (at your age, Alice?) and the Congregational Church a bit. She will be bulb chairman in Darien. The Ganzels are the ones who wowed us at the 50th by playing tennis like pros and looking the part. Bebe Gilchrist Barnes and Dick had a quiet summer and will be returning to Crystal River in Florida for the winter. She looks much as she did in '27.

Emily Jones Hodge saw Peg Reinhold Mitchell '26 recently and said that her class is considering having an annual reunion from now on. I am all for it. Lib Mathews Wallace reminded us that SBC ranked 7th in Playboy Magazine which called us "Preppy Milkmaids." Her children have just celebrated their 20th and 25th respectively. Dolly Wallace Hartman '53 has her John at Davidson, Mary B. (16) at St. Andrew's School, Middletown, DE, and Elisabeth, a sophomore at Princeton. Libbo swims every day.

Lib Wood McMullan's husband died last January, as did Kelley Vizard Kelly's Billy. I know all of you join me in sympathy to them. Lib made a trip to Europe in the fall. Kelley has put her house in Naples up for sale and will move into an apartment. Most of her troubles are "because I was born in 1907."

Catherine Johnson Brehme and I are buying Ma Bell. Tinka's daughter-in-law has such a successful business that it was written up in an article in the L.A. Times commenting on the best fabric outlets in the area. One of her grandsons is a second year student at L'Ecole Politique in France.

Mary Turner Baker's husband is still on the board of the Louisville Courier Journal and retired as vice-president. Their son teaches environmental law and land use at Suffolk U. in Boston and a daughter has a female law firm in Hartford. Martha Ambrose Nunnally's husband continues to write stories and articles for Outdoor Life and other magazines. Martha reminded me that the death of Ruth Lowrance Street's husband was such a loss to Chattanooga. Tinka Johnson had sent me the front page clipping from the Wall Street Journal noting his death. "Few ever gave as much to his fellow man as Gordon Street."

Emilie Halsell Marston says that she and Mary Sturgis '25 took a flower tour of western Europe in May. Emilie visited her daughter in California later on. She claims married "grands" and five great-grands. A grand newsy reply from Helen Smyser Talbot makes us envious — she toured Hawaii with one son and Middle Europe with another and then took a trip to the Mediterranean area. The Talbotts garden and swim at least once a day. Helen threatens to come to the 60th. Please come!

Dear Gin Stephenson says that her hair is getting gray. It grieves me that she was visiting Peg Williams Bayne in Norfolk while we were away. She has seen Gen Black Newton several times in Duluth. Daphne Bunting Blair and Larry went to their summer place in Ontario during the summer, and her sister Dorothy '29 joined them there. Just found a June note from Libbo Mathews Wallace telling me that her daughter-in-law went to National Cathedral for her 25th and there she saw Ann Mason Brent Winn's ('29) daughter from Australia at her 20th reunion.

Frankie Sample Holmlund says their three-week trip on the Amazon last fall was not her cup of tea. Writing from Cape Cod, she said that she and Harry were going to the Penn-Dartmouth game, Baltimore, and Philly before returning to Arizona. As you know, Marion Chaffee retired and moved to Clearwater. She has no regrets but ventures north for six weeks to escape the heat and humidity.

Camilla Alsop Hyde and Ed planned to attend the 55th but his untimely death occurred. We had a long phone talk afterwards. Camilla is a great lady.

Jerry Reynolds Dreisbach will travel to California to visit her Jerry Dreisbach Ludeke '51 after a trip through central Germany in the summer. Some day I hope to be in Charlottesville when she visits Georgia

Dreisbach Kegley '54 there for Christmas.

Madeline Brown Wood and Compy Compton teased us into thinking they could make it to the 55th. M. Brown says Mac may have a knee replacement. The and I still take nourishment and go to Camp Greenbrier in West Virginia for six months each year. We old biddies still can swim, play tennis, and travel. My hiking boots and canoe paddle suit my taste thanks to my orthopedist.

Keep 1987 in mind. If you try I'll bet you make it. P.S. Gretchen and I are the proud grandmothers of a senior and a sophomore now.

What a wonderful response to my postcard appeal — wish I could include all your news!

I'll start with Nancy Worthington's worthy activities — processing piles of newspapers left on her wheel chair outside her door to be collected by high school boys (sometimes 180 lbs.), the money to go to replace Lynchburg trees damaged by ice storms or elm disease. Ella Williams Fauber and Everett write glowingly of Westminster-Canterbury. Thanks to Nancy's newspaper clippings, we hear of the outstanding activities of the three Fauber sons: "Ebo" Fauber, III, V.P. of Fauber Garbee, Inc.; Rodger, president of Central Fidelity Bank; and Stuart, assistant V.P. of United Va. Bank — all in Lynchburg. Ella's granddaughter is at UVa.

Mary Lynn Carlson King and Huger have moved back into the little house they lived in when first married. Their sons and one daughter have nine children among them. Libba Stribling Bell writes that she has just tied this score. Mary Lynn's daughter Laurinda '63 "achieved a miracle" a few years ago: with three children she read law in a lawyer's office and passed the bar exam the first time without ever attending a law class; she is now practicing on her own time schedule in Roanoke, VA. Mary Lynn is "thoroughly enjoying old age," working in the garden with stool and cane, the toughest decision she has to make being when to cut a honeydew melon!

Polly Swift Calhoun is responsible for four teen-age boys from across the street who are living in her house. In addition she is a new Hospice volunteer (terminal cancer cases), and she and Frank run the local FISH program. They celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in the fall of '81 (first in our class?). Their son Ted and his family are home from eight years in West Berlin, and he now heads a jr. high school in Eugene, OR. Their daughter Sue's daughter is on her junior year in Spain. Their grandson Marvin spent the summer with Jo Gibbs Delavan's son Jack helping rebuild his house which had burned. Jo's pastime is "synchronized swimming" (sounds interesting).

Ruth Schott Benner must be our first great-grandmother as of June '81 — any other takers? She and Earl enjoyed visits with Gill Hilton Pritchard and Frank while wintering in Carlsbad, CA.

Natalie Roberts Foster has moved but only within Roanoke.

Evelyn Mullen's newscard was sent just before leaving on a tour to Munich, Salzburg and Vienna with her sister Priscilla '34; no evidence of cancer was found on the "second look" in Jan. '82, and she is still volunteering in the Art Museum library. In early January she was invited to participate with four other notables in a project connected with the Library Series Act of 1956 — the first Federal Library program, of which she was a program officer. Perry Whitaker Scott reports that she and Bob are more involved than ever: chairmanship of church bazaar, bowling league, hospital auxiliary, etc.; a miniature Schnauzer puppy — Christmas gift from their children — is now a part of the family. Jean Countryman Presba and Will were busy taking care of their 1½ acre of grass, gardens, and fall leaves from 45 oak trees; they look after an 88-year-old widow neighbor and were looking forward to their three months in Siesta Key, FL.

After visiting cousins and friends in New England, Nancy Coe threw herself into being co-chairman of a big Englewood, NJ, Woman's Club luncheon and later the "Flea Market," both affairs helping the club financially and philanthropically. Mary Stewart Kelso Treanor, still a trustee of the Sierra Arts Foundation, reports that Phase I of the Center for Performing Arts is functioning. She has a daughter in law school and a grandson at Columbia College studying the art of Fire Fighting. Martha Von Briesen spent three weeks in Milwaukee enjoying visits with family and old friends. She was looking forward to Alumnae Council as she expected to see alumnae she had known as students. Helen Lawrence Vander Horst is raising a new crop of grandchildren in Tennessee and the Boston area. She and Jean Cole Anderson go to travelogues and Garden Club together. Jean's corgi gives her a wonderful excuse for a half-mile walk up and down their road every morning; she does the cooking now too as her sister is no longer able to.

Ginny Cooke Rea and Fritz had their two daughters visit them in June and August and a trip to Prince Edward Island and Quebec in July; granddaughter Elizabeth was spending the summer in France (her parents had met on the SBC year in France!). Ginny's customers won't let her quit selling bulbs! Dot Ayres Holt's grandson is at the U. of Rochester and her granddaughter at Smith ("sorry it was not SBC"). Martha McBroom Shipman wishes at least one of her four granddaughters were at SBC — and Charlotte Kent Pinckney wishes SBC had both of her granddaughters! One is a senior at Princeton and the other a freshman at UVa. She wrote that Mary Leigh Seaton Marston had bought a place at Tyler Beach, GA.

"Whit" Pearsall Smith's only granddaughter, a sophomore at Valdosta College, GA, is "truly a thing of beauty and a joy forever!" She adds that she and Jack love all four of their grandsons too! Ellen Eskridge Sanders and Walter enjoy living next door to their daughter and family; their son lives in the SF Bay area with his wife and 8-mo.-old son. Mary Nice Jemison toured New England with her granddaughter and spent an afternoon with Tillie Jones Shillington and her husband in Yarmouth, ME. Agnes Cleveland Stackhouse and Glenn spent five weeks in Mexico last winter where their daughter Jennifer lives. Cynthia Vaughn Price tells of taking some friends to see Sabine Hall, the lovely old home of Toole Rotter Wellford and Carter. They had just had a debutante party and Charlotte Kent Pinckney's grandson was a guest.

The cruises taken by many of you were mouth-watering! Marjorie Webb Maryanov and Lawrence were just back from a 15-day trip to Alaska — "breathtaking!" Polly Swift Calhoun and Frank had also been there. Jean Ploehn Wernentin and her husband were all over the Baltic Sea on the Royal Viking, including two days in Leningrad. Jean still has her needle-point shop but goes only when she wants to. Helen Sim Mellen had a fine trip to Switzerland and had several days in Salzburg and Munich where she had not been for 50 years! Cynthia Vaughn Price recommends the SBC trips. Our class president, Ginnie Quintard Bond, cruised the Mediterranean on the Sea Cloud for a week from Dubrovnick, Yugoslavia, down the Adriatic and then up to Rome. She says she spends as much time as she can in travel, having covered the "outposts" in the last two years — Australia, New Zealand and islands in between, the Orient and Egypt. "I still try to be a contributor in various volunteer capacities so I am not a complete sponge." We can believe that!

As for me, the two big events were having my two older granddaughters (14 and 12) for a two-week visit in July as they've moved from Lake George, NY, to El Paso, TX, just one time zone away from San Diego! Then in August my sister Margaret '37 and I flew to the wedding of one of the daughters of our sister Clara '40 in Geneva, NY. Our sister Anne '32 and one of our brothers and his wife were there too, so it was quite a family gathering. We stopped to visit my son in Ohio on the way home.

Martha Jane Gipe Earle retired in June from teaching — with mixed emotions. She said she will miss her students, but it will take her a year to get her affairs and her husband in order!

Judy Peterkin, Anne Spiers Jessup and her sister Jean Templeton are planning a get-together at Mary Templeton's home in Parkersburg, WV, in June.

Suzanne Wilson Rutherford reports that she may retire from her library job in a public school. Otherwise she goes along much the same.

Alma Simmons Rountrey took a trip to Iowa to visit her newest granddaughter, Emily Thornbill. While in Iowa she was snowbound for two weeks. She enjoyed every minute of the two weeks sitting around the fire and holding Emily. I quote, "I think nostalgically of SBC. All seasons were lovely there. I am not far away but don't often get there anymore. My loss!"

Catharine Armstrong Gaylor wrote about some loss of memory. Speedy recovery to you!

Isabel Anderson Comer's interest has been set on establishing a museum and arts center in her area (Sylacauga, AL). She wrote of her joy in seeing Cordelia Penn Cannon '34 and Judy Halliburton Davis recently in Greensboro, NC.

Mary Honeywell Dodds and her husband Jim left their Florida home for two months last summer to visit their sons' families, her brother, and Jim's sister "up North" and to play golf and enjoy friends in Delhi, NY. A week later Mary and her daughter flew to London for a week.

We were distressed to learn of the death of Mary Duglinson Day's husband on Oct. 4, 1982. Their daughter Mary Boyd, her husband Alan Hedorffer and their daughter Meredith, 17, and son Boyd, 14, live in Edina, MN.

Mary V. Marks is finding retirement busier than the former "work-for-pay" schedule — what with choir and altar guild, volunteering at the library, and serving on the board for her condominium and the Arlington Committee of 100 which tries to keep up with county government and development along their subway corridor. However, she took time off for an exciting trip to China.

Alison Dunne Harrison's middle granddaughter was married last June, and Alison writes, "I am beginning to feel pretty ancient! I am still riding, but when Sammy gives up I think I will follow suit. Our son-in-law Eddie Gregson trained the '82 Derby winner, Gato del Sol, so I will let him and Gail '66 carry on with the horses!"

I spent the summer visiting my two sons and their families in New York and Georgia. I also went to Egypt for three weeks. I succumbed to Egyptian sickness and ate nothing but soup and pudding for the better part of three weeks. Our five-day trip down the Nile was fantastic. I also rode a camel — to the amazement of my grandchildren (glad I have a picture to prove it!). In October I went on a golf cruise to Bermuda and had a fantastic and healthy time. After playing our flat Florida courses, I felt like a mountain goat!

Alyn Capron Heintz and husband became great-grandparents in August. They are busy reclaiming an old house and garden in Asheville — big enough to have four children and spouses, 11 grandchildren, and the new great-grandson for reunions.

Mary Smith Johnson considers her one year at SB memorable, though she graduated from the College of Charleston.

Please start thinking seriously about our 50th Reunion in June 1984. I trust you all will make a real effort to attend as it will be a truly rewarding experience.

These notes are sparse but it is all I have to report. Please, more news from you in 1983!

Elizabeth Vanderbilt Crampton's daughter Allison Brown has been ordained a minister in the Presbyterian Church. Anne Dearstyne Cornwell writes that her daughter is attending Kansas U. In addition, Anne's oldest daughter's husband, Jim Benson, was appointed by Gov. Teasdale of Missouri to investigate the safety of the state's nuclear plant in the Ozarks.

Lee Montague Watts sent a lovely letter saying how disappointed she was not to have been able to contact either Henrietta Minor Harf or me during a stopover in Denver after an SB reunion in Colorado Springs.

Betsy Campbell Gawthrop was lyrical over the SB trip to Sicily.

Mary Jeff Welles Pearson is settling into her new home in Lexington, VA, but despite the move she is still on the Board for the Shenandoah Valley Music Festival. Betty Frazier Rinehart is another address changer. She is now living in Palo Alto, CA, and likes it so much. Augusta Saul Farrier is also enjoying a new home in Roanoke, VA, and is close to six of her eight grandchildren.

Janet Thorpe recently ran into Boots Vanderbilt Crampton outside Bloomington, VA, and has also touched bases with Lucy Gordan Jeffers, Aline Stamp, Kitty Lawder Stephenson and her sister Jane Lawder '35; the latter two were on their way to Europe with friends. A later note from Kitty Lawder Stephenson mentions that she particularly enjoyed the tour through Greece and Turkey. Kitty also wrote that she and her husband enjoy good health. He is working hard as a lawyer and active volunteer, and they fish a lot together. Kitty caught the record American shad for South Carolina in March '82.

Polly Brown Sweeney is back gardening again after a long recovery from a badly broken hip.

Sarah A. Tams Kreker was remarried in Nov. '80 and is living in Decatur, IL. She and George honeymooned at the MGM Grand Hotel in Las Vegas and, luckily, escaped from the fire with their lives. Sarah Belk Gambrell is among a small group of distinguished executives who are lecturing at Queens College (NYC) to the M.B.A. candidates.

Suzette Boutrell McLeod has twice visited the Washington area in the past year or so, first for the wedding of her son Robert and later with her husband John, who organized a workshop at the National Science Foundation.

Jane Holden Walker has moved to Moraga, CA, to be near one son; the other lives in New Zealand. Jane and her husband spend part of the year on Kauai.

Katherine Richards DeLancey has retired from the National Grange Mutual Insurance Co. She has written, produced and costumed a three-act play The Patriarchs for her Sunday School class.

Nancy (Anne) Beard Dix has retired as Secretary to the Roland Park Presbyterian Church after 21 years. Then she and Parker celebrated with a lovely trip to Sanibel Island. Connie (Eleanor) Wallace Price writes that Sam has retired and they will be spending six months each year in Florida. However, she is looking for a bumper sticker that reads, "I'd rather be near the family" — namely, her three children and six grandchildren back home.

Bennett Wilcox Bartlett and Harry have a new granddaughter, Rebecca, the baby of their youngest son, Bill, and his wife Susan.

Mardie Hodill Smith writes that when her older daughter hit the "Life begins at" age in December, it didn't bother her but made Mardie feel a little more ancient. However, she is still able to bowl and get around the golf course (in a cart) in spite of a bum knee. She counts her blessings!

Lottie Lewis Woolen finds that the 40th Reunion for the Class of 1939 still continues for her. She has seen a lot of Henri Minor Hart, Lillian Neely Willis, and Gracey Luckett Bradley this year. Now she is looking forward to the 50th — with disbelief!

Marjorie Shugart Short (Mrs. Burton P.), 1129 Oakridge Rd., Petersburg, VA 23803

If you have never attended a Reunion, plan to go to our 40th the weekend of May 20. I can guarantee you a super time with your old classmates who will be returning. I have missed only a few over the years, and each one I have attended has surpassed the previous one. It is worth the trip just to see how the College has grown and expanded; yet the campus remains forever beautiful.

Em and Nancy Pingree Drake rented a Renault and covered 2600 miles of Portugal on a recent trip. Ping is our Reunion Gift Chairman, who, along with Marjorie Shugart Short, is working hard to reach the goal of $43,000 for our special reunion year. It is going to take a lot of loyalty and sacrifice on the part of all of us to attain this goal. Dig down as deeply as you can!

Our deepest sympathy goes to Posy Hazard Polter, who lost her husband Shell in March 1982. She writes that tennis and her friends and family have been lifesavers during such a trying time. She, too, is looking forward to our 40th Reunion.

Clara Eager Matthal went on the SBC Mediterranean trip last August and was thrilled with her first trip to Europe. She is still a special survey interviewer for the U.S. Census Bureau, as well as catering about a dozen large dinners at Hamilton College each year. Her son Chris works in a bank in Baltimore, and daughter Murray is busy being a mother.

Harriet Pullen Phillips has retired from her job as family planning nurse after eleven years. She and her husband had a lovely trip to Hawaii to see their daughter, who hasn't been home in five years. While there they had a delightful visit with Page Ruth Foster. After 18½ years as director of the Honolulu Academy of Arts, Jim has retired. Page continues to volunteer with Common Cause and RIF and to work for a bilateral freeze on nuclear weapons and an end to the arms race. She writes that Tookie Kniskern White keeps busy at the Family Court there and with her four granddaughters, while Bob is in Australia.

Ginny Knowlton File has a real claim to fame. She is the only woman who is one of the owners of the Bengals. That — plus grandchildren, tennis and trips — highlights the Fites' life.

Mary Love Ferguson Sanders will make the trek from Corsicana, TX, for our 40th. Her life consists of good works (civic) and hard work (house and garden), as well as traveling. Her two sons are both bankers, one in Austin and one in Corsicana. Both her two grandsons and her mother can out do her on any given day.

A brief card was sent by Debbie Douglas Adams, who is enjoying her four granddaughters, two in NYC and two in Athens, GA.

Skip Bracher Leggett's husband Jack has retired, so they are spending their free time traveling to exotic places. In Indonesia they had a close encounter with a Komodo dragon. Next on their itinerary is Africa.

Margaret Swindell Dickerman enjoyed a weekend at SBC with Nancy Pingree Drake, Caroline Miller McClintock, and Anne Noyes Awtrey, all making plans for our grand and glorious 40th. Margaret is still busy at the family newspaper in Wilson, NC, with trips to the coast now and then.

We are deeply sorry for the tragedy in Dottie Campbell Maher's life. Her 34-year-old daughter Babs died suddenly before the holidays in 1981. On the brighter side, her son Christopher was elected to Phi Beta Kappa at Earlham College. Dottie works two days a week for the financial director of the county Red Cross in White Plains.

If Dodi Cheatham James isn't in Amsterdam looking at tulips, she will be with us in May. When she and her daughter attended church in Newport News, who should get up to make an announcement but Brac Preston, who is director of religious education for the church. Dodi is still painting and working on another group show.

The year 1983 will be a time of transition for Frank and Anne McJunkin Briber. If all goes well, Frank will retire, they will sell their house and take an apartment in Milwaukee, and then they will become residents of Amelia Island, FL.

A number of Fay Martin Chandler's paintings were available at the Bodley Gallery in NYC last spring. She sent me several reproductions showing interesting composition and beautiful color. Brooks Barnes and Lou Moore Nelson were at another exhibit in Boston recently, and Brooks marvels at what Fay is doing. Brooks is retiring December 31 after laboring many years in the vineyard of Children's Hospital in Boston. She will go back to Plymouth and allow her still active mother to spoil her.

Gavin and Bonilee Key Garrett had a 50th birthday party for their Lampasas, TX, ranch last June. Afterwards they took a trip to Athens and had a fabulous cruise on the Sea Cloud.

Judy Snow Benoit keeps busy teaching nursery school, and in addition she works as volunteer coordinator to the Cumberland County Reach for Recovery program unit that visits women in the hospital recovering from mastectomies. Her youngest son, James, is engaged to a girl named Jamie!

Primmy Johnston Craven has retired from Girl Scouting but remains active as a volunteer, as well as being on the board of AAUW and parish clerk of her church.

Janie Lampton Middleton was married April 1982 to Royden Peabody. How nice to have a bride in our midst! We wish them many years of happiness.

Mary Carter Richardson is still a bridal consultant in Atlanta. She is thrilled to become the grandmother of twin girls and future Briarites, she hopes.

Betty Potter Kinne Hillyer plugs away at tennis and co-running an antique shop for the San Diego Humane Society.

Jinny Dewing Dorsey sent no news but the wish to be with us in May. From the cards I have received from classmates, I do believe we will have a "full house"!

Carter Claybrook Booth keeps out of mischief playing tennis and bridge and writing for the River Hills Plantation newspaper. Her husband is S.C. State Tennis Champ, 60's group, and they run into many SBC people at tournaments in the Carolinas and Florida.

Prentiss Jones Hale left Connecticut with one son to visit another in Los Angeles. The three of them had a wonderful time seeing San Simeon, San Francisco, and Yosemite. Nothing like two sturdy sons to do the driving and handle the baggage!

Betty Schmeisser Nelson's year (1982) was spent preparing for a major back operation, having it, and then recuperating from it, a long process. Her daughter Kathy graduated from the U. of Syracuse Law School with many honors last spring. Betty beams the fact that Kathy didn't attend SBC, and Betty herself can't wait to get back for our 40th Reunion.

I enjoy hearing from Fayette McDowell Willett frequently. At last report, Buddy and Fayette were busily involved in their son Roscoe's December ('82) wedding to Hollis Hibbs, a Hollins graduate. They will live in Louisville, where Roscoe is a stockbroker. Daughter Louise, who works for Congressman Badham, California, was a bridesmaid.

Fayette writes that Charlotte Johnson Barnett died after a long bout with cancer. We remember Johnnie as our song leader and are sorry to hear this sad news.

John and Charlotte Garber Rudolph had dinner with me and my son and daughter-in-law in the spring of 1982. Charlotte never changes; she is still as pretty as her May Court days.

Bob and Nancy Jameson Glass left snowy New York last spring and headed south on a five-week trip to Natchez, New Orleans, then on to Texas, the Grand Canyon and Colorado. "What a beautiful country we have!" she writes.

While touring Europe last summer, Jim and Janice Fitzgerald Wellons had an experience that few people have had. While they were visiting the Louvre in Paris, the burglar alarm went off and they were locked in with Napoleon's crown for almost an hour. Though surrounded by armed guards, they were never searched and never told what had happened. Janice is still teaching piano and enjoying it.

Bob and Ouija Adams Bush's daughter Jeanette was married recently and lives in Ft. Lee, NJ. Their second daughter, Louise, and her husband live in Dallas, as does their son Stuart. Two out of three nearby is a pretty good record.

Henry and Byrd Smith Hunter enjoy their children Carter '68 and Baird '70 and their families with frequent get-togethers.

Annabelle Forsch Prager has had two dandy books for children published recently. The Spooky Halloween Party and The Four Getsys and What They Forgot, two of her books, are being published in England soon.

Since her daughter is in her last year at Princeton, Annabelle sees Beth Dichman Smith there frequently. Our other NYC classmates, Muie Grymes Blumenthal, Pat Robinson McCulloch, and Nancy Bean Hector, have frequent get-togethers with Annabelle, and all hope to be at Reunion.

John and Weezie Woodruff Angst's tomboy, career girl daughter, Weezie, II, will soon become a feminine blushing bride. She will marry Tom Van Landingham, a St. Louis architect. The Angsts go to Juneau, AK, to spend Christmas with their two grandchildren and oldest son and his wife.

Ann Jacobs Pakradooni is still enjoying her career in designing and operating her boutique, Joie de Vivre, in Haverford. It will soon be the boutique's 25th year. Dina Merrill presented her with the Super Achiever Award on behalf of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation not too long ago. Ann will be giving awards to women outstanding in various fields of endeavor at her own fashion benefit called "The Whirlwind Promenade" in December (1982). Her son Loyd works in his father's 85-year-old printing company, and daughter Gigi is a banker in Boston. Dik has attended most of our reunions and taken great color slides. We hope he will do the honors again.

Last summer was a whole new ball game for me. I spent five months in Cape May, NJ, helping two good friends, Anne Le Duc and Judy Bartella, run the 106-year-old Challonte Hotel. Since my family has been going there for over 50 years, it was like going home. Cape May is a Victorian architectural gem with more than 600 structures. In 1976 it was designated a National Historic Landmark City under the Department of the Interior. The Challonte is one of the oldest resort hotels in existence, and one of its claims to fame is the cook, Helen Dickerson, who has been there for 45 years. The same guests return year after year, to sparse accommodations, delicious Southern cooking, and delightful companionship. I loved it and hope to return this summer after Reunion.

My son and his wife now live in Maple Shade, NJ. Mellinda is still in Maine with my grandson and another baby due any minute. Mary Minot is a lawyer in Boston, clerking for a Massachusetts Supreme Court judge for a year before going to work for Palmer-Dodge.

Just received is a note from SBC that Em and Nancy Pingree Drake were given the Award for Distinguished Service to Philanthropy, presented by the New England Association for Hospital Development, along with a citation of their impressive accomplishments. Congratulations!

May will be here before we know it, so start making plans to spend a delightful weekend with old friends in beautiful surroundings that were so much a part of our lives. Our deepest thanks go to our class president, Caroline Miller McClintock, for all she is doing to get our Reunion off to a good start. See you in May!

Carol Blanton McCord (Mrs. Kenneth A.), 1010 West Wind Court, Ruxton, MD 21204

Fund Agent

R. Jane Warner Williams (Mrs. J. Warner), 3418 So. Houston, Ft. Smith, AR 72903

Our 35th reunion in May brought 44 classmates, four husbands and summer weather back to Sweet Briar. From the class picnic on Friday to the chapel service on Sunday, the activities planned by Ann Brinson Nelson and her committee made it a time to rediscover Sweet Briar and each other.

Kay Weisiger Osborne, our new class president, takes on Ann's (nevermore Fuzzy) job, and Jane Warner Williams will follow Ginger Barron Summer as Fund Agent. With Ginger and her Committee leading the way, our class surpassed its goal of $47,000 (final total — $48,221) and set a record, with 79% contributing.

Kay Fitzgerald Booker, our former Alumnae editor extraordinary, has moved to the Overseers, and continues to give much of her time to SBC.

Ann Marshall Whitley's Sweet Briar Museum was on view for all returning alumnae and with a second edition: a collection of antique farm implements found on the grounds and housed in the old slave cabin. Ann was the recipient of the 1982 Alumnae Award.

Nan Hart Stone, who was a member of the Reunion Committee and put together our colorful, beautiful, funny scrapbook, came from Richmond. She has recently built a vacation house near Charlottesville (husband Billy supervising) and even made some of the furniture. On our way home it was tested and approved by several of us, who pronounced it sound as its builder.

Sash Hudgins Rice drove down with Jane Arthur Etheridge and Margaret Ellen White Van Buren. "Sash's" daughter Peggy lives in a log cabin tucked away in the forest near Charlottesville where she works as a U. Va. Hospital nurse. Judy Burnett Halsey, Liz Ripley Davey, Nan and I joined "Sash" and her traveling companions there for a wilderness tea party.

Martha Smith and Jean Old were both there from Norfolk and haven't changed in looks one bit. Jean has been chosen as one of the 10 outstanding professional women of Tidewater, VA, 1982, by a group supported by the Norfolk Chamber of Commerce, Virginia — Pilot/Ledger Star and many nationally recognized companies.

Barbara Golden Pound came with GINNA ILLGES NORMAN from Columbus. Barbara's recent art exhibit there was based on ideas she brought back from her 1980 trip to China. All visual arts interest her, and she is continually trying new materials and techniques. She often works with her artist-son Garry. Over our binoculars, Barbara and I shared bird talk in the early morning with "Crummie" Crumrine Stewart and others in Professor Edwards' flock.

Class Bride Ellenor Stafford Milio came just for lunch on Sunday with her husband. She has a doctorate in Education and is a reading specialist in Baltimore, where they live.

Jackie Murray Sanner's hand-crafted small story-book characters were captivating. They are in great demand in stores featuring the original. They are more puppets than toys.

May 23 graduations of sons and daughters kept some of us at home. Mary Stuart McGuire Gilliam's daughter graduated in Law from W&L. Peggy Robertson Christian's daughter and son-in-law both graduated from the Darden School of Business, and Evie White Spearman's youngest son, from Sewanee.

Also Mary Lib Vic Thornhill, who had served on the Reunion Committee, stayed in Austin to see her oldest daughter graduate from high school. Mary Lib is a most talented artist and has been recognized by collectors not only in her native state, but in California, and others. She is co-owner of Kerbey Lane Gallery, Inc., has taught, organized docents programs, served as president of the Austen Arts Council, and worked in areas of learning disabilities and juvenile programs. She is a member of the Texas Watercolor Society and is listed in Who's Who of American Women. (I am just naming a few!)

Meredith Slane Finch continues to win honors in ecclesiastical needlepoint design and authored a book which was on sale at SBC's book shop. Our scrapbook has beautiful pictures and descriptions of the altar cushions she designed for the chapel of Memorial United Methodist Church, Thomasville, N.C. A long-standing invitation to Duke's Children's Classic, where she was entered in a tennis tournament, and dinner with the Gerald Fords, prevented her coming May 23. (Excuses, excuses.) Anne ("Wash") Ferrier Ramsey arranged a mini-reunion this summer in Salisbury so that she, Pat Hassler Schuber, Irving Brenizer Johnston, and Katharine Weisiger Osborne could tell Meredith all about Reunion.

Eleanor Bosworth Shannon's eldest daughter, Eleanor, was to be married in August, and Sue Van Clive Riehl was anticipating new grandbabies — twins — also by August.

First time at reunion — Cindy Converse Ash — and her unflappable husband, Al. They live in Rye, NY, and have four children — two out of the nest, two in college. Cindy's an executive's secretary; Al, an architect.

From New York comes a newsy, long letter from Margaret Ellen White Van Buren, who saw Mary Frances Wood in town this past summer; M-F is a member of the Roman Catholic Religious Sisters of Mercy, Alma, MI, professional women who work in the world but share a religious communal life. Margaret Ellen and Jim — who has recovered from two serious illnesses in the past year — have been participating in many events surrounding the 200th Anniversary of Dutch recognition of the U.S., which included meeting Queen Beatrix and Prince Claude, and also attending the National Park Service restoration ceremonies at Martin Van Buren's birthplace. They also attended an Alumnae party for SB directors and overseers at the Colony Club in New York, where they saw Alex Marcogliou Tully, Kay Fitzgerald Booker, and Judy Burnett Halsey.

In September, while in Philadelphia for the birth of her second grandson, Margaret Ellen saw Blair Burwell May, who lives there, and Fannie Ulmer Conley, who was visiting her lawyer daughter. Blair's five children now live from Maine, Washington (DC), the West Coast, to Virginia! Margaret Ellen says that Blair and Fannie were very supportive and comforting when her new grandbaby had to undergo surgery; but now all is well.

Aimee Des Plant McGirt plans to return to Spain for another Summer's work toward her Master's in Spanish literature. She spent last summer at the U. of Northern Iowa writing her thesis, "Love and Marriage in Don Quixote." Her husband Vance retired from 33 years of teaching in June '81. Daughter Bridget presented them with a second grandson last April.

Bettie Golden Tyler asks, "What could be better than good health, a fine husband, seven grandchildren and — a month in Europe with old friends GINNA ILLGES NORMAN and Sally Davis Spencer '48'?" A cottage in Highlands, NC, makes it the best of all possible worlds for her.

"Munn" Munnerlyn Haverty sent a colorful card, saying she and Rawson were having a delightful time driving through Austria and Germany in September.

Nan Hart Stone and Billy toured the Loire Valley in September, leaving France the day before Mac and I arrived. We took a barge trip up the Canal du Midi in the South of France, then drove north through the Dordogne and Loire Valleys in mid-October. We have two new granddaughters, born in February of '82 and September, making a total now of five. Our 3rd son, Christopher, is to be married December 30 to a Charleston, WV, girl (VPI graduate) and because of this I've been in touch with Julia Holt Coyle. One of their daughters was married in August, and Julia was up to her ears in preparations, but not too busy to write me so gracious a letter. Then she and George were off to their Florida home. Julia is Chairman of the Charleston Symphony Series, which keeps her busy.

You who journey to Baltimore and points nearby, remember the McCords — bed and breakfast, 20 minutes from Harborplace and five from the Beltway. Plenty of room in the nest now. Which brings me to "Wash" Ferrier Ramsay's description of the shady side of 50: "fewer must-do's, more if-I-want-to's."

I wish I had more news to share with you, especially since these Notes are published only once a year.

Francoise Happe de Braconier, who came from Brussels to attend our 1981 reunion, writes: "That week-end was great fun for me. ...After SBC, I went to the seaside in July and August, then to Geneva and Lausanne for a week...in October to visit Vienna...drank much white wine...in November to the Canary Islands...and spent New Year's (1982) in Morocco. In January...to the south of Spain...and to Monte Carlo in June." Francoise must be our most well-traveled classmate!

Ruth Clarkson Costello wrote of her "four moves in five months of 1981" with "four dogs, seven cats, 26 chickens, and a Peruvian guinea pig." She had to leave her ferryboat home and now lives in a turn-of-the-century house on the Russian River, 70 miles north of San Francisco. When the rains came (in early 1982), Ruthie was isolated for eight days with no phone or electricity, shut off from the rest of the world by mudslides, but "survived with all her critters!"

At least two of our classmates are in the travel business: word comes from Betty Brawner Bingham (also our class fund agent) that she is "usually running late," busy with the "children coming home from school and the travel agency...free time vanishes." Anna Coolidge Richardson has opened a travel agency called Holiday Travel (in Clifton, TX) and is "learning about a whole new world."

Carolyn Sample Abshire is still involved with Iberian Imports which celebrated its 17th birthday in 1982. She lives and works in Old Town, Alexandria, VA. Her children range in age from eight to 23; two are college graduates (Boston U. and LSU).

Jackie Woods Gorman writes that she has only a teenager at home. She is busy working in a hospice unit in Baltimore and spends weekends on the Eastern Shore. Her husband Aubrey has been involved with waterfront development in Norfolk with Jim Rouse, husband of Patty Traugott Rouse '48, and has just been made president of Jim's new company, Enterprise Development.

Patty Carlin Selvage found that "the old spark of '51 was still there" at reunion. Patty's three children, ages 21, 25, and 28, are all out of the nest. Daughter Pam is working for Scudder Funds in Boston, training to be a shareholder's representative. Her son Craig designs electronic toys for Parker Brothers.

Jean Randolph Bruns is busy restoring her "new" old house, "Locust Lyn," in Warm Springs, VA, and working in real estate. She announces the birth of her first grandchild, Alma Singleton O'Dell, who lives in Charlottesville, where her father is in school.

Joan Hess Michel works as an elementary school assistant librarian and also "takes in" freelance editorial work. Her daughter Jennifer is a senior at Bucknell U., and son Frederick is a freshman at W & L. Son Chris is a high-school junior.

Angie Vaughan Halliday and husband Bob are well in Louisville. She gardens and does volunteer work, especially in the arts. Their oldest child, Malcolm, has completed a Master's in piano and is in Boston performing and singing and "eking out a living." Culver, the second, is in Law School at U. of L. Jane has one bachelor's from Smith and is working for another from U. of L. Music School in violin performance. Paul is a senior at Wesleyan U. in Connecticut, and Marion is a freshman at Dartmouth.

A special plea: please send the latest news of you and your family to me. A post card will do. Deadline for the next issue is November 1983.

This year's notes are a random collection from all over. We've had lots of graduations and weddings and a few new careers. Manda McThenia Iodice and Don's part-time business is now a corporation — Innovative Language Programs, Inc. — taking up a large part of their time and doing well in spite of the economy. They are teaching three levels of French and their Spanish text has been published and is selling well. Manda is still working full time for a law firm and Don is teaching. They have one son in college and one in high school.

Betty Byrne Gill Chaney started a job a year ago with an investment counselor. She's learning all about the world of finance and loving it. Her daughter Ellen is an English major at SBC and John is in his second year at UVA in engineering.

Emily Hunter Slingluff and Craig's children have both graduated from UVA. Molly majored in Art History and graduated in 1982. Craig Jr. is a third year medical student, having graduated with Highest Distinction. Emily and Craig are still living in Virginia Beach where, she reports, life is great. Mary Boyd Murray Trussell's boys are both in college — George Jr. at LaGrange and Walter at Auburn. She and George are enjoying the empty nest syndrome and she is involved with volunteer efforts for women prisoners at the Muscogee County Jail. Sue Lawton Mobley, another busy volunteer, also has an empty nest. John is a sophomore at Tulane, and Anne, a senior at Madeira School.

Newell Bryan Tozzer wrote excitedly of a trip to France last summer — her first since she spent her junior year there. Her daughter Ellen was to accompany her. Ellen is a high school senior this year and I'm sure Newell hopes that the prospects of a junior year abroad will help convince her to consider Sweet Briar. Newell is an editor at the U.S. Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Mitzi Streit Halla wrote that for the first time in years she has no big travel plans. She and Roman are back in Washington to stay awhile, but she did go to Paris last March to take her tour group to China. She also reports that both boys are avid runners, so watch for them in cross country events. Kenneth, 19, is in college, and Brian, 17, a high school senior.

Lee Fiducia Hartmann and Ruedi are threatening to move south (Florida appears to be their choice) and leave me alone here on the tundra. Their daughter Denise graduated in June from St. Mary's College in South Bend, and Greg is a senior in engineering at Montana State. From the Hartmann grapevine I learned that Patty McClay Boggs and Philip's daughter Nancy is a freshman at the U. of N.C. at Chapel Hill on a tennis scholarship.

On June 5th, Sandy Rhodes Carlen was married to Donald Berglund at Hilton Head Island, SC. Their wedding trip was to Mt. Crested Butte, CO, where they spent six weeks touring the Rockies before returning to Roanoke. Sandy's recovery from that accident a few years ago is so complete that she can walk 18 holes on the golf course with Don! Her son Eric who graduated from UVA, in 1980 is in his third year of a doctoral program in mathematical physics at Princeton. Signy '81 is a second year medical student at UVA. Lisi is a junior at SBC, and Conrad is a high school sophomore.

In September, Dianne Verney Greenway's daughter Anna was married to David Tilklin in Greenwich, CT. It was a beautiful wedding, held at the Greenway home overlooking the Sound, and even the weather was perfect. Anna graduated from Skidmore in June and she and David are living in Swampstead, MA. Dianne's other children were home for the wedding — Virginia from Boston, where she is teaching in a modern dance studio, and Jimmy from Hawaii, where he works as a chef and spends his free time windsurfing. Dianne is working as an accountant/bookkeeper for a firm of attorneys in Greenwich, and that is where Barbara McLamb Lindemann and I found her on a sunny afternoon last June. We spent two hours over lunch solving the problems of the world and convincing each other that we were absolutely unchanged by the thirty years which separated us from similar hours spent at the Date House and Tommy's!

Mary Reed Simpson Daugette was between weddings when I talked to her. Billy was married in May to Perri Ann Goss. He graduated from Auburn in '81 and is a structural engineer. He and Perri are living in Birmingham. Beth, who graduated from the U. of Ala. at Birmingham in August, was to be married the day after Thanksgiving to a second year medical student. Eldest son, Rush, is living in Baton Rouge. He received his Master's in statistics from the U. of Ala. in 1981 and is teaching in the Department of Agriculture at LSU. Monna is a junior at Birmingham Southern, and Dorsey is in the eighth grade. Mary Reed expected to collapse after the wedding!

Speaking of weddings, Barbara Lindemann and I drove from Minnesota to Connecticut in June for the wedding of my oldest niece. After a cold, wet weekend enfolded in the warmth of the family celebration, we splashed our way to Concord, MA, to avail ourselves of Didi Stoddard's hospitality. To our amazement and delight, we discovered the Julia Child of the Class of '55! Never in my life have I been so deliciously and lavishly fed. From the capon en croute that greeted our arrival to the homemade breakfast pastry the morning we left, it was a continuous banquet. There was a dessert with meringue and chocolate and almonds and cream that I would kill for! Nancy Douthat Goss and Carole VanTassel Donahue '54 joined us for part of the feast, and we shared laughter and reminiscences for an afternoon. From Concord we drove to Ridgewood, NJ, with a stop in Greenwich for our all-too-brief visit with Dianne Greenway. In Ridgewood, we had a lovely visit with Barbara's mother, punctuated by a howling afternoon spent soaking up Ethel Green Banta's hilarious tales. She squeezed us in between visiting dignitaries and was looking forward to a weekend in Atlantic City which Bruce had recently won in a Little League raffle! Her children are thriving: Ruth (24) is at Yale Business School, Jim (22) is graduating from U. of Cal. in Berkeley. Alice (18) is a Freshman at U. of Mich., and Kate (13) is in 7th grade.

Frances Bell Shepherd and husband enjoyed a brief stay last fall at Ard-sheal House in Scotland, which is owned and hosted by Jane Keating Taylor '54 and Bob.

Joan Kells Cook, working full time as a realtor in the Lakewood-Tacoma, WA, area, had a wonderful trip to the East Coast this summer. Her husband is still in the Army. They have three children: Betsy (25) lives in Hawaii, Meredith is completing WSU, and Peter (17) is a senior at Bellarmine Preparatory.

Jane Dildy Williams' daughter Min-dy graduated from SMU in June and now works in Dallas. Ann is in her last year at Wesleyan in Connecticut, and young Mac is a junior at Hampton Roads Academy.

That's all I have this year. Please send more next year. I love hearing from you and appreciate any news-worthy note.

The fun of writing the class notes is perusing the news sent in and trying to remember what tidbits came to the surface during the year. This year seems to have evaporated somewhere along the way and took my memory with it. But there was a phone call around Memorial Day during which I think I met Jane Jameson Messer's husband Frank. To quote Jane, "He's adorable." They were visiting Chuck and Snowdon Durham Kisner in Charles Town and decided a conference call was in order. Jane is working three days a week with Frank, who is an attorney in Conn-ersville, IN. Her oldest son, Jamie, is a senior at Ball State U. in Muncie; Sarah, a sophomore at New Mexico State U.; and Scott, a sophomore at Conn-ersville High School. Though she reported the sad news that Grand-father was lost in her move, I understand that an adoption may be possible. Snowdon and Chuck escaped this fall to Germany and then wended their way through Europe to Scotland for a visit with Luli (Louise Durham Purvis '62) and her family.

Lizora Miller Yonce juggled two graduations the same weekend — Clay's from St. Paul's in New Hampshire and Logan's from the Rectory School in Pomfret, CT. Clay is now at Yale; Logan, at Trinity Pawling. Cliff, 13, together with visits from Tricia Coxé Ware, Vickie Coxé Commander '64 and Isabel Ware Hall '60, keeps her home.

Meri Hagerty Rumrill last February was still in Egypt and trying to absorb as much as possible before they had to leave. She found the people extraordinary and experienced a tremendously warm welcome from them all. Their new post is Colombo, Shri Lanka. Their four children are in different schools in the U.S.

Joanne Bossert Thompson is working as a legal assistant in Trappe, MD. Her son graduated from UVA in '81 and lives and works as a chemical engineer in Victoria, TX. He planned to get married in the fall of '82. Her older daughter lives and works in Jackson, WY, and her youngest is a senior at the U. of Colorado.

Liz Meyerink Lord is studying Interior Design. Her son Chris spent a year in England at Clifton College in Bristol as an exchange student before going to Dartmouth.

"Doctor" Pickie Payne Hester received her Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology at the end of the summer. Congratulations!

Sue Hight Rountree, never idle, has been making miniatures, especially items from the Folk Art Collection, for Colonial Williamsburg and for a local toy shop. She continues to be involved with Bruton Parish Church, the Garden Club and volunteering at schools. Her sons, age 14 and 10, are predictably totally involved with tennis and soccer. Joe is about to produce two new books for Colonial Williamsburg — one a cookbook and the other on crafts. His book of Christmas decorations has done very well.

Mary Harrison Cooke Carle has been performing in a luncheon theatre musical revue called Sentimental Journey, as well as doing temporary office assignments. Rebecca, 12, loves studying dance and plays the violin in her middle school orchestra.

Mary Blair Scott Valentine wrote from Richmond of her three daughters: Molly, 22, graduated from UNC-Chapel Hill and is working for NCNB in Charlotte, NC; Deane, 19, is in her first year at UVA; and Gracie, 15, is in 9th grade at St. Catherine's.

Virginia Ramsey Crawford became a mother-in-law in October when daughter Debbie Easton, a May graduate of the U. of Vt., married a classmate. Younger daughter, Wynne, is about to do her student teaching in elementary music. Virginia continues as a school librarian, and Mac remains busy at Danbury Hospital, but they are looking forward to a two-week "camera safari," in Kenya next July.

Anne Wimbish Kasanin's son Marc is a junior at Robert Lewis Stevenson School in Pebble Beach, CA. The Kasanin's place at Kiahuna on Kauai was devastated by a hurricane but will be rebuilt.

That's it for news of '82. Start getting creative now and plan ahead for the spring of '84. In case you've developed a mental block, that's the BIG 25!

It's always fun to share the highlights of your interesting postcards. We continue to be an active and diverse group, and now that we have all survived our 40th birthdays, the thought of a 20th reunion is not so alarming. If the enthusiasm in your notes is any indication, we can anticipate a great turnout in May.

Traveling is not uncommon now that most broods are grown anyway. Allie Stiemmons Simon and Heinz appear to have spent most of the year with suitcases in tow — pleasure trips to Aspen, Europe, Las Vegas and the Virgin Islands and a few business trips for Allie as she assumes her new role on the Board of Overseers for SBC. Another gypsy is Lyn Clark Pegg. After completing her M.S. in Counseling Psychology, Lyn took a well-deserved tour of the U.S.A. last summer before settling into the role of director of the Family Counseling Center in her home town of Gloversville, NY. Ginger Cates Mitchell and family also enjoyed three weeks of exploring the Western Frontier last summer.

Virginia Schanzer de Laureal recently returned to New Orleans after a wonderful year in Dublin, Ireland, with her family. Anne Carter Brothers needed a break from a major remodeling job so took a theatre trip to London with John. Christmas was spent at the Homestead to further escape the debris at home.

Sue Jones Canlier has completed the restoration of an historic house in Selma just in time to be featured in the September issue of Southern Living. She continues to pursue her interest in local traditions as director of a brand new interpretive history museum (Is this the same diehard Yankee from Rochester we once knew?).

Other career types include Cynthia Hubard, who earned an M.B.A. from Vanderbilt in 1980 and is currently the director of Systems Development for the Proprietary Drugs and Toiletries Division of the Schering-Plough Corporation in Memphis. Susan Scott Noell is an active real estate broker in Pawley's Island, SC — she loves the beach, and the area continues to boom in spite of the recession. Karen Gill Meyer also manages to combine a thriving real estate business with family and civic duties — just completed her term as president of the Scottsdale Arts Center Association.

Prue Gay and Nancy Dixon Brown both continue to teach school, and Anne Leavell Reynolds contemplates total re-entry as she gets used to part-time classes in Algebra at the local Guilford, CT, high school. She had a nostalgic visit back to St. Andrews in the summer of '81 — took the whole family and also visited Louise Durham Purvis '62 in her charming Scotland surroundings.

Some classmates have developed their culinary talents beyond the domestic scene. Lynn Carol Blau has been instrumental in the publishing of the nationally advertised cookbook called Connecticut a la Carte. Proceeds will benefit five cultural organizations. Sallie Yon Williams has also authored a book, The Art of Presenting Food, which became available in October. In addition to being editor of a Jr. League cookbook in Lookout Mountain, Lee Kuciewicz Parham continues to prosper with her toy store and is the new president of the Hunter Museum of Art Associates.

Janet Hiestand Koller is probably the most physically fit of all of us. After five years of teaching she has "retired" to raise horses in Danville, KY — lots of hard work building fences and cleaning stalls, but she loves the critters and the outdoor life in Bluegrass country.

Surprise from Ginny Corwin Millo too. After 20 years of the corporate life, she is loving her new role as mother to Gregory, born in September. Somehow Ginny manages to juggle "binkies and diapers" quite nicely with business; after earning an M.B.A. last year she was promoted to Program Manager of a Space Shuttle product called a Roto Gyro Assembly. With Nasa's success and a first baby, it was a banner year.

Another active student is Robin Swain Davis, who will earn a Master of Music degree at Memphis State U. in May. She also enjoys sharing the collegiate life with her daughter, who attends classes on the same campus.

Most of us are spending time in the Admissions Offices of various colleges these days — lots of changes since we were students, but friendships are still important. For example, Ann Pinckney Gay's daughter Elizabeth is rooming with Randy Kendig Young's daughter Margaret at UVA. Coincidentally Elizabeth Randolph Lewis's son John is also in the same coed Freshman dorm. Elizabeth is also serving as PTO president at Huguenot Academy in Powhatan, VA, with more time to get involved now that she and Jack are settled in their new home.

Anne Pinckney Gay is taking an H. and R. Block Tax Course and teaches the Great Books Program at a school in Lexington, KY.

Pat Calkins Wilder has streamlined her usual active schedule somewhat to concentrate on remodeling her house. She still finds time for Sweet Briar and the Rochester Philharmonic, and she mothers a menagerie of animals along with the family.

Mary Lou Morton Seilheimer also works for SBC as a member of the Friends of Art Board, which our own Jessica Bemis Ward chaired for two years. Mary Lou is the current Chairman of the Board of the Highland School in Warrenton, VA, and is working on a spring house tour for her local garden club as well.

Frances Graham MacIlwain is a faithful church worker and continues her interest in music as Jr. League singer and a bellringer for her church bell choir in Greenville, SC. Summers are spent in Pawley's Island, but this fall she enjoyed a "bed and breakfast" tour of New England at the peak of the foliage season.

Betsy Parker McCall was sidelined from the tennis circuit last summer with a torn ligament in her knee. Four months on crutches was a long haul, but her spirits are as good as ever now that she can chase 5-year-old Eliza again.

Sarah Hitch Hill is grooming herself for the Reunion. She spent a weekend with Katherine Blackford Collins in North Carolina in June and a weekend with Nancy McDowell Fairbanks in New York in September; she talked all night both times, so she is well prepared for the marathon sessions planned for May!

Barby Rockefeller Bartlett is also planning to attend the Reunion. She had a trip south last year to visit relatives that was climaxed by a visit to Disneyworld. She found this a totally enchanting experience for everyone, and I heartily concur after spending a week in Orlando myself in October. The annual seminar of the Embroiderer's Guild of America was held there this year, and although I was teaching, I did manage to explore the new Epcot center in its entirety — a delightful experience that combines the usual Disney imaginative genius and perfection with a unique ability to handle crowds graciously. Tag and I also had a lovely vacation in Bermuda in May at an IBM Golden Circle celebration. An unexpected highlight was running into Missy Lohr Randolph on the tennis courts, so a few pina colodas were shared before she rode off into the sunset on her minibus.

My teaching career has really blossomed this year. With certification behind me, I have begun to take my "show on the road" so to speak, giving workshops at regional seminars and chapter functions for embroidery groups. The traveling has been fun, but our most exciting trip will be one-way trek back to Connecticut in July. Since Tag has been transferred back to that area, we will pack our bags after Toby's graduation.

Before we leave, however, I'm counting on attending our Reunion. Lisa Wood Hancock is already planning to hostess our class picnic with her expanded family. Because of the untimely death of Pete's first wife, they are now a family of six with four teenagers. Lisa quit working, and they have moved to a bigger off-campus home. They are finally settled into a "rock-filled, telephone ringing, clothes sharing, semi-hysterical way of life." It seems that we are all leading a similar hectic pace, so let's look forward to a relaxing weekend in Sweet Briar's idyllic surroundings in May. You will receive interim announcements and a plea for scrapbook material at a later date, but in the meantime PLAN AHEAD, and don't forget to support Anne Carter Brother's Alumnae Fund and Lee Kucewicz Parham's Class of '63 Fund. See you in the spring

Secretary

Judi Benson Stigle (Mrs. Judith B.), 50 Stony Lane, Madison, CT 06443

Mary Lindsay Smith Newsom (Mrs. Major C., III,) 1501 Carr St., Raleigh, NC 27608

Hello to the class of 1967 from your ever loyal class secretary! To all of you who missed our big 15th reunion, let me again state what a wonderful time we all had, how wonderful everyone looked, and how enthusiastic we all are about seeing everyone again in five years. We are working together to get a large group back for the 20th; so prepare for a yearly blitz till 1987.

Toni Naren Gates and Bud are living in Wichita, KS, where Bud is V.P. of marketing for Pizza Hut, and Toni has her own theatre group "The Tales for Tots Players." Their daughter Lindsay, 7, is active in theatre and modeling, and their son Ryan, 3, is a preschooler.

Pam Sullivan Livingston and Curt are living in the Los Angeles area and love the weather. Curt is a senior V.P. of Western Asset Management, and they have two children, 6 and 8½ yrs. Pam keeps busy with aerobic dancing, Jr. League and PTA board and sees Lea Hilton Walker often.

Colleen Coffee Hall has been busy all year with the Princeton Jr. League Show House as its chairman and looks forward to finishing her interior design degree at Parsons.

Jane Stephenson Wilson wrote that she's sorry she missed reunion and has nothing new to report — "same husband, boys, home and work."

Peggy Minis Jerome has restored a 100-year-old Victorian cottage in San Francisco and is still traveling a great deal, with the latest trips to Hawaii and Australia. She keeps in touch with Jill Haden Behlke, who is living in Mexico City with husband John and their two children.

Another marriage is reported: Judy Jolly Feezor to Daniel Riddle in Aug. '82. They are living in Raleigh, where Don is a C.P.A. and Judy is a Director of Christian Education in a Methodist church. She has two children, 10 and 9.

Peggy Moran Morrow is enjoying Seattle with its skiing, sailing, and other outdoor activities. She had hoped to join us at reunion but a sister's marriage came first. Peggy still loves her job and in August went on trip #7 to China (Peoples Republic).

Linda Fite Trimpe is forever busy. Besides celebrating her second year of no smoking, she's learning to play the violin and reading all the "good" books she was suppose to read at SBC and brags she can still swim the length of the town pool underwater. Linda had her own mini reunion with Carole Munn and Pam Fromme Formato and says they all look better than they did in 1967.

Hallie Darby Smith and Fred are in Richmond, and Hallie is a nursery school teacher and a toymaker in her spare time. The family, including daughter Allison, 10, and son Fred,

5, spent the summer sailing.

Laurie Rogers Camps calls herself "not a lost classmate but a remiss one." She and Jorge live in Acapulco, where Jorge is a federal inspector for the Mexican Immigration Service. Laurie manages the tobacco shop for the Hyatt Hotel and is so busy she rarely has the time to enjoy all that sun.

Carroll Randolph Barr is still working at Huguenot Academy as Director of Community Relations.

Melissa Sanders Thomas is playing tennis competitively in Atlanta (she says at a low level) and is also president of her women of the church group and recently was elected a Deacon. She visited with Mimi Harrison Rippin by phone. Mimi lives in Savannah and writes for a newspaper.

Susan Tucker, also in Atlanta, took a three-week tour of the wine country in France and hopes to visit with the families she lived with in her Jr. year abroad. Her advertising and P.R. business added two new clients this summer and is constantly busy.

Eleanor Kidd Crossley is back in school getting a degree in interior design, and her eldest son (25) was married in the summer with Eleanor making all the silk flower arrangements. Her 11-yr.-old son is now an expert skier leaving the rest of the family behind on the slopes.

Stella Mae Renchard Seamons wrote from Beverly Farms, MA, that she and Toby have four children, 9, 7, 4 and 1 year. Stella Mae writes, plays the piano, does child care and works at a co-op.

Dr. Hallam Hurt is the chairman of the department of neonatology and practices under her maiden name at Albert Einstein Medical Center in Philadelphia. She is married to Stephen Roth.

Stephanie Lucas Harrison who sent a very pregnant picture of herself for our reunion scrapbook had a beautiful boy named Charles in April. Besides being mother to two boys, she is learning to play tennis and working with the Jr. League and her church guild. Stephanie promises to do something earth shattering when she's an old lady.

Barbie Tillman Kelley also missed our reunion because she and Carlton became parents of "Trey" in May '82. However that didn't keep the Kelleys home, as they visited Carlton's daughters in New Mexico this summer, as well as toured 13 states (4000 miles). Trey is a world traveler already. Barbie returned to her job with the Artmobile in Birmingham in the fall.

Gail Robins Constantine writes that she's slaving away in Baton Rouge with three children, two dogs, birds, horses and one cat and is working as a systems analyst for a service bureau to escape the menagerie. She also states that SBC failed in preparing her for 5th grade homework, and she hopes she passes.

Lindsay Smith Newsom and Mac visited with Sally Haskell Hulcher and Page Munroe Renger, husbands and children over the summer. Sounds like fun with much athletic endeavor. She'd heard from Gretchen Bullard Barber and David that they are expecting their third child early in the new year and that Gretchen is finally retiring from A.T. & T. to enjoy her children. Also Sue Morek Perrin just had her third child, a girl, and says having #3 is light years away from #1. She also told me news that Martha Mechan Elgan and husband Tom are in Louisville and love it, and Tom is enjoying his new career with a paint manufacturer. They see Peggy Handley Fitzgerald and Dick in Nashville often. Lindsay's husband Mac presented his orals this fall for his Master's in Landscape Architecture at N.C. State and is looking forward to "it's get-a-job time." They went to New Orleans for their 15th anniversary.

Maria Wiglesworth Hemmings is working part time as a software designer for Control Data, and with their two daughters, Emery and Anne, the family traveled to Maine and Kentucky this summer.

Margaret Mapp Young and lawyer husband Dick are busy with their three sports-minded boys. With football season and duck hunting the Youngs will be going in many different directions.

Charlotte Hoskins Herbert wrote that she and husband Lynn have a new son born July '81, and she is thrilled to join the ranks of motherhood. They just finished building a house overlooking a river in southern Oregon overlooking Lynn's sawmill.

Mary Cary Ambler Finley and John announced the arrival of their daughter Jaquelin Cary, born Aug. 31, '82, and their move to their first house, in Scarsdale, N.Y., as well as John's opening his own law firm in Manhattan. A lot is happening for the Finleys in just a few months.

Lisa Harvey Morton wrote to us all saying she was sorry to have missed our 15th and wishes all well. She and John have two daughters.

Pam Ford Kelley and Brendan are living between Newport, RI, and Paris. Brendan has written a play that they hope will be produced and is the creative director for Ogilvy and Mather in Europe. Pam has started a mail-order business importing French lace tablecloths and curtains.

Diane Stephenson Lankford, Frank, and son and daughter are in Atlanta, where Diane is in commercial interior design. She has seen Judy Schlatter Fogle and her three children, Nancy McLean Parker, and Flossie Collins Bischoff.

Laura Pratt Gerrity, living in Bryn Mawr, PA, has three children, 14-10 yrs, and works at her own catering business, Fabulous Foods, Inc. Laura traveled to China this year and plans to return soon.

Karen Schwabenton Shipper has retired from technical writing and editing to stay home with their new son David born Jan. '82. Karen and family live outside of Denver on a prairie with a dressage horse, donkey, and a flock of chickens.

Gene King Leyden continues to be happy in Idaho with her two children (10 and 2½). She loves her work as a midwife and also teaches creative movement to children.

Eugenia Bull Winter is working in Bakersfield at Cal. State College as the acquisitions librarian/bibliographer and is also completing her Master's degree in English. She and her son (8) just moved into a California bungalow complete with palm tree and picket fence.

Lang Lloveras Gomez, husband, two children (7 and 2), two dogs, three cats, and three ghosts are settled in Waterford, VA. One ghost appears on the stairs in the uniform of a union soldier and is supposed to have fallen in the assault on Petersburg during the Civil War. Lang teaches basic French at a Montessori School and writes for a county newspaper. Husband Jose is with the Pan American Health Organization, a UN agency in Washington, D.C.

Sally Haskell Hulcher wrote that husband Matt sailed in the Bermuda Race.

Jill Berguido Clement and John enjoyed the summer with son Timmy (3) in Maine and look forward to a trip to Williamsburg at Thanksgiving. They are both still hard at work at Montgomery C.D.S.

Katharine Barnhardt Chase apologizes for not joining us at reunion, but will be starting her 3rd year in the B.S. nursing program at Lynchburg College and thinks back to all science courses she avoided at SBC.

Mary Gillespie Monroe and her two children all head off to school together. Mary teaches Biology and chemistry in the upperschool while one daughter is in kindergarten and the other daughter is in 3rd grade. Husband Sandy continues to work for the city manager of Richmond.

Stephanie Ewalt Ayers and Rye had a third son join their family Jan. '82, with Rye helping deliver the baby during a raging snowstorm. Stephanie continues her Spanish tutoring.

Randy Brown Sebren spent the summer doing homey things with her children, ie. camp, swimming lessons, dental appointments etc. and will continue with her teaching in the fall.

beach and visiting SBC-ers and will continue with her volunteer work, school and church work. She and husband John were kind to entertain us in their lovely home on a recent visit to Charlotte and made us "Northerners'" most welcome. Page and John spent four days in Palm Beach on convention and another four in NYC with the children.

Bonnie Blew Pierie and Tim and their two children spent their summer vacations at Stone Harbour, NJ, a Maine sailing camp. In their spare time Bonnie has been doing some house remodeling, while Tim is rowing and breeding sheep.

Beth Glaser Morchower writes that most of her time is spent driving 8-year-old Randy and 11-year-old Todd to tennis lessons. What's left is spent computer programming for a friend's software company or working part time in another friend's knitting shop.

As noted in above address we are now in our new home in Connecticut. After extensive remodeling and lots of decorating, I am enjoying some leisure time before returning to work. John is starting a new company to be located in Stamford, so we'll be able to enjoy the country life full-time. I thank you for your help with your news, and keep it coming.

Remember 1987.

Lynne Manov Sprinsky (Ms. Lynne M.), 2220 North Quebec St., Arlington, VA 22207

Fund Agents

Jacqueline Penny Goldstone (Mrs. Robert E.), 602 W. Lincoln, Yakima, WA 98902

Beverly Van Zandt Steele (Mrs. Robert E.), 3627 Newcastle, Houston, TX 77207

Claire Kinnett Tate (Mrs. John A. Tate, III), 2409 Knollwood Rd., Charlotte, NC 28211

The campus was as lovely as ever last fall when I visited for Alumnae Council, and nostalgia bloomed again at Stepsing...the current generation of Sweet Briar Girl brought to mind ourselves in '67 when we entered complete with Villager pintuck shirt-waists and Pappagallo flats...Plus ca change, plus c'est la meme chose!

This year I find myself back in the Washington, DC, area with quite a few of those "old girls." Martha Stewart Crosland neglected to mention last year that there was a new baby at her house...I'm not sure how she managed to overlook Edward Stewart (called Stewart), now 1½. His sister Mallory began kindergarten last fall, which leaves Mom with a bit more time for Stewart, golf, and her part-time job as an attorney with the Department of Energy. She and Ed hosted Sherrill Marks Byrd and her husband at their Bethesda, MD, home last spring on the Byrds' annual D.C. visit.

Gina Mancusi Wills and Ashley should be back in the Washington area soon, if they're not already. Ashley is beginning a four- or five-year tour, still with the U.S. Foreign Service, which has kept them in Barbados for quite a while. A new addition to the family is daughter Glivia, born in January '82.

Many old friends and classmates await Gina in D.C., among them Michela English and husband Rob Quartel. Michela is still with the management consulting firm of McKinsey and Co.; Rob, still in political consulting (should be busy this year!)

Carter Burns Cunningham and David are also part of the Capital Contingent and the parents of Mary Stewart, born last May. Fran Griffith Laserson '70 is "Maisie's" godmother. Carter continues her full-time banking job, which she says seems like an extended vacation compared to the demands of motherhood. In addition, she works part time as a financial consultant and has one year as president of the Alumnae Association of Foxcroft. Husband David works for Thompson McKinnon.

Kathy Fisher Morland and John are neighbors of mine in Arlington: I found out she was nearby when a neighbor of hers spotted my son Matt at a local library story hour wearing a Sweet Briar sweatshirt! She's working three days a week for the Immigration and Naturalization Service doing special projects and studies for their policy and planning staff, and John is an attorney with the Department of Justice. Their two children, David and Thomas, are 4½ and 1 now.

Word from Richmond VA, is that Wendy Norton Brown and Lee report seeing Kathy Wilson Lamb and Rex in Atlanta during their summer travels. They also saw Amanda Thrasher Segrest, Taffy Turnbull Carpenter, and Ann Webster Danford at a mini-reunion on the Elk River in Alabama. Back in Richmond, Wendy is working part time testing the developmental skills of pre-schoolers, a position sons David (6) and Christopher (3) have well equipped her to discharge!

Nan Glaser Lagow and Chris were to have become parents around Christmas time and have by now moved, but are still in Richmond. Nan reports she's "finally into (her) profession and practicing law." The long arm of the law was behind Pammy Henery Arey and Pat's move from Richmond to Baltimore, where Pat will be working with the law firm of Miles and Stockbridge. Pam has been very active in the Junior League, serving as legislative liaison for all the Virginia Leagues at the state assembly, and is involved with a "First Ride, Safe Ride" carseat loan program. She'd love to share information about this pilot project with anyone who shares her interest (one she comes by honestly: her youngest, Molly, is 3, while daughters Lindsay and Anne are 10 and 9 respectively).

Across the mountains in Lynchburg, Beverly Wright Graves continues teaching English and Latin at Sandusky Middle School, but has sold her old farmhouse and acquired a new husband, Paul G. Graves, Jr. Bev notes she is "writing and having fun..." Do I espay a successor secretary in the offing?

Alix Sommer Pearce married John last May at her hometown of Crawfordsville, IN. On their return to Fredericksburg, VA, where Alix is assistant principal at Drew Middle School, they hosted a reception attended by, among others, Pammy Henery Arey and family, Elodie Taylor Thompson and John, and honored guests Mary Virginia Crabbe Shaw '16 and Florence Woelfel Elston '21.

Alix's guest list also included Carolyn Rusch Von Endt and David, who were married in June in Chevy Chase, MD. Her new husband is a Smithsonian Institution colleague of Carolyn's; her daughter Betsy is a young lady of 11 now, Alix reports. Alix also notes that John, a former George Washington U. professor, "passed the test when he thoroughly enjoyed his first SBC visit during pre-reunion planning the fall of '80."

Among Alix and John's guests last summer were Nesi Wisell Gustafson and Paul, who stopped by on their way to Florida. They also visited with Karen Larrick Hahn in Atlanta. SBC also figured in their roadtrip, and son Aaron, 5, was enchanted and asked if he could attend! Nesi is occupied with her own business, gardening, sewing, and "being motherly." A major hurdle was overcome when she and Paul attended her 15-year high school reunion, which Nesi termed "ghastly." Just goes to show you....

Becky Bottomley Meeker and David have moved from Ohio to Virginia and changed lifestyles into the bargain. David, formerly assistant general counsel at Hobart Corp., has now entered the boatbuilding business. He bought Newport Boats and has renamed the company Gloucester Yachts, Inc. Their new address is Long Point, Zanoni, VA.

Charlottesville claims Dee Kysor Smith as a resident currently, though that may change soon, for she is slated to complete her M.A. in psychobiology at UVa. "Then it's either on to veterinary school or Ph.D. research," she writes, adding that husband Mike is still working at the Children's Rehabilitation Center in C'ville. Daughter Jenny is now 3½.

Janet Burks Ross and Larry have moved from Monroe, VA, to Princeton, WV, where Janet loves teaching second grade at Keystone Elementary and Larry is preparing to enter the ministry through studies at Bluefield College. Janet writes he is also pastoring a mission church in Skygusty, WV. Children Lisa and Chris are in junior high and fifth grade, respectively.

Cathy Gross Hendren has literally been running to keep up: she completed the Isle-of-Palms marathon near Charleston, SC, in December '81 in "a respectable four hours, nine minutes," a feat which I'd agree is "glorious." She continues as director of Big Brothers/Big Sisters while husband Tom is still in independent clinical psychology practice. The two, when last heard from, were between foster children at their home in Bern, NC.

In nearby Charlotte, Frances Woltz Fennebresque writes that things are great and that she and husband John are enjoying a new house and are excited about their fourth child, due in March.

Caroline Tuttle Murray presented her 3½-year old daughter, Cassidy, with a baby brother, Scott Frederick, last May 9. She and husband Frederick are still at home in Greensboro.

Linda Whitlow Knight and Richard have built "their dream house" in a Nashville, TN, cluster community called Sugartree, and are thoroughly enjoying it and all the company they can now accommodate. Linda completed her clerkship with a justice on the Tennessee Supreme Court and joined the law firm of Martin and Cochran. In the small world department, the couple recently attended a VMI party and met a pair whose wedding was the first one performed by Carolyn Jones Wallhall's husband Julian after he was ordained!

Todd Moseley and Louise Jackson teamed up last fall to make a flight from Todd's home in Louisville, KY, to Boston for "12 glorious days in New England." Carol Remington Foglesong joined them for a day in old Deerfield, MA. When not altering the face of Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, Todd is happy with her job as director of volunteers for the American Red Cross in Louisville and still finds time to garden, take ballet classes, and sing in her church choir. She's also recently been ordained an elder there. Carol has resumed her position as Director of Annual Giving at Mount Holyoke College after a break for the birth of her second son, Christopher Ryan, last May 26. She and Rich, who teaches political science at Amherst College, also have a 5-year-old, Eric, now in kindergarten.

Volunteer work at the schools of daughters Marie (7) and Katie (4) keeps Kathy Wilson Lamb busy in Atlanta, GA. She also manages to fit in team tennis. Husband Rex, now a partner in a law firm there, has finally persuaded Kathy to take up hunting (he also works for Ducks and Trout Unlimited). The Lambs had a visit from Wendy Norton Brown and Lee and their sons last summer and paid one to Becky Bottomley Meeker's house on their way north, while she was preparing for a move to Virginia.

In the news for Martha Roton Terry is a promotion to database administrator at Morrison's, Inc., in her hometown of Mobile, AL. The job is a challenge and has required traveling to Dallas and Los Angeles for schooling. Husband Jack and she managed to fit in time for skiing at Vail in January of '82 (Martha's first trip to those slopes: "Now I am hooked," she says) — and to celebrate Caldwell's first birthday. Martha tells of frequent visits with Frances Barnes Kennamer and Seabie, who were reportedly planning a visit to Europe last fall.

Martha and Jack also planned to attend the wedding of Amanda Megargee to Michael Sutton. Amanda herself wrote of the big news, as did several classmates: Nov. 27 nuptials. Her by now not-so-new husband is a student at Virginia Commonwealth U. Amanda writes; she also notes they have been together for three years already. She'll still teach pre-school handicapped children in a homebound program out of Petersburg, VA, and is still into running — perhaps accompanied by a multitude of dogs and one cat named Ruff, who thinks he's a golden retriever like his companions. (He reportedly hides in the bushes and attacks people walking by the house!)

Carol Everest Keeney belatedly reports her divorce and remarriage and notes her son Malcolm is now in first grade. She enjoyed a recent visit with Kathy Wilson Lamb at the Grand Hotel in Point Clear, LA, and says she's not working for the first time since '71 and is "enjoying the change."

Paula (Sherrill) Marks Byrd and husband Hugh Hunter live on a farm in Pulllight, MD. They have a son, Nelson Meriwether (2), and raise soybeans, corn, milo, alfalfa, wheat, and some cotton. Hugh Hunter's Levee Commission and Drainage District testified before House and Senate committees and afforded them the visit in Washington with Martha Stewart Crosland. Other travels include skiing in Austria each winter!

At last, word from Kristi Bettendorf Swartz! She's an attorney and has been working as an assistant state attorney (a Division Chief in the Criminal Division) in Miami, FL, for the past five years. She and husband Jeffrey were expecting their first child in February; she'll take a leave of absence from work for a while.

Denise Beardsworth Costa is news editor of the Tampa Tribune in Tampa, FL. She and husband John, who is also a newspaper man (North Sun-coast editor of the St. Petersburg Times), live in Clearwater, FL, and are expecting their first child in April.

Debbi Dykes Hill lives in Gainesville, FL, with husband Alan, a CPA who is working towards his Master's of Accountancy at the U. of Florida and also working for Legal Services. Debbi is raising Jenny (5) and Adam (3) and working in counseling as well as attending classes at UF for her Master's in child psychology. "Motherhood is terrific, challenging and exhausting," she writes, so she relaxes with her singing, alone and in groups, and is planning "to do some musical comedies as soon as a few spare seconds come along."

Cami Crocker Wodehouse and Chuck are in the midst of building a new house; they've moved off the ocean (near Jacksonville, FL) in favor of a house and yard for Carey (2) and Charlie (6), but they're still only a block from the beach. Cami is teaching algebra part time at a private high school and is also a clinic volunteer at Planned Parenthood. On their 10th anniversary, she and Chuck were surprised by a flying visit from DG and Trish Neal VanClief '72. They've also taken up bone fishing and try to get to the Keys whenever possible.

From south back north, word from New Hampshire: Louise Dempsey McKean and Ted made a 10-mile move and are living in another old house. This one dates from 1790 and boasts a huge barn, mostly restored, which Louise says is a blessing after their last house. Molly and Margaret are in fifth and first grades and 4-year-old Matt is in nursery school. She extends an open invitation to any old SBC-ers who may be up her way in Gilford, NH.

Wendy Weiss Smith writes from Littleton, MA, that she is awaiting an elementary teaching opening but keeps her hand in with a "fiber arts" class at the local museum. She's also active as an admissions representative for SBC in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and in the Boston Junior League. She also took a very enjoyable Holland-American Alaska cruise with sisters Cathy Weiss Thompson '74 and Chris Weiss Pleil '74, assorted husbands and their sponsor-mother.

Liz Mumford held a one-person show of her art work at an antique store in Dennis, MA, last October, but reports that despite the hard work to prepare for it, she still found time for sailing and racing and time with her family. She's now living in Cape Cod.

I'm sorry to say that in my many "TeenyWeeny Airlines" commutes through Syracuse to my former home in Canton, NY, I never got a chance to see Maggie Mather Feldmeier. She's director of community relations and development for CONTACT-Syracuse, a 24-hour phone listening and counseling service — her first experience in human services and a job she thoroughly enjoys. It's "supposedly" part time and ought to leave her time for other activities, like chairing the Junior League's celebrity lecture series with the likes of Art Buchwald, George Plimpton, Patricia Neal and Howard K. Smith — not to mention Kate (5), Julie (2), and husband Jack, who's still running the family manufacturing business.

Jeannette Bush Miller moved to Dallas from San Francisco a year ago, intending to settle down there. This year, however, she finds herself in Fort Lee, NJ, where her new husband, Phil (called Flip) is the English editor for Prentice-Hall publishing. Jeannette is looking about for a new lawyering job, having had time to recover from her move and her May 29 nuptials, which attracted Becky Randolph, Libby Tyree Taylor and Barry, Ann Milbank Mell, and Carolyn Jones Walthall to Dallas for a mini-reunion.

Katie Horan's work as a stockbroker for Merrill Lynch has kept her hopping, what with last fall's record stock market rally. She's also involved in the hiring process there and "thrives on" teaching a class in investing, too. Her activities, which have included a couple of trips back to Sweet Briar for career panels, leave her too little time for her other passion, her thoroughbred horse. (I know the feeling, Katie! The great brutes stand around eating their heads off all week while you slave to feed them, and by the time you've paid the bills you're too bushed to climb aboard!)

My good friend Mary Helen Layton graduated last spring at the top of her class in John Marshall Law School and has secured a place with the New Jersey law firm of Archer, Griner and Reed. She plans to marry George Edward Bates, Jr., this spring; he's an educational administrator. When still in Illinois in law school, she ran into Mim Washabaugh Meglan and Vaughn, who moved there (Naperville, near Chicago) in June 1981 after Vaughn completed his M.B.A. at Washington University and started work at Standard Oil of Indiana in Chicago. Mim is working for the American Red Cross as the assistant director of human resources for the Chicago chapter.

Let's skip now to the West Coast, where Jacque Penny Goldstone has branched out from her partnership with husband Bob in a Budget Records and Tapes franchise in Yakima, WA; she is now a sales rep for the booming home video games and game cartridge business. The two of them spent a "luxurious" three-week vacation in Hawaii and walked up the volcano there "three days before it blew" last summer. She's also keeping active in her role as class fund agent; we'll all be hearing from her and associates Bev Van Zandt Steele and Claire Kinnett Tate soon. (Give generously when they call on you...gifts like ours keep Sweet Briar green!) Claire writes that everything remains busy and rewarding in Charlotte as she is expecting #2 child in April.

Anne Wiglesworth Munoz has a bilingual baby — and a bright one at that! Daughter Maya turned 1 last October, but Anne wrote in September that her first word was "agua" (water), doubtless the influence of Colombian daddy Milton and a six-week visit from his parents. Anne says she's still selling her batiks and going to art festivals from their home in Salt Lake City, UT.

Libby Tyree Taylor and husband Barry flew from their Berkeley, CA, home to Dallas, TX, for Jeannette Bush Miller's wedding and met a number of classmates there. They spent the summer redecorating and preparing for the birth of their first child, Alexandra West Taylor, on Aug. 8, an event which necessitates a change in lifestyle that Libby will accommodate by job-sharing her third grade teaching position. Barry was made a partner at Pillsbury, Madison and Sutro.

Speaking of Texas, word came from Alisa Yust Rowe in Houston. Her daughters Meredith (6) and Alison (5), not to mention daddy Richard, keep her busy and she reports she's having fun working on a novel and has "a couple more ideas lurking in the back of her head." Neighbors Brooke Thomas Dold and Wylie added a brother for Lindsay (3) last April. Thomas Nelson Dold is the reason Brooke is no longer working part time at the law firm, but full time at home instead. As it two pre-schoolers weren't exercise enough, she's also doing aerobics to lose her "baby's fat." From her we also got word that Pat Connor Bland's daughter Catherine was born July 18.

Bev Van Zandt Steele called from Houston at the last minute, to say she's keeping busy with the boat she and Bob have been racing, as well as with her job in the employment end of TRW, Inc.

Betty Duson is also in Houston and has completed the first year of her private psychology practice; her first book has been published, too. She's also teaching and consulting, and I think she could qualify as a time-and-motion study expert as well, for she reports involvement in professional organizations, volunteer work for the Houston Symphony and Stages Theater, and training for the Junior League. Betty has also kept up with a number of Houston classmates, including Lind Dore Fountain, Sis George Singleterry, and Mimi Boyd Yount, who, Betty reports, is pursuing her doctorate in clinical psychology.

Another Houstonian who says she's enjoying a "mellow period" is Liz Glassman; she's teaching the history of photography at the U. of Houston, including "a great graduate seminar." She spent the summer in France and Italy on a business cum pleasure trip. She joins other Houston classmates in describing the city as dynamic blend of small town and big city with plenty of interesting people and events.

Catching up in the central states, Patricia Schwalm reported in from Chicago; she got married last summer to Dr. John McNulty, an associate professor of anatomy at Loyola University's medical school. The two were graduate students together at the U. of Southern California. "Of course, having finally earned the right to be called Doctor myself, I have no intention of changing my name," she writes. She's still teaching genetics at the U. of Chicago and continuing research on pigment cells in brightly colored tropical treefrogs.

Nancy Wood Ambrosino and Drake "are busy and happy" in Grand Rapids, MI, where Drake is in the midst of a career change from managing a bicycle distributorship to a car distributorship. Children Ben and Cara turned 5 and 3 in October, and their third child was born in November — after deadline, of course! Stay tuned for an update. Wonder if she was attended by Barbara Wuehrman? Dr. Wuehrman switched last fall from full-time emergency room duty to part time ER and part time family practice, but hadn't been at it long enough to know how she liked it. Apparently she's reserving judgment until she starts staying up all night delivering babies!

From Sheboygan, WI, comes news from Linda Lewis Brauer and Warren; they've both been busily occupied, he with his family practice and she with her dental practice, not to mention their three children! Erick and Scott are 5 and in kindergarten, and Lindsay is 3. The whole crew took a trip to Ohio last summer and visited Linda's old roomie, Becky Bottomley Meeker and her family.

I've saved the best 'til last...How so? Because this news has been aged, like line cheddar, for over a year! My apologies to these folks for not having been able to include their reports last spring, but circumstances conspired to delay their arrival until after last year's deadline. However, because many of them did not respond to my plea last fall (in a pit of tique, no doubt, and justifiably so!) I've included their tidbits in the time-honored "better late than never" tradition.

Chris McLain Buck's second son John Oliver is by now a ripe 3 years old, and she was, in fall '81, still "in the consulting business to the Navy." Husband Craig's law firm was reported doing well, as was number one son, Cliff (now at almost 6). Perhaps by now they've finished fixing up their "nice old mess" of a house in Falls Church, VA.

Ellen Weintraub had just been made a vice president of Salomon Brothers in Chicago, and Jill Minnema Worth has just married Larry Worth, manager of the village of Ridgewood, NJ, where they live. Jill works for the neighboring city of Patterson as an attorney.

Karen Murphy Parkman was working with the elderly in New Hampshire and had helped to organize a "home-caring guild" to act as a forum for the in-home care problems of aging citizens there. Son Jonathan had entered nursery school, while daddy John was looking to change jobs.

Sioux Greenwald attended reunion '81 but didn't fill out a questionnaire for the scrapbook (a fount of wisdom for procrastinating class secretaries) and then blithely reported that "all else is status quo." The enigmatic note came from Rye, NY.

Elodie Taylor Thompson is still the same: "I'm still in the same job — elementary school librarian, Fleetwood Elementary, in Nelson County (VA). I live in the same house, same husband, same children, Clay (now 5), Meredith (now 2), and everything is pretty much the same as last year." Maybe that's why she didn't write again this year?

Susan Schmidt-Fonseca, when last heard from, was an environmental scientist advising the North Carolina Office of Coastal Management on water quality issues, and was "trying to find time to write." Husband Mark Fonseca and she had built a 30-foot wooden sailboat from which they haul gill nets and scallop dredges — Mark is a fisheries biologist with the National Marine Fisheries Service.

Marilyn Kolb and husband Michael Lipton had just moved to Lexington, MA, where he helped start a management consulting company and she was in the law department of the First National Bank of Boston.

Margaret Highsmith Dickson wrote last year for the first time since graduation — and then I blew it! Anyway, she reported switching jobs from being a radio reporter with a 4 a.m. wakeup to being a wife and mother. She married John Dickson, a senior assistant district attorney, in September of 1979 and bore son Wyatt in April '81. She still puts in three days a week at the office of her family's radio stations in Fayetteville and Wilmington, NC, and fills in the cracks with community work like counseling for a local rape crisis group.

Anne Sniffen Cates was raising now-3-year-old Katherine, content to witness the excitement of a child's maturation process, and Cami Crocker Wodehouse had added a sister for Charlie, now 5 — Carey Crocker Wodehouse is by now a bit over 2. Junior League work also occupies her; husband Chuck is assistant vice president of Seaboard Coastline Railroad.

Louise McLaughlin Caldwell last year reported she had remarried after the death of her first husband and was weathering the adjustment of a first year of law practice for husband Frank and two stepdaughters, "a joy I wouldn't miss." Louise, after six years of working for government in Florida, had been working for a year and a half as a research analyst with a non-profit foundation "whose main function is to show government how to save taxpayers' dollars." Hear, hear!

Debby Proctor III reported the birth of daughter number two, Kelsey White, in June '81. Husband Rob was then still working on Wall Street and Debby "finally" had earned her M.B.A. after five years of night study.

Kay Brown Grala had received her L.L.M. in tax law from NYU in June 1980 and was last year employed as deputy office counsel at The Bowery Savings Bank in New York City. Her son Bronislaw Wistar Grala was born in September '81.

Louise Archer Slater, betwixt the "wild foolishness" of Bennet, 4, and Alexandra, 5, was collaborating on the local Junior League's Illustrated History of Memphis (TN) by doing research — she noted Miss Muncy's teachings would stand her in good stead! In her spare time (!) she smocks and had started her own business, "Flower Foolery," arranging flowers for parties.

Kathy Garcia Pegues was still teaching journalism as a volunteer and had joined the board of directors of the SPCA in Warrenton, VA, which entails frequent speaking to Girl Scouts and 4-H groups. She's also a deacon of her church and an SBC admissions representative. Emily (4) and Adam (2), also fill up the hours.

Trixie Halton Michaels and Rich had recently moved into the house they built in Yardley, PA; Rich commutes to Philadelphia, where he is vice president of Hansen Rubber Co. Their three children, Jamie (9), Jessie (7½), and Christi (2½) fill their lives with swim practice, pacifiers and peanut butter, Trixie reports. The odd moments are taken up with their schools' parents' organization and church activities, including two Bible studies they host.

Martha McKenzie McNeill reported from Macon, GA, the birth of her son, Robert John, in January '82, a little brother for daughter McKenzie, now 4.

Lendon Gray, whom I did mention in last year's Notes, replied belatedly that she'd earned five New England and four national dressage championships last year. She's also been giving clinics and had Honey Hammer in one of them. Her family's Puckerbrush Riding Center in Dixmont, ME, employs another SBC graduate. Robin Imschweiler '76 as its stable manager.

Beryl Berquist Farris was another reunion visitor, with husband Mark and their new baby in a back pack (the baby, not Mark). Her reply card from last year listed an impressive array of foreign travels and diplomatic-legal forays to do with immigrant and refugee matters and concluded with the heartfelt sentiment that she was "glad to be home (in Atlanta, GA) with her prized United States passport."

Linda Hill Silbert and Jack celebrated their tenth anniversary as we celebrated our tenth reunion. She and Jack, a CPA with his own firm in Rockville, MD, have three children: Kimberly (6½), Adina, (4½), and Justin (1½).

That about winds it up for another year, Tontant Weaders. As for myself, I've again relocated, this time to the Washington area, still in hot pursuit of husband Bill, who finally made "full bull" (we call him Your Colonelship). "Uncle" called him to the Defense Mapping Agency, where he's chief of the Land Combat branch, making sure the troops know where the war is if there is one, which God forbid. I have exited the journalistic arena temporarily in favor of spending more time with Matthew the Magnificent, now 3 and a budding doctor/fireman/plumber/truck driver/mommy (no sexism in MY house, if you please). Daughter Judith is now finishing 10th grade and is an accomplished hunt seat rider, often showing our two Appaloosas... I've launched a horse show photography business and am hard at work on a gothic novel. I hope to strike it rich so when I die I can leave a pile to Sweet Briar, which holds a special place in my heart. I relish my yearly opportunities to visit the campus for Alumnae Council and thank you for selecting me secretary so I have a valid excuse to make the pilgrimage. It's also great, always, to hear from any of you, prompted by a postcard in September or not!

Secretary

Gray Thomas Avery (Mrs. Emmett M., III), P.O. Box 8619, Richmond, VA 23226

Fund Agent

Ellen Harrison Saunders (Mrs. Whitney Godwin), 502 N. Broad St., Suffolk, VA 23434

Randy Anderson is back in Vail for her 8th season as a ski instructor. She spent the summer sailing the Caribbean on an 82-foot ketch as the first mate.

Bet Bashinsky White and Russell are still enjoying their farm outside of Nashville. They attended Gail Zarwell's ('76) wedding in Milwaukee and are looking forward to the birth of their first child in February.

Betsy Brooks Jones had a busy summer highlighted by the birth of Thomas Chewing Jones. Brownrigg is 4 and is a good big sister. The Jones family moved into a new home in Franklin, VA, this fall.

Cece Clark Turner is doing corporate real estate work with some paralegal for Hop In — a job requiring a lot of travel. Her daughter Cameron, now 15 months old, gives her and Toni much pleasure. Cece is again involved with Roanoke's Festival in the Park and River. She sees Kathy Osborne and her sister-in-law Carrie Ruda Clark '79.

Carol Clement-Pavia was married to Frank Pavia in Lake Tahoe in February and has been busy setting up house in their condominium.

Catherine Cranston Whitham was involved with campus recruiting for Thalhimers through her part-time job in Executive Recruiting and Placement. She, Whit, Ann and new baby Craig Cranston Whitham live in Richmond, where Catherine is the AR chairman for SBC.

Constance Crocker Betzendahl and Richard had a daughter, Lindsay Hannah, June 17. Connie continues to use her artistic talent as a freelance designer. She recently completed a project for Schenley — Christmas liquor packaging.

Nan Cunningham has been traveling to exotic locations with Jo Ellen Lenoir. Their sojourns have taken them to Hong Kong, Hawaii, and Acapulco. They planned to visit SBC friends in New York and then enjoy fall in Virginia at SBC. Nan is also busy with the Junior League and the Corpus Christi Area Heritage Society.

Bonnie Lee Damianos-Rampone and Chuck had their second son, Christopher James, on Oct. 7. Chuckie is 2 and keeps them busy.

In the Sweet Briar Tradition...

Upon joining Sweet Briar's Pooled Income Fund in January, 1981, Audrey T. Betts '45 wrote the following:

Dear President Whiteman:

It is my pleasure to have found a way to do something tangible for Sweet Briar during my lifetime.

I am sure you have met and talked with enough of us alumnae by now to know how much Sweet Briar means to most of us and how big a part we feel our four years at Sweet Briar played in making us what we are today. It is hard to put into words, but perhaps I am feeling it more keenly than usual because of Harriet Roger's recent death. That has brought back so many memories of the individual people who have meant so much to me over all the years.

It is because we want others to have these memories that it is our privilege to work for the future of Sweet Briar.

Cordially,

Audrey Teal Betts

Betty Byrne Gill Chaney '55 wrote the following upon joining the Pooled Income Fund in March, 1982:

Dear President Whiteman:

It has given me great pleasure to have given a gift to Sweet Briar. I am grateful for the excellent liberal arts education I received there. The inspiration it gave me for further intellectual curiosity, for tolerance and understanding of other's viewpoints and for volunteering service in causes I feel strongly about are all direct results of my Sweet Briar education. I am glad my daughter, too, is receiving her education at Sweet Briar.

Sincerely,

Betty Gill Chaney

The Whiteman Years...

The 1970s were Harold Whiteman's years. The Whiteman administration brought changes in distribution requirements, in curriculum, admissions, athletics, student affairs and faculty and staff affairs. His administration constantly upheld the tradition of the liberal arts and sciences program in the face of those who would bring vocational education to our campus.

"We preach and teach the liberal arts as not only a good preparation but also perhaps the best preparation for a job or career," President Whiteman said on one occasion. "Surely higher education can be directed at preparation for both life and livelihood. I believe that the liberal arts have always had this dual aim. In this country the earliest objective of academic training which later emerged as 'liberal arts' was to prepare young people for service in government or church."

His idea of the objectives of a liberal arts education is to achieve a high level of literacy, to develop the ability to think reflectively, to identify and solve problems, to learn how to get information and how to judge what is accurate and what is inaccurate, and to understand and enjoy an ever broader range of life — new situations, new ideas and new visions.

Harold B. Whiteman's belief in the liberating arts and his belief in change for the better are clearly shown in the new and revised programs of his administration, which, he insists, "have been the work of many people, not one or two."

President Whiteman believes that if the College is to remain a college of the first rank, "the facilities of the College, especially the library, must be kept first rank by constant attention, upgrading, and replenishment; that student life must be attractive in all its manifestations so that students will want to participate wholeheartedly; that the faculty must be kept loyal to both the College and to the responsibilities of good teaching, and that the academic programs must change and grow with the times and with new developments in knowledge and the intellectual skills."

A barefoot man, laughing

Myron B. Bloy, Jr.

On a late summer evening of our first few days at Sweet Briar in 1979, the rain roared down in such torrential power that it seemed to steam up from Elijah road.

We were somewhat punch-drunkenly unpacking endless boxes; I was also trying to work out the Opening Convocation talk I was soon to give, and we were both feeling a little like displaced persons in this wild southern clime so far from Boston. Caroline decided to put on her yellow foul weather jacket and, barefooted, walk our dog, Mattie.

A half hour later I heard boisterous voices, shaking of wet gear and wet dog downstairs in the entrance hall, and I went down to confront bedraggled dog, laughing wife and President of Sweet Briar College, both barefooted. Harold had been returning from visiting a faculty member who had requested his counsel and was also, as is his wont, simply reconnoitering the turf (after an absence at Martha's Vineyard) of the community which was his responsibility. He had readily accepted Caroline's invitation for foot-drying, a drink, and some talk about life at Sweet Briar, and we began a friendship, soon to include Deedie, which has flourished these last four years.

I mean this little account to be a parable, an example of the friendly, caring and community-building leadership with which our College has been blessed during the Whiteman years.

And such leadership is, it must be understood, an absolute necessity — in theological lingo, of the esse and not merely the bene esse — of education in collegiate tradition. Sometimes trustees, whose experience of leadership is limited primarily to the corporate or financial worlds, innocently assume that leadership requires only the brisk rendering of a hierarchical organizational chart. Sometimes faculty, epistemologically formed by their graduate education, mistakenly assume that collegiate leadership is there simply to grease the ways for a rationalistic transaction between the learned and the unlearned. And sometimes students, scared silly by our economic plight, blandly believe that the president is there to ensure that putting in their time will get them a job, that they will be prepared for the predatory, broken field running of the one against the all which is a career.

But Harold Whiteman, while recognizing the partial legitimacy of such expectations, is deeply committed to the fundamental collegiate purpose of educating the rising generation to serve the common weal — to gain the spiritual insight, the moral commitment, and the intellectual maturity necessary to engage the deepest crises of our life together. He knows, too, that the only adequate means for bringing about such profound growth is a community which is itself redolent of such spiritual, moral, and intellectual gifts. No handy dandy manual exists for such community-building leadership, but surely such a leader must be a model of the communal virtues to be engendered, must have a second sense about when to rebuke and when to encourage in nudging a community towards its maturity, and must certainly have patience aplenty.

A Man For All Seasons

The very symbol of such leadership, for me, is a yellow-slickered, barefoot man laughing in the entrance hall of Lancaster House.

A special style and grace

Juliet Halliburton Davis

Even allowing for my habitual procrastination (a recognized source of chagrin to you, Harold — how did you keep your equanimity while beset by the vagaries of your colleagues?) I have waited too long to let you know how strongly I feel about your coming to Sweet Briar and about your leaving.

I remember vividly that sunny day in 1971, brimming with excitement and optimism. All of us were enchanted by Harold's good looks and charm, by Deedie's glamour and vivacity. The ceremony was impressive, the speeches interesting, the audience receptive, the general atmosphere charged with happy anticipation. Such a day!

The high hopes of that time are indeed fulfilled for Sweet Briar. You have brought your own special style and grace to the College along with the academic and financial benefits which have accrued to your term. All of us who hold Sweet Briar dear are grateful for your labors and achievements for the College as well as for the enriching stamp of your personalities upon its community.

Harold, your loyalty to the College and its highest ideals has directed your actions in every area. Your door and your mind were ever open to the students. The faculty's admiration and support of you have been expressed in many gratifying ways. You were unfailingly attentive to and cooperative with the alumnae and we have felt a close personal tie. The Board of Overseers has benefitted from your adherence to high academic standards and your concentration on the essential matter at hand — even when that matter has, regrettably, so often been in the realm of fund raising. The esteem which you inspire among your peers in "outside" academic groups has been a cause of pride to Sweet Briar. The retired members of faculty and administration, who are so importantly a part of the college family, hold you in affection and respect.

You have remained steady in your aims through disappointments and grave difficulties when you never lost patience and, more significantly, never lost heart. You are indeed a "Man for All Seasons" — be those seasons bright or dark. We thank you for bringing Sweet Briar into such a bright season as she presently enjoys. You must feel that your task has been accomplished. I respect the idea of an outstanding woman as president, one who can serve as a role model for our students; but we cannot overlook the value of their exposure to the influence of a true gentleman, in the basic meaning of the word, one whose lofty character and sweet nature have shown these young women what a man should be.

Both of you have been gracious hosts for the many functions which fill the college calendar. Sweet Briar House has been Open House in every sense. Thank you, Deedie, for your interest and participation in campus activities. All who have seen your dramatic presentations will know that you are a hard act to follow — on the boards and elsewhere!

The Whiteman Years...

For myself, it has been a great pleasure to know you, to share work and time with you, to enjoy your delightful humor, to be inspired by your ambitious goals for the College, to be touched by your concern for the individuals who make up its body. The memory of you here will be lasting and loving. May your years ahead be filled with satisfying, interesting, good times for you both as surely as they are filled with the blessings of the entire Sweet Briar family.

Keeping in touch, lending spirit, giving support

Patti Snodgrass

I have warm feelings for the Whitemans, but I am not more privileged than anyone who took the time to look around and see President and Mrs. Whiteman — everywhere — anywhere. They inspired an atmosphere that made a family of the Sweet Briar community.

As freshmen, we met the Whitemans at a party they held in our honor. More vividly I remember one Saturday night when the President frantically pedalled his bicycle to the quad to see why the fire alarm was blasting. Or there were his proud inquiries about an upcoming basketball game, swim meet or theatre production. Any of us involved in such activities could depend on the Whitemans' spirit and enthusiasm, and more often than not we saw their familiar faces at the events.

Their interest in the school's organized activities was only part of their contribution; President and Mrs. Whiteman made a point of being active among the students. A tennis match, a casual lunch in the dining hall, or a happy hour at the Bistro were some of the ways the Whitemans shared their time with us. By no means did Mrs.

Whiteman stand in the shadows. She took part in activities ranging from the artistic to the absurd, high-stepping with the best of us on the Bistro dance floor, or clowning in the recent faculty show, where she gave a stunning rendition of "Little Girls" — evidence enough of her feeling of attachment to the students. The spirit that moved her to participate in those productions was evident in everything she did. She was part of the Whiteman team, keeping in touch as much as possible with the students and their concerns.

Keeping in touch, lending spirit, giving support — these were key ingredients of the Whitemans' contribution. You didn't need to know the Whitemans well to feel their effect. Like good parents, they maintained an environment which encouraged us to learn and struggle; they made us feel our effort was worthwhile.

Drawn to the best selves of those he lives among

Josiah Bunting III

In this age of fretful self-absorption, Harold Whiteman's life is a quiet testimony to the supreme human virtue of instinctive selflessness. I have never known a man less calculating of advantage, more abashed in the presence of ambition, more drawn to the best selves of those he lives among.

I suppose such things sound unduly "final," as though we were remembering an old friend rather than celebrating but the finish of a thick chapter in his professional life. If they sound final, it is because, in a way, they are — wherever Harold and Deedie choose to live after Sweet Briar, they will not be among us next fall.

A Man For All Seasons

Harold is a tremendous old Victorian, a paterfamilias, the very model of what the head of a small college or school should be: vigorous, rambunctious, sober, organized, anxious to listen and to help, prodigal in spending his own resources of time and strength and energy; he always seemed, in his presidential duties, to have tackled more than he could possibly do justice to, and then done it justice anyway.

"Professionally," I knew him chiefly through the work we did together for the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges (whose own president, Harold's great admirer and friend Lea Booth, is also retiring this year). In committee work Harold was good-humored and tolerant and not the least wearied by all that. In ideas he was always resourceful. Hearing an early reveille in some dingy Edwardian hostelry, facing eight hours of asking dozens of people for money, hundreds of miles from his smashing wife and splendid college, he might as well have been a freshman senator going up to the Hill to be sworn in.

I never heard Harold complain about anything.

I remember him most vividly at Hampden-Sydney football games, stretched back on a blanket with his head against a hamper, watching our 180-pound amateurs chasing up and down the field after Sewanee's or Washington and Lee's (Harold had been football captain at Yale), enjoying it all as much as if it had been the Cowboys and the Redskins.

Several times, his counsel was inestimably helpful to me. In his way, he is responsible (for worse or better) for my coming to Hampden-Sydney. And one of the greatest pleasures — and privileges — Diana and I have known since we have lived here has been in the company (not far distant by Virginia standards) of Deedie and Harold at Sweet Briar.

One doesn't, obviously, know the college from the inside. But I have always been moved by what a happy place Sweet Briar seems to be — the confirmation of all the rising "numbers" (endowment, admissions, etc.) that we knew the College had realized. A president gets blamed for a lot of things; but, surely in Harold's case, that happiness that a visitor sensed when he went to that magnificent college, Harold must have been at the center of it.

One is moved again to quote Lord Moran's judgment on George Catlett Marshall. "It was not what General Marshall did, but what he was, that lingers in the memory: his very goodness seemed to put ambition out of countenance." With Harold, happily, we are still, and for many years will be, talking in the present tense.

The lion in the path

Julia Sadler de Coligny

When the announcement came to Richmond, where I was living in the spring of 1971, that Harold Whiteman was to be the new president of Sweet Briar College, I lost no time in contacting him at New York University to nail him down to speak at The Woman's Club the following spring. I was impressed with his willingness to commit himself, complete with subject ("The Lion in the Path") so far in advance.

Twelve years later, when the same subject was announced for his talk to the Winter Forums here on campus, I was to hear his confession that he seldom refused anything that far ahead and always gave the same title for his talk. He couldn't go wrong, he admitted, as there is always some lion in some path!

He introduced me here at Sweet Briar when the Class of '72 invited me to be its commencement speaker. So our first acquaintance was on a podium level, which certainly gave me the facts of his many achievements, but it didn't begin to provide the insight into the human-ness, kindness and unpretentiousness of this man, which were revealed in the years that followed.

In the summer of '73 he asked me to come back to work for the College to initiate an estate-planning program, which I did for the next six years. I spoke at meetings near and far, established memorials and used a variety of approaches in order to get the attention of the alumnae and put their minds on the subject of death and dying in a cheerful and constructive way. It was a wonderful help that Harold was completely supportive of all my efforts.

He didn't make a lot of noise about it, but typical of the kind of reinforcement he provided was on the day I drove back from Richmond with a big shag rug on top of my car to help make the Slave Cabin more like a comfortable lounge for music and meditation — a memorial to Martha Ingles Schrader '41 given by her parents. Many tedious jobs had to be done before dedication day, but to my delight, someone had painstakingly dug out all the flagstones and renewed the path leading from driveway to door. I found out it was Harold and marveled. Not many college presidents would derive joy from such an activity on a Saturday afternoon. And when I was working to make the Fellows of the VCCA feel at home on the campus, Harold and Deedie would entertain them for cocktails in the Boxwood Garden. These are only two small examples of many I could cite.

The Sweet Briar family has always been known for its hospitality. Having been thrown on our own resources in our isolation, we have specialized in entertaining. But none of Harold's predecessors had a wife, which has been an important dimension in explaining what Sweet Briar House has meant to students, faculty, visiting alumnae, speakers, and friends of the college in general. Deedie has given unstintingly of herself, her time and talents in support of Harold, and her home is a reflection of that.

We will all have to go through a shocking readjustment to realize that the kind of accessibility we've known there in the past twelve years cannot just be taken for granted. Sweet Briar House has never been so charming, well-furnished, and tastefully decorated for each season of the year. They have really spoiled us, and the best of it is, they have seemed to enjoy it too.

Harold has taken a lot of kindly kidding on the subject of his Yale friends, but from the first he has shared those friends with us, and he has made us feel that he is equally proud to let them share what he has in these Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. His great capacity for friendship has paid off in both directions. He and Deedie will be sorely missed, and it is my personal hope that we will be fast friends forever.

A national record of alumnae giving...64%

Mark Whittaker

My association with Harold and Deedie Whiteman began with Harold's appointment as the sixth President of Sweet Briar in 1971. Having moved to Sweet Briar from the University of Maine to serve as Assistant Director of Development under Anne Pannell Taylor, my first reaction to the Whitemans' appointment was joy over their Yankee background — Yale and New York University. I still recall welcoming Deedie during her first reception with a comment like, "It's great to have another Yankee at Sweet Briar." Little did I know that their strong ties to the South would help to "retread" the Whittakers to Virginia.

Soon after Harold's arrival, he initiated a $10 million 75th Anniversary Campaign. This five-year program included major annual, capital, and endowment goals to be reached by the 75th Anniversary celebration in 1976.

A Man For All Seasons

While there were many highlights during this campaign, some of the most significant might be the renovation of Benedict Hall, formerly called Academic; the construction of the new swimming pool made possible through the generosity of Charles and Elizabeth Prothro; the John Lee Pratt bequest which was the largest donation ever received in the College's history; and going over the goal with $11.2 million in cash and pledges. Never will any of us forget the national record set by the alumnae who in 1976 reached the highest level of participation ever achieved by any woman's college in the country — 64% percent sent a gift to Sweet Briar!

During the period 1977-79, Sweet Briar undertook a major self-study effort. At the same time, the College successfully completed a large National Endowment for the Humanities Challenge Grant which endowed Interdisciplinary Studies in the Humanities at Sweet Briar. By 1980, our new Comprehensive Development Program was in place and we began Sweet Briar's $12.1 million Generations Campaign. This is a program which focuses on the essential needs of the College. With half of the allotted five years behind us, over three-fourths of the goal has been reached. All indications are that Sweet Briar will complete the Generations Program by the 1985 deadline.

In working together on these important endeavors, several characteristics of the Whiteman presidency should be noted. For example, regardless of the number of drafts prepared by the Development Office, Harold always added his own personal touch to thank-you letters. Never did he lose sight of the importance of personal contact. Typical of his style was the way we traveled together. I would drive the car and he would navigate, be it through the desert of Arizona, over the Golden Gate Bridge, or in New York City. Much of our time together has involved entertaining Sweet Briar alumnae and parents. I can say without hesitation that Harold and Deedie Whiteman always went above and beyond the call of duty to welcome guests and to make them feel at home at Sweet Briar.

To sum up, my professional relationship with Harold Whiteman has involved over $23 million in voluntary support. It seems as if a million "HBW letters" have been sent to those individuals who support this College. Beyond these memories is the personal and lasting friendship that Pam and I will always have for the Whitemans.

He teaches students, and he learns from them

Robert H. Barlow

I've often been asked (or asked myself) why I am at Sweet Briar College.

Of course there are a number of factors but, without any doubt, a principal reason is the personality and philosophy of Harold B.

Whiteman Jr.

He is sensitive, fair, creative, energetic, enthusiastic and humane. He is pro-student, a faculty advocate and a strong believer in a participatory administrative style. He is a gentleman.

I have seen Harold Whiteman's sensitivity in his contact with others. I've seen it in the dining hall where he reaches out to students. I've seen him respond with sincere concern to faculty and staff issues. I've watched as he pondered complicated issues and made difficult decisions.

I know that Harold Whiteman is fair. He listens to all opinions and weighs all alternatives. He values the thoughts and principles of each member of our community. He often praises the virtues of students, faculty and staff. He manages to see the good in everybody.

Harold Whiteman is fully committed to, and involved in, Sweet Briar College. Both he and Deedie are present at many student social events and actively encourage our athletic teams. They attend lectures and support academic excellence through their recognition of honors students and their gift of the Whiteman Scholar-Athlete Award. They are continually in the mainstream of college activities. Sweet Briar House, their home, is a center of campus life.

I have seen Harold Whiteman recognize the importance of students. He encourages their open involvement on college committees and with the Board of Overseers. He argues with them and challenges them. He teaches them and he learns from them. Most importantly, he celebrates their achievements with them.

I know that Harold Whiteman recognizes the value of the faculty. He considers their ideas, includes them in plans and meetings and involves them in the institutional decision making process. He is concerned with the content of our curriculum, the opportunities for scholarship and professional development and the level of faculty salaries. He is an advocate for the faculty.

I have learned from Harold Whiteman that the inclusion of all constituent bodies in the decision making process is often slow, cumbersome and painful, but the results are worth it. He has created a pride of ownership among students, faculty and staff; a feeling of belonging and a sense of community.

I'm proud to have worked with Harold B. Whiteman Jr. He is a true humanitarian and a valued friend. Sweet Briar is fortunate to have had the Whitemans as members of her family.

Do college presidents do this sort of thing?!

Ann Marshall Whitley

The 1971 term at Sweet Briar opened with several hundred new faces on campus. Among them were incoming President Harold B. Whiteman, his wife Edith, and my elder daughter Libby (a freshman, as she explained).

News flashes soon came from Libby to our home in Prairie Village, Kansas. "Mom, Mrs. Whiteman has been jogging with me; she has a good looking sweat suit!" Later letters pictured the Whitemans on the tennis courts and enthused over plans to build a paddle tennis court behind Sweet Briar House "that students can use, too."

What a change, I thought, and foresaw a revitalization of the Physical Education Department. Suddenly there was a Prothro Natatorium and lots of dripping wet students going all over the state and elsewhere, winning every medal in sight.

In 1972, when I finally met this warm-hearted and interesting couple, I felt instant rapport. Deedie invited me to Sweet Briar House which I had never entered before.

I did remember, from my student days, what the dining room looked like. One dark winter night, several girls informed me that I really should see how Dr. Glass "ate dinner in high style." Three of us crept up on the front porch and peered through the Brussels lace curtains into the candlelit room. Sure enough, there was general factotum Reuben Higginbotham, in his white jacket and black bow tie, serving that regal lady from a fine silver platter. Dr. Glass, dressed in a long skirt, every hair in place and totally alone, was eating in the afore mentioned "high style."

Since that night, I have eaten many times in high style in that dining room

A Man For All Seasons

under the benign painted eyes of Mr. Williams, Daisy's father, and in the good company of our President and his lady. Much of the same silver gleams, the walls of the room are now soft gold. Reuben, long retired and gone, has been replaced by Ruth Carter and Janice Grooms who carry on the tradition of "doing things right and in high style" at Sweet Briar House, but always under the skillful guidance of Deedie Whiteman.

Through the years we have become friends, laughing together at the funny things that can only happen in a college community. Things like the Whitemans and the Whitleys cleaning off the lake bottom in the Boat House slips in early summer. This chore is done by submerging under water and groping in the mud and muck for beer cans, old bottles and other leftovers from student parties. Deedie chants the labels as they are handed up: "two Miller Lites and one Pabst Blue Ribbon, watch out, here comes a heavy one, it's a Rebel Yell!" Do other college presidents do this sort of thing?! I would say that Harold is unique in this endeavor.

Deedie is unique too. Her musical talents have been a delightful highlight of Faculty Shows, while her role in a recent Paint and Patches offering showed her true acting ability.

The unfailing good humor and bright intellect of both Deedie and Harold have hit a responsive chord with all who have followed the Whiteman years at Sweet Briar — the building projects, upgrading of curriculum, strengthening of endowment, increasing enrollment and faculty salaries. This has been a time of, as John F. Kennedy used to say, "vigah!" May my friends, the Whitemans, take their "vigah" into new and greener pastures with the same zest, humor and interest that has endeared them to me.

Ann Marshall Whitley '47

A gifted pitchman...an "education statesman"

Lea Booth

When Deedie and Harold Whiteman became naturalized Virginians in 1971, one skeptical Sweet Briar alumna waxed Shakespearean, recalling the Prince of Morocco's line in The Merchant of Venice when he opened the casket and exclaimed, "Oh hell! What have we here?"

What Sweet Briar had here was its first male-type president — how intrepid! — and there was great rejoicing among non-chauvinists in the alumnae body. Vive la difference!

Another Sweet Briar alum, a prominent Virginia journalist, was ecstatic. She chronicled the College's sudden defiance of tradition in Commonwealth magazine: "He is like a brand new thing on this earth — a Scott Fitzgerald hero who turned out well.....a Golden Boy of impeccable background" with all the right credentials (maybe, for this moment in Sweet Briar history, even the right gender!).

What nobody anticipated was that H. "Beauregard" Whiteman would soon reveal his latent talent as a gifted pitchman, an articulate and effective spokesman for the poor but proud private sector of higher education — indeed, as the cliché goes, an "education statesman."

Not only Sweet Briar but the whole broad structure of private education enterprise in Virginia has greater vitality and strength because the Whitemans smartly opted to migrate to Virginia instead of responding to a simultaneous bid from an equally prestigious southern college which was then vigorously vying for his leadership abilities.

Validating all of this is the record of the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges. The VFIC is a consortium (hate that pedantic word!) of privately controlled institutions jointly seeking corporate financial support on the "united fund" principle. For three decades it has provided critically useful "bread-and-butter money" to help a dozen inflation-plagued member colleges avoid operating deficits.

VFIC annals will duly record the fact that H. B. Whiteman not only accepted and handsomely fulfilled a leadership role with style and grace and class, but that the VFIC fund reached the highest dollar level in its 30-year history during his term as the Foundation's president. Indeed, his two-year (1980-82) presidential performance brought the VFIC formal recognition this Spring as the most productive of the 40 independent college funds in the nation when $55,000 in competitive prize money was bestowed upon the Foundation by two of the nation's most enthusiastic supporters of independent colleges, IBM Corporation and Levi Strauss & Co.

There is nothing moribund about H. "Beauregard" Whiteman, but Antony, at the crest of his funeral oration, surely had him in mind when he proclaimed:

"He has brought many captives home to Rome Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill."

The general coffers of Sweet Briar and its eleven sister institutions of the VFIC have been enriched by this valiant southern gentleman's commitment to the principle that private enterprise is as essential to American higher education as it is to commerce and industry.

Sweet Briar has prospered

Charles M. Prothro

My first meeting with Harold and Deedie Whiteman will always remain in my memory, for it occurred on a snowy night at the Nashville Airport. Arrangements had been made for the Whitemans to travel with me to Sweet Briar for a meeting of The Presidential Search Committee which was scheduled for the following morning. Although neither Harold nor Deedie expressed concern about flying through a snowstorm at night in a private plane, the fact that he recalled this experience several times in the ensuing years convinced me that they were more nervous than they pretended.

In contrast, the following day was filled with sunshine and the campus wore its late winter beauty. The Whitemans toured the campus, and Harold was interviewed by The Selection Committee. The Committee voted unanimously to recommend to the Board of Overseers and the Board of Directors that he should be offered the Presidency of Sweet Briar College. Appropriate action was taken at the next meetings of these Boards.

One event — which seems trivial in retrospect and has long since been forgotten but which created somewhat of a furor at the time and made for a difficult Board meeting — was "the streaking incident" which, unfortunately, was mentioned in an article in Time Magazine. Such conduct was considered unbecoming for Sweet Briar girls in those days and was the subject of considerable discussion at the ensuing meeting of the Board of Overseers. It was a difficult meeting over which to preside, and it was difficult for Harold to explain satisfactorily to the Board why such behavior could occur on the Sweet Briar campus. I am sure he will remember this as a frustrating meeting for him.

A Man For All Seasons

During my years as Chairman of the Board, the relationship which existed between Harold and me was one of mutual respect and friendship; and, in my opinion, Harold was always very professional in his approach to Sweet Briar problems and his relationship with the governing boards. Sweet Briar has prospered in many ways during the years that Harold and Deedie have been on the campus, and both of them can look back on these years with feelings of pride and accomplishment.

Surviving coed-itis

Gladys Horton

Harold Whiteman came to Sweet Briar at the end of the troubled sixties when some college students were telling administrators and trustees how to run the colleges and universities. Harold had a wonderful way of listening, sympathizing, but never giving in to their demands. It was a difficult period, but Harold weathered it well.

Harold is a very approachable, warm, considerate and thoughtful person who gave a great deal to the college. He can take pride in the progress Sweet Briar has made in surviving the "coed-itis" trend. He can enjoy seeing the increased enrollment (after some lean years) which justifies the decision of the Board of Overseers to stay single-sex.

The theatre has missed a great comedienne in Deedie Whiteman. She has added a great deal of sparkle to campus shows. Unfortunately, I saw her only once but thoroughly enjoyed her performance.

On a more personal basis, I am grateful to Harold for keeping me informed about important developments at the college and sometimes flattering me by asking my opinion. It is many years since I have been active as a Director and Overseer, so I appreciate it very much that Harold has taken time to bring me up to date. Harold and Deedie will be greatly missed. My best wishes for an enjoyable, happy and healthful retirement.

Introducing Nenah Fry...Sweet Briar's Seventh President

Nenah Elinor Fry, Sweet Briar's new president as of August first, 1983, comes to us with an impressive curriculum vitae of teaching and administration in liberal arts colleges. For the past eight years she has been Dean of the College and Professor of History at Wells College in Aurora, New York, a women's college reminiscent of Sweet Briar in its size, setting, and high level of quality.

by Pat Brown Boyer '49

"I have made a conscious commitment to women's education and the value of a small liberal arts college in developing women's potential," Miss Fry says. "I think that the major challenge in which women's colleges can play an especially important leadership role is in what I like to call, at the risk of sounding pompous, 'education for equality.' What we've got today is a situation where the resources, talents and contributions that women can make have yet to be fully integrated into our society. This is a waste."

Women, she believes, have been the great synthesizers of Western thought. They are comfortable with multi-variable problems, or they couldn't have raised families for centuries. They can heal. They can see relationships and are not threatened by anomaly. She wants to see women educated to lead wherever they go...in the professions, in government, in volunteer work.

This articulate, warm and clear-sighted woman was born in Chicago, the daughter of August Jether Fry and Gladys Babcock Fry. Mr. Fry pursued two careers, first in law, and then as an electrical engineer with Chicago Surface Lines. Miss Fry has an older brother, August, Jr., who is Professor of English Literature at the Free University of Amsterdam, Holland. He is also an ordained minister in the Congregational Church.

Nenah Fry grew up in Chicago, where she was valedictorian of her senior class, and went to Lawrence College (now Lawrence University) in Appleton, Wisconsin. She graduated summa cum laude in 1955, with a B.A. in History. Named Senior of Most Excellent Record, she was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and Mortar Board. She also held a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship.

She says that in college she started out with a concentration in science: physics and math, with no thought of emphasizing history until she began to take the required freshman course in that area. To her surprise, she found she liked Ancient History and by the time she took Medieval History, sophomore year, she knew she had found her great love. Her speciality was to become Ninteenth Century European History and her scholarly interests have centered particularly upon the history of ideas and values. As for teaching, the career she has followed for the past twenty-four years, she began to give conscious thought to it during college. She had grown up in a family of educators. Her aunt and her cousins were teachers and, as a father, Mr. Fry was an excellent teacher himself, inspiring Nenah and her brother to search out their own information.

"He would never give us the easy answer," Miss Fry says. She and August grew up in an exciting atmosphere where one answer led them on to the next questions. In college, Miss Fry relates, she was interested in literally every field, carefully portioning out her time for as many subjects in the liberal arts as possible.

The wonderful thing about being an historian is that the older you get, the better you are.

Encouraged by the Lawrence faculty to do graduate work, she went on to Yale University, where she received her M.A. in 1957 and her Ph.D. in History in 1964. During her work at Yale, she was the recipient of three fellowships: the Junior Sterling, Lewis-Farmington and R.R. McCormick. Her dissertation, entitled "Integral Socialism and the Third Republic, 1883-1914," grew out of the day in Sterling Library when she happened upon references to Malon, a little-known French writer of 19th century tracts. He had formed a coterie with three fellow Frenchmen, and together they developed an intellectual expression of reform and socialism. It was Miss Fry's thesis that their thinking formed a hitherto unacknowledged link in French reform thought, moving from the earlier philosopher, Saint Simon, and continuing later to Socialist leaders Jean Jaures and Leon Blum.

The men in Malon's group were self-educated and all but one came from non-urban areas. Malon was a shepherd from the south of France. Fourniere was a former jeweler. Rouanet was a pamphleteer and only Georges Renard, a literary critic, was educated in the formal, classic sense. He was the only Parisian. This diversity of background added much to their thinking. Malon, having participated in the Paris Commune of 1870, was forced to leave the country, and followed the typical 19th century itinerary to Amsterdam and parts of Italy and Spain. Miss Fry was delighted to find a collection of his letters in Amsterdam, giving conclusive proof that he had made contact with Karl Marx, a man he and his friends detested for his political theory. Where Marx wanted a government that totally dominated its people, Malon wanted a society of small units not dominated from the top. Miss Fry would like to do a book on this period some day.

"The wonderful thing about being an historian is that the older you get, the better you are," she exclaimed, naming several historians who did their best work in their seventies and eighties. "It's like money in the bank."

Where travel is concerned, she has a dream list of countries she would like to see. Her foreign travels to-date have been largely historical journeys in Western Europe, to see landmarks of the Holy Roman Empire, and the cathedral towns of England and the continent.

Miss Fry's teaching career began in 1959 when she was invited to be an instructor in History at Lawrence College. She remained there two years and in 1963 became assistant professor in History at Wilson College in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania. Wilson is a small liberal arts women's college situated near the Maryland line. Appointed Associate Professor two years later, she remained at Wilson until 1975 and has returned several times to give the commencement address. In 1980, Wilson bestowed upon her the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters.

When asked if some particular factor drew her into academic administration, Miss Fry laughed and said she was the world's worst example to young women counseled to plan career ladders. She does not demean the idea at all, but has never done it. Without realizing it, her move began as early as her teaching years at Lawrence, where she served on the Committee on Administration. Then followed active participation on faculty committees at Wilson, where she became more and more interested in curriculum, in faculty governance, in the relationships between faculty and trustees, and where she saw how these committees were the vehicles for bringing about important changes. Further, for the past eleven years, she has been an evaluator for the Middle States Associations of Colleges and Secondary Schools (which includes universities), and she chaired its Evaluation Team for a year. As time passed, she began to receive queries as to whether she might consider various positions in administration.

"This is crazy," she thought. "I love teaching history."

Then, as she puts it, she decided that perhaps she was not being very responsible and the next time an inquiry came in, she would follow it up. Two weeks later, the call came from Wells College.

"I love to teach," she said to Margaret Disert, Dean Emeritus of Wilson College. "Is it right to leave it for administrative work?"

"You will continue to teach," replied Dr. Disert. "It's just that your classroom will be different."

The years at Wells have been highly productive. Miss Fry is especially pleased with and proud of curriculum development and the five-fold increase in students taking January internships.

"Please don't get the impression this was done single-handedly," she says. "We at the college have developed all this together. We needed to clarify the whole question of minor fields and we have also had several reviews to keep all our curricula clear and vital."

A Wells student may elect to pursue requirements in any minor field as well as those in her chosen major field. Particularly interesting are the seven interdisciplinary minor fields offered in administrative management, communications, literature, public policy, secondary education, "Science and Human Values."

Nenah Elinor Fry

The Minor Field of Women's Studies requires six courses chosen from those in literature, philosophy, psychology, religion, biology, economics and music that particularly focus on women and issues concerning them.

"This whole area of women's studies is controversial, I know, but we need to deal with it creatively," Miss Fry comments. "There is no need to stereotype the roles of men and women, nor is it possible for men to carry the entire burden of economic provision and decision-making in today's complex world."

Miss Fry has guest-lectured in this field and has written on the subject of women's roles in the 19th century.

Just as Sweet Briar offers a program of off-campus internships during the January term, Wells has a similar plan and Miss Fry saw a notable increase in student interns during her tenure as dean. Forty per cent of the entire student body were involved last year and a recent sampling shows internships in magazine photo editing, in music therapy with chronically ill patients, in petroleum engineering, systems engineering, internal auditing, genetic counseling, marine science research, art gallery management, concert management, and television production.

Particularly noteworthy was the formation in 1977 of P.L.E.N., the Public Leadership Education Network, initially including a group of five women's colleges. From inception, Miss Fry chaired its administrative committee, a committee successful in gaining support in the form of three financial awards from the Carnegie Corporation. She was also one of the two framers of a successful proposal to the National Endowment for the Humanities for a matching grant. So successful was the concept that the Network now includes its original members and four others.

The logic for founding this consortium was to create pertinent pilot projects in education for leadership and then share the experience gained. Wells College concentrated on weekend forums publicized and open to members of surrounding communities, such as Ithaca, as well as its own students. Subjects are topical, often based on proposed state or federal legislation, and political leaders are invited to speak. The recent New York State law change that raised legal purchasing age of alcohol from eighteen to nineteen was the basis of a Wells public forum on drug abuse, and the first held in the area.

Goucher College developed internships. Spelman College in Atlanta studied curriculum, developing two new courses now incorporated in its program. Stephens College in Missouri developed a program of politicians-in-residence. Carlow College in Pittsburgh created a pilot program for continuing education. Results and methods are shared twice a year in Network meetings and through a newsletter, with the idea of adapting another member's program and profiting from another's experience.

Despite her full schedule as dean and member of professional organizations outside the college, Miss Fry was able to teach a course in modern French or German history most of her years at Wells. Team teaching has also provided an opportunity. For example, she shared a course on the "Idea of Progress" with a member of the Classics Department, exploring the varying concepts of progress down through the ages.

She would like very much to continue her teaching at Sweet Briar, but in the beginning will give priority to meeting as much of the college family as possible, including visits to alumnae clubs. To get to know the College she wants to hear, to read and to talk to people.

"And," she says, "in the academic profession...in any profession today...you have to listen fast, because things change so quickly."

Her first view of Sweet Briar was in January, this year, and she says it was a wonderful visit. The students showed her around and she was struck by their interests, variety, candor, concern, and affection for the College. She likes the faculty members she met, finding them dedicated and possessing a clear perspective.

"I have the opportunity to inherit a situation that's very sound. This is a privilege, today. I feel very fortunate."

And so, Miss Fry, do we.

Pat Brown Boyer '49 was an English major and a member of the editorial board of the Sweet Briar News. Since then, she has lived in Boston, the Canal Zone (where she worked for the U.S. Army for two years), Manhattan for 12 years (teaching remedial reading and second grade in three different private schools, while also earning her masters degree), and then in Paris for thirteen years. She lives now in Pomfret Center, CT, with her husband Jean and their 15-year-old son, Jean Maurice. Pat enjoys the lovely corner of north-eastern Connecticut, a rural community of orchards, farms, mill towns and 18th century villages.

The Editor's Room

Anno Domini 1983! A year to remember; A year for the record book!

1983! A year of sadness and farewells; a year of welcome and anticipation.

Pat Brown Boyer, a classmate of mine and former colleague on the Sweet Briar News, took a journey to the snowy banks of Lake Cayuga in New York State, to visit with Sweet Briar's next president, Nenah Elinor Fry, at Wells College.

We welcome Miss Fry and, from Pat's description and introduction, we anticipate the years ahead. A friend who is an alumna and Overseer at Wells told me "she will be very hard to replace, here, and we will miss her very much; none the less, we wish her many happy years at Sweet Briar." We join in that sentiment.

The other side of the coin, of course, is our feeling of sadness in saying goodbye to Deedie and Harold Whiteman. A number of the Sweet Briar family have expressed their thoughts in this issue and in doing so have, I'm sure, spoken for the rest of us. We all thank them for this and hope that the Whitemans understand.

We all know that the seventies were, and always will be, "The Whiteman Years!"

Judging from the response to the Reader Interest Survey in a recent issue, most of our readers like the magazine, read nearly every word and think we are doing a great job.

The respondents have enjoyed such articles as "The Face in the Red Velvet Frame" by Ann Whitley, Dean Belford's convocation address, the anniversary issue on the Junior Year in France and Tom Hartman's "First Things."

They ask for more alumnae profiles, campus pictures (both new and old), a "what has happened to" feature on former faculty members; one reader suggests a column of advertisements for houses for sale or rent, services available, camps (similar to the Princeton Alumni Weekly and others).

It's not easy to reach any conclusions from only twenty-six answers, though we are grateful to those of you who took the time to fill in and mail the questionnaire.

However, there are more than 10,000 copies of each issue mailed, and we can't help wondering what the "silent majority" is thinking.

There was one exception to the generally complimentary reactions (it was almost a welcome change!). A member of the class of 1944 wrote: "Please, some articles of academic interest. The Harvard magazine comes to our house. It is embarrassing to put the S.B. Alumnae magazine out on the table with it. This is 1983. The world is full of interesting new ideas and developments and terrible problems. The magazine should reflect the intellectual life of the College. One would never know S.B. was a first rate intellectual institution from this magazine."

Fair enough! Perhaps our spring issue, on the new computer at Sweet Briar, was a step in the right direction, though we step in another direction this time with an introduction to the College's new president, Nenah Elinor Fry, and a remembrance of "The Whiteman Years."

And, yes nostalgia again, with Part One of Perry Laukhuff's "Vintage First Things." Mr. Laukhuff's magnificent work, describing the scenes and persona of Sweet Briar in the 1930s, is an invaluable addition to our archives and one that should be enshrined in the new museum; it's as much a treasure as Daisy's harp. We are indebted to Mr. Laukhuff for sharing his memories with such literary style and affection.

Going back to that "silent majority," one of our readers wrote: "I should like to see Letters to the Editor expanded to encourage alumnae to express their views regarding the magazine as to content, structure, SBC life or whatever."

Many other alumnae magazines have pages and pages of letters, reacting vigorously to past articles or to happenings on campus. We urge you to write. Kudos are nice, but controversy stimulates change and growth. That's what education is all about, and we hope we're still learning.

Tom Hartman's piece on First Things in the Fall 1982 issue of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine, setting forth some of his early impressions of Sweet Briar, evoked such strong memories of my own first impressions of this place that I could not resist the temptation to set some of them down.

I came to Sweet Briar fifty-two years ago, in the fall of 1930. It was a very different institution in those days, obviously some distance advanced from the founding years, but still farther removed from 1982. In retrospect, I must say that mention of 1930 seems to confer on me almost the character of a Founding Father! And so, with apologies to Mr. Hartman, it seems to me I am truly writing of vintage first things.

SWEET BRIAR 50 YEARS AGO

VINTAGE FIRST THINGS

by Perry Laukhuff

In 1930 the first graduating class was only twenty years out. The college was still struggling to establish a niche and a character for itself in the world of Academe. Daisy and "Miss Indy" and even old Elijah Fletcher were still almost living presences on campus, their names often spoken in the leisurely and warmly friendly conversations which graced afternoon teas and after-dinner coffee gatherings. The old South was still alive at Sweet Briar although, with the benefit of hindsight, it is obvious that it was giving a final curtain call of sorts.

I had been pursuing graduate study at Harvard for several years and I had hoped to enter the United States Foreign Service. But the Great Depression was getting underway and examinations for the Foreign Service had been suspended until further notice (which was not to be until 1936). I could not finance a continuance of my graduate work and so I turned my thoughts to a teaching career. The market for teachers was rapidly contracting. At this juncture, I got a lead from the President of my Alma Mater, Otterbein College, in Ohio — where, by coincidence, Tom and Margaret Hartman were to teach many decades later. President Clippinger told me that Miss Meta Glass, who was President of a "good" girls' school down in Virginia, was looking for someone of low rank (and commensurate pay!) to teach in my field of government. Did I want him to recommend me to her? I did; so he did; and thus it came about that sometime during the winter of 1929-1930 I met, at the Vanderbilt Hotel in New York City, with Miss Glass, the to me unheard of President of a quite unknown college for women somewhere down in the backwoods of Virginia. Miss Glass could be formidable, she could be daunting, she could be charming and she could be gracious. She was all of those things that day, and how I survived her penetrating scrutiny and questioning I do not know. But a couple of weeks later she wrote, offering me the post of Instructor in Government at the munificent Depression salary of $2,400 a year. Feeling like Noah, when the dove brought in the olive twig, I accepted.

I arrived at Sweet Briar in September, 1930, with virtually no notion of what to expect. Curiously enough, I have no idea how I got there and accordingly, I have no first visual impressions to record. Very likely I came down on the Southern Crescent and got off at the old Southern Station, whose "crumbling foundation" catches Tom Hartman's eye as he bikes to his classes today. No doubt I was picked up by "Bus" Rhea, who met the trains in those days. Except for Miss Glass I had not met a single person from Sweet Briar, although Miss Caroline Sparrow had exchanged letters with me during the spring and summer; she was Chairman of the History Department, under which Government was placed in those days.

I do know that my first feelings were ones which would recur often during my years at Sweet Briar — feelings of unease, of strangeness, of inadequacy, of having intruded into an alien world. I was very young, just barely turned twenty-four. I had never had the least experience of teaching. Otterbein had its good qualities, but it was a church-related, somewhat ingrown, conservative, provincial and very lower middle class institution. Harvard had been broadening in the extreme, but for all that I was very wet behind the ears, both socially and academically. Sweet Briar was then still heavily southern in faculty and student body. I was conscious that my middle-western accent sounded rather gauche and uncultured in the midst of the languorous southern accents which now surrounded me. I had come out of an evangelical Protestant milieu; Sweet Briar was then still heavily overlaid with Episcopalianism, something as alien to my experience as the South and the cultivated young ladies to whom I was expected to teach International Law and similar uncultivated and unladylike subjects. Frankly, I suffered at first from a mixture of emotions which by rights should have utterly swamped me — pure terror and awe, and yet also fascination and something akin to the unfolding sensation which a flower must feel as it responds to the warm rays of the sun.

The physical plant, while impressive, even beautiful, was much smaller then than now. Many of today's structures were as yet not so much as a gleam in anyone's eye when I arrived on this isolated campus — the Chapel, Dew, Meta Glass, Prothro Commons, Prothro Natatorium, Babcock, Guion, Wailes Center, some of the houses down on Faculty Row, most of the houses on Elijah's Raod, all of the houses on Woodland Road, the Nursery School building, the Rogers Riding Center, the Bookstore, and others. Daisy Williams Gymnasium was a gleam in the eye, but was still several years from realization. Like everyone before me and everyone after me, I was overwhelmed with the spaciousness and the beauty of the sylvan and bucolic campus. I had never seen anything like it and despite much experience of campuses since, I have never seen anything to this day which can be put in quite the same category.

In those days, by the way, the old oak still stood in all its mighty majesty in the circle at the head of the West Dell. The two now-venerable tall pines which tower at the head of the steps to the left of the bookshop were planted as three-footers after I came. Ginkgoes lined the curving drive just inside the highway gate — their line is still to be seen off to the left as you enter the gate. From where the Station now stands to the cowshed, where the road turns left towards Monument Hill, there stretched a well-cared-for and mature orchard where in the fall one could pick up luscious windfall apples to one's heart's content (sneaking an occasional extra-luscious one off the trees!).

Oh, I loved the rural atmosphere and sweep, the trees and flowers, the unfamiliar mockingbirds and other abundant avian life, the slower pace of activity, the softer southern air. I remember sitting on the Library steps one October evening soon after my arrival and discussing these soft delights of Sweet Briar life with Joseph Dexter Bennett, the young Assistant Professor of English, whose Oxford accent and unconventional mind made converse with him so unpredictable and fascinating.

One of the key words used above is "isolated." The Sweet Briar of 1930 was, in this respect, really an entirely different world from the Sweet Briar of 1982. There were no parking lots except for a small one behind Fletcher, because there were few cars to be parked. Students were not permitted to have cars. This, plus the state of the roads in those days, meant that the Sweet Briar community had to be a largely self-contained one. US highway 29 to Lynchburg was a narrow, high-crowned, very winding road, traces of which can still be glimpsed here and there today, branching off obscurely in short and amputated stretches from the fast modern highway. It wound through an almost entirely rural landscape all the way to Lynchburg, unmarred by stores, real estate offices, service stations, fast food places, banks, auto agencies and all the other characterless features which clutter up today's US 29 from Faulconer-ville south. Here and there as one approached Lynchburg were clusters of pleasant residences — except that one could omit the word "pleasant" as one wound down the last stretch of road to the James, for there, somewhat to the east of the present downhill approach to Williams Viaduct and considerably to the west of today's downhill approach on the Expressway, the final half-mile or so writhed through a veritable slum area of Madison Heights (not looking much better today, if you care to have a go at it!).

It required at least an hour or more for the trip by bus into town, instead of the twenty or twenty-five minutes of the present. A trip into town (for which the students had to sign up, in any case) was therefore an event, undertaken relatively seldom and not without a modicum of advance planning. "Bus" Rhea, Mr. Hudson, or another man whose name I no longer recall (Joe, perhaps?) drove the uncomfortable old bus. Dress standards were prescribed for the students and so were the places where they could eat. The old Virginian Hotel, still standing at the corner of Church and Eighth Streets, was allowable, and so was the Green Tree Tea Room, now a figment of one's memory as standing near the present YWCA on Church Street. I seem to remember that the White House Restaurant was also permissible, a large Greek-run emporium now long gone from the block of Main Street between Seventh and Eighth. The Carroll Hotel, however, at Main and Eighth was definitely off limits to Sweet Briar young ladies! A room at the Virginian was under standing reservation as a day room where Briarites could repair, as to a safe anchorage and shelter! A chaperone was even on duty, to boot, in that room, on Saturday nights.

The point to all this, among others, is that life at Sweet Briar in the thirties was life at Sweet Briar, not classes at Sweet Briar and large and frequent hunks of life elsewhere. The whole college community was thrown back upon its own resources for recreation. There were dances each Saturday night in Grammer Common Room (the old gymnasium in the basement). Riding was, then as now, a popular outdoor exercise, with drag hunts now and then. I, whose last contact with a horse had been the day in my early youth when my grandfather's carriage horse, Dolly, had thrown me off on my head — I now ventured into the saddle and was soon riding across the pastures, through the woods, and over the back mud roads and trails of Amherst County. My vehicle was Bill, a whilom polo pony with a hard mouth and a decided will of his own!

Nothing seemed to challenge the old ways in the course of those walks, trots and canters through the peaceful back country of the county, where modern roads had not yet penetrated and most modern conveniences were conspicuously absent even in the thirties. It was a back country where time seemed to stand still and urban civilization lay far beyond the horizons not only of sight and hearing but even of reality. The horse would slog through the red clay roads, passing the occasional Negro who would invariably lift his hat (or what passed for one) or raise fingers to forehead in salute. The social order seemed timeless and unassailable. Yet, propping up the facade of this seeming invulnerability lay a scant twenty years until the social order would be overturned almost in a twinkling. The ante-bellum South was still lingering on, deceptively healthy looking, almost three-quarters of a century after the Civil War — which in my days at Sweet Briar I was always careful to refer to as the War Between the States, in deference to these outward appearances!

Thanksgiving Day usually provided an expedition up High Peak, and that holiday also saw the entire college dining together in the Refectory in dinner dress and jackets. No going home for Thanksgiving in those days! Picnics, hikes, rambles, a distant jaunt to climb the Peaks of Otter, dances, parties, teas — these were the relatively simple and community-generated activities which occupied much of the free time and week-ends of both students and faculty, often in mixed groups. Mrs. Wills, in Amherst, and "Ma" Jordan (pronounced Jerdan), who lived at the intersection of Dairy Road and Rt. 29, where the Funston Faulconers now live, both served food and snacks as well as afternoon tea, Mrs. Wills by pre-arrangement, "Ma" Jordan at will. Snacks and tea could also be had at the historic and venerable Ambler homestead which still stands (and still occupied by Amblers) well back from the highway across from the Amherst County High School.

Teas and "at homes" were still, in the thirties, a lively carry-over from Victorian and Edwardian times. For example, there was the picturesque, famous and much-loved Walker family who had lived at Mount St. Angelo not too long before my arrival on the scene and were then ensconced in a pleasant and roomy brick house on the opposite side of 29. They were "at home" every Thursday afternoon as I recall and one was welcome to drop in for tea and ladylike (or gentlemanly) conversation with the members of that remarkable family. Mrs. Walker presided, looking astonishingly like Queen Victoria herself in her white "widow's cap." (You can see the cap in the Sweet Briar museum in Boxwood.) Her maiden sister, whitehaired "Auhntie," hovered in secondary matriarchal role, a large black flat bow on the back of her head to indicate her unmarried status. "Dr. Will" had inherited his title from his father and had considerable veterinary skill but no degree, looking still the proper Victorian. He often hired out to drive parties of students on relatively rare occasions to Charlottesville or Lexington, looking and fulfilling his role in an eminently respectable and trustworthy manner. Miss Ruby, who ran the College Bookshop, was cheerfully outgoing and easy to know. (Miss Winifred, another daughter who was living in England during my Sweet Briar years, just died in Lynchburg in November 1982, at the age of 96; thus passes the Walker saga.) Afternoon tea in the ambiance of this English-accented, musical and close-knit family was a not inconsiderable side benefit of the Sweet Briar experience in those far-off days.

Miss Lucy Crawford, Miss Harriet Rogers and Mrs. Dora Neill Raymond were also at home for tea once each week — on Friday afternoons, if my memory serves me — at Red Top on Elijah's Road. Joseph Barker and his much-loved Breton wife, Jeanne, who had arrived the same year I had, were also in the habit of opening their home to all comers one afternoon a week. There were others, including those who, like Miss Jessie Fraser and Miss Dee Long, and the Barretts, over on Old State Road, served tea often, but by invitation only. Thus, on the one hand, the social graces were cultivated seriously and with hospitality; yet, on the other hand, the community was close-knit and natural in its fun and in its relationships. I remember so well the cold winter in the mid-thirties when deep snow had fallen and for several weeks was covered by a strong hard icy crust. I and Mary Pearl, later to become the able Dean of Sweet Briar, went slipping and sliding, whooping and hollering across the frozen undulations of the Sweet Briar pastures, helplessly sliding and helplessly laughing in equal measure!

Like most institutions of higher education, even at that comparatively late date, Sweet Briar consciously promoted the spiritual as well as the mental and social development of the students and community. Church and chapel services were held in the "chapel," the auditorium on the basement floor of Manson, in the space now occupied primarily by the Post Office. It wasn't very elegant, but it had a certain dignity and was treated with reverence when in use for worship. Every Sunday there was a church service, usually conducted by an Episcopal priest, using, of course, the Book of Common Prayer. These services were well attended by faculty and students and always by the Walker family, whose presence conferred upon the gathering, by some alchemy, the semblance of Matins in some English country church. With notable exceptions, the faculty was religiously orthodox and its members regularly gave to the services the cachet of their presence not only on Sunday morning, but also at the weekday Chapel services. In fact, a faculty member usually conducted these latter. I myself was too junior (and religiously unsettled!) to be entrusted with this solemn duty but I usually attended and in 1935-1936 I sometimes played the organ for the hymns. Without belaboring the obvious further, it is easy to see that religion played a much more prominent and influential role in the College in those days than it appears to do now.

Bus Rhea's Bus, 1924

Sweet Briar had opened its doors in the year of my birth, 1906. It was therefore just my age when I arrived in 1930. I must say that 1906 seemed a rather long way back to me then! Nevertheless, the College's beginnings were still an unmistakable part of the scene. Almost no conversation failed to elicit some reference to a person or an event or an influence of the earliest years. This is something which in the nature of things is now largely absent. In those years of the thirties, however, there were still at least three people present on faculty and staff who had served ever since the College opened in 1906. They were Dr. Mary Harley, Miss Gay Patteson and Mr. William Bland Dew. Miss Caroline Sparrow had been on the faculty since 1907, Miss Virginia McLaws since 1908, Miss Eugenie Morenus since 1910 and Hugh Worthington since 1911. Miss Claudine Hutter, a friend and colleague in the Lynchburg Little Theatre, had been on the faculty in 1911. Miss Margaret Banister, of the Public Relations staff had graduated in 1916, and Mrs. Bertha Pfister Wailes of the faculty was a 1917 graduate. Miss M. Dee Long had come in 1919.

There was thus a continuum with the founding, a strong, intangible but real continuum. We were all made to feel personally acquainted with "Miss Indy" and with Daisy Williams. Founder's Day was solemn and obligatory for all; it was a long procession which trudged up to Monument Hill. Anecdotes of the early days abounded in conversation. Signora (Hollins), who had been Daisy's little black playmate, was still a familiar figure around campus. I shall never forget how she took part in the ceremonies connected with the turning of the first shovelful of earth for the new Daisy Williams Gymnasium in 1931. Following President Glass — a hard enough act for anyone to follow — Signora spoke to the assembled crowd with immense poise and dignity, recalling moments of her memories of Daisy.

Thoughts of Signora lead me to recall other figures on the humbler levels of Sweet Briar's life in those days. Sterling (Jones) — I venture to describe all these people thus, simply because in those days they were always, and only, known and addressed by their first names — was the dignified gray-haired black man who presided over the ordering of Academic (today's Benedict). Chris Thompson, one of the custodians of Fletcher, invariably greeted me with a ritualistic "Mawnin', Doctah"! Others come to mind: Lewis (Chambers) in the Post Office, then in the basement of Alumnae House; Sam (Morris) and Luther (Euille), cheerful younger men who swept and fetched and carried in the library.

A quiet but by no means inconsiderable person on campus was that jewel of Miss Glass' household, her maid, Frances (Miles). Certainly no one can say that relationships between the races in Amherst County in those days were relations of equality. Yet they were relationships of warmth, friendship and mutual esteem, on a plane far above anything that I, as a Northerner, had ever experienced in Ohio or Massachusetts. Frances served Miss Glass with a fierce loyalty, with pride and with efficiency. Meals at Sweet Briar House were of memorable quality, and elegantly served. It was said that on one occasion the President had with great difficulty persuaded Frances to serve at table when there was a guest whom the latter considered to be of insufficient quality to sit at the President's table! In return for such loyalty, when she fell ill she was put to bed in Sweet Briar House and waited on personally by Miss Glass. Fifty years! Other times, other ways!

One additional presence on campus and in the area cannot fail to be recalled. Scattered about, but found particularly in the neighborhood of St. Paul's Mission and School over beyond Paul's Mountain, were the "Issues." Everyone knew them and they were rather readily recognizable by their dark, almost Eskimo-like faces. The product of intermingling, at some time in the past, between Indians and Negroes, they lived uneasily on the lower levels of life in the County. They were not allowed to attend the white schools; they would not attend the Negro schools. Hence the missionary educational and religious work which the Episcopal Church had undertaken at St. Paul's. One of their number, Bowman (Nuckles), lived in a house just off campus out near Elijah's Road. Pleasant and cheerful but seemingly tongue-tied as far as I was concerned, he was a familiar sight as he occupied himself with growing flowers and vegetables for the College. There is a tree planted in his memory in the main quadrangle on the south side of the road opposite Fletcher. Today, I seldom hear the word, "Issue." They are still around, but sociologically speaking they seem to have passed more or less into history.

If Sweet Briar's setting seemed idyllic, placid and unchanging, the College's nature as an institution was less so. For twenty-five to thirty years, it had been seeking to find itself, to establish itself solidly in the academic and public mind. The name was, shall we say, a little less

Junior Year in France Concludes Anniversary Celebration

Rep. Paul Simon of Illinois, who spoke on "The Tongue-tied American," talks with Laura Buckham, professor emeritus of French, and Janet Lowrey, director of Public Relations, at Sweet Briar House.

The observance of the 35th Anniversary of the Sweet Briar College Junior Year in France ended in March with a gathering of alumnae and friends for a two-day celebration on the College campus.

Two previous events were held, the first in New York City in late September on the occasion of the annual meeting of the program's Advisory Committee. Paris was the site of the second, a reception where Dean Fontaine Belford and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Marshall greeted 300 guests.

The Alumnae Association of Sweet Briar sponsored the final event, a weekend on campus which included a reception at Sweet Briar House hosted by President and Mrs. Whiteman, a dinner at Wailes Center and an address by Rep. Paul Simon of Illinois sponsored by the Sue Reid Slaughter Fund.

Two panels were presented the next morning, the first led by Mary Morris Gamble Booth '50, included faculty members Antonia Taylor, Glenn Van Treese, Kenneth Grimm and Robert Marshall. The second panel was made up of alumnae who have studied abroad; they were Bettye Thomas Chambers '62, Louisa S. Dixon '75, Victoria Bates Roy '74, Mary Lee Burch Weil '74 and Harriet Farber Friedlander, Mount Holyoke '51, president of Academic Arrangements Abroad.

An Empire parlor was included in the Museum using the wealth of Sweet Briar furniture that dates from the 1820's through the 1840's. In the foreground is Elijah Fletcher's Day Book covering the years of 1818-1821.

Daisy's harp formerly belonged to her mother. It was purchased in London in 1845 by Indiana when she was on the grand tour of Europe in 1844-1846.

Ann Morrison Reams '42 and Helen Smith Lewis '54 find some items of Victorian jewelry too old fashioned for modern tastes.

Martha Mansfield Clement '48 examines a case filled with Daisy's clothing dating from 1867 to 1883. Included are some of the many oriental objects found among the Williams possessions.

Clothing and dress accessories belonging to Indiana Fletcher Williams span the years from 1845 to the 1890's. The collection also includes many outstanding examples of 19th century lace.

Personal possessions of the Fletcher-Williams family have been uncovered including an 1853 letter from the slave, Martha Penn, asking Elijah Fletcher to buy her. She became Daisy Williams' nurse. Martha is seen in tintype at lower right. The Homeopathic medicine chest contains vials of obscure 19th c. pills and powders. The Philadelphia brass scale was used to weigh the medicine.

Sweet Briar's Lucifer

by Martha Hardesty '37

Miss Lucy Crawford entered my life in my freshman year at Sweet Briar. I had opted for a course in philosophy quite by accident — an accident that changed my college major and also my life.

On the first day of class she stood before us, a rather short stocky figure with a strong-boned face. A crown of lustrous red-gold hair was swept up and held in place by a small knot on the very top of her head. Her feet firmly planted on the floor, she looked as though neither storm nor cyclone could move her. Her warm hazel eyes looked into the attentive faces before her with interest — and yes, with love.

Soon I found myself spending countless hours in the library absorbing the words of ancient philosophers. The library would often be closing for the night before I was aware that I had missed dinner.

Miss Lucy was also known as "Lucifer," a sobriquet bestowed on her by the class of 1926 when they learned that one of her female forebears, in Revolutionary times, had hurled an intruder bodily through the door in defense of her young brood. She appeared to have inherited that capability and was considered indomitable by both students and her faculty colleagues.

Miss Lucy was born in Nyack, N.Y. on October 5, 1890, the next to the youngest of eight children. Her father was a successful New York lawyer and her mother, according to the custom of the times, was a successful wife. All of Miss Lucy's siblings, with the exception of her brother Conrad, who was killed in action in the First World War, were to become professionals. Her first year out of high school was spent working to help her parents with the financial burden of three Crawfords attending Cornell University. The following year, she enrolled at Cornell.

Cornell felt her impact immediately. Strong on social justice, she championed the cause of two black students and succeeded in having them admitted to her dormitory. In addition, she welcomed two Jewish students to her dining table.

She received her B.A. in 1913 and, after years of work and study, was awarded her Ph.D. by Cornell University in 1923.

Sweet Briar reached out and appointed her to its faculty where she taught until her retirement in 1956 as chairman of the Departments of Philosophy, Psychology and Education. Teaching was still in her blood and for several years after her retirement she taught at Lynchburg College and the Extension Division of the University of Virginia at Lynchburg.

She often spoke of living with zest and enthusiasm and her life exemplified this. Her activities and involvements brought enumerable people to her door for help, information, solace and guidance. Each person was vital to her and she would give her energies to a seemingly unimportant matter, because it was important to someone.

Her many interests included bread making, gardening, social work, the Unitarian Church and, of course, her many generations of students.

When a college prank ricocheted and I was one of two identified culprits, I was suspended just before final exams and told I could return in the fall to take them.

I was crushed, dreading the possible reaction of my father, whom I adored. I had let him down and was a disgrace to my family. I turned to Miss Lucy. With loving patience she led me down avenues of understanding.

"Those who never or seldom know failure are those whose area of activity must be very circumscribed," she said. "Guilt, too, may serve a useful purpose in focusing our attention on our mistakes — but let it not linger too long — and do not revive it recurrently for the sake of 'self-discipline' — which soon may become 'self torture.'" Her words gave me self assurance and a feeling of acceptance.

When I returned in the fall to take my exams, Miss Lucy greeted me cordially and invited me to tea at her lovely campus home, Red Top. An invitation to Red Top was an honor. The fire burned and danced in the fireplace and Miss Lucy's Philosopher Bread was delicious. Because she put it to rise in a lard tin, the confines gave it a unique mushroom shape. The aroma of fresh wheat and yeast whetted the appetite. Miss Lucy said of her bread baking, "Homely, utilitarian chores, such as baking bread and gardening, give one an opportunity for meditation that can result in a feeling of kinship with the cosmos."

Conversation had been general as we sipped our tea and it wasn't until later that I realized that at least a part of it was for my benefit. Miss Lucy had said, "The present is of greater importance to each of us than our past or our future, because it is the only moment of life that is within our direct control, and because it is the instant of creation — the instant when we create our future out of our past."

That day I realized that I pictured Miss Lucy as a female Socrates. Certainly she had his powers of observation and delineation. I had no sure idea of his physical attributes, but I could imagine him short and stocky with prominent bones, just like Miss Lucy.

In one lecture that I remember well, Miss Lucy said, "There is one thing we can answer with certainty — and that is that the times call for the sacrifice of non-essentials, for a dedication of spirit, and an eagerness to serve our fellowman such as we have never known before."

I was just a student, a young one who had entered college when barely sixteen. My family had provided comforts and protection to me. I was not aware of the poor, the downtrodden, or the deprived.

Alumnae Magazine

Suddenly, I was conscious of my blindness, my insensitivity to the world outside my own small orbit. This realization has had a lasting and poignant effect on my life.

Miss Lucy loved dogs and children. She remained a single lady, but always had a dog to whom she devoted much attention. She had many ideas on how children should be treated. One saying, taken from a collection of her writing, clarifies why she and children had such good rapport.

"Whenever we associate with children," she advised, "we should talk up to them, rather than down."

In response to a letter from her 10-year-old nephew in which he asked, "What is philosophy?", she answered in part, "...the philosophic search for truth and wisdom goes on even today. The more we know the more we want to know — the more we think the more questions we have to ask. ...A philosopher, then, is a person who enjoys thinking about the kind of world we live in and the relation of that world to human beings, and the study of such questions is philosophy."

Miss Lucy had written copiously and after her sudden death on December 30, 1963, her students and friends compiled a book of her writings entitled, "The Best of Lucifer" which today is treasured by all who knew and loved her, a philosopher and a great human being.

Time to evaluate and dispense with what is no longer meaningful. Time to pursue whatever interests you may have. Time without the distractions so long endured. Retirement can also be a rewarding adventure. Though I have filled my life with volunteer work and courses at the University, I still have time to be grateful for where I am, what I am doing and the many interests I have yet to explore."*

Women's Invitational Art Exhibition

Babcock Gallery was the site, last spring, of "The Women's Invitational Exhibition." Fifty-six works were submitted by current students at Bryn Mawr, Hollins, Mary Baldwin, Mount Holyoke, Randolph-Macon, Smith, Sweet Briar and Wellesley. Organized by Susan J. Bandes, assistant professor of art history at Sweet Briar, the show was limited to works on paper and included oils, prints, photographs, drawings and collages.

Anne Truitt, Washington artist and professor of art at the University of Maryland, judged the show and presented an illustrated lecture.

Honors, and an expense-paid visit to Sweet Briar, were awarded to Catherine Burd, Mount Holyoke; Cynthia Scobey, Hollins; Mary Amster, Smith; Amy Ayres, Wellesley; Leslie Kirkby, Sweet Briar; and Kelly Bennett, Hollins.

Phi Beta Kappa President

Catherine S. Sims, dean at Sweet Briar from 1965 to 1974, is serving as president of the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa for a three year term, 1982-1985.

Mrs. Sims has been a senator of Phi Beta Kappa since 1973 and vice-president of the United Chapters since 1979. She served on the Committee on Qualifications from 1967 to 1982 and was chairman of the committee from 1973 through 1982. She also has been chairman of the Phi Beta Kappa Foundation since 1979.

In her new position, Mrs. Sims succeeds Edgar F. Shannon, former president of the University of Virginia and husband of Eleanor Bosworth Shannon '47, who has served as president of Phi Beta Kappa since 1979.

A graduate, with honors in history, of Barnard, Catherine Sims received her doctorate from Columbia University and her Honorary Doctor of Letters degree from the University of St. Andrews in Scotland. She taught history and political science at Agnes Scott College, and was vice-president and dean at the American College for Girls in Istanbul, before coming to Sweet Briar in 1965.

The Tie is Tight...

What connection is there between a check made out to Sweet Briar College's Alumnae Fund and a bunch of nostalgia that goes almost all the way back to Daisy Williams' time?

For years, as the husband of a Sweet Briarite, I've been through my share of Sweet Briar history, foibles, memorabilia, souvenirs, and I feel it's now time to honor my "obligation" to the College, to my wife and to the many SB Alumnae it has been my privilege to know and admire for over 50 years...along with their spouses.

So here's to my wife, Carolyn, who was born at Sweet Briar, spent her childhood years there and returned to the class of 1930, and to the memory of her mother and of her father whose workmen made the very bricks used in the College's first buildings and thus presented Sweet Briar's first facade to the educational world.

Here's to the good times of the years gone by, when Carolyn and I would meet at "Red Top" and dine on scrumptious southern fare with Miss Lucy, Harriet Rogers, Mom and Pop Blackwell, Dr. Mary Harley, Dr. Rice, Bernice Lill, Dan Boone and her lovely mother, Gert Prior, Helen Mac, Mary Hughes Blackwell and many other true and loving friends. Gone, many of them are, now...but still their memory remains and fills our hearts with warmth. They knew how to live, to enjoy life and to help others. We love them, and because, to us, they personify Sweet Briar, we wish to remember more intrinsically.

Of course, this remembrance is basically for Carolyn but I, also, have a few "roots" at Sweet Briar and I like to indulge my fancy. I remember the Walkers (Dr. Will, Miss Ruby, Miss Winnie), first at San Angelo many years ago, and later at their cottage, reached, as I recall, by driving down the old dairy road. I remember Dr. Harley who brought Carolyn into the world, and had it not been for her persistence, help and sponsorship, Carolyn might never have gone to Sweet Briar, and how different our lives might have been. I remember lunch many years ago at Sweet Briar House, hosted so graciously by Miss Meta Glass and, more recently, dinner there as guests of Dr. Harold Whiteman and his charming, effervescent Deedie. New faces...old surroundings; heartwarming.

"Sweet Briar! Sweet Briar! Flower fair"..Do we?

Yes, we care.

And the check...what shall it be for? Why, to honor Lucifer, the late Dr. Lucy Shepard Crawford's memory and to help keep it brightly alive, not only among those who knew and loved her and appreciated what she did for Sweet Briar and its people, but also for the students of today and tomorrow. Miss Lucy agreed to be the legal guardian of our three young children should anything happen to Carolyn and me. So, as you see, the tie is tight: Sweet Briar, Lucifer, the Blouins.

Computer Input

Regarding the teaching of computer science, here is a thought. My company, EDS, is more often called in to solve business problems for clients than purely technical ones. Too often their own people cannot look at a business problem and find a business solution. In other cases, a solution will be applied to a symptom rather than a real problem because it has not been defined. In short, the more emphasis there is on computer solutions to real business problems the better.

When I figure out how to teach these skills, I'll let you know.

Blanche Quincey Stubbs, Deland, FL, looks forward to the "SB Calling" each year. Since for physical reasons it is difficult for her to get out, she appreciates the personal touch of a conversation with a young student.

Ethel Gaines Bruner, Knoxville, TN, was impressed by the Campaign Update, which she called "a beautiful presentation."

We are sorry to report that Frances Nash Burgher lost her husband in March of 1982. She has sold her home in Dallas and moved into a condominium there.

Elizabeth Brewster Tempel, who attended SBC for two years before graduating from the U. of Chicago, is now interested, not only in those two colleges, but also in Stanford, the Prevention of Nuclear Arms, Gun Control, and many other good causes. She and her husband now live in Oceanside, CA.

Eleanor Sikes Peters and her husband have just celebrated their 56th wedding anniversary. They have two sons (with perfect wives) and between them live grandsons and one granddaughter. One grandson is married with a 3-year-old daughter and another was recently married. One son and one grandson entered the family insurance business. Eleanor did her Wagnerian program for the opening of the new music school, a performance which she calls her "swan song."

Bernice Hulburd Wain writes that she is a housewife in Brandenton, FL.

Muriel MacLeod Searby, Brunswick, ME, had a fall in December which resulted in a sprained back, but her greatest regret seemed to be that she had not been able to get to Baltimore to see her new great-grandson. She also has a new grandchild.

Faithful Fund Agent Jean Grant Taylor and her husband spent the summer in Woods Hole, MA, as they have done for many years. In the middle of September they head back home to Ann Arbor, MI.

Class President Mary Rich Robertson had a call from Betty Guy Tranter when she and Parke attended the wedding of a relative who lives near Baltimore. Their travels took them on to Maryland's Eastern Shore, Tide's Inn at Irvington, VA, and Williamsburg — a great trip according to Betty. The Tranters have two attractive granddaughters.

Mary also reported several other items. She had heard from Carol Flynn Eley, who lives in Ft. Lauderdale, FL.

Clara King Maxwell, Charlotte, NC, had a cataract operation last summer and is also recovering from a bad fall.

Janet Schureman Wilson, now a widow, is living in Kansas City, only 10 minutes from her son and family, and is enjoying and gradually coming to know that city, but she still misses the East.

Esther Jack Arnold, Delaware, OH, had a visit at Thanksgiving from her son and his family, including two boys, 5 and 3. "Jackie" was the honor guest at a birthday party given by Betsy Munce Weis '43. They also attended an SBC reunion of alumnae from nearby towns. Jackie's son is a doctor in the field of radiology and lives in Stevenson, MD.

The Robertsons keep active and well — with only a twinge of arthritis now and then. Their bachelor son does his best to keep them young, and they are proud that he is an usher at old St. Paul's Church, where Mary's grandparents were married.

Mary writes, "All you alumnae of '24, put on your most-used calendar that our 65th Reunion is next May (1984). Let's have a good group for those few days at our alma mater — Sweet Briar with its beautiful campus."

Where to start? Perhaps a good place would be the lovely cover on the 1982 spring Alumnae Magazine that featured not only the new Mary Hughes Blackwell tulip, but also our classmate herself. I hope you all noticed it — I did and it helped me sell $50 worth of bulbs to a red tulip fancier! Mary Hughes has been keeping busy when not helping run the Alumnae Office by being "mother of the bride" twice this year, as both her youngest and her oldest were married.

Then next, Alice Babbitt Hackley's newsy card last year came too late to be included, but understandably so, as during January she had been busy with the wedding festivities of her first grandchild. In the summer of '81 she, too, entered the ranks of '28ers who have celebrated their 50th wedding anniversaries: for the Hackleys' celebration all four children and all 10 grandchildren were present.

Virginia Morris Kincaid's '82 card also came late from her winter home in Coronada, CA, but this year's arrived from Bethesda, MD, where she is remaining this winter — the right place for the right January. Having that kind of good luck undoubtedly contributes to the success of the Women's Bank of Washington, which she founded five years ago and which opened two branches this year. She spent Christmas in Memphis, after which she enjoyed a family reunion at her grandson's wedding to "a lovely Southern gal."

In re grandchildren, I noticed in the "Alumnae Daughters" column that there was in the Class of '85 a Mary Nelms Rosa and in '86 a Harriet Dunlap McNair. Not hard to deduce who their grandmothers were!

I am sad to report the death of Virginia Van Winkle Morlidge's husband John during the summer of '82 and that of Eleanor Branch Cornell's husband Ezra in October. Our deepest sympathy goes out to both of them.

The first card I received this year (in fact I got it two days before my own card arrived from the Alumnae Office) was from Nancy King Tarpley, who still lives in the quiet Northumberland County, VA, town where they settled after her husband's retirement from the Army in 1957. She was widowed in '72 and now shares her home with her bachelor brother and her terribly intelligent and beautiful miniature poodle.

I hope as many of you really attended Reunion as indicated you would, but of the excuses offered for not planning to come, I think that of Lib Crane Hall is the happiest — she has three grandchildren graduating from various colleges (she didn't say where) in May! Then everyone is going to Cambridge Beaches in Bermuda to celebrate. Right now she is in Florida, and she will spend the summer in Gratton, VT.

Our classmates who traveled farthest this year seem to be Winnie West Morriss (Anne Mason Winn '29 accompanied her) and Marion Sumner Beadle, who were on the Sweet Briar trip to Russia and who were suffering at the time of writing to me from severe cases of jet lag. However, both reported having had a most interesting time, which I hope Winnie will have enlarged on at Reunion by the time you read this. Marion says she won't be able to come.

Grace Sunderland Owings said she, too, hoped to be at Reunion. She enjoys living near her grandchildren and great-grands and walking in the woods near her home with her Border Collie. She saw Bonnie Mathews Wisdom in Washington a year ago. I was not so fortunate, as I was still up at my place in Michigan when Bonnie and John were in Chicago in October. Bonnie writes that they are delighted that one son, John, and one daughter, Kit, are now living in New Orleans — John in law and Kit teaching riding, specializing in dressage. Incidentally, a number of cards had complimentary remarks concerning the wonderful job Bonnie has done as Fund Agent.

Kay Meyer Mauchel's card last year was late, so you didn't hear that her travels have been wide — a cruise on the QE-II and a two-month safari in Africa. This year she is staying put — very put — having sold her home in Connecticut and now living full-time in Sarasota, where she plays lots of golf and bridge and is very active in the Garden Club.

Another active golfer is Evelyn (Tommy) Claybrook Bowie, who is equally active in tennis. The year 1981 was a rough one for her husband Gordon, who had a triple bypass from which he was recovering beautifully only to be shot down by serum hepatitis from the transfusions. All is well now and he is back playing tennis several times a week. His Christmas present to his family was a week in Montego Bay — for all nine, including three grandchildren. Their daughter Bev and her husband run a weekly newspaper in Cranford, NJ, and their son Lee is head of the Philosophy Dept. at Mt. Holyoke, so it is unusual for them all to have much time together. Later Tommy and Gordon planned to go to Hillsboro Beach, FL, and then to Grenada, W.I., for the balance of the winter.

Tommy, who says she would like to run into some classmates in Florida, should drive the few miles north to Delray Beach, where Louise (Squeak) Harned Ross has a home and is an equally avid golfer. In fact, Squeak was co-chairman last year of Winetka's Indian Hill Country Club Women's Tournament Committee. Squeak visited Louise Bristol Lindemann on Cape Cod on her way North last spring, and I received reports from both of them that it was a great reunion despite no cooperation from the weather.

Jane Hardy Bellows is still keeping busy as an amateur case worker with Cambodian refugees, teaching them English. In January she went to Sun City, AZ, to visit her brother and then on to California. Jane sent a clipping about the death of Flora Pope Bruce, who had just a short time earlier written of her interesting trip to France last October with her daughter to visit one of her live grandchildren who was spending her junior year there. Flora was a good friend to many of us and will be missed.

Helen Davis McClrath has recovered from her broken hip of last year although she has given up driving. She is pleased that her minister son, George, has moved from New Jersey to Morrison, IL, so that she can see him and her grandchildren more frequently.

Madelyn Markley Clark wrote from her Memphis home (winter) that she had a pleasant surprise visit at her Indianapolis home (summer) last year from Maude Adams Smith '27 and her husband. She mentioned that another Memphis SBC alumna, Louise Wilbourn Collier '46, has just published Pilgrimage, a novel set in Natchez.

Connie Furman Westbrook and Joe have voyaged to Hawaii and Bermuda this year. When home in Atlanta she sees Marguerite (Cupie) Hodnett McDaniel almost daily and reports Mac is making a fine recovery.

Marion Jayne Berguido, who has been working part-time in the Country Bookshop, plans to accompany her daughter June to Sweet Briar this spring. June will be attending her 25th Reunion.

Betty Harms Slaughter, Louisville, KY, wrote that she has recently remarried and is now Mrs. Jonathan Van Dyke Norman.

Lillian Wood is spending the winter in Ft. Myers, FL. She is still kept busy doing the thing she loves best — painting portraits in oil.

The last card I received was from our beloved Class President, Betty Prescott Balch, who is unable to consider coming to Reunion because the severity of her arthritis limits her activities. It is the first Reunion she has missed since our graduation! However, another kind of reunion came to her. Two days after Christmas she and Dick hosted a get-together of almost the entire Balch clan — 24 children and grandchildren with only four missing despite the fact that normally they are scattered far and wide. Needless to say, "They had a ball."

This seems to have been a year for happy family reunions within our class. I hope that our May Reunion as a class proves equally successful. In any case, being your Secretary for the past five years has been sort of fun, and I hope I've been able to bring back to you a little of the feeling about and for each other that made us such a great class.

Eleanor Wright Conway (Mrs. Theodore J.), 2160 Tanglewood Way, N.E., St. Petersburg, FL 33702

Dear "Girls": My letter last June describing Reunion Fifty brought some interesting replies — and two sad ones telling of the deaths of Edythe Hardesty of Charlottesville and Virginia Finch Waller of Memphis.

Our French exchange student, Marcelle Dominique Perrot, wrote an appreciative note with a post card view of Aix-en-Provence where she lives. She said, "No special event here but the hot weather — so we are planning to go to get some cool in the Alps of Savoie. Excuse my English and please do receive my best remembrances." Charmante, n'est-ce pas? A letter from Sally Ainsworth Glass came from England where she spent most of the summer taking courses of study at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. She always was one of our very best brains! To quote her: "I hasten to add that the courses I took were purely and simply for my own pleasure and for the immense fun of having the feeling of actually living in a college at Cambridge." Sally moved from Atlanta several years ago to Fayetteville, AR, and I miss seeing her at church and at Colonial Dames meetings.

Dot Smith Berkeley and Edmund had a wonderful summer! After two months on Little Squam, NH, and a week at home in Charlottesville, they sailed on the QE-II for six weeks in England for research on Featherstonhaugh (Dot is a history and science writer), which took them to such fascinating watering places as Scarborough, Buxton, and St. Michael's Mount in Cornwall. "Our last week was pure vacation, walking the wonderful cliffs of Cornwall at St. Ives, etc." Anglophile that I am, I can enjoy vicariously the experiences of Sally and the Berkeleys.

Ted Clary Treadwell wrote of her and Ben's taking their daughter, son-in-law, and two granddaughters, aged 12 and 15, who were visiting them in Chevy Chase, to Monticello and then on to SBC so Ted could show the girls her alma mater. She reports the campus was perfectly gorgeous, the dells manicured, and her granddaughters awed at "the beauty and perfection." Marjorie Ward Cross also visited SBC briefly while visiting colleges with a grandson, who said he wished Sweet Briar took men! Marjorie is still working hard at Winterthur. Last year she went to Vicksburg, MS, where she had a wonderful visit with her SBC roommate, Elizabeth Young Faulk. Marcia Patterson, retired from her teaching career, has moved from Garden City, NY, to Columbus, OH, and, after the ordeal of moving, is liking very much her new residence.

Eleanor Mattingly Littlepage, M.D., retired three years ago but is staying very busy at her home in Norfolk learning about home nursing.

Eleanor Wright Conway, our Fund Agent, returned to Sweet Briar for Alumnae Council last October. El wrote that she and Ted greatly enjoyed Reunion Fifty, seeing her classmates and meeting their husbands. She thinks the "boys" had as much fun as the "girls." And they were both terribly "impressed with the giant strides that have been made academically as well as in the entire plant."

Eleanor Nolte Armstrong wrote that she had recently returned from a convention of the Alliance of Pan American Round Tables held in El Paso. "What an inspiration it was to meet with old friends and new, members representing most of the countries of the Americas, women whose purpose is to provide mutual knowledge, understanding, and friendship among all the women of the Western Hemisphere — they did me the honor of voting me their Pan-American Woman, thereby placing me in the ranks of those distinguished women who have preceeded me." Our warmest congratulations, Eleanor! We are mighty proud of you!

Barbara Munter Purdue and Bob have five children, four daughters and one son. The youngest daughter, Beverly, followed in her father's footsteps and is a lawyer working for the government in Washington. Their third child, Hazel, my goddaughter, is a pediatric nurse and was voted 1982 Nurse of the Year in her hospital. All that and a husband and two children, too! Bob is a world-wide fisherman and practices his hobby from Nicaragua to Alaska to New Zealand. Barbara usually goes along and she catches big ones, too! They are off to Hawaii for four weeks in January and February. They go every year at this time on bank meetings for Bob and afterwards for a mid-winter vacation. While in the islands they visit with Marge Gubelman Hastert '31 and see Mildred Larimer. Larimer has retired from her career and lives in Honolulu.

Hazel Stamps Collins divides her time between Atlanta and her condominium in Naples, FL. She had a grand trip with friends to Ireland last fall. I see Lib Douglass Foote often. She recently lost her older sister who lived with her many years; Adeline spent the last three years in a nursing home. Lib works several days a week in a beautiful gift shop.

Amalie Frank Kohn reported that Lib Doughtie Bethea and her daughter Brandon Brown stayed a few days with her early in January when they came from Memphis to the Atlanta Merchandize Mart to buy for Brandon's gift shop. Brandon is also a portrait artist. When I called, Amalie was busy getting off to Florida for a visit with friends in Ft. Lauderdale. She told me that her daughter Judy Cohen, whom we met at Reunion, and her husband are in London for six months. Her husband is a professor at James Madison College in Harrisonburg, VA, and is a director for the school's winter quarter in London.

During February Emma Knowlton Lytle, Gunnison, MS, had an exhibit of both painting and sculpture at the Carnegie Public Library in Clarksdale, MS. She has exhibited throughout Mississippi and also in Iowa, Wisconsin, and Illinois.

And lastly me. When I lost my husband two years ago, I sold our house, where we'd lived for 32 years, and bought a condominium. I like where I live. It is a large condo community with all kinds of people and all ages, not far from where I was, and with lots of open space for Missy (small brown poodle) and me to walk. It surely is nice to hear those lawn mowers going once a week and not have to worry about whether the yard man is coming. My older daughter, Karen Murray, lives in Florida with her family. Her husband is a citrus grower. My other daughter, Nancy, lives in Atlanta and is married to Barry Frazier. They have one child, Catherine, aged 13; and I am thoroughly enjoying the blossoming of Catherine without the attendant responsibilities!

Au revoir, and please write to me.

Dear Classmates:

This sentence from Betty Fesser MacLeay will surely rock you back on your heels, as it did me. I quote:

"Have recently learned that our daughter is about to become a grandmother."

Aline ("Stumpy") Stump Cook writes that she and husband Charles moved to Dublin, NH, in June 1982 and spend the four winter months in Weeki Wachee, FL, as New Hampshire winters and her arthritis are not compatible. She notes that "Muggy" Gregory Cukor recently returned from a Mediterranean Cruise and is the proud grandmother of Elizabeth; she also mentioned that she, Elizabeth ("Pinkie") Pinkerton Scott, and Libby Hartridge had a delightful evening in New York.

Lucile Cox Jones sent in the first card and said that she and husband Robert traveled to Yugoslavia, Greece, etc. in 1982 and plan to take an extended trip to Sicily this year. They joy in their retirement.

In April Fran Baker Lamb will take part in her fourth decorators' show house to benefit the Baltimore Symphony, which she says is hard work but fun. In June '82 she and Wilson took their second English tour, staying in manor houses in the Cotswolds area. They worked for CARE and in two Congressional campaigns.

Jane Shelton Bowers says that her sister Mary Shelton Clark (Mrs. George M.) '29 died in September 1981. "I had gone with her to her 50th Reunion in '79. SB is still the beauty spot of all the world to me." Jane adds that she has 11, going on 13, grandchildren and that she sees Mary Poindexter Willingham often and talked with Ruth Robinson Marshall during Christmas. Ruth wrote from Shreveport that her only news was her 9-month-old grandson (James R. Madison, Jr.) called "Robbie." She now has three grandsons and four step-grandsons, but no Sweet Briar prospects.

Alice Andrews Fackert notes that the most interesting sight Bill and she enjoyed in 1982 was the fabulous Corkscrew (Audubon) Swamp near Naples, FL. The wood storks were making nests, and there were hundreds of them. She says it is a sight that shouldn't be missed.

Margaret Robertson Densmore sent me a newspaper clipping announcing the death on Dec. 18, 1982 of Margaret Campbell Usher in Annisquam, MA. She is survived by her husband, a son, a daughter, and two grandchildren. Margaret Densmore and Tory Himes Beddoes are off on another trip together. This time they went to Italy, where Margaret's daughter has a Fulbright and is teaching in Milan. Margaret has retired from library work and comments, "Really think I kept it up to prove one can be hired when over 65. Now I do volunteer hospice work and just enjoy country living, friends, and being alive."

Maria Gray Valentine Curtis and Ted spent every weekend last summer at their Fishing Bay cottage near Deltaville, VA, and entertained their grandchildren. In the fall, winter, and spring they use their cottage at Sandbridge, Virginia Beach.

Dorothea McClure Mountain writes that she and Bill spend winters in Pompano Beach, FL, Christmas with their daughter and her family in Clemson, SC, and their summers in her family home in Pennsylvania. She plays golf twice a week and Bill is a life master at bridge.

Lil Steele Cook had a trip to Scandinavia followed by a week in London in the summer of '82. She and her husband Larry spent Christmas with their only daughter and her family and No. 2 son in Marblehead, MA. Lil's oldest grandson, Rusty Cook, a junior at Albany State U., will spend the spring semester studying in Denmark. Lil says that she has missed attending our reunions but has great hopes of being at our 50th. Others mentioned it too; so let's have a big attendance and lots of fun. Start planning now!

A note from Elizabeth Chapman Lacey came from Hopedale, MA, where she owns and runs Harel House, a furniture and accessory shop up in the woods in a large English manor/Swiss chalet. She has run the business alone since her husband's death in 1971. Her daughter Harel received her Ph.D. from Clark in 1972 and works in a testing laboratory in Waltham.

Nancy Dicks Blanton wrote me that her husband George is now chairman of the board at the First National Bank in their hometown of Shelby, NC, and that he is an avid tennis player. He also plays golf with Nancy, and they summer at the beach, surrounded by their children and three grandsons. In February they go to the Hillsboro Club in Florida and usually take an interesting trip later. In 1982 they went to Indonesia and plan to visit Australia this year.

Emily Bowen Muller is enjoying lots of retirement activities on beautiful Whidbey Island — Garden Club, Rhododendron Society, Mycological Society, AAUW, and much gardening with herbs a specialty. Husband George hasn't retired yet, and Emily likes to accompany him on business trips.

Margaret ("Smitty") Smith Thomasson writes about her smart grandchildren, four girls and two boys. She has been working five days a week in the family business and, in between, heading up a state study for her local League of Women Voters on the water problems in Virginia. Smitty is in charge of our 50th Reunion in 1986 and is hoping that all of you will join her at Sweet Briar then.

I imagine that many of us attended our 50th high school reunion this past spring. I did, and it was a mixture of fun and sadness, but I'm glad I went. Lillian Cabell Gay went to hers at Collegiate and was expecting to see Maria Gray Valentine Curtis, Kitty Lorraine Hyde, and Carol Straus Ney. Lillian's neurosurgeon husband, Jim, retired from teaching at the U. of Tenn. Medical School in Memphis in December 1982, but before that he conducted health forums in Austin, TX, and in Memphis. They went to Egypt in early December for a conference at the U. of Toronto. After a few days in Greece they spent Christmas and New Year's in Spain and then returned to Memphis for a while. Lillian says that Jim puts on these conferences to help Egyptian medical schools update their curriculum. His next project was an Egyptian conference for Project Hope in Virginia in April 1983.

Marjorie Wing Todd sent me a lovely picture of her family. Husband Jimmy, a surgeon, has retired now, and three of her four children are married. She has two grandsons and two step-grandsons.

Frances ("Chickie") Gregory is working again in the U. of Richmond Library on her writing. She has an article coming out in the New England Quarterly this spring entitled "The Tale of Three Cities — Boston, New York, and Philadelphia — and the Struggle for Banking Stability, 1839-41," which has consumed much of her time this last year. But she adds that her second book develops slowly, and she doesn't expect publication of it for some time.

Katie Niles Parker continues to do her superior job as our fund agent. She and husband Frank take trips in their camper and keep up with numerous progeny, garden, church, and many friends. I had a nice visit with Katie when we had lunch together at the Isabelle Gardiner Museum in Boston last March when I was there on an art trip.

I went to England and Scotland with friends in the fall of '82 and stopped by Southport, CT, to spend the night with my aunt on my way back to Raleigh. While there I talked on the phone to Orissa Holden Perry, whom I haven't seen since we graduated. She has two sons, a retired husband, and a busy life. My most important news is that my first grandson, John Ward Purrington, Jr., was born August '82. He joins my four granddaughters in my heart.

Barbara Smith Whitlock (Mrs. James P.), 214 Exeter Way, Hillside, NJ 07205

You gorgeous gals surpassed all expectations for news contributions this year; thanks as well for your kind remarks concerning my editing. Flattery, flattery.

Mary Jane Burnett Hill tells us that their love affair with the desert Southwest grows more "torrid" each year. Her Perry remains active as a full-time volunteer on the staff of their church, while Jane is the bell-ringer or "ding-a-ling" for short, according to her. They went again last year to Stratford, Ontario, for the 30th anniversary of the Stratford Festival Theater and combined the trip with a visit to the young Perry Hills. Son Timothy and family live in San Francisco, where he is part of a think tank for Crocker Bank.

Beth Thomas Mason writes that things are much the same with her — same house, same husband, and same children — plus another grandchild or so. Tate is still practicing medicine, and Beth tutors children with learning disabilities. Tate fishes and hunts, but Beth prefers tennis for outdoor activity. She had lunch with the peripatetic Nancy Haskins Elliot, who was passing through Seattle on her way to see her daughter Enid in Victoria, BC, Canada.

Dorothy Campbell O'Connor's most important news, when she wrote, was that she and Bill were anticipating their first grandbaby, courtesy of daughter Debbie and spouse Dotty had a ball at the NYC SBC cocktail party "reunion" with some of our East Coast buddies.

Marion Daudt McBride and husband have been enjoying their condominium in Chesterfield, MO, for the last seven years. Daughter Pat is with the Small Business Administration in Washington, DC; Chris is married (two children) in Madison, CT; and son Tom is with Mercantile National Bank in St. Louis.

Blair Bunting Both shares with yours truly the dubious status of being a non-grandmother, although Blair is a surrogate granny to many children round about. She helps with soup kitchens besides her usual hobbies and has a new friend in their Labrador. Blair and Rich jetted to Norway and Sweden to celebrate their 40 years of marital bliss, returning on the QE-II. Fortunately for them, engine trouble developed, so they had nine days aboard instead of the usual five.

Virginia Leggett Cameron finds it hard to believe that this is her 11th year in Florida; she enjoys it more each year. Ginny is in her 10th year of teaching parapsychology in the county school system and meets Jane Furniss Simpson as frequently as possible. Jane's card states that she and Dell stay quite busy and last year traveled to Selma, AL, Jane's home, to visit her brother John and his lovely wife Beverley Hill Furniss '35.

Mary Frances Hazelton had several good times with Ann Adamson Taylor and daughter Sally Adamson Taylor '70 while they were in San Francisco. Last May, our Hazy had quite a trip to Athens, Crete, and Rhodes — a Smithsonian Institution journey. During her stay in Connecticut after her return from abroad, she drove to Maria Burroughs Livingston's and had a happy visit with her at Phoopy's old and historic home, Oak Hill on the Hudson.

From Arkansas, Ann Sims writes that she and Ruth Beach Robinson had a grand reunion while Ruth's husband Lusk attended a "for men only" affair at his high school reunion in Fort Smith, AR. Ann hears from Sarah Mayo Sohn that they are now well in Athens, GA, where Dr. Sohn holds a new chair in law at the U. of Ga. Ann participates in an AAUW study group, is on the community concert board, gives book reviews, and lectures in a PR capacity for their library.

Emory Gill Williams and Cankey tripped to Egypt last year with Alumnae Flights Abroad, stopping over both ways in London. They also took a three-week vacation at their cottage in Biddeford Pool, ME. Cankey practices full-time surgery, and they do a bit of what Emory calls "senior citizen sailing" in Cankey's spare time. A new grandson, Russell, brings the Williams total grandchild count up to seven.

Through a call to Shirley Nalley Irving's brother here in Atlanta, I learned that Shirley's Bill is no longer with us. Coralie Kahn Ferro, Clara Call

Frazier, and I were all bridesmaids in Shirley and Bill's wedding in Gainesville, GA, a fantastic "do." Shirley remains in West Chester, PA, where their two sons manage the family business, while both daughters live in Boston. We all send our loving sympathy to Shirley.

Agnes Spencer Burke and Jack are still at the same stomping ground in D.C., while their family continues to grow and flourish. Younger daughter Aggie, Jr., lives in Charlottesville and commutes to Amherst to write for the local newspaper.

Mildred Moon Montague is wonderful as a source of news for our Class Notes. The younger of the Montague clan was married last year, so she is glad that son Carrington and his Shelby live only a few blocks away. Carrington's baseball team, the Chattanooga Lookouts, lost during his first season as owner, but they are "looking out" for a better 1983. He and his brother Rick were both guest speakers for the Rotarians last year; proud father Bill is the first member to have two sons as lecturers to the local club. During her stay in NYC, Moon and Nancy Haskins Elliott met for lunch, as Nancy was back from her working vacation to Yugoslavia and travel agent's meetings. She has a new granddaughter. Nancy sent Moon a clipping from the Philadelphia Enquirer with a picture and write-up of Lois Fernley McNeil in Abington, VA. Moon took in a Barter Theater production with Martha Rector McGee and Augusta Saul Farrier '39. At that time Moon was hoping to see Estelle Sinclair en route to Philadelphia, where she would go on the honorary board of the Big Sisters of America, her favorite outside interest. She, among others, has read Mary Lee Settle's latest book, The Killing Ground. Son Rick took one of Settle's courses at UVA and thought she was great.

Telle Sinclair now has her maiden name legally restored and is glad to get it back. She has a six-room condominium in Jamestown, NJ, close to Princeton, and writes a weekly anti-ques page for the Princeton Pocket and seven other associated weekly papers. She teaches a course, Introduction to American Fine Glass, at the Cooper-Hewitt Museum in NYC and hopes to do more teaching at some nearby college or university.

Two more items from Moon tell us that Mary Frances Barnhardt Ridenhour is in a nursing home in Charlotte, NC, possibly as the result of some strokes. A newspaper clipping with picture from the Chattanooga News — Free Press features Helen Anderson Bryan and a discussion group of city elementary principals together with a musical arts educator from Hungary. They met to learn more about the Kodaly music education concept. Helen is chairman of the local sponsoring group.

From "Deep in the Heart of Texas" came cards and a snapshot which showed Joy Carter Forse and a group of friends, including Phyllis Carr Beinhorn '41, "pre-luncheoning it" at Joy's condo. Joy still has her 1940 jigger. She also sent a review of Settle's last novel from the August 1982 issue of People. (Joy, who was recovering from some fractured ribs when she wrote, continues to love condominium living.) Cynthia Noland Young wrote of seeing an article in the Sunday, March 13, N.Y. Times Magazine by Mary Lee Settle.

The first prize this year for questionable penship goes to Anne Conant Weaver. After some invaluable deciphering by an expert in same, I can report that 30 surrogate grandchildren, besides her own three, call her "Super Grandmamma." Anne teaches them skiing on the Winter Park Alpine Slide in Denver, as well as chaperoning the 4-10-year-olds on cross-country winter skiing trips. In 1982 her travels included San Francisco and Nova Scotia, while in Colorado she placed third in all categories in the Senior Citizens Winter Games. Anne states, "There's life in the old girl yet."

Katherine Hodge Soaper spent several months overseeing the upstairs renovation of her historic old home at Soaper Farms. The house was the first large homestead built in Henderson County, KY, in the latter 18th century and has remained in the Soaper family. Some of Kay's happiest moments are spent "baby guesting" her grandson Morgan while his parents go about. In a really freak accident, Kay mashed one of her fingers so severely that amputation of part of it was necessary, but she writes that it hasn't slowed her down. Included in Kay's house restoration was wiring for an extensive security system, and since installation of the system she has had to call the locksmith only a few times to come and let her back into the house!

Margaret Katterjohn McCollom sees Kay often, and Kay journeyed to Indiana for Margaret's most important event of 1982, the marriage of her younger son, George, who is an engineer with the U.S. Corps of Engineers. Marg's nest is far from empty though, as she has a constant stream of friends, children, grandchildren, and other relatives in and out of her house. She manages her farms, cans "umpteens" jars of produce, enjoys bridge, and does volunteer work at the local hospital as well as two nursing homes.

Adelaide Boze Glascock and Jim attended the New York Times Book and Author Brunch since Settle was on the panel. Polly reports that Settle is a good speaker with a beautiful, melodious speaking voice. Polly entertained

Nancy Haskins Elliot as a houseguest when Nancy returned from Yugoslavia but was unable to lunch with her and Moon because of her real estate commitments. The Glascocks attended the SBC New York gala and spent a festive hour with Marie Gaffney Barry '41 and Ted, as well as Dotty Campbell O'Connor and Bill.

"Politicking" is the word from Ann Adamson Taylor, who ran in the September Primary on the Republican ticket for a seat on the Baltimore City Republican Committee. Our Adamson and two others won in a field of eight contestants. Congratulations, Madam! I imagine that many of you noted the news about Sally, Ann's daughter, which appeared in our fall 1982 Alumnae Magazine under "Alumnae Publications — Addenda." Three publications were listed as authored by Sally Taylor and Friends: The 1981 California Winery Tours and Directory, Grape Expeditions, and The 1982 California Winery Tour Map and Directory.

A class note for 1937, also in the fall issue, mentions a Sweet Briar brunch at the home of Helen Cornwall Jones in Princeton, NJ, and the fact that Helen's son Wayne was recently appointed U.S. Attorney for the State of New Jersey.

A long letter from Charlotte Knox Lane brings us up to date on her life. Charlotte is having a great time with her position as executive director of Washington-Greene County Tourist Promotion Agency, which gives her a chance to meet people from all over the world. She is vice president of the Bradford House Historical Association, a member of the Washington County History and Landmarks Board, as well as a member of the Travel Pennsylvania Board. In November she attended conferences in Canada and Ohio pertinent to all of the above. Charlotte and Perry have seven grands with two living nearby.

Moon also sent a letter she had received from Jeanne Harris, who is associate curator of Oriental Art at the Nelson Gallery in Kansas City. Jeanne wrote that she spent vacation time last year with Margaret Dowell Kearney in McLean, VA, who drove her about the countryside to view historical sites. Jeanne also vacationed with Emily Marsh Nichols '34 and they drove to SBC by way of Monticello. Jeanne enjoyed visiting with Miss Lucile Umbreit, who was our music teacher during our time at SBC.

Helen Taylor's only exciting trips this year were to the operating room. She has recovered from both bouts of surgery and pronounces herself fit and as good as new. Dr. Taylor remains on the staff of the Norfolk, VA, Family Planning Center and was hoping to refresh what she terms her "rusty Chinese" when their host in Wuhu in 1981 came from China to be her guest in Norfolk.

Betty Hammer Morrell had cancer surgery last year, but she has passed year one and is back to golf and all activities. She still loves the beach (North Myrtle Beach, SC).

Anne Waring Lane loves the atmosphere and relatively slow pace of Savannah as compared to Atlanta, their former home. Anne believes Mills would thumb a ride rather than drive in our hectic traffic; however, they do miss their old friends here. Both Anne and Mills are interested in the 250th anniversary of the founding of Georgia, which is being celebrated this year.

Yet another grandchild last year for the young at heart Mariana Bush King and Bob! Their oldest grandson is a junior at Belmont Abby, NC, and their elder granddaughter is a sophomore at Chapel Hill. Bob has reversed the retirement trend and become a franchisee for Po Folks Restaurants in Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina. Some of their children live in Florida not too far from the Kings in Avon Park.

Polly Poe Richmond welcomes our class notes but wishes more of us would come to Seattle. Polly and Howard toured Italy for a month last year and "ballooned it" for six days in France. This is an experience they highly recommend. The major part of last winter was spent in their home in Palm Springs, as the southern sunshine is hard to resist. Polly, when in Seattle, joins Beth on the tennis courts.

From Cleveland, Eleanor Bosworth Badal expresses pride that two of her granddaughters tried out the Golden Stairs last year. She and her Dan expect them to have the right to sit there some day! Eleanor with daughter Marilyn and her family took a leisurely motor trip which included Sweet Briar, and Ellie says she never ceases to marvel at the beauties and opportunities of the campus. Margaret Dowell Kearney shared in the dedication of the Spitzer Nature Trail to the memory of Ellie's first husband Keith and son David. Dan and she were to go to Spain last year for a medical meeting mixed in with lun and games.

A note from Barbara Smith Whitlock, our Co-fund Agent with Nickie Gockley McClellan, speaks of a full house with various progeny and families visiting all at the same time. Barbara keeps in touch with all the Eastern Seaboard 1940-ers. Nickie and Jim rewarded themselves with a trip to Scotland in order to observe their 40th. At the time of writing, another grandbaby was looming on the horizon. Barbara and Nickie have taken on a big job as fund agents; so let us all support them and our alma mater.

Jane Goolrick Murrell wrote of the news of Tom's and her wonderful trip to England. They both have rewarding positions in Richmond, and Goolrick says being classified as "unretired" is a novelty among their friends.

Yours truly called Connie Currie Fleming in New Jersey for help with an unsigned news card from Boston. It was from Elizabeth Ivins Haskins, who told of the arrival of her third grandson. As yet there are no prospects for SBC among the Haskins family. Ivy is still doing her thing with the Museum of Fine Arts, Concord Antiquarian Museum, Colonial Dames, and a little Boston Symphony, with bridge games, investment club, and paddle and regular tennis sandwiched in between! She did nine European countries in 12 days and reports it made Tuesday in Berlin look tame.

Hortense Powell Cooper's news is two-fold. First, she has a new Congressman son, whom she believes to be the youngest in the U.S. Legislature, and secondly she is thrilled to have her first daughter-in-law, wife of her younger son.

A long letter from Connie Chalkey Kittler informs us that she and Kit remain in the Virginia countryside, not far from Gloucester Courthouse, on an inlet of Chesapeake Bay. Kit has a smallish tree farm and they sail, fish, and swim. Since the trees behave themselves and all of their children are on their own, Kit and Connie have been able to travel in the last few years. During 1982 they chartered a canal boat in England with three English friends — which Connie calls strenuous fun. They did their own cooking and navigated 132 locks in the 109-mile circular route from Stratford to Worcester to Tewkesbury and back to Stratford. They were expecting to go to Grand Forks, ND, for the wedding of their last unattached child in December.

We heard at last from Helen Schmid Hardy, who loves their new home in Palm Desert, CA. Hug is on cloud nine with her present from daughter Sylvia, a nine-pound-three-ounce granddaughter. They still go back to their cottage in Wisconsin, which Hug calls the best of all worlds.

Mildred Mitchell Gillis and Jim are happy to have their son and his family back in Florida after three years in Utah. Mickey is tied down with her job, but would adore to have any of us come to Jacksonville.

Jane Hopkins Hanes, Winston-Salem, NC, wonders if any of us will make it for our 50th. Come to our 45th, and we'll conduct an opinion survey.

How many 1940-ers are volunteers and trustees in our historic houses, museums, botanical gardens and zoos? Mary Miller Sharp wants news about your activities sent to her at 2 E. Gittings Ave. Baltimore, MD 21212. Mary is president of the U.S. Association of Museum Volunteers and vice president of the World Federation of Friends of Museums.

Jane Westphalen Gray had a busy year with two family weddings, her work as president of the St. Louis Women's Club (a full-time job in itself), volunteering at the Children's Hospital, gardening, needlepointing, and grandmothering. Jane couldn't by-pass Sweet Briar during her trip to Virginia and Hilton Head and says Sweet Briar's beauty never fails to impress her.

Ruth Mealand Schwartz met with friends and relatives during her lengthy sojourn in London, Paris, Amsterdam, Milan, Rome, and Catania in Sicily, where her daughter and family had been stationed for two years. Ruth's 91-year-old father participated in their family reunion last year in the Philadelphia area.

Somehow, a grandson sitting in Houston, TX, triggered a trip there for Cynthia Noland Young and Karl. They then went on to Kingsville, TX, to visit Carrie's Navy jet pilot daughter, coming East by way of Richmond to see her flourishing 93-year-old mother and finishing off with a stay in Florida to see Karl's New Haven classmates. Their status is quo with two married children plus four singles, the youngest a sophomore at Cornell.

Last year Louise Pugh Worthing and her Clifford sailed on another voyage segment of the QE-II. A world cruise took them from NYC to Port Everglades, Martinique, Barbados, Salvador Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, and Capetown. They spent three weeks in South Africa and saw Victoria Falls in Rhodesia.

Reba Smith Gromel and George, recovered from his coronary by-pass surgery, enjoyed the Christmas festivities at their son's home in Richmond. Reba and George "reunited" while there with Goolrick, Emory, Mary Johnson Bedell, Carrington Lancaster Pasco, and their respective spouses. They also attended a family reunion of 34 kinsmen in Allentown, PA, to celebrate Reba's mother's 90th birthday. A Sweet Briar luncheon in Tampa, FL, where they live, was attended by 33 alumnae, including our Reba, who hopes to get back to her golf game very soon.

A Fund IIap message from Jacqueline Sexton Daley states that they hope for a better year in 1983 as they have all been trying to put their lives back in order since the apparent murder of her daughter-in-law. Jackie regrets that she and Coralie Kahn Ferro can never seem to get together.

Another authoress in our midst is Georgia Herbert Hart, who writes that some of her poems are being published nation-wide, one in The Living Church Magazine and the latest, in The Poetic Churchman. A Memorial Anthology to George Herbert, 1593-1633, for which The Parish Life Institute, St. John of the Cross Church, Bristol, England, is responsible. The latter is edited by the rector of St. John of the Cross Church. Georgia and George now proudly claim seven grandchildren.

A late bulletin from Nancy Haskins Elliot says she has now retired from the travel agency business and has a new female grandchild, which brings their total to three.

Since John and Irene Vongehr Vincent's four children are grown and leading their own interesting lives, John and Irene left last October for four wonderful months in China, traveling on their own. Irene writes, "We went in from Hong Kong, and from Canton went up to Kweilin, Kunming and Chengtu, and as far to the northwest as we could go, to Urumchi, Turfan and Tun Huang, all by train. Next, to Chungking where we took the river boat down the Yangtze through the dramatic Yangtze Gorges, to my old hometown of Hankow — my first visit in 44 years! I found our old home and my old school, now efficiently used as offices. And on to Lushan, the mountain where I went to high school along with collegemate Helen Taylor. . . . Then, by train, to Shanghai and Peking with many stops along the way, until we reached Inner Mongolia. There, despite a blizzard, we slept in a yurt and rode a camel. Then, another train ride south, going through many places like Yenan, Huangling, and Shi Shuang Banna (in the southwest corner of China) and finally west to the coast at Fuchow and back to Hong Kong by boat."

After rereading about all of your interesting activities, C.P.B. Neel thinks she's something of a dullard. I've had a quiet, rather lazy year and only practiced my profession on a semi-part-time basis. Like many, I'll be observing the Big 65 this year. So Happy Birthday wishes where apropos! Ain't it fine to be "socially secure"?

It is hard for me to believe as I sit here in January of 1983 and hear the sleet hitting the window that this will be the last class letter you receive before our 40th Reunion! Few of us have engagement calendars going through the spring of 1984, but I urge you to somehow put stars around that time, for it will be a grand experience. Our class president Peggy Gordon

Seiler appointed Helen Gravatt Watt to be chairman of reunion; so you will hear from her about more specific plans as the time draws near. I am certain that Helen will do a superlative job of setting it up. Do plan to come! I had a nice telephone visit with Helen recently. Her son John works for the Red Cross in Philadelphia; daughter Phyllis has gotten her M.A. in journalism and is job-hunting; son Billy is at UVA.

Before I pick up on other news, I'd like to tell you a little about the state of the Elizabeth Maury Valentine Scholarship, which, as many of you will remember, was established by the Richmond Club in 1952 to honor our classmate Betty Maury, who died the year before. Through the years it has flourished and become one of the largest alumnae scholarships. Our Richmond Scholarship Committee, especially Peggy Gordon Seiler and Carlisle Morrissett Branch and I, were concerned that its identity had been lost and that few recipients were even aware that it had been begun as a memorial to a particularly outstanding and loved student. So after many conversations, meetings, and letters, it has now been determined that at least part of it will be given each year to an upperclassman "of high academic achievement who has shown the personal qualities for which Betty was known: enthusiasm and warmth of personality, a keen sense of humor combined with a rare integrity and a deep sense of loyalty." Thus it will be a named scholarship presented each fall at a student assembly, which we hope will be opening convocation.

Eleanor Goodspeed Abbott is a faithful reporter of alumnae news. This year she sends word (which came to her through Margie Eggers Perry) of the marriage of Hattie Tavener Clausen to Bob Owens, a friend of long standing. I was also glad to hear from Goodie that her husband Larry continues to get along well and that they are "spinning smoothly in our own little orbit."

Another good communicator is Jinnie Noyes Pillsbury, whose Christmas card this year is a picture of her handsome vegetable garden. She manages to keep in touch with many of our classmates and, I gather, their ancestors as well, since she reports that she has discovered that she and Helen Gravatt Watt are sixth cousins once removed!

We enjoyed a Christmas card from Marian Shanley Jacobs and Bill and also an announcement in August of the marriage of their daughter Elizabeth.

Notes included with contributions to the Alumnae Fund provide the rest of the news for this year. Alice Lancaster Buck and Pete moved the first of May to their new house in Marshall, VA; Alice continues to work as an historian with the Department of Energy in Washington. Betty Williams Gookin reports a wonderful trip to England and Scotland and at the time of writing was anticipating the birth of twins to her twin daughter Kim — and I heard at SB Day that this had indeed occurred! Frances Longino Schroder writes with obvious relief that her twins have finally turned 16, which liberates her from car pools!

There is word that Virginia Gowen Brown recently had a book presented to the Genealogical Society of Texas in appreciation of her work as director of the Retired Senior Volunteer Program in Paris, TX. Murrell Rickards Chadsey tells of her Vermont home and an exchange of cold climate gardening information with Evie Pretlow Ormiston. When she wrote, Rickie was looking forward to a Christmas visit from her mother, Frances Rickards '10, only living member of the first class to graduate from SBC.

Sydney Holmes Bales continues to "do income taxes and other financial things for people." Her husband, Bill, was to retire the end of 1982 after 32 years with NBC News. Their son Peter works as a comedian and is also in graduate school studying history; son Bill is a pilot for commuter airline New York Air.

The year 1983 is one of multi degrees for the C.D. Tuttle family. Hazel Felner Tuttle, mother of them all, has completed requirements for the M.F.S. at Yale School of Forestry and Environmental Studies. Bettina received a B.A. from Ithaca College; Annie Laurie, M.A. in Music Composition from Boston U. (with honors); and Prudence Dinsmore, J.D. from Denver U. (with American Jurisprudence Award). Victoria resigned after eight years of teaching in Denver suburbs to write and will enter U. of Colo. graduate school in a creative writing program this fall. Robin '69, Oxnard, CA, produced grandson #1 in October. Amelia works for her father (Clapp & Tuttle Books/Frames) and is studying for an M.B.A.

Gene Patton Odell is now a certified social worker seeing "seniors" (60+) for Family Service of Westchester.

Carlisle Morrissett Branch has two new grandchildren this year, and the youngest of her five children is in graduate school. Marjorie Woods Williamson and Rush also have two new grandchildren: son Rushton's first daughter arrived in April, and Earnest's second was born in September. Marjorie and Rush, who retired almost five years ago, had a tour of northern Spain last fall and were looking forward to Rome and Florence this spring.

A note today from SBC says that Helen Crump Cutler and her husband have moved to a permanent home in Florida after 15 years in London.

Welcome home, Helen.

As for me, things are about the same as reported last year.

That's it for now. Remember the spring of 1984 and start planning.

Mayde Ludington Henningsen has enjoyed accompanying husband Vic to SBC to attend meetings of the Board of Overseers. We are most fortunate to have Vic serve as Chairman of the Board. Vic Jr. and daughter Mary are both married; two younger sons are still single. Mayde and Vic took a fabulous trip to China last year. Vi Whitehead Morse returned to campus in January to assist with Winter Forums. She frequently attends campus events and serves as bulb chairman for the SBC Amherst Club. Vi invited us to her home in Amherst for our reunion class picnic. A December gathering at SBC found Martha Mansfield Clement, Peggy Sheffield Martin and Patty Traugott Rouse making plans for our class reunion gift. A superb job is being done to contact each of you. Even gifts after Reunion but before June 30 can help make our participation outstanding for our 35th year!

Patty Traugott Rouse joined Peggy Addington Twohy, Indie Lindsay Bilisoly and Mary Pierce Shukry for lunch in Baltimore in December. Patty is the proud grandmother of Louise Cartwright Rixey whom she hopes will be the fourth generation child to attend SBC! Peggy Sheffield Martin's daughter married Spencer Tunnell January 8 in Atlanta. The groom is the nephew of Constance Tunnell Bond. Lisa and Spencer are both pursuing graduate degrees at UVA. Fund Committee member Meon Bower Harrison spends much time working for the Emergency Aid organization and the Bloodmobile in Orange, VA. Sons Reid and Chap are out "earning a precarious living"; daughter Mimi excels in her nursing studies at Durham, NC; Ann will graduate from St. Timothy's and plans to enter UVA next fall. Eleanor Poits Snodgrass will take time off from her new career in real estate to attend daughter Julie's graduation from SBC in May as well as to appear for Reunion.

The "mystery bride," whose name failed to appear in the card I received, turned out to be Ardis Fratus, who became Mrs. Richard Porter in December 1981. Dick's grown children live in California, as do Ardis' daughter and granddaughter. Ardis' eldest son Ned plans to marry in June. He is a computer programmer for Liberty Mutual in Portsmouth, NH. Ardis is active as treasurer of her church.

Roy and Westray Boyce Nicholas moved to their retirement site at Seabrook Island in October. They are concentrating on golf and building a house which overlooks a salt marsh. Son Stacy is in New York working for Alexander & Alexander, an insurance broker. Dolly Antrim McKenna and Jim are enjoying civilian life in California. Dolly hopes to make it to Reunion to tell all about three gorgeous grandsons. Ann Rowland's Tuck's husband Jim will retire this spring from National Life & Accident Insurance in Nashville. Ann also steps down from her job with the state government at that time. Her elder daughter Ann was married in June '82. The wedding of triplet Augusta in May of '82, followed by the wedding of stepson Keith in July, and the marriage of a godson in California in August kept Liz Barbour McCrea and Mac on the go. September found them in England at the Farnborough Air Show; then they spent ten days in Scotland. Judy Blakey Butler has laid aside her real estate and batik sales ventures for the present and did a grand job as our Reunion Chairman. Plans to join the SBC trip to Russia and to visit family on the East Coast were abandoned because of Bob's illness and recent death. Judy regretted missing our Reunion. Freddie McCallie, youngest son of Maddin Lupton McCallie, underwent surgery for a brain tumor in February '82. Following several operations and radiation, Freddie has returned to his studies at UVA.

Stuart Taylor Hough has one child 18 and one 20 still at home. She enjoys three grandsons and her work at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. Retirement gave Mary Louise Lloyd the opportunity to open her own school on her own property. Her Copeland Run Learning Center offers kindergarten and elementary programs as well as after school and summer enrichment opportunities. Faith Matison is the administrator and chairman of the board of a small rural health clinic in New Hampshire. She also serves on the local planning board. In January '83 she went on a three-week photographic safari to Kenya and Tanzania. Betty Ann Jackson Ryan of Fair Haven, NJ, is the new president of the Board of Directors for Family and Children's Service, an agency which serves all the residents of Monmouth County.

From New York Joyce Sentner Daly writes that her job as a freelance writer-producer of informational films involves a lot of travel. Her son David is currently in the Circle in the Square's Theatre Program in NYC. In nearby New Jersey, Evy Sharp Vidal completed the restoration of her historic Mauricetown home in time to have it on a Christmas tour of homes. Her retirement ended when she joined J.G. Durand International as Assistant to the Marketing Manager. All the management is French which enables her to keep her language skills sharp. Evy stood for election to the three-man Township Committee and was elected in November, the only Republican to make it. Vicki Vidal is a Dean's List sophomore at SBC, and Larry is a senior at Mercer U. where he is Warden and Social Chairman for Phi Delta Theta.

Retirement from teaching gave Ruth Faulkner Howe the opportunity to build a retirement home on the golf course. She enjoys having daughter Laurie and her children back in Longmont, CO. Caroline Haskell Simpson continues to devote much time to volunteer work and serves on several boards. Her husband and two sons still work at the Chicago Board Options Exchange. Her second son has returned from Venice, Italy, and lives in Bloomsbury, PA. Another son is starting his own investigatory newsletter in D.C.

Beezie Devore Towers is elated that Cathy Towers Hardage '73 and her family will move from California to Ocala, FL, in June. Robert Hardage will practice with a radiology group there. Daughter Morley McCloskey and husband Todd live in Providence, RI; Sally Towers Ragsdale and John live in Jacksonville; Susan Towers Denard and Dave live in Roanoke, where he is in a busy internal medicine residency. Margaret, single, is a paralegal for a law firm in Tampa. Beezie anxiously awaits the arrival of McClosky and Ragsdale babies this spring. Marguerite Rucker Elliott enjoyed sharing two-year-old grandchild Pender with her other SBC grandparents, the Burks Withers (Helen Pender), during the Christmas holidays.

Ann Orr Savage says the final year of education and tuitions has arrived. Duncan and his wife live in Madison, WI, where he is a resident at University Hospital. Cathy lives in Chatham, NJ. Douglas completed his M.B.A. at M.I.T. in June '82. Rosemary Gugert Kennedy has put her music back to work teaching 14 pupils. Her special challenge is teaching one boy who is blind. Daughter Wendy works for Robinson Lumber Co., son Teddy works at Howard Weil while continuing his studies at Loyola, and Ken Jr. is a Freshman at U.S.L. in Lafayette, where he pledged SAE. Last Summer the Kennedys enjoyed a boat trip along the East Coast and had fun attending the Davis Cup matches in St.

Louis. Liz Graves Perkinson loved having McCall Henderson Revercomb visit and share the excitement of getting daughter Gigi ready to attend Duke. "Tommy" (Ann) Porter Mullen celebrated the marriage of her daughter in April '82. Her new son-in-law is archivist at Colorado State U. Son James married in May and moved to Lisle, IL, where he is employed by Spivey Barge Lines.

My Summer Letter brought news that Edith Scannell Cody was recovering from injuries sustained in an auto accident. A note from her father brought the sad news of Edith's death on Dec. 30, 1982, "from injuries received in an auto accident."

Christmas holidays found Caroline Rankin Mapother busy with plans to travel to Russia with the SBC tour. Among her companions were classmate Murray Armstrong James and her husband, Mary Lou Holton Effler '46, and Betty Ann Bass Norris '46. The Bill Raglands (Betty Johnson) divide their time among Raleigh; John's Island, FL; Morehead, NC; and visits to children. Betty is in business school in Nashville, Jody is studying law in Boston, and Bill Jr. expects to enter law school in '83. "Twink" (Helen) Elliott Sockwell and Warren enjoyed a trip to the Canadian Rockies last Summer and look forward to European travels in '83. Helen stays in touch with Nita Minchew Faulk, who teaches school in Waycross; Bess White Gregory, who had two offspring to marry last year; and Betsy Plunkett Williams, who planned to bring husband Jerry to her reunion this year. Steve Sockwell graduates from Georgetown Law School May '83 and has accepted a position with Simms and Simms in Baltimore. Daughter Helen continues her artistic pursuits, and Ginny Lee has spent a year in Germany following her graduation.

Fantastic skiing near Innsbruck in December '81 was followed by the best skiing in years in New England for the Whit Dickeyes. (Closey Faulkner). Summer found Closey and her family vacationing at Knopon Hill, Bermuda. Whit and sons Lawrence and Don sailed as crew aboard the Felmar with friends to meet Closey there. Clo joined them, having raced to Bermuda as cook aboard Sheldon Week's NY 40. Hiking in the New Hampshire White Mountains, canoeing the St. John and Saco rivers, and a family Northeast Harbor cruise on their boat Octet occupied the rest of summer '83. John graduated from Middlebury and Clo from St. Paul's. John just signed up with ABC-TV in NYC in the production field, and Clo matriculated in Middlebury February '83, following fall term at U.Vt. Chris attends Roger Williams College, studies music, and teaches guitar. Whit majors in music at Bennington, Don works for Senator Humphrey, and Lawrence, fluent in Spanish, works the Central and South America territory for INA. Closey added garden club speaking to her talents, appearing as a guest at Indie Lindsay Bilisoly's garden club last year.

The big news from Martha Frye Nye and Bill is their forthcoming move to Hickory, NC. Martha enjoyed a trip to Mardi Gras but found the N.O. police disapproved of her perching in a tree to view the big parade! Health care meetings took the Nyes to Las Vegas and Hawaii; Paul and Holly joined them at their Myrtle Beach condo. Daughter Ruth is working on a multi-complex hotel project with Portman & Co., Julia and Harvey are ready to build in Chapel Hill, John is doing well with Hickory Chair Co, and Peggy and Glen moved to Lenoir, where he is administrator of Brian Nursing Center.

Fifteen-year-old Elizabeth IX, a sophomore at Dwight-Englewood, is involved in sports: J.V. hockey, basketball, tennis, cheerleading, and competitive swimming in the summer. She's an honor student too and keeps Jane Taylor IX involved in her many activities. Bill III is completing his studies in mechanical engineering; Jon is studying for his M.A. in Public Administration at Loyola Marymount in L.A. Jeff and wife Kathy live in Greenville, NC, where both work for Proctor and Gamble. Greg will graduate from Ohio Wesleyan in '83.

Bess Pratt Wallace's daughter Tracy is planning to attend SBC next fall.

Mercer U. School of Medicine is in full swing and his duties as chairman of the Dept. of Medicine agree with Waddell, though he misses practice. The turnover and influx of new people has kept me busy in real estate. David is finishing his second year residency at Vanderbilt, Sarah manages pension benefits for Northern Telecom headquartered in Nashville, and Allen loves the Big Apple and his job at Irving Trust. He enjoys playing on the bank's squash team. I hope to make it to Reunion, and hope you do too.

Our very best wishes to Kitchie Roseberry Ewald who was married in December to Roy Tolleson. Roy is a Detroit attorney and the Tollesons are dividing their time between Detroit, New York, Charlottesville, and Florida.

While on the subject, I hope everyone had a chance to see the October issue of Town and Country, where our own Kitchie was one of four women pictured and profiled as illustrations of "A Life in Balance." She was captioned as "Charlottesville's irreverent, optimistic businesswoman."

Edith Bell Lyon has been living in Charlottesville for four years, working for Kitchie's mail order catalog, The Very Thing. Her spare time is reserved for her beloved horse and two dogs. She has just bought a small house in the woods off Garth Road and should be moved in by the time you read this. Her son Jon is working in Rockville, MD, with an import-export business so is close enough to visit often.

Peggy Nelson Hardin writes that she has finally begun her "next career" by getting a job as office manager at the Georgetown, an elegant retirement residence. She does payroll, resident billing, petty cash, personnel records, and helps the residents with their money problems and medicare forms. However, inasmuch as she passed her CPA exams last year, Peggy plans to move on to a CPA's office and work closer to financial statements.

Word from Jane Ragland Young is that she chaperoned a group touring France and Italy last summer and has begun painting, and has even had a few commissions, and has had a marvelous time with her first art class.

Another successful artist in our class is Jane Ramsay Olmsted. In 1980, I attended her first one-person show and was duly impressed. Latest news is that she has opened her own studio in Arlington. Jane also reports that she was visited by Harriet Thayer Elder last fall. Harriet works for Planned Parenthood in Nashville and was attending a meeting of that organization in Washington.

Nancy Hamel Clark's daughter Ann received her master's from U.Va. last spring and is now teaching in the Virginia Beach public school system. Nancy wants to know if any of us have children living there. Her son Jim is still in Nashville after graduating from Vanderbilt.

Jane Mattas Christian writes that her son Phil has his M.B.A. from U. of Rochester and is now employed by IT&T and that her daughter Gigi graduated from Lafayette Col. and is employed at Pharmakon, a biological research facility. Her son Matt is at Penn State.

Grace Wallace Brown gets my Sweet Briar rose award for her kind response to my plea for news. The rest of you, better luck next time. With their three older children out in "the real world" and the youngest off to prep school at Kent, CT, Grace and Brady no longer felt pressured to be within walking distance to schools or train stations and have moved to a smaller house in a more rural area, Purchase, NY. They divide their time between there and their quarry in Ashley Falls, MA. Jo Sharp Blaasvaer and Reidar are busily restoring an old house in Mauricetown, NJ, which is an historic town on the Maurice River close to Atlantic City.

Also among the "movers" in our class are Sallie Anderson Broyles and Norris, who moved into their new home in Atlanta just before Christmas. Chris and I are looking forward to staying with them when we go to Atlanta for the wedding of Sadie Izard, daughter of Mary Bailey Izard and Jack. Sadie is one of my God-daughters, as is Sallie's daughter Starr, who made Sallie a grandmother last spring.

Cynthia Balch Barns and Art bought their first house in Utica in 1982, and in May Cynthia became director of the Convention and Tourist Association for Greater Utica. With seven children, Cynthia is the winner of the large family prize for the class of '52 — unless, of course, there is one of you out there somewhere with more.

Nancy Laemmel Hartman is a year away from completing her Master's in Christian Education at Scarritt College. Daughter Katrina will enter Auburn U. as a freshman this fall. David, 15, will be a junior at Brentwood High.

Martha Yost Ridenour's husband retired from the bank on account of his health, and they have been doing some traveling when he is able. They also spend much time at their condo at Cumberland Lake. Their daughter is now working at the bank, and her husband works for Philip Morris Co.

Mary Gesler Hanson is the owner of Paramount Travel in Bethesda, MD. Husband Royce, who just got a law degree, is with the National Academy of Sciences. Their children are all in school: Brooks (24) at UCLA with a fellowship in geology, Mark (23) first year at Emory Medical School, and Juliette (16) in 11th grade high school.

The following are notes gleaned from our class scrapbook which was compiled for our thirtieth reunion.

Mary John Ford Gilchrist loves living in Alexandria, and her daughter Mary Gray graduated from nursing school in Chapel Hill last spring. Marty Legg Katz and Betsy Wilder Cady both mentioned hearing Liz Ashford, daughter of Peg Anderson Ashford, play jazz piano with a group called "Second-Hand Rose." Marty gives a rave review and predicts the group will become famous. Betsy and Blake have made 31 trips to China, and Betsy is involved with establishing hospice services in Boston and Brookline. Sue Bassewitz lives in Great Neck, N.Y. and is Deputy County Attorney.

The year 1982 was a big one for Ginger Dreyfus Karren. Her older daughter graduated from SMU, and Ginger got her Master's degree in school psychology. Ginger continues to sing professionally and to chauffeur for her younger daughter who wants to be a professional ballerina.

No more carpools for Louise Warfield Stump, who has been enjoying the empty nest by "doing a lot of riding and competing." For the last five years, Louise has been giving nutrition lectures and classes at her local church and has succeeded in steering a lot of people into "taking responsibility for their health through more healthful eating and living habits."

Becky Yerkes Rogers has started her empty nest restoration with pierced ears and diamond earrings, to be followed by hybridizing day lilies and writing detective novels. She also mentioned dieting, but the family picture she sent did not indicate a need for anything so drastic. Floppy Fitch Patton boasts of a "severe" empty nest syndrome, filled by getting involved in her Episcopal Church Altar Guild, Heritage Study Club, bridge club, and being DAR Chapter Regent, 1982-1985.

Marty Legg Katz and Bill have a daughter at Brown U., a daughter at Wesleyan U., a son in high school, and another son in the Weston Middle School. Marty has edited the PTO newsletter to high school parents for the last five years. The Katzes continue to spend summer vacations at Martha's Vineyard.

In general, the "Game of Life" forms returned by our classmates indicate a higher than national average number of children per family and an overwhelming number of degrees for the children of '52. For example, Donna Reese Godwin and George have four sons and two daughters; four are college graduates, one from Vanderbilt with a master's from U. of Tex. and three from Ole Miss. The other two are still at it, one at U. of S. Miss. and one at U. of Tex., Texas Tech.

As for the Rays, we have four children, three in college. Our oldest, Graham, is a senior at Mount Holyoke and was one of three student leaders to receive special recognition for "unique and outstanding contributions to collegiate life." Chris, Jr., is a sophomore at Clemson, majoring in agriculture and enjoying every facet of the Clemson tradition. Nancy is a freshman at SBC and lives in my freshman year dorm, Grammer. The social scene there has certainly changed in thirty years. Did you know that President Whiteman is a member of Aints and Asses? Our youngest, Sarah, is a high school sophomore at Villa Maria Academy but has already named SBC as the college of her choice.

If you don't want my next class notes to be filled with more details of my children and a boring account of life on Philadelphia's Main Line, you had better write notes on your Fund flaps. They are forwarded to me and are my major source of class news.

1956

Secretary

Byrd Stone, Box 89, Sweet Briar, VA 24595

Fund Agent

Alice Guggenheimer Mackay (Mrs. Roger D.), 159 Mill St., Westwood, MA 02090

It has been said that those of us who graduated from college in the '50's were the "Silent generation" and if SBC '56 is any example, those who said it certainly knew of what they were speaking! We have all either contracted arthritis of the "write" hand or we are the dullest group to ever have graced the dells of Sweet Briar College, judging by mail, or lack there of! Another year and I'm just going to make things up. "Catherine Lotterhos Mills bought a BIG hat, and ran off with the garbage man," or "Ann Irvin had dyed her hair green and is living in sin in a loft in Greenwich Village," or "Jolly Urner is still in California and sees Ronnie R. periodically at his ranch. Actually it's a 'menage a trois' because Nancy is the jealous type."

Okay, that's just a warning. Next year...! To those of you who did write, either to me or to the Alumnae Office, I send my thanks. Please keep it up. (You could be different, and send me money and the Alumnae Office news!)

Lucy Blanton Park writes that she still lives in the same house in Paris, KY, with the same husband of almost 27 years. I can't decide whether she's bragging or complaining! Their daughter married last June, the first of their three children to do so. In July son Curtis will also marry. Harry, the youngest child is attending Ole Miss at Oxford, MS.

I could have gone all day without Mary Alice Major's news. She and Graham became grandparents in September of 1981. Now that's disgusting. Here I am bathing in Clairol and she's got to be bragging about a granddaughter! Their son graduated from the U.S. Air Force Academy in June 1982 and will be stationed at a missile base in Montana.

Karen Steinhardt Kirkbride and her husband Dick are enjoying their two teenage boys and their 2½-year-old. Now that's more like it! Karen is a computer systems analyst in northern Virginia. Bet Forbes Rayburn is farming and raising pecans and working on an M.B.A. degree — gradually. Daughter Lucy is married and Bet has two other children in college who are aiming toward careers in marketing pecans and flying.

Alice Guggenheimer Mackay writes that her son Dan rode his bike from the West to the East coast last summer — 5200 miles and about 30 flat tires. I was so excited when I saw his picture in the Lynchburg News and realized (10 minutes later) who he was! He is now a freshman at the U. of Chicago. Their daughter is a junior in high school. Thinking of a southern college perhaps! I know a good one. Barbara Darnall Clinton sent me her Christmas letter which contained lots of news of her activities. I will have to condense it (when I collected everything together, I realized I had more news than I thought!), but here goes. Barbara's family took her on her first ski trip and after two days, she decided to like it. I bet those first two days were a joy! One of her daughters spent the summer in Washington, DC, as one of 15 engineering students from across the country chosen for an internship studying the relationship between engineers and federal policy making. Another daughter is at Texas A&M, and a son who is a sophomore in high school recently became an Eagle Scout. Barbara has continued with her music and is active as president of her church choir.

Jane Slack Engleby Sigloh is now the mother of a Sweet Briar student. Sally Engleby is a freshman and is a real cute gal. Jane and her husband and daughter came by the Education Building at SBC just as we were having a "Thanksgiving feast" with 39 little Indians and pilgrims. I can't understand why they didn't want to share our fare of three grapes, six raisins, popcorn and pumpkin pie. They just must have strange tastes in Weston, CT, where the Siglohs are living. Jane looks terrific, even if she does have strange eating habits. Mitzie Djeri DeRidder is still supervisor of educational programs at Woodbridge State School in New Jersey and is writing a book for ARCO Publishing Co., Careers in the Human Services. She is also active in the Women's Network Movement. Mitzie has two sons, one in the Navy on the U.S.S. Coral Sea and one in college. Frances Gilbert Browne and Herb have three sons — Howard (23) is in first year law at Wake Forest, Gilbert (20) is a junior at Chapel Hill and will intern in D.C. this summer, and Paul (16) is a fifth-former at St. Paul's School in New Hampshire. Frances is active in the First Presbyterian Church and plays tennis when time permits. She was looking forward to an April visit to SBC.

Ann Train Ross writes that she and John will continue to live in Hong Kong for at least 18 months more while John's firm is expanding. Son Richard is at Oxford U. studying philosophy and psychology, while daughters Patricia and Alison are at Durham U.

Janet Monroe Schumann is working as community relations director for Community General Hospital in Reading, PA. She also does fund raising, and last year her annual report won the Superior Achievement Award for Pennsylvania hospitals. Janet's daughter will graduate in May from Syracuse and has received an award in recognition of her art work. Gwen Hoffman Lamb has returned to school (UNC) to study law. She finds it demanding and hopes perseverance and determination will see her through. Nancie Howe Entenmann and Dick are both very active with leadership roles in their Episcopal Church in Toledo. Their son is in Boston College Law School, and their daughter at home, but hoping to continue her study of English literature when her health improves. Nancie is taking a course in calligraphy. At the risk of sounding like a "school teacher," I wish everyone would. I am having some trouble deciphering some of your news — but difficult to read news is better than no news at all!

Corky Lauter Murray has been working for Online, Inc., in Weston, CT, for the past 3½ years. The company publishes computer-related magazines and directories, and organizes conferences in different parts of the country. The Murrays' children are Laura, who graduated from Dartmouth in '82 and works in NYC; Bob who is a sophomore at Keenyon College; and Caroline, who is in 8th grade. Peggy Patiullo Beckham toured England for two weeks last June with Or. Elton Trueblood. Thought there might be a scandal here, but they visited a Bishop, so I guess it was okay. The Beckhams' eldest son is in 2nd year Law at U. of Texas, daughter Nancy will graduate from U.T. this year and has an internship at Yale for next year, and their youngest is a freshman at U.T.

Barbara Bernhard MacLea's daughter Ginger was married April 30, 1983, and her daughter Sally graduated from Denison U. May 28, 1983. The MacLeas live in Baltimore, and Barbara is the senior field representative for the American Cancer Society.

Joan Broman Wright and Jim were here for Parent's Day in October and as usual we had a grand visit. Their daughter Elise will graduate in May, and I'm crushed to think I can't look forward to their fall visits. Maybe they can adopt. Son Jimmy is at Davidson, and Joan's parents have moved to Florida, so I fear it may be difficult to get them this far north.

I have a long holiday letter from Kay Smith Schauer and Bob which I'll have to condense. I don't know if they're trying to discourage visitors, but they write that they're practicing conservation of non-renewable resources and have abandoned central heating — as the letter was being written, it was 56° in their kitchen. And Joan Wright thinks my house is cold! The Schauers have two sons — Steve at Willamette U., where he's majoring in Econ and Math, and Mike, who will go to college this fall. Mike got a perfect score on his math SATs last spring. Kay is active in the nuclear freeze movement, crime prevention, handgun control and vegetable gardening. How's that for variety!

Julia Jackson Nichols wants us to know that her husband's name is David, not Davis!

I have spent a varied year — a large part of last summer in the hospital in Lynchburg (who wants to go to Maine and Connecticut anyway!) and this spring vacation at UVA Hospital — both times with a mysterious lung ailment which I've had for a year. I mean, I really know how to spend a vacation to say nothing of money! My niece is completing her sophomore year at SBC and is very much into a variety of activities and studies. She is on judo and was elected to Q.V. I hope no Bum reads this before they're announced — she'll kill me!

Y'all write, and send money — it not to me to the Alumnae Fund!

1960

Secretary

Mickey Oliveri Svoboda (Mrs. Joseph), 6016 St. Andrews Lane, Richmond, VA 23226

Fund Agent

Nina Wilkerson Bugg (Mrs. William A., Jr.), 471 W. Wesley Rd., N.W., Atlanta, GA

The class of '60 really fits the modern image of women who successfully combine marriage with a career or community service. Many have written enthusiastically of family activities, but always in conjunction with a career or with involvement in many activities outside the home.

Pat Russell Binnie is one of our most faithful correspondents. The Binnie family is renovating an old home in Toronto, Canada. They spent a week in Wisconsin last summer at Taliesin North, the home of the late Frank Lloyd Wright. Husband Andrew worked with Wright in the 50's.

Betsy Buechner Morris received her M.B.A. from the Simmons Graduate School of Management. Betsy is now working at a Boston bank. Son Peter has spent his high school junior year in Hamburg, where Betsy visited him last year.

Ann Weingart Teig is once again sending cards with USA postmarks! Ann, Eric, and their four children are living in Belmont, MA, while Eric is on sabbatical at Harvard. They will return to their home in Oslo, Norway, when this year of study is over.

I received a most attractive Charlie Hall original Christmas card from his mother, Isabel Ware Burch. Isabel continues to work at the Westport, CT, Nature Center and husband Bob is the new VP of Save the Children Foundation. Bob assists at St. Matthews in Wilton on the weekends. Isabel's daughter Margaret is a sophomore at the U. of Vt. Allen is a high school junior and Charlie is a grade school football player.

"A" Massie Hill lives in Fairfield, CT, and is a trust officer with the Connecticut National Bank. Husband Mal commutes daily to the Chemical Bank in NY. A's oldest son, Mal, 20, is a Vanderbilt student, and her younger son, Gordy, is a senior at Exeter. A has retained her music interest and participates in week-end chamber music concerts as often as possible.

Beverly Schuemann Wirth is an illustrator living in Syracuse, NY. Bev has done some free-lance writing and has just published her first book, Margie and Me. Bev saw Mona Stiles this past summer when Mona was performing at the Cortland Repertory Theatre.

Margot McKee is associated with Douglas-Elliman-Gibbons & Ives, a New York real estate firm.

Missi Meyers Gibbs keeps a busy schedule. In addition to working, she is secretary of the St. Thomas Altar Guild, a lay chaplain at Roosevelt Hospital, and treasurer of the Hewitt Parents Association. For the second year Missi had an SBC intern staying with her for Winter Term.

Lucy Martin Gianino will go to Spoleto, Italy, with her play, Children of a Lesser God. Husband Jack is stage manager for the Lena Horne Show. Lucy is running the Parent Support group at her children's school.

Ginger Newman Blanchard is a Doncaster consultant in New Jersey. Ginger and Bob visited Austria last spring and Bob's job continues to take them on many trips. Melinda Blanchard is a junior at Salem College, Rob is a freshman at Guilford, and Wil, a high school junior at home.

Ron and Val Hnot Wolfe have been building their home in Saddle River, NJ, and hope to have it finished by springtime.

Margo Saur Meyer writes from Bernardsville, NJ, that life revolves around the kids and athletic activities. Husband Bob is a deputy attorney general. Amy, 16, is a runner, Jenny, 14, is the swimmer, and Philip, 12, is the soccer player.

Sue Styer Ericksen and her family bought a 1770 farmhouse last year. They moved in after 10 months of restoration with two sons and three horses. Sue is a dental assistant and riding teacher in Birdsboro, PA.

George and Barbara Beam Denison vacationed in Greece last fall. Beam is busy with her art and frame studio in Bethesda, MD. Daughter Tracy is a junior at the U. of Del. and will spend her second semester in Paris. Heather is applying to colleges, and Dolly is learning to drive, an exciting experience for Mom!

Robin Ould Sabin is living in Great Falls, VA, after being abroad for so many years. Robin foxhunts and is busy with the pony club. Her daughter is a freshman at Madeira.

Mary Laird Silvia is in Falls Church, VA, and is working with nutrition and muscle therapy. I hope she will pass on her secrets for our "over 30" aches and pains.

Carolyn Gough Harding reports from Reston, VA, that her family traveled to England, Scotland and France last summer. Dick was in India last October, but Carolyn and the boys had to settle for slides and souvenirs. Carolyn is a teacher of English as a second language.

Here in Richmond, Anne Gatling Honey is president of the Women of St. James Church. The Honeys' home was open for Virginia's Garden Week tour last spring.

Carolyn King Ratcliffe finds life quite changed with both daughters away from home this year. Cathy is a freshman at Duke, and Carolyn's red robe is again at St. Andrews with Anne who is spending her junior year at UVA abroad. Carolyn and Clyde were to visit Anne at Christmastime. Carolyn is working at the Collegiate Boys School, just outside of Richmond.

Patti Powell Pusey is a life insurance agent for Connecticut Mutual. Daughter Brent is attending Montana State, Biff is a sophomore at St. Christopher's School, and daughter Glen is at Collegiate. Bill is a lawyer here in Richmond.

Norvell Orgain Butler wrote from Virginia Beach that her husband Frank is busy with his real estate investments, law firm of Butler and Butler, and serving as a substitute judge. She works in his office hall a day. Son Frank IV is a junior at UVA, and daughter Corbin will be a freshman there in September, having finished high school in three years. Son Clairborne is a sophomore at First Colonial High School.

Judy Cowen Jones has begun a tennis consulting business in Waynesboro, VA. Judy and her partner run tournaments, organize tennis trips, and set up club programs. Judy's oldest daughter, Debbie, is a junior at SBC. Allison is a freshman at UVA, and Greg is a sophomore in high school and was going to Peru for spring break.

Tucky McFall Ziebold's daughter Margaret is in the 8th grade at home in Charleston, WV. Molly is a senior at Salem Academy, Winston-Salem, NC, and, much to Tucky's chagrin, Becky is a sophomore at that other Virginia women's college, Hollins.

Betty Forsyth Harris has literally been on her toes lately. I opened a most attractive announcement from the Lynchburg Fine Arts Center and discovered that Betty is part of an energetic dance team that gives lectures and demonstrations throughout Virginia. Betty is also teaching dance and art at the Seven Hills School. Betty wrote that her career began in earnest after her three girls became teenagers. Elizabeth is at Brown, Frankie is at UVa, and Betty's youngest daughter is at home in Lynchburg.

Mollie McDonald Brasfield is running her own advertising agency in Charlotte, NC. Mollie's son Evans is at Vanderbilt, and John is a high school student in Southborough, MA.

Charlyne Grimes Coleman has become a legal assistant specializing in probate and taxes. Husband Jim has law offices in Hendersonville, NC, and her boys are in Hendersonville schools. Chris is a fifth grader and Clay is in the seventh.

Becky Towill McNair wrote a newsy note from Charlotte, NC. Becky said that since her daughter Harriet is a freshman at SBC she has especially enjoyed returning to campus for Parents Weekend. Becky finds it a wonderful experience to be again involved with Sweet Briar activities. Becky sent news of Sally Underhill Viall who lives near Charlotte in Rock Hill, SC. Sally's husband is a history professor at Winthrop College.

Anne Smith Bretscher is working on her doctorate at the U. of Ga. in Athens where both she and Bob teach.

Our Atlanta news comes from Nina Wilkerson Bugg who told me that as Class Fund Agent she has been so thankful that so many of our classmates have loyally supported their alma mater. Nina is working part time and "standing by" with moral support as her boys are finishing their Eagle Scout requirements. Husband Bill is regional manager for Cushman & Wakefield, commercial realtors. The Buggs have bought a mountain retreat at Big Canoe, GA, where they enjoyed a visit from Anne Crowell Lemmon and her family.

Karen Janssen Brede wrote from Marietta, GA, that she is not working since she has multiple sclerosis.

Dottie Westby is flying for a Ft. Lauderdale air charter company and received her seaplane rating last summer. Dottie is also developing acreage at Boca del Mar, FL. Her two children attend school in Ft. Lauderdale. Since her divorce Dottie has dropped her married name and will again be known as Dottie Westby.

Liz Few Penfield is chairman of the English Department at the U. of New Orleans and has recently published two textbooks.

We are well represented by Texas! Lee Cullum is editor of D Magazine, the city magazine of Dallas. Lee's son Cullum Clark, 16, is deeply involved in debate and travels to tournaments all over the country. Jane Riddle Lancaster's card also bears a Dallas postmark. Jane said that she keeps busy just attempting to keep up with her lawyer husband, John. Jane visited SBC last September for the first time in years. Her daughter has graduated from the U. of Texas, one son in at Tulane, and her younger boy in high school. Jane sees Flo McGowin Uhlhorn either in Dallas or when vacationing in Aspen.

Sandy Schuhmacher Lawrence is in college again — this time getting a degree in music composition at Incarnate Word College in San Antonio. She remembers that her musical experience at SBC was limited to choir, Sweet Tones, and playing the old Date House piano.

Maydelle Foster Fason is married to an oral surgeon and has two children, Drake, 16, and Maydelle, 12.

Maydelle is employed as the Women's Employment Advocate at the Austin Women's Center. Maline Gilbert McCalla owns a craft gallery in Austin. She was off to Paris on a buying trip in January. Maline wrote that this trip coincided with the SBC Abroad reunion in Paris. Maline strongly recommends the novel Life Sentences to all of us. "It's a tale of Texas girls who go off to school in Virginia — you'll enjoy and relate."

Norma Patteson Mills and family planned a trip to Alta, UT, for a Christmas ski vacation. James is a junior at Vanderbilt, Brent is a freshman at Duke, and Kincaid is in grade school at home in Chattanooga, TN. Norma echoed my sentiments when she asked, "Who would think we darlings of the Class of '60 could have these college age children?"

Jane Tatman Walker is a docent at the Children's Museum in Indianapolis and has been writing a tour for the Indianapolis Preservation Society. Jane is on the board of the Phillips Andover Alumni Council and often travels to New England for meetings. Her son is a sophomore at Ind. U. and daughter Kitty is a high school senior.

Janie Haldeman married Richard Rietzke in 1981. They are living in Louisville and Janie is teaching at a Kentucky prison. Janie's son Gerry is at Bellanime College, young Jane is at the Brown School, and Robert is at St. Francis School, all in Louisville. Jane will not take her new husband's name but will be known as Jane Haldeman Hope.

Joe and Heidi Wood Huddleston were in Toronto for the Trial Lawyers Convention last summer. Kristina is Heidi's only child still at home in Bowling Green, KY. Lisa is another Class of '60 Vanderbilt student, and older daughter Johanna has opened a restaurant! Heidi is working on a history degree while doing critical care nursing and directing her hospital's CPR program.

Peggy Cook Montgomery was in Boston last fall and saw Ann Weingart Teig. The older Montgomery boys are both at Princeton. Peggy's husband Seth is president of the Sante Fe Opera, and Peggy is quite involved with the Opera Guild. Peggy at famille traveled throughout Canada and Alaska a few years ago. Peggy reported that their mobile home became smaller and smaller as the number of rainy days increased!

We have three notes from the West Coast. Carol Barnard is working in Seattle at the Pacific Institute. She is writing for Outdoors West, a conservation magazine, and has been active in the Big Sister program. Carol sees Jane Headstream Millholland and had just purchased a painting by Jane's artist husband, Pierce Millholland. Jane is keeping trim by chasing her 4-year-old son, Thatcher.

Shirley Hayman Sudduth lives in the San Joaquin Valley town of Madera, CA. Her card spoke glowingly of the area, and Shirley added that if she sounded like an ad for the Chamber of Commerce, it might be because she is the administrative assistant for the Madera Chamber. Her husband John is VP of a grain company specializing in Mexican food. Son Robert is an Army medic; daughter Linda will graduate from college in May and will be married soon afterward. Shirley's younger son Peter is at Cal State Humboldt.

Diana Muldaur Vickery has remarried and is now Mrs. Robert J. Dozier. Dinny is still our favorite actress and is living in Pacific Palisades, CA.

This year's response to Class Notes has been the best ever. I have loved reading all the wonderful letters, but please forgive me for editing so heavily. The Alumnae Office has asked us to keep notes as concise as possible. Thank you, thank you, for all the news, it makes my job so easy!

The vote is in, and forty is officially declared not half so bad as we'd expected. Great, did someone say? Please, ladies, let's show a little restraint. Is it really seemly to be jubilant about this?

It can hardly be helped if, like Jackie Nicholson Wysong, you awoke on your fortieth birthday to find your black-draped garage decorated with a sign declaring, "Lordie, Lordie, Jackie's Forty!" As if such a reminder weren't enough, Jackie encountered the same proclamation on her street, at her children's schools, at major intersections all over Alexandria, VA. By evening, when husband David threw a party for her, Jackie had decided turning 40 was hilarious. Regarding the sanguine notion of life beginning then, Jackie remarks that she's started a new career with a construction company.

Alice Fales Stewart's fortieth birthday was a beginning too. Three days earlier Alice, with two of her children, made her orchestral debut with the Wellfleet Symphonette, a community volunteer orchestra where the Stewarts summer on Cape Cod. At the back of the second violin section and struggling to keep up, Alice was nonetheless elated, having taken up the violin at the advanced age of 35. In the same week Alice also began teaching history to tenth, eleventh, and twelfth graders at a lovely school in Chestnut Hill, MA. Her recipe for feeling young: keeping up with her two-year-old daughter.

Nancy Banfield McIlhane says "involvement and regular exercise" are the keys to loving life at 40. Nancy is a marketing representative for a Houston bank; she teaches Sunday school and is active on the local Heart Association board, on the President's Committee for the Chamber of Commerce, and in Toastmasters; she jogs and "jazzercises" regularly. Another enthusiastic advocate of life "after 35" is Leezee Scott Porter, who is pleased with the success of her furniture leasing company in Washington, D.C. Perhaps some of you saw last summer's Washington Post article on furniture rental in Washington, in which Leezee was quoted extensively, or heard her interviewed on National Public Radio. Leezee is still a director of the Women's National Bank, a member of the national board of the Women's Campaign Fund and of the Vestry of Grace Church. She is the mother of Erin, 14, a ninth grader at the Maret School; and she dares "a very special man."

Mary Peebles de Vries, in Ft. Lauderdale, FL, says that finally, at 40, she's doing what she always wanted: painting. She has had numerous portrait commissions; and she guarantees "no wrinkles." My favorite anonymous correspondent, the NYC realtor, celebrated her fortieth by losing 15 pounds. I can't be sure, but look for a svelte Fran Hanahan.

Approaching the forties in a philosophical mood was Heidi Haug White, who is "experiencing a nice coming-together of things" and savoring the fruits of her labors. In addition to full-time motherhood and an almost full-time job in real estate management, Heidi has taken on a new role in public life with her appointment to the Community Board (an adjunct of the NY City Council) of the district in Manhattan where she lives and works. Sally Gump Berryman relishes the contentment of life with Doc on their farm near Manchester, TN. Turning 40 is "all a state of mind," says Sally, who even likes her gray hairs and who loves riding, golfing, gardening, and enjoying children and grandchildren. Sally was looking forward to reading the latest book by Stuart Baldwin Osmond's husband Andrew, War without Frontiers.

Decidedly unphilosophical was Judy Dunn Spangenberg's birthday plan: to hurl herself from an upstairs window. However, when the autumn day dawned clear and lovely, she decided to rake leaves instead. Judy's twelfth children's book (illustrated by the photographs by her mother, Phoebe Pierson Dunn '36) was due out in the spring. Judy has also been teaching creative writing to gifted fourth graders and taking a creative writers' workshop and a classical music course. Tyler, 15, is a fearless skier and an accelerated student. Husband Tom, still at Young and Rubicam Advertising on Madison Avenue, continues to make "Come Back to Jamaica" commercials (Tom and Ty are in the current one) and Time-Life commercials.

A most practical approach to birthdays is that of Dottie Norris Schipper, who's "been 35 for five years" and plans to stay that way. Dottie has also "thrown extra zeal into keeping the bod from deteriorating," though I fear a dearth of detail prevents my passing on her secrets. Dottie's Greenville, SC, photography business has reaped numerous professional rewards, including a two-week job in London and Paris last November. Between her work and her sons (15, 12, 3), Dottie can't afford to slow down.

In Novelty, OH, Fran Mallory Meyers eased the blow of turning 40 by joining the local garden club, where she is considered an infusion of "young blood," and by keeping in shape with tennis and Nautilus workouts, which she's done several times a week for the past four years. Fran loves her part-time job at "an intriguing fabric shop called Cotton Pickins'," where she sells, teaches quilting, conducts craft and sewing projects, and helps coordinate fashion shows, in which she also models. Fran is also a sustaining member of the Junior League of Cleveland. It's her children who remind Fran that time's passing: all three are in their second decade now.

Susie Glasgow Brown, in Nashville, doesn't feel 40 either until she looks at her three children (15, 13, 9). Susie is Director of Admissions and Alumnae at Harpeth Hall, where she has the freedom to do such things as take off for a long lunch with Lynne Smith Crow, who was in Nashville with Bill for a convention. At home in Short Hills, NJ, Lynne spent last year taking more tests than she'd seen since SBC — first, for an associate's license in real estate, then for a license to sell life insurance, and finally for her National Association of Security Dealers' license. The result of all this test-taking: a full-time job that keeps Lynne out past 10 most nights and makes her run harder than ever to keep up with David, 12 (at St. Bernard's School in Bernardville), Sandy, 11, and Margaret, 9.

In Grand Island, NY, Melody McCormick Cooke has two nearly grown daughters — Aprille, 17, a National Merit semifinalist, and Kirsten, 15, a fine pianist. Melody, a reporter for the Niagara Gazette, has written a number of articles on religion during the past year. Melody recently enjoyed a visit with Linda Lee McAndrew. Barbara Durst McLean loves watching her "three busy, wonderful teenagers grow and develop." Barbara is a landscape designer who owns her own company in Fort Worth.

In Salem, VA, Edi Lasher Birch hears the clock ticking whenever she looks at her elder daughter Kathy, who'll be off to college next fall. On the way home from a tennis tournament last summer, Edi gave younger daughter Suzie, a super tennis player, a tour of SBC. Edi says Tina Platt Kemper, of Roanoke, visited SB with her daughter too; but she was interested in the Riding Center, not the tennis courts. When Edi isn't wondering where her girls will attend college, she's managing the pro shop at the Roanoke Country Club. Ebbie Evans Edwards, also in Roanoke, is in the midst of the college search as well. This summer she and Tom will take Chris, a high school junior and the eldest of four, to look at colleges; at the moment, Princeton is favored. Last year Ebbie joined a handbell choir, hoping the music would soothe the effects of teen-agers' growing pains; but she says she has to concentrate too much on the music to enjoy it.

Nancy Lynah Stebbing's daughter Clare is already in college, at the U. of Cal. at Sante Barbara. Last fall marked the twentieth anniversary of Nancy's Atlantic crossing (by boat, in those good old days!) to spend her junior year at the U. of Edinburgh, and she's been in Britain ever since. Her work with the Museum Service at Abingdon and Wantage, Oxfordshire, progresses despite the British financial crisis. Aprille Hite Deacon has lived in England since we graduated. At Alumnae Council last fall, I visited with her mother and learned that Aprille's grand passion is riding.

Vera Le Crow Carvaillo, in Gif-sur-Yvette, France, has also spent many years abroad. Her husband Philippe recently moved from the importing business to manufacturing. The Carvaillos are learning to live with their Socialist government but looking, hopefully, to its end. They have bought a sailboat that they keep on Lake Geneva, near Evian; here they boated and golfed in August and skied at Christmas. Vera says 40 has brought with it "a certain inner balance" that keeps her sane in the midst of her busy life: work with Philippe and the care of her house, her two children (14 and 6) and her German shepherd. In fact, after a hiatus of 25 years, she has managed to resume piano lessons, which are "marvelously relaxing."

From Bonn, West Germany, Marsh Metcalf Seymour writes joyfully that at last her diplomat husband is being transferred to a French-speaking post — Brussels. During the past year Marsh moved from the American School to the British School in Bonn, where she has taught museum and studio art and French. She has been doing translations, and her batik eggs were to be shown in the spring.

In O'Fallon, IL, Sheila Carroll Cooprider is on the vestry of a growing parish, chairs the Christian Education Commission, and does volunteer work. Mainly, though, Sheila and Chuck, a staff officer at Scott AFB, try to keep their 40-year-old minds in gear to deal with Kathryn, 13, and Lee Ann, 11. Last summer the Coopriders spent an idyllic month in Austria.

Nina Sledge Burke has become a member of the executive board of the Atlanta Preservation Center and the recording secretary of the Ga. Carriage Association. Nina's daughter Eleanor, 15, is a freshman at Chatham Hall, in the SBC neighborhood; son Richard, Nina laments, is in junior high and has discovered rock music. Frank is executive vice president and chief operating officer of the Bank of the South and a member of the Board of Trustees of Oglethorpe College. Nina still rides as much as possible and enjoys seeing many SB alumnae at the Burkes' summer home in Highlands, NC.

Catherine (Tappy) Lynn, professor of art history at Columbia U., spoke of 18th century wallpaper at an open class at SBC preceding the Ewald Scholars Symposium on the New American Architecture, March 24-25. Her husband Vincent J. Scully, professor at Yale, gave the opening address at the symposium.

M. C. Elmore Harrell says she's been too busy to know she had a birthday. M. C.'s year-old C.P.A. practice in Severna Park, MD, is growing steadily, and she teaches accounting at the local junior college. M. C. remains active in volunteer work — as the Finance Director of the Junior League of Annapolis, as a Girl Scout leader, and as a PTA board member. David, 12, plays soccer and baseball, and Susan, 9, enjoys ballet and Scouts. Husband Martin just completed 12 years with Westinghouse.

Mary Green Borg, in Greeley, CO, would like to contemplate being 40 but finds that being mother to five boys (14, 12, 8, 5 and 2) is hardly conducive to the contemplative life. The three older boys are "active in sports and music and the two smalls are just plain active." Mary spends lots of time as Cub Scout leader, Sunday school teacher, junior great books discussion leader, school committee woman, and fan at soccer, basketball, baseball, games, wrestling matches, and gymnastic meets. In the copious free time left her, Mary participates in a community chorale group and teaches two courses a quarter at senior citizen centers. Mary's husband Andy is a judge and a marathon runner. Of her own marathon, Mary says she wouldn't trade places with anyone.

Another mother happily occupied with young children is Anne Day Herrman in NYC. Jed, 5, is in kindergarten and Tim, nearly 3, goes to a play group. Anne still tutors in remedial reading. In Bethesda, MD, Dona Van Arsdale Jones stays busy keeping up with Timothy, 20 months, and participating in numerous activities at five-year-old Emily's school. Dona and Carleton breezed through their fortieth birthdays unscathed while vacationing on Nantucket. The Joneses were planning a trip to Grand Cayman in March.

In Bethlehem, PA, Pemmie Mercur Cleveland loves taking care of Kaycee, a kindergartner at Moravian Academy, and Carrie, nearly 3. The Clevelands computerized their travel agency this year, and Pemmie also worked on two Junior League projects — chairing the drive to open a Women's Resource Center at the YWCA and being on the Children's Theater board. John was inducted into the Masons, became a member of Rotary, and was appointed to the Congressional Travel and Tourism Caucus Advisory Board. The Clevelands have enjoyed several trips to Vermont and a two-week Caribbean cruise (while grandparents babysat); they hoped to spend the summer at their home in Italy.

Linda Overly Levensgood, in Lancaster, PA, believes the Class of '64 must still be young at heart. Linda is kept that way by Andrew, 6, and Lara, 3. Linda and Richard, whose architectural business is flourishing, took the children to Kiawah Island for a week's revel in the sunshine and then to NYC to introduce them to the theater — Annie, of course. Perhaps Linda's youthful enthusiasm is prompted by the fact the Levensgoods are expecting another baby come September.

In the midst of all this happy news, I'm afraid it is my task to report two very sad events as well: the sudden death of Dootsie Duer Leach's husband Walter in January and the death of classmate Lorna MacLeod Smith. Judy Dunn Spangenberg, a friend of Lorna's for over 30 years, sent me the following: "Lorna MacLeod Smith died Jan. 2, 1983, after a courageous battle against cancer. Tragically, she had lost her husband to the same disease in 1980 and her eldest daughter, Megan, in a car accident in 1981. To the end, Lori lived each day with strength and vitality. New Year's Eve she danced and laughed with friends, sharing with them her warmth and generous concern for others. That was Lori."

Several of us have made 40 a turning point by launching new careers. Martie Benn Martin, in Vienna, VA, has given up being full-time mommy to Jennifer, 10, and Doug, 7, to become an associate editor of a local magazine. Martie says no one could be more surprised than she to be getting paid for what she learned in Miss Ramage's freshman comp class. Martie took off from her job long enough to accompany Geoff and the children on a post-Christmas jaunt to Florida.

Genie Johnson Sigler has returned to teaching — algebra this time — at a Catholic girls' school in Little Rock, where daughter Beth will be a freshman next year. Genie's bright students make her wonder, at times, if the gray matter works as well at 40 as it once did. Last fall Genie had a fine visit with Jane Bradley Wheeler, who looked no older than she had as Genie's freshman roommate.

Gail Rothrock Trozzo is currently working as consultant to the newly appointed Prince George's County Historic Preservation Commission, set up by the County preservation plan and ordinance she worked on over the last two years.

Last October, in Wilmington, Mary Ball Payne Morton was hired to coordinate Delaware's Child Protective Services, Adoption and Interstate Compact programs. Mary Ball got the job because of her Junior League experience. Mary Ball remains active on two community boards and spends her weekends watching Jack, 16, and David, 12, students at Tower Hill School, who participate in sports every season of the year. Mary Ball, John, and the boys planned a West Coast vacation during spring break and hoped to stop in Colorado for skiing on their way home. Frequent visitors of Mary Ball's parents in Amherst, they always love seeing SB.

Other recent visitors to SB were Nancy Hall Green and Holcombe, who stopped in to see Pres. Whiteman while en route from Atlanta to Washington. Nancy reports the campus as lovely as ever, the girls "happy and so young." In Washington the Greens lunched with Susan Dwelle Baxter and Bill and tried to catch up on the years since the Baxters' move from Atlanta to Owings Mills, MD.

In El Dorado, AR, Rosamond Sample Brown is a busy widow teaching high school Spanish by day, taking business courses by night, and caring for two sons. This summer Rosamond plans to begin work for her master's degree in international management at the American Graduate School of International Management, near Phoenix, AZ.

Another high school Spanish teacher is Peggy Aurand Young, who teaches full time at Bergen H.S. in Peoria, IL. Also, she still has her stable and teaches riding on weekends and for Bradley U. She has a new computer — and probably needs it to keep up with everything she's doing! She and Terry are planning to travel to Spain this summer for their first visit since they met there in 1965.

Though she does not have a new career, Ginny de Buys does have a new address — true to the nomadic pattern she's followed in the past few years. Ginny is now happily settled in Princeton, where she intends to stay; she commutes to her job as a computer programmer in Woodbridge, NJ. Ginny tells me her cousin Laurie de Buys Pannell and Cliff, who teaches at the U. of Ga., are building a new home in Athens. V. M. Del Greco Galgano, the math coordinator for Marshall U. Community Col., Huntington, WV, has been boning up on computers for use in her classes. Last summer V. M., Robert, 12, David, 9, and Laura, 7, accompanied Mike to England, where he worked on his study of seventeenth-century women and where they all witnessed the Falklands War, the celebrations of Prince William's birth, and the onslaught of New Wave Rock.

Elizabeth Matheson still works at Duke and still spends lots of time toting her camera to old seaside resorts, the Jersey and Maryland shores being great favorites. According to Helen Dunn, Elizabeth's photographs are very fine. Elizabeth and Helen were planning a trip to Europe this spring — first to Holland for a visit with Sarah Strother Menick and then on to their "own invasion of Normandy and Brittany to look in on Proust country, sip Calvados and eat oysters."

Kathy Hsu Jeong, Gary, Matt, 10, and Genevieve, 8, spent part of last winter huddled around the space heater in the kitchen while the rest of their home in the Oakland hills was being remodeled. In August the Jeongs were in Toronto, where Kathy presented a paper at a parasitology conference and where the whole family enjoyed an evening in the beautiful home of Mary McGraw Clark, her husband Charles, and children Jennifer and Charlie. From Toronto the Jeongs flew to Scotland, where they spent two weeks sight-seeing and falling in love with Edinburgh and the Isle of Skye. Kathy is still working at the U. of Cal. Medical Center but says she is considering retirement at 40.

A happy note from Caroline Keller Gilliland told of her plans to be married last Dec. 29 to the Rev. James Graves Theus. Caroline still loves running the farm (Inglewood Land and Development Co.) near Alexandria, LA. A wedding is also in the offing sometime in '83 for Sharon Van Cleve, who is now working full-time on her M.A. in public policy analysis at Loyola Marymount U. in Los Angeles.

Last summer I published my first short story, "Sacrifice," in Tri-Quarterly. You'll probably have to read about this feat for quite a while since I am now working on a novel that promises to go on and on, leaving me with nothing new to report till about the time I check into the old folks' home. Wally and I made a couple of trips to Texas and California last year, visiting family, and Wally journeyed to Australia for an economics conference, enduring 30 airborne hours and five consecutive airline meals. We enjoy visits from Wally's children — Cathy, a Rutgers graduate student in art history who plans to be married this summer; Chris, a junior physics major at Stanford who spent spring quarter studying in England; and Nora, a Stanford freshman.

During my tenure as class secretary, I have loved hearing from you all, enjoyed the occasional chat with you on the phone, and rejoiced at discovering how much, despite the years, we all still have in common. I can hardly wait for our twentieth reunion, coming in May, 1984. Penny Writer Theis, our class president, enjoys us to lose those ten pounds, try that new hairdo, arrange for babysitters or time off from work. Plan now to be at SB for the grand event, and cajole reluctant friends into joining you. Penny and I shall be at Alumnae Council in October, trying to get organized for May. Help wanted! You come too!

One final word to all you lovelies who think you've weathered 40 so well: I just turned 41. Lordie, Lordie indeed!

Secretary

Frances Kirven Morse (Mrs. John A.), 57 Elmhurst Rd., Newton, MA 02158

Fund Agent

Pembroke Herbert Kyle (Mrs. William H.), 26 Canterbury Hill, Topsfield, MA 01983

These notes will be my swan song! By the time you read them, we will have completed our fifteenth class reunion, and you will have elected a new class secretary! All politicians and class secretaries should retire after eight years! A final thanks for your typically enthusiastic response to my postcard plea for news. To summarize the "state of the Class of '68," I report that we are presiding over P.T.A.'s, gearing up to cope with teenagers, getting into the world of personal computers, and in general, enjoying our late (gasp) thirties! So onward with the details!

Adaline Allen Shinkle continues to thrive in snowy Minnesota. In addition to mothering Whitney (5) and Brian (2), she is still working at a child guidance center for children with learning disabilities. She's also establishing a crisis nursery for prevention of child abuse.

With the birth of Molly, Barbara Baur Dunlop now has five children to raise on her ranch in Arizona! She figures she'll be driving carpools for 28 years!

Andy Beerman Sonfield is in charge of buying, advertising, and training for two Workbench furniture stores. With her husband and three marvelous children, she enjoys a lot of sailing and skiing. She is also a counselor for "Warmlines," a program for parents having problems with toddlers.

Martha Bennett Pritchett reports the birth of a daughter, Leslie Harper, in August. When not minding Leslie or Hartwell (2), she spends her time remodeling their kitchen. Husband Ed has just published Office Management of Arrhythmias. Hartwell has taught the SBC song to his nursery school class! They attended a Princeton reunion with Ann Banks Herrod and Hank.

Ann Biggs Lewis is busy with the alumnae association of her two daughters' school. She plays on a tennis team and guides visitors through the Flager Museum in Palm Beach.

Lesley Bissell Hoopes still enjoys life in NYC where husband Toby is with The Bank of New York. She looks after children Toby and Elliot.

when not giving tours at the Metropolitan Museum. She is excited about preparing for the Vatican show due to open there this spring.

Pam Boyd Daniel is now in the D.C. area where Dave was transferred to the Navy's Surgeon General's Office. She's involved with the activities of her third grader and toddler and is taking some computer courses.

Phoebe Brunner Peacock is coping with the terrible two's of her identical twin girls, when not working half-time as a librarian at the Library of Congress or occasionally riding her gelding!

Pam Browning Durant and her husband have a successful interior design firm in Harvard, MA, and just landed a big contract for a major Boston hospital.

In sunny Florida, Cecelia Bryant is still vice-president and counsel for Voyager Group Inc. The governor recently appointed her to the Florida Board of Regents which runs the state's nine universities on an annual budget of over one billion dollars.

Katey Buster finds that Aspen, CO, is the right spot for her interests. She is a nature guide, teaching courses in mountain ecology and geology. She is also a professional photographer, specializing in wildflower close-ups.

Laura Campbell Walker says life is fine in Miami, in spite of press reports! She is busy with her three kids, ages 10, 6, and 4. She plays on a tennis team and finds time to arrange blind dates for some of her old SBC classmates!

After years of covering the arts for the afternoon newspaper in Winston-Salem, Genie Carr is now writing about health and medicine. She wishes she had paid more attention in freshman biology!

The book Riding, an Illustrated Guide by Kate Conday will be published by Prentice-Hall this spring. Kate is also working for D.J. Hertz in NYC, a personnel placement firm handling jobs at all levels in investments, banking, fashion, film, and publishing.

Thriving in Alexandria are Percy Clarke Gwinn and son William (7) and stockbroker husband Michael. When not presiding as president of her son's P.T.A., she is area manager for Lancaster, Inc., distributor of designer clothes which she sells out of her house.

Author K.C. Cole Janssen is pushing her new book from Anchor/Doubleday Between the Lines: Searching for Space Between Feminism and Femininity and Other Tight Spots. Her first book What Only a Mother can tell you about Having a Baby is now available in paperback. K.C. is now living in New York with her new daughter Elizabeth, son Peter, and husband Peter who is editor of Motor Boating and Sailing

Alumnae Magazine

Francie deSaussure Meade has spent the year in Carlisle, PA, with children (12 and 10) and husband Dave who is at the Army War College. They will be moving to Fort Monroe, VA, this summer. She writes that Coo Prettyman remarried two years ago and has a baby girl.

Jeanie Forsyth Powell writes that she is busy, well, and happy in Asheville, in spite of the complete remodeling job they just undertook on their house!

Francine Frate McNeill and daughters (12 and 11) joined husband David in Korea for a wonderful Christmas experience. Francine is "temporarily" retired from teaching this year, but has been doing some substituting at her daughters' school.

Lynne Gardner married Jim Detmer, a systems analyst, in 1981, forming a family of seven, with children ranging in age from 23 to 8! She and Jim sing in two choral groups in Fairfax County. Lynne is also preparing for a recital, sharing the stage with an accompanist and a violinist.

Judy Harbottle Masselli, Leo and Kate (4) have bought a house in San Francisco with lots of space and a nice flat yard! Judy loves her half-time job at the UC Medical Center Physiology Dept., and Leo has a successful video games business.

Petaluma, CA, is where Libby Harvey Hodgson and Joe have started an analytical and consulting laboratory with computerized instrumentation, providing a wide range of services for environmental problems, wine analysis, chemical spills, explosives, foods, and preservatives. Company name is ACBL (Alpha Chemical and Biomedical Laboratories).

Nineteen-eighty-two was also the Year of the Computer for Pembroke Herbert Kyle who is trying to shift all of the records of her company, Picture Research Consultants, to her new TRS-80. She keeps busy as our class fund agent and on committees of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and the Boston Pops, when not tending David (5) and Kevin (2).

Rickey Hendricks has returned to her maiden name, though she is married to Mark Foster, professor of history at the U. of Colo. Denver. Rickey received her M.A. in American history from C.U. Denver in 1981 and has almost finished the course work toward the Ph. D. at the U. of Denver. She has had two articles published in professional journals.

Ann Hinshaw Vanderweil writes that she is saving all her news for the '83 reunion, but other news sources reveal that she and Gary moved from Hingham, MA, to a huge, beautiful Victorian home overlooking the sea in Cohasset. They have three children, 7, 3, and 9 months.

Carler Hunter Hopkins, SBC's director for the Office of Career Planning, was voted Virginia's School Counselor of the Year (Post Secondary Division). Along with SBC psychology professor David Johnson, she recently authored "Sexual Harassment in the Marketplace" in the spring '82 issue of The Journal of College Placement. Her son Hunter is enjoying Byrd Stone '56 as a teacher in the SBC Nursery School!

Nancy Hickox Wright, when not mothering Prescott (6) and Timothy (3), has been substitute teaching in her town, Sudbury, MA, as well as doing field work through a Concord hospital, in preparation for entering school for a degree in psychiatric social work.

Living near Sweet Briar is Laurie Ives who has been taking science courses at a community college. She is preparing to take entrance exams for medical school and plans to be a psychiatrist.

Barbara Johnson Prickett, who classifies herself as a "professional volunteer," has just completed her term as president of the Atlanta Junior League and is expecting her second child in early summer.

Anne Kinsey Dinan is chauffeur, mediator, and chaperone for daughters Kinsey and Ashley, who are still doing a lot of modeling in NYC. Terry continues his hard work at "21."

Chris Kulczycki married in May '82 James Murray, a vice-president with Crocker National Bank. They have a house and garden in Harrison, NY, and commute daily to the city, where Chris is a corporate lending officer for Wells Fargo Bank. She is active in the NYC SBC Alumnae Club and has been hosting some impressive January SBC interns.

Deidre Leland made good use of her American Studies major when she and husband Frank were active participants in the recent Martin Van Buren Bicentennial Birthday Celebration last fall and summer in Kinderhook, NY!

Suzanne Little Jones moved from Salt Lake City to Albuquerque, where husband Robert is director of Cardiac Anesthesia at Lovelace Medical Center. She is enjoying some time off by playing tennis, golf, and taking care of their business and two dogs.

Jennie Lyons Fogarty writes that she has no news but that she and family are more terrific than last year!

Mary Matheson spent the last six months in Australia and is now back in NYC catching up on theatres and movies!

Pam McConnell Post has been writing short stories for the last couple of years and is close to getting the first one published. She also spends a lot of time with the activities of Whitney (9) and Tyler (6) in Wayland, MA.

Caroline D'Ferrall MacGill is busy with three sons (13, 11, 8) and is a full-time student for a degree in Speech Communications and Public Relations. She has been president of the Pulsaki, VA, United Way and sings with the Sweet Adelines.

Penny Diver Buckingham survived the '82 Denver Blizzard, but the storm ruined some planned reunions with some old '68'ers! Penny is enjoying her work as staff marketing consultant for the Evergreen National Bank and as marketing vice-president for the Denver Junior League. She reports that her kids (10 and 8) are terrific skiers and students!

Ann Peterson married Griffin (of the Meta Glass phone booth!) in July and since then has traveled to Kauai and Rome. She's now back to earth with the school activities of her two daughters, including helping with the school computer!

Greece was the honeymoon spot for Catherine Porter who married James T. Fuller, III, in May '82. She is still assistant counsel to the Oversight Subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, and Jim is a tax lawyer and fellow Southerner!

Jeannie Preston Jacobs is alive and singing outside of Milwaukee. Husband Stephen is a urologist with the Medical College of Wisconsin. When not herding her three children (10, 8, 5), she plays her new baby grand piano and sings with the Milwaukee Symphony. Her summers on Lake Michigan rival Golden Pond!

Pemmy Reed Hoffmeyer and cardiologist Tom had their fourth son last July. She's devoting her time to family life in Williamsburg!

Camille Reid Hazlehurst reports the Feb. '82 birth of a son Tom, who joins sister Annie. She and husband Tom have purchased a beautiful new house in Hillsboro, CA, where he is a pulmonary specialist at a local hospital. Camille is still president of her very successful investment firm.

Patricia Skarda says that all is well at Smith College, where she just completed a sabbatical by writing on vampires, Mary Shelly, and Frankenstein! She enjoys the mix of teaching and writing.

The trusty U.S. Postal Service mutilated the postcard from Emmy Savage Borthwick so I can only "interpolate" what she's up to! She is selling her paintings and adjusting to her new home computer by taking some courses! She enjoyed another residency at the Virginia Center for the Creative Arts last October and is currently preparing for another one-woman showing of her works.

Julie Seibels Northrup moved from New York to Lake Charles, LA, where Fred is the rector of the Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd, and she is coordinator of proposal development at McNeese State U., when not carpooling Freddie (10) and Temple (5). She recently saw Ann Webster on a business trip to D.C., where Ann is a lawyer with a major firm. Julie reports that Addie Russo is teaching French at nearby L.S.U.

Lynn Settlemyer Arts reports the birth of a son Gerard. She's back at work at Westview Press, a publishing firm in Boulder.

Barrie Trimmingham Van Dyck is a partner and officer of Professional Writing Consultants, Inc., as well as homemaker and mother to three boys.

Last summer Suzanne Torgan Weston moved to Anchorage, getting herself there on her motorcycle! She works as a systems consultant. Husband Steve is working as manager of Extension Exploration Services for ARCO Alaska.

Carol Vontz Miller spends most of her time testing gas mileage and memorizing pot holes as she manages the lives of her three kids (12, 8, 4). She's active in an "Art Goes to School!" program and is president of the local school P.T.A.

Ellen Wakefield Ottenritter has moved to Medfield, MA, where husband Phil has a new job as assistant to the president of Swing Design, a manufacturer of "wonder swings and things"! She's temporarily retired from her teaching job in order to better keep up with her high schooler, junior high schooler, and eight-year-old!

Sunny and warm Macon, GA, is where Lynn Warren Pope is living these days! She's involved with her two sons' school activities and Junior League Arts work. Husband Terrel has an ob-gyn private practice.

Sandy Waters is an administrative judge in Boulder, doing discrimination cases for the federal government. She visited China on a legal exchange program last March. She also has an "old folks" rock and roll band which performs at bar conventions and for anyone who will listen!

Current class president Connie Williams deBordenave and Tad have adopted their third child, Eve, who joins Channing (9) and Maria (5). Between diapers she is preparing for our reunion and enjoying life in Richmond!

Cecelia Williamson Grinstead is back in Carmel, IN, after a year in Iran and two years in Venezuela! She manages to play a little tennis when not looking after her four children, ages 18 months to 9! Husband Andy is with Eli Lily.

On a sixty-acre farm in Apex, NC, we can find Christine Witcover Dean who just had her second child, Katherine, who joins brother Joseph.

Betsy Wolfe became Mrs. Edmund Jacobson on April 9 and lives in Sausalito, CA.

Marshalyne Yeargin Allsopp is pleased to be on the SBC Board of Overseers and is enjoying being a part of the exciting things our college is doing. She is still doing research at the Birth Defects Branch of the Center for Disease Control and mothering her son and daughter! Husband Ralph is receiving his Ph.D. in clinical psychology from NYU in June.

As for me, I've finally figured out what I want to be when I grow up! After a year of work in educational software development and in conducting computer literacy workshops for teachers, I finally decided what I really wanted to do was teach! So, I spent the summer and fall completing courses for teacher certification in secondary math. Although the job outlook is shaky here, I just found a temporary position as programming teacher at a junior high in Needham, MA! And, alas, I, too, am president of daughter Sarah's P.T.A.! Husband John is working on personal computer development at Digital Equipment and trying to nail down his dissertation. Sarah (10) enjoys our APPLE computer, soccer, and has taken up the French horn!

Again, I have enjoyed my stint as your secretary. I apologize for any misspelled names or misinterpreted news! You have been a great group about which to write! Farewell for awhile!

Secretary

Kathryn D. Keys, 61 Main St., Birmingham, AL 35213

Fund Agent

Carter Frackleton, 1606 Littlepage St., Fredericksburg, VA 22401

Following Bobo, who was always the star of the creative writing classes, makes this mere sociology major a little bit nervous. The class of '72 is certainly an interesting sociological study, however, and here is the data to prove it!

First of all, approximately 48 classmates came to our tenth reunion. For those of you who were not there, I would like to mention a few people who have not sent me any updates, but were full of news in May '82.

Dolores Connor is living in Batesville, VA, right outside of Charlottesville, and works for a company doing energy conservation consultations for homes and businesses. Dolores reports that Cleveland Hall is well, happy, and in Langley, WA, working in forestry. Nancy Lee Hager Bruetsch brought husband Robert and their three children, Kimberly, Kelly, and Matthew. Mary Heller was up jogging several miles each morning and has a lean new athletic look! Mary is still doing research at N.I.H. in D.C. Jill Johnson Lindsay arrived with her new husband of just a few months. Chris was practicing law in Atlanta, returned to Orange, VA, for a Christmas visit and re-encountered his old high school friend Jill. They were married not long after that, and Chris left his thriving practice to be with Jill in D.C.; she obviously still has her Scarlet O'Hara touch. Mary Sue Morrison Thomas was about to change careers from teaching to becoming a partner in her mother's women's specialty shop in Portsmouth, VA. She and I had lots of fun talking about the different lines of clothes we carry in our shops. Jeanie Mann Hardesty and Ben are living in Clarksburg, WV, where he is in the mining business. They are the proud parents of two, and Jeanie was elected our new class president! Marcia Wittenbrook's latest hobby is ballet. She confides that she is great at practice, but has severe attacks of stage fright in live performances. Jeanette Pillsbury left reunion a little early to graduate from the Master's in Educational Administration Program at U.VA. She has now accepted a position as an assistant principal in a junior high school (grades 6, 7, and 8) in Suffolk, VA. We learned that Edna Ann Osmanski married William James Loftus last year. She sent a great picture from the wedding for our reunion scrapbook.

Now for news from those who were not at reunion, but had some really good excuses. Louise Martin Creason was in the hospital in Louisville, KY, having her first child at the time. Cindy Heye Hopkins was married that Saturday night. Deborah Wilson Hollings was stranded in the Charlotte airport with her 11-month-old child Christopher, trying to get to "Sweets" when she was paged by May-May Bryan Gay from Lynchburg, who said her entire family had all come down with the flu. At this point, Debbie gave up thoughts of another flight and got a ride home with the Avis girl! Deborah also reports that her husband Michael is in his last year at U.S.C. law school, and she is still working at Fabrique Nationale in Columbia, SC. Her most exciting news, however, is that Michael's father, Ernest F. Hollings, is running for the Democratic nomination for president! Mary Pat Varn Moore wrote that she missed reunion because of a trip west to Monterey and San Francisco for Paul's company, Thomas-Levy and Associates, Inc., in Tampa, and insurance and financial planning firm for which he is vice president. Mary Pat is still a banker but her bank merged Dec. 1, '82, with Sun Banks of Florida, expanding her territory and leaving her doubly busy as the compliance officer of the "new" bank. She combines motherhood with her career and says son Warren, who is 2½, definitely lives up to the image of that group. Lee Essrig is also in Tampa practicing law. She and Mary Pat represented our class at an SBC alum get together in the area that spanned classes from 1925 to 1987!

We now move on to more current news. Tina Etling Banner is in Florida too! She and new husband Michael are both on the faculty of the Medical School at the U. of Fla. in Gainesville doing research in the Department of Anesthesiology. Another Floridian, Daphne Drennen Gatlin, is working for the Charter Company and attending the U. of N.Fla. On April 16, 1982, she was inducted into Beta Gamma Sigma, national scholastic honor society for students of business.

From NYC, Cisse Gott writes that she has been working for Institutional Investor magazine this past year. She reports that Tobey Gilmore Shaw gave birth to twin girls. Susan Norton Allen is happy, well, and has made it through her first year of marriage with ease. Finally, Marilyn Prichard is alive and very well in Spain. Tobey, herself, writes to say Carroll and Kate were born Nov. 5, '82. They were seven weeks early, but all is well and after a month in the hospital to reach 5 lbs., they are home keeping her busy 24 hours a day! Also in NYC, Georgie Vairo says that after a year clerking for Federal Judge Joseph McLaughlin, she has accepted a position as associate professor of law at Fordham Law School. In addition, she will continue to consult in antitrust cases. All is well with Georgie.

From France, Stephanie Harmon Simonard writes that on March 8, '82, she was elected president of the Association of American Residents Overseas, a civic organization serving Americans in over 25 countries. Her organization was instrumental in obtaining the right for Americans to vote in Federal elections and to transmit their citizenship to their children. Stephanie works to lessen discrimination against Americans abroad.

Kitty Adams writes from D.C. that she has reopened her consulting firm after working for Interior Secretary Watt and EPA Administrator Gorsuch for a year. She also keeps busy by painting with water colors, gardening, party-going and giving, and sailing on the Chesapeake Bay. Speaking of D.C., Martha Holland Irbes spent New Year's Eve there with Charlene Sturbits and Jean Chaloux. She and husband Chris then settled in for a Michigan winter Grosse Pointe style. Martha's daughter Katherine (1) is interested in electronics — she likes to chew electrical cords and put her fingers in wall sockets. Martha returned to corporate law when Katherine was 2 mos. old! Also in Michigan is Emily McNally Brown. Emily has earned her Master's in Literature and won a grant for a Master's in Education. She is currently employed as director of Adult Education at a rural high school. Her husband Jim is with ADP in Ann Arbor. They have two boys, 8 and 2.

Slightly further south in Ohio, Elise Webb Neeland says her family has adjusted well to the move from North Carolina to Zanesville, thanks to a mild winter in the Northeast, but the children Leslie (3) and Elizabeth (2) keep wanting to ride their sled! Husband David is happy with his radiology practice and the fact that they finally sold their North Carolina home after 11 months.

Cecilia Albert still loves the Air Force and L.A., where she will stay until summer of '84. After that, she doesn't know where she'll be.

Pam Drake McCormick, still in the Boston area, says she's been pretty close to home this past year with Tucker (3) and Tim (1). Pam and Gardner are "settling into" the house they bought last year and even attempted a vegetable garden this past summer! They fit in lots of side trips to Maine to visit Pam's brother David and Kathy Walsh Drake, who now have two little girls, Elizabeth and Hadley. How can I mention Boston without mentioning my roomie Dale Shelly? Husband James Graham has started a computer software firm with some fellow MIT grads. Dale says the company is growing by leaps and bounds, but James is putting in 12-hour days, seven days a week. Dale helps out part-time gratis, but says she is feeling the growing pains. She also got to see Cutler Bellows

Crockard last August when Cutler and Doug brought their darling children Bradford (5) and Callie (3) up to Boston for her cousin's wedding Doug is a stock broker with Merrill Lynch in Houston. Cutler is a successful domestic engineer and child psychologist, studying such subjects as why Bradford chopped off Callie's pigtails. Another Houstonian, Nathalie Ryan Hoyt (Bobo), announces that baby number four is due the first of March. I think she may hold the record for our class. Let me know if I'm wrong. Her other children, Mont P. (6), Kathleen (4), and Michael (1½), are in Bobo's words real "ringed-tailed tooters." I think that is Texas talk for a handful. She reports that Daddy Mont has branched out from international law to coaching soccer for Mont P.'s team, which came in 2nd in their division! Margaret Lyle Jones has just moved to Houston where husband Mike is an assistant professor of medicine at U.T. Medical School. She is on the homefront with two little boys and expecting baby #3!

While we are in the South, Susan Levy Jacobs writes from Jackson, MS, that she has been married nine years and has three boys, ages 7, 2, and 1. This brings me to my home town Birmingham, AL. I see all my SBC friends often. Susan Waller Nading had her third beautiful child, William West, on Mar. 25, 1982. Husband Alex is enjoying his urology practice immensely after the first year. He and Susan have just finished completely renovating a beautiful old home which they bought last spring. The living room still has no furniture, but the children prefer it that way, and it's great for big parties. Marion Walker has had an interesting year practicing law. She has been involved in a number of civil rights cases and has been on retainer with a natural gas operating firm. Marion also has taken up white water canoeing which she says is great fun despite the fact she almost killed herself last September by getting in the wrong end of the canoe, hitting a rock, and being forced to swim dangerous falls! Margaret Hayes Brunstad is also here in Birmingham. Her daughter Betsy was born Jan. 29, '82, and has just learned to walk this January. Margaret reports that Ginger Upchurch Collier was expecting her second child in March '83. My big news is that I'm engaged to be married. My fiance, Bill Graham, just happens to work as a vice president for the same bank as Margaret's husband Jim, with offices on the same floor! Susan is planning a trip to Fredericksburg, VA, to visit Ginnie B. Payne Sasser and Flip who proudly announce the birth of their first child, Nancy Blackburn, on Sept. 27, '82. Ginnie B., after running a farm, training horses, and raising cattle, says she never realized how much work one small baby could create. Also in Fredericksburg, Carter Frackelton is still teaching and is, of course, our new fund agent. Carter sends news that Gini Stevens Purcell has had a second little girl.

Kitty Howell Riordan is in Fairfax, VA. Her second son, Michael, was born in January of '82. She is very busy with two boys under 3, but finds time for home-owner's board of directors, classes, and aerobic dance. Mary Phillips Donohoe writes from Alexandria that she and husband Peter had their first child, Peter Phillips, June 28, '82. Mary is now at work for Time Life Books as media manager in their marketing department. Charla Leonard Reynolds and Tom live in Culpeper, VA. Their second child, William Leonard, was born March 15, 1983. From Lynchburg, Ellen Apperson Brown writes that she has a son David, born Nov. 16, '82. Daughter Kate makes sure her little brother doesn't get all the attention. In Virginia Beach, VA, Susan Snodgrass Wynne keeps busy with her three sons, John (7), Lee (4½), and Brad (1½). Dubby is president of broadcasting for Landmark Communications. She and Dubby took a fabulous trip to France for their 10th anniversary.

Last, but by no stretch of the imagination least, Marty Neill Boney says life with the "Bone-people" is hectic and hilarious. Kristen is 4 going on 20 and Andrew is at the age when toilet scuba diving is fun! Marty writes that husband Bill has, as of January 1, decided to go into the private practice of law in Wilmington, NC, by himself. That is an exciting prospect!

The above data proves that we are a prolific, intelligent, and certainly hard working group of women! Thank you all for your wonderful Christmas cards, postcards, and notes!

Secretary

Sally Mott Lawrence (Mrs. Robert F.), 7103 Georgia St., Chevy Chase, MD 20815

Fund Agent

Lochrane Coleman Smith (Mrs. Mell Gage), 2625 Highland Ave., # 611, Birmingham, AL 35205

Teesie Costello writes that she continues to enjoy her work and is doing her duty as an alum helping out an SBC winter-termer working with her at Investors. She has been in touch with Margaret Milnor Mallory who has left the insurance business to join the ranks of Sweet Briar bankers. Margaret has started work at the National Bank of Commerce in Memphis, TN, and will be in business development when she finishes her training program. Peggy Weimer of the banking ranks has been promoted within the Audit Department at the Federal Reserve Bank. She went to Europe in April to see her sister — now attending SBC but spending her junior year at Exeter, England — a place near and dear to my heart. Peggy has also gotten into cuisine art — a pro after Chinese and gourmet cooking classes.

Kelsey Canady Bennett was thrilled to be moving back to Virginia in June after 3½ years in Pittsburgh. Tony will be with Union Camp in Franklin, and Kelsey will continue in her marketing position with AT & T.

Lisa Nelson Robertson has moved from Boston to Virginia Beach, where husband Tim continues his work with the Christian Broadcast Network. She now has a daughter, Laura. Laura and Maria, Sally Old Kitchen's daughter, stroll together often while their mothers marvel at the sight of themselves with strollers, bottles, and babies. Norris Judd Ferguson was married in August 1981 and now lives in San Antonio. She is the newly appointed sole curator of the McNay Art Institute. Ann Kiley was married in February. Ann Stryker Busch was matron of honor. She is practicing law in Norfolk, where her husband Clarke is in the peanut business. Ann Stryker Busch is very busy with her new position as director of sales for the Breckenridge Hotel and Conference Center — even busier putting their home back together after the December flood in Missouri brought 3½ feet of water into their house.

Hilda Dent and her husband Randall are rehabing their new home near the Governor's Mansion in Montgomery. Hilda and Randall have visited us here in Washington a couple of times in the past two years. Randall devotes countless time and energy to his job with the Southern Poverty Law Center, which fights racism in the South. Hilda is planning to start a sewing and embroidery business — an endeavor which I am sure will result in great success.

Mary Woodford writes that she is still with FMC Corporation working as planning manager of the Special Products Group. She was an attendant in Gail Ann Zarwell Winkler's wedding last October. Gail is still with SOHIO but also seems to find time for her Junior League activities. Cynthia Watley Washburn is pursuing her M.B.A. at Emory U. in Atlanta. She works as reading room supervisor in the undergraduate library there.

Kay Ellison Hopkins has "retired" from her position of branch manager and loan officer at the Bank in Wichita Falls. Now with two children, Kay is practicing motherhood full time. She also mentioned that she ran into Tennessee Nielson Indorl at their 10-year high school reunion. Tennessee is still a corporate attorney with Otis Engineering. She and David are looking forward to moving into their new home north of Dallas. Rowena VanTuyt Schubert was married last June to Bill Schubert in Pasadena, CA. She is expecting her first born even as you read — June of 1983. She saw Gina Hoeler Loesch while on a business trip in San Francisco. Reports reaching my ears indicate that Gina had a baby herself in April. Also expecting is Melanie Coyne Cady. Her baby is due in June/July. Melanie continues working as an account executive at Latham, Laird and Kudner Advertising in Chicago.

Bonnie Stout Bestoso was married to yacht charter broker Mark Bestoso in May, 1981. They live in Newport, R.I., where she is working as a sales representative for Investors Diversified Services, a financial planning company. They have a four-month-old daughter, Alexa June. Debbie Mutch Adelson is back in New Jersey after finishing her Master's in historical musicology at Florida State. While she looks for a job in that field, she is working for Honeywell during the day and reporting for a local paper in the evening. Her husband is working in the munitions business, now for the Breed Corporation. Karen Adelson is married to Dr. Lou Strauss, whom many of you may have met at our 5th Class Reunion. While Lou practices medicine at Johns Hopkins, Karen is pursuing energy and environmental consulting. She already has five clients and is doing very well. In her spare time she is doing some public speaking training, specifically to improve her students' handling of controversial issues in the public and the media.

Cyndi Seiler Eister is expecting her first born in July. She is managing the branch office of a plastics business, and Ron has resumed his position as a second year resident after his recovery from an auto accident. Gladys Van Horn has abandoned the paralegal profession and is now in a management training program with a local bank. She sees Libby Stephens Hickey and Debbie Denechaud often and reports that they have one child each — Libby, a boy and Debbie, a girl.

Caroline Bickel McLoughlin was married in June of 1981. She is now tutoring at the Hewitt school in NYC after a long campaign stint for Millicent Fenwick. She visited Meg Shields Duke over Thanksgiving. Meg has flown the Washington coop for the Rockies. Her husband Jamie was transferred within the May Company back to Denver. Meg is dearly missed by her D.C. cohorts, but she reports that she is not only busy as a political activist on the Congressional district level (Republican, Meg) but had her first born in May. Ookie Hayes was also out to visit Meg. Ookie is still at the Smithsonian working on their field guide to North American birds. Watch out Roger Tory Peterson! Laurie Lenkel is attending pharmacy school in New York City and has enjoyed seeing many SBC'ers at alumnae functions in the city. Carol Fiske Platt and husband Tommy ushered in their second little girl in November 1981. Carol is currently doing P.R. work for the Lipton Women's Tennis Association.

Amy Troxell Stein is doing corporate and commercial litigation with Ravin, Davis, and Sweet. After her Superior Court clerkship last summer she got some rest and relaxation golfing and swimming and helping to pay for the Atlantic City casinos with her roulette losses. Sally Schultz has moved to Seattle, WA, to pursue her Master's in business and finance. She is also continuing her work as a writer and marketing consultant. She occasionally sees Ann Hawkins on ski trips. Ann has moved to Portland, OR, to become a producer with Odyssey Productions. They do documentaries, educational films and commercials. They just finished a spot with Loretta Lynn for the National Wildlife Federation. Keep an eye out for it!

Kate Kelly Smith and husband Elliott have left the city and bought a house in Pelham Manor, NY. Kate is publisher of a Fairchild publication, Home Fashions Textiles, which she started from the sales side in 1979.

Laurie Fitzgerald Nowlan, now mother of Patrick Michael, continues coaching high school basketball and tennis but is taking time off from teaching high school English to spend more time with her son. Mary Beth Hamlin has a new career in real estate and enjoys living in Denver. Ookie and I saw her for dinner in D.C. last fall — she looks terrific!

Missy Briscoe McNatt and husband Jim had a boy, Cameron, last June. She is a full-time mother but also has time for aerobic dancing classes in Annapolis. Mary Weston is to be married this September to Rick Streitz. Jane de Butts Kates will be in the wedding. Dede Alexander is still with Mademoiselle magazine, doing color and fabric forecasts as well as designing hand-knit sweaters. She has a quarterhorse mare in foal in Greenwich which is due in May. She is also busy with Junior League in Greenwich. Dede has also found some time for travel — to Martinique, Antigua, Barbados and St. Thomas.

Katy Mikell Cochran was married in September, 1981, to Tom Cochran of Charlotte, N.C. She continues to enjoy her work as a project manager for FN Thompson Inc., a construction company in Charlotte. She saw Laura Lee Bost and Marion Sweeney Lowe over Christmas and reports that both are doing well. Susan Verbridge Paulson and husband Larry are still living in eastern Colorado. Her husband is a minister with the Methodist Church. Their first child arrived in February.

Chris Carr Dykstra had her first baby in February but says it has not kept her out of the research lab. Her research for her dissertation is in full swing, and she anticipates publishing this year. Lisa Schubert is still working for the Museum of Modern Art in New York as product manager, setting up a printing services division. She spent about three weeks in Egypt and Israel last spring. Liz Jenks Coggins has a growing family to report. They have one son, Ames, and expect the second child this September. Becky Burt is living in Houston and working for Variable Annuity Life Insurance Co. Marilyn Moran skis at Killington and ventures to Florida in the spring and continues to enjoy working as a promotion copywriter for Reader's Digest.

Liz Farmer Jenks is working at the Buter Museum in Philadelphia as director of Volunteers and public programs. She and husband Andrew just bought a Victorian townhouse, the renovation of which is their lifetime hobby. Sue Harrier Kelly was married last summer to Timothy Sullivan Kelly. She has been teaching for five years and has a new position at Cincinnati Country Day School teaching second grade. Ainslie Jones was married in February in Brussels, Belgium, to Robert Hart Uhl. They will both receive the M.A. Degree in International Business from the U. of South Carolina this summer and are seeking jobs in this country. Each has had a six-month assignment in Europe — she on the marketing staff of 3-M-Belgium and he in finance and control with Baxter-Travenol.

Catherine Adams Thompson had her second child in March, and while building their family, they are also enlarging their home in The Plains, VA. Susan Ray Karlson and husband Ron are the proud parents of James Henry, born last May. (Recently Susan was able to get her Henry together with Kari Anderson Shipley's Johnny in Delray Beach.) Susan is still working full time as a graphics artist, while husband Ron is involved in marine ecology work. Dede Ryan is still working with KLM Airlines in sales. She likes the work and loves the travel bennies. Her most recent jaunt was to South Africa last fall. Dede writes that Holly Weaver now lives in Houston, and they have been having some good times together. Lochrane Coleman Smith was married last April — in her wedding were Margaret Milnor Malloy, Ann Taylor Quarks and Sallie Hill Bernard Armstrong. Lochrane is executive secretary of the Birmingham debutante club and now enjoys playing matchmaker for the parties. Sallie Hill Bernard Armstrong continues to enjoy her law practice with Vargus and Bartlett while also doing work at the U.S. Bankruptcy Court. She and husband Bob also recently took a little vacation — to the Bob Hope Desert Classic in Los Angeles. Marsha Anne Taylor writes that she received her Ph.D. in Education from the U. of Illinois in October 1982, just a month after she married Larry Delain.

Suella Epple is music director for the Christian Fellowship Church in Columbia, MO. She is teaching music, as well as conducting choir and orchestra. Melanie Holland Rice is enjoying her child Carrington, who was 2 years old in April. She has started the Carrington Co. which makes baby and craft items. Nancy Simonds is working in the dialysis unit of the Children's Medical Center in Dallas as a practicing RN. She has been enjoying backpacking and scuba diving in her spare time and also teaching Sunday School to 5 and 6 year olds. She is planning a medical missionary trip to Honduras this summer.

Kit Newman loves living in Houston. She has been working in retail, but plans to go to cooking school in London, then return to Houston to teach cooking classes and work in a gourmet shop. Kit was selected for a Chamber of Commerce program called "Leadership in Houston" and graduated this past May 1983. She has been working with the Houston Shakespeare Festival and raising money for the Texas Children's Hospital. In Houston she sees Martha French, Jo Ellen Lenoir, Deborah Sharp, Meredit Thompson and occasionally Elizabeth Clarke McReynolds. Jill Sawickie writes that she has received a studio art degree from Depaul U. and is now working for Zolla-Lieberman Gallery part time as well as selling real estate. Christie Mills originally reported to me that her love life was going well and I later learned by phone that she is now engaged. She has also managed to hold a 4.0 in graduate school. She is an art teacher/art therapist at the Kennedy Institute, a school for retarded children here in Washington.

Wendy Bursnall Weston has reported sad news regarding the sudden death of her husband Norman. I am sure the class joins me in offering her the sympathy and support she needs at this time. She has a daughter, Aubrey Kristin, and manages also to juggle work as a paralegal in a Denver law firm. Law school is in the plans for Wendy, when Aubrey is a little older.

Lynn Kahler Berg loves working as associate registrar at the International Exhibitions Foundation. She finishes her thesis in April and also finds time to serve as chairman of SBC's Friends of Art. Tricia Cassidy Higgins is working as administrative aide to N.Y. State Assemblyman John Perone and becoming very involved in Republican politics in Westchester. Her daughter, Katy Cassidy Higgins is four and one-half years old. Husband Tim is with the N.Y. City Police Force while also attending graduate school. They visited John and Kari Andersen Shipley and son John, Jr. in Florida this past spring. Trish reports that they have a gorgeous home in Del Ray Beach and are happy, successful, and looking great. Pam McDonnell Hindsly has recently had a daughter, Ellie, but eventually plans to return to the family business on a part-time basis.

Treacy Markey Shaw is working in the Public Relations Department at Rich's Department Store in Atlanta. Treacy's husband Mark is enrolled in a program at Emory Business School while also continuing work as an assistant V.P. of Citicorp. They are planning a trip to Europe in the fall, courtesy of a junior league prize Treacy won selling advertising for their magazine.

Cheryl Lux married John Richardson Cobb and is now a full time rancher on her husband's family's farm along the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. Cheryl reports that the "last cowboy song" has not been sung!

I, Sally Mott Lawrence, your dutiful class secretary, married Robert Lawrence in September 1982. In our wedding were Treacy Markey Shaw, Megan Morgan, and Cathy Slatinshek. We had a dozen or so SBC'ers at our wedding — a great reunion! Robert graduates in May from Georgetown Law School, where he is on the International Law Review. He plans to begin practicing law in Washington this fall. In January I received a political appointment to the Federal Communications Commission as special assistant to Commissioner Stephen Sharp. We have bought an old Chevy Chase home and have spent a lot of time fixing it up.

than robust. It was in any event a college for women in a day when American society had not yet stepped with full boldness across the threshold of equality of the sexes.

Under the careful leadership of Presidents Benedict and McVea, the college had laid down some foundations and established a certain acceptable reputation. But that reputation was just a little soft, a little too feminine. Miss Glass was working her way to prominence in women's and educational circles nationally and with that personal forward progress she was edging Sweet Briar forward, too. Still, I recall that we were all a bit defensive, always looking for a fancied and unfair categorization as a "finishing school."

I ate at the faculty table in the Refectory (where, by the way, there was always a long minute of enforced silence announced by a gong, while we and the girls stood at our places on the hopeful theory that everyone would say a silent Grace!). I hate to recall how often our table conversation turned on this point of Sweet Briar's weak "image" and what could be done about it. Our favorite proposal was to change the institution's name but, alas, although many names were proposed, none ever won wide acceptance at our table. "Amherst" was, unfortunately, already appropriated by that school up in Massachusetts. So was "Williams." "Fletcher" never found much support among us, while "Daisy College" was all too obviously even worse than Sweet Briar! "Albemarle" won a good deal of favor but we could never figure out how to tie our school in Amherst County with the second county to the north! Of course, nothing was changed by our conversational explorations, and the increasingly solid achievements of the College raised it gradually to the heights of esteem which it enjoys today. That was the only way to resolve the problem anyway.

Memories of the faculty table raise a host of memories and impressions of the faculty generally. Now we really approach first things, the very heart of first things. The most lasting impressions I have of those years half a century ago have to do with the faculty. In this area there is a rich "vintage" harvest.

Bishop Alfred Magill Randolph asked Dr. John M. McBryde and The Rev. Theodore Carson to select a suitable corporate seal, a project which was turned over to Dr. McBryde's son John M. McBryde, Jr. He had already designed a seal for Hollins College and undertook with enthusiasm creating one for Sweet Briar. An unusually beautiful and meaningful design was evolved, uniting an ogive shield — a favored shape for the coat of arms for women and ecclesiasts — devices symbolic of the state, the county, the Fletcher family, and the College. Its designer has described it thus: "The seal consists of the arms of Fletcher and Lord Amherst quartered, with three Tudor roses in chief. As Lord Amherst, from whom the county takes its name, was for some years Governor of Virginia, it seems appropriate that his arms should be quartered on the shield. The Tudor roses symbolize Sweet Briar, although they are not the color of the sweet briar rose, for pink is not a proper heraldic tint. At the same time, though rather remotely, it is true, they might suggest Virginia, through Elizabeth Tudor, the Virgin Queen, from whom our State derives its name."

Dr. McBryde submitted to the board several mottoes, favoring himself "A perfect woman, nobly planned," as "indicative of the aim and policy of the school." The board, however, chose instead the one favored by his son, "Rosam quae meruit ferat" — perhaps with a mind to offering bearers of the seal a chance to savor one of the pleasures of higher education when they read the Latin with understanding.

Myth and Reality

by Elizabeth R. Baer
Assistant Dean

The day after I accepted my position as Assistant Dean of the College at Sweet Briar I started buying books about southern women. For me, this was a logical step in making the intellectual transition from Vermont to Virginia. At Dartmouth College, I had taught several Women's Studies and women's literature courses, including one on New England women's literature. My curiosity about what southern women had written and what had been written about them was a natural outgrowth of the research and teaching I had done.

When, after a year of residence in Virginia, I began work on this lecture, entitled "Southern Women: Myth and Reality," the obvious starting point was Margaret Mitchell's classic Gone With the Wind. I had, of course, seen the film but I had never read the book, and that experience turned out to be a very startling and unexpected one. Yes, Scarlett did have a seventeen inch waist, wore elaborate hooped gowns, flirted with men and lived on a plantation. All of these things fulfilled my notion of what she was going to be like. However, I discovered in reading the novel that she also opened the first women-owned business in Atlanta during the Reconstruction, that she defended her home by cold-bloodedly shooting a Yankee soldier, and that she could add a column of figures faster than any male character in the novel. These aspects of Scarlett I had not expected.

What I gradually came to realize was that, as a Yankee who had recently moved to Virginia, I carried a particular myth of the southern belle. Scarlett turned out to be a somewhat different woman from that myth: she balanced the myth and reality within herself. She had made a conscious decision about how to deal with the pressure exerted on women by antebellum southern society to be beautiful and passive. She conformed outwardly to this image, but inwardly she kept her own counsel, was true to herself. And I feel sure that this accounts for her appeal to women readers: like Jo March in Little Women, she is intelligent, determined, courageous and feisty. One quotation from the novel will demonstrate that Mitchell purposefully establishes the dichotomy between myth, or appearance, and reality:

Ellen and Mammy bent their efforts...to teach her the arts and graces of being attractive to men...She knew how to smile so that her dimples leaped, how to walk pigeon-toed so that her wide hoop skirts swayed entrancingly, how to look up into a man's face and then drop her eyes and bat the lids rapidly so that she seemed a-tremble with gentle emotion. Most of all she learned how to conceal from men a sharp intelligence beneath a face as sweet and bland as a baby's. (pp.61-62) myth of oneself and the reality of oneself is not exclusive to Scarlett O'Hara of Tara but is pervasive in women's literature and, I might add, in women's lives.

Of course, this split between the

As I mused about southern women, so I happened upon a passage in Gone With the Wind in which Scarlett was musing about northern women. Her observation fascinated me as I was beginning to understand that the myth of the southern belle existed largely in opposition to our notions of northern women. Scarlett was sparring with Mammy, who was trying to force-feed her prior to a picnic so she would have a "ladylike appetite" at the barbecue itself. Scarlett, frustrated at the unnatural and nonsensical behavior expected of and exacted from her, blurted out, "I don't think Yankee girls have to act such fools. When we were at Saratoga last year, I noticed plenty of them acting like they had right good sense and in front of men, too'" (p. 82). Horror of horrors; in front of men!

So, Scarlett herself perceived the difference between northern and southern women: she implies that a more unpalatable role is expected of her than of her counterparts in the North. In order to fully understand the myth and reality of southern women, we must look briefly at the stereotypical and characteristic differences in the North and South, in the men of the two regions, and in their ideals of womanhood. Historians and literary critics disagree about the origin of the regional differences in our country. Some of the theories that have been considered include the following: that the various ethnic groups settling each region account for subsequent distinctions; that the guilt some Southerners felt about slavery affected the developing culture; that the primarily agrarian economy of the South and the industrial economy of the North caused diverging evolution in each region; finally some theorize that the very different climates have brought about dissimilar cultures. Perhaps rather than one of these theories being correct, each represents a factor which contributed to regional differences; that the myths of these differences are still cherished I can attest to.

Just what are some of these vaunted contrasts? I am drawing here on the terminology and research of a book entitled Cavalier and Yankee: The Old South and the American National Character written by William R. Taylor and first published in 1961. Taylor postulates that the typical Yankee is puritanical in spirit, inured to physical hardship, self-disciplined, soulless, money-grasping, industrious, hypocritical, and often Philistine. His region of the country has historically been characterized by concentrated population centers, an industrial economy, cultural achievements, and a democratic world view. By contrast, the Cavalier is chivalric in spirit, gay, pleasure-loving, driven by a code of honor which includes gentility, service, and domestic decorum, yet also indulgent, wild, self-destructive, weak, and vacillating. His region of the country has been characterized by money concentrated in the hands of a few, an agrarian economy, an emphasis on polite culture, and an aristocratic world view.

How the southern male conceived of himself, his role, his region, directly influenced how he conceived of the role of women — his mother, his sisters, his wife, his daughters. And complex forces in American society also contributed to the growth of the idealized southern belle image. In the 1830's, when the Industrial Revolution brought sweeping changes to the North and territorial expansion meant radical changes in the West, the South found itself stagnating, perhaps even degenerating. As often happens, an active period of mythmaking — the flowering of the plantation legend — was the response to that fear of decline. Simultaneously, in the 1830's, what historians call the "doctrine of the spheres" was taking hold in both the North and the South. As the Industrial Revolution moved men out of the home and the farm into offices and factories, Americans began to ascribe to a belief (still with us today) that the home is the female sphere — her realm of responsibility and influence — and that the world of commerce is the male sphere.

This article is a brief excerpt from a lecture which was delivered as the keynote address for a library discussion series entitled "Southern Women: Myth and Reality" and sponsored by the Virginia Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy. Versions of the lecture have been presented in Warrenton and Lynchburg, Virginia, and at Sweet Briar for Alumnae Reunion.

These two forces, the belief in the plantation legend and in the doctrine of the spheres, conspired to project women right into the center of the plantation. The woman, the belle, became the pivotal figure in that legend rather than her cavalier/planter/husband. Advice books written for women in the early nineteenth century give us a very clear picture of what was expected of women in their role as mistress. Patience, devotion, unstinting unselfishness, religious fervor, sympathy, charity, tenderness, sexual innocence, obedience, social grace, flawless motherhood, unflinching charm and delicacy were just some of the virtues exacted from women. Women exchanged submissiveness for protection, which is always the primary enticement of a paternal system.

While this exchange is one of many evident similarities between black and white women on the plantation, important differences do need to be pointed out. Black women — then and now — deal with another set of myths. Black women slaves were not expected to aspire to the antebellum ideal of womanhood and perhaps for that they were grateful. Yet, Sojourner Truth, a former slave, spoke an eloquent and now famous plea at a Women's Rights Convention in 1853 for the recognition of Black women as women:

...That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages everywhere. Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or over mud puddles, or gives me any best place, and ain't I a woman? Look at me! Look at my arm! I have plowed and planted and gathered into barns, and no man could head me...and ain't I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man (when I could get it), and bear the lash as well...and ain't I a woman? I have borne 13 children and seen them most all sold off into slavery, and when I cried out with a mother's grief, none but Jesus heard...and ain't I a woman too?

Sojourner Truth at once protests the attitude held by whites and affirms her femininity, demonstrating the double jeopardy of racism and sexism.

Thus, Black women also dealt with the myth-reality dichotomy, but they measured themselves against a different set of myths: The myth of the female slave as a beast of burden, as sexually promiscuous; the pervasive image of the black woman as mammy, as matriarch, as superwoman.

Delineation of the large gap between the myth and the reality of nineteenth century southern women, white and black, prompts the question: how did the women themselves feel about this ideal of perfection to which they were to aspire? For an answer to that question, scholars have turned to journals and diaries kept by these women. Slave narratives — like Linda Brent's Incidents in the Life of a Slave Girl — are another source of information. Ellen Glasgow, a Virginia novelist par excellence, is reported to have once bitterly remarked, "The less a woman knew of life, the better she was supposed to deal with it." Ann Firor Scott, whose book The Southern Lady: From Pedestal to Politics, 1830-1930 I highly recommend, discovered that the biblical verse most often quoted in southern women's journals was this from Jeremiah: "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked: who can know it?" That women should have quoted this particular verse so frequently demonstrates that they, like Scarlett, were conscious of the image, the myth, the façade, and that they despaired of attaining the perfection expected of them by husbands and children. Lucy Breckenridge, a Virginia Girl who kept a journal between 1862-1864 which has just been published by Kent State University Press, confided her ambivalence about wifedom and motherhood in her diary. At times, she felt that her views were so heretical that she would have to burn the diary: "From observation, my theory is that wives generally love their husbands more than their lovers. The wife's love grows, becomes deeper, more patient and fonder than ever the girl's could be, while the husband's almost invariably cools down into a sort of patronizing friendship. If they care for their wives at all, it is only as a sort of servant, a being made to attend to their comforts and to keep the children out of the way."

In conclusion, I want to go back once again to Gone With the Wind. Scarlett is sitting in her husband, Frank Kennedy's, store. She has taken a forbidden look at his accounting books and, as she rocks in the still, warm noon, a consciousness-raising thought occurs to her:

"Why, I could run this store better than [Frank] does! And I could run a mill better than he could, even if I don't know anything about the lumber business!" A startling thought this, that a woman could handle business matters as well as or better than a man, a revolutionary thought to Scarlett who had been reared in the tradition that men were omniscient and women none too bright. Of course, she had discovered that this was not altogether true but the pleasant fiction still stuck in her mind. Never before had she put this remarkable idea into words.

Myth and reality bumped against one another in Scarlett's mind and enabled her to articulate the dichotomy. As for many southern women, the War Between the States had irrevocably changed Scarlett's self-image and in a real sense, had liberated her from her myths. Left unexamined, myths such as those Scarlett labored under are confining, debilitating. Only when we bridge the gap between myth and reality can we, as women, begin to achieve a sense of wholeness, of unification, of our real selves. ■

Virginia's first liberated woman

by Alice Trout Hagan '49

The request of the Editor of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine for me to find out something about the Seal of the Commonwealth of Virginia was a perfectly natural, forthright and simple one. The aforementioned esteemed eminence is not only my first cousin, "once removed," but she is also a removed Virginian. She was moved, I wasn't, and that put the Great Seal in my corner! The whole subject was projected by the fact that one of the "removed" cousins — in the Editor's area, New Jersey — still flies the flag of Virginia in his garden, through which she often strolls.

Last fall, I sent her the first fruits of my research: the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag of Virginia (an obeisance I had never heard, or seen, expressed before) and suggested that she and our kinsmen memorize it and practice its use upon every appropriate occasion. This exercise could occupy their hours and keep their minds on the subject, while I delved into archives. By this time, they must be very proficient in this rhetoric! But, should they ever attempt to come lead their Virginia cousins in such a recital, I'm afraid the Blue Ridge mountains would hear only New Jersey accents wafting in the breeze.

The Seal of Virginia has been misconstrued, misinterpreted, and generally "under fire" since its inception in 1776. At that time, the Virginia Convention declared itself for independence from the Mother country and proceeded to instrument all facets necessary to a new government. A committee, composed of Richard Henry Lee, George Mason, George Wythe and Robert Carter Nicholas, was appointed to design a fitting insignia for this new rule.

Our seal-makers did seem to agree on one idea: that our emblem should in no way smack of British heraldry. Even the suggestions of such luminaries as Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin were unacceptable, as they departed too little from chivalric patterns, with quartered designs in the manner of coats of arms. What could be more noble than Virtue treading on Tyranny? This harking back to Roman mythology might have arisen on account of the neo-classical attitudes of that era. Though the war had not yet begun, great vision and hope were expressed in having VIRTUS portrayed "with head erect, face upward, spear downward, and of a posture indicating conquest completed," emphasized by the slogan SIC SEMPER TYRANNIS, "thus always to tyrants." The obverse side of the medallion would reinforce this thought with the dictum DEUS NOBIS OTIA FACIT, "God has given us this ease."

This verbal concept was presented to, and adopted by, the convention only four days later. However, the first argumentative note had been sounded in committee, when Wythe's desire to have VIRTUS clad in virgin-white robes was overruled by the other members' choice of the garb of an Amazon. The simple sketches used in Polymetis, a prodigious work of the Reverend Joseph Spence of Oxford, were to have been used as artistic models.

By 1778, as the Seal began to take form, any allusions to Polymetis had been forgotten, and the tyrant took shape with an unfortunate resemblance to George III, losing the beauty of the classical reference. At this time also, the obverse motto was changed to Perseverando, perhaps an effort to reconcile the insinuated violent actions of VIRTUS.

The "head erect, face upward, conquest completed" concept was obscured at one point with a design of a belligerent virago, staring face-on at the viewer and whose foot-action was more of stamping than treading. The "ease" of rest suggested in the original description was lost during the era of women's suffrage activity. SHE, VIRTUS, was then portrayed as already having "pinned" HIM, TYRANNY, and proceeding to finish him off with her foot on his throat. Mythology tells that the Amazons removed their right breasts in order to be unencumbered while wielding their weapons — thus VIRTUS's drape — though that of Virginia's VIRTUS has swung from shoulder to shoulder over the years, depending upon the various artists' whims.

Many debasements of the seal have been promulgated during the last two hundred and seven years.

Weakened by the lack of Latin scholars in the last century, the forceful motto has mistakenly been projected into the vernacular as "Get your foot off my neck," and souvenirs have been issued, emblazoned with mottoes pertinent only to the advertiser; e.g. ashtrays in a topless bar bore the words "Virginia's original go-go girl" under a replica of the State Seal.

Perhaps such violent distortions of the original classical derivation prompted a plea in a 1919 issue of Art and Archeology "that VIRTUS have restored to her the air and symbols of finished victory; that TYRANNY be characterized in the abstract; and that Virginia, in her prototype, should wear a white robe as symbolic of every virtue."

In 1930, the Virginia Art Commission undertook to eliminate these amazing fallacies, anachronisms, and variations by introducing the standardized version which is still used. Upon close examination of the portrayal, the presence of an Amazon is clearly indicated, but the current tyrant does seem to be still kicking, perhaps a pose more artistically appealing, but one that somewhat sublimates the intended subjugation. Even gravity seems to have lost its force, as the tyrant's crown seems to have risen from a state of "fallen" to one of "falling" with a slight suggestion of "bouncing," again probably necessitated by an artistic principle, that of balance.

Happily, the ornamental border, originally described in very unspecific language, was appropriately changed to intertwining vines of Virginia Creeper, a form of ivy indigenous to Virginia. And so today, although classical scholars, state historians, ERAers, physicists, pugilists and moralists might still voice disapproval of the seal, at least one great body of Virginians, the botanists, must rejoice at a job well done.

REVERSE

I am writing at a time of year which is marked by lots of traditional observances, when many of us are involved in activities with special meanings — graduations, and hence reunions, weddings, and hence anniversaries, the end of the school year, the beginning of summer, perhaps the beginning of a new life.

We find ourselves each spring celebrating important events in our personal lives, and simultaneously, events which have particular significance for the community in which they took place. These two levels are seen clearly in the traditional observances of an academic institution. The end of the school year is a time when whatever institution can claim us in any capacity will do so; as the parent of a high school senior, as the spouse of a new Ph.D., or as a member of the Great Class of 1952. The institution will call upon us to participate in the ongoing life of the community which it has created. We may be involved in the rite of passage of a young person as he or she receives the diploma which symbolizes a new stage of maturity, but we also participate collectively in "these festival rites" which mark the passing of classes and of student generations. We meet our own old friends at reunions, but we also recreate a community which previously existed within a particular collegiate setting. Perhaps we will make a monetary contribution to our college as the end of the fiscal year draws on, and our gift merged with that of others will, depending upon its size, either symbolically or literally support the institution's future.

The double nature, both personal and communal, of these kinds of observances is part of family traditions too. I recently attended a family anniversary and reunion which helped me to see more clearly just what contributes to the remarkable strength of traditions in our lives as members of a family or of an academic community. In 1908 my grandfather and his brother purchased a farm outside of Boston. This year their descendants celebrated seventy-five years of family involvement with that place where my mother and her sisters grew up and married, and to which they brought their children as I in turn brought mine. My grandson, not yet two years old, accompanied us, representing the fifth generation of those who have inhabited, visited and drawn strength from that place. Our celebration seems to offer some parallels to the celebration with which we honor the Fletcher and Williams families on Founder's Day at Sweet Briar.

My family was invited on its pilgrimage of celebration by a man whose job in the field of international health has taken him to many parts of the world, places where the voice of traditional culture is heard more clearly than in present-day urban America. He has been interested in oral history and has set down the reminiscences of older generations in order to record what would otherwise pass away. He has also nurtured a strong sense of his own family culture, taking his Norwegian wife and their new baby to live in the same house where he and his mother grew up, where our recent celebration took place. Because of this orientation to the past, members of his family sometimes call him an ancestor worshipper, but I hesitate to use that label. I think that he is attending to the past and responding to its voices consistently, where the majority of us, both his family and contemporary society, simply don't hear them over the din and are only occasionally aware of them.

The first thing that our celebration made me aware of was that my ancestors' purchase of a piece of property signified their putting down roots which have sustained their descendants ever since. In acquiring those acres of what was lush farmland in 1908 and is now an agricultural island in a busy suburb, they committed themselves to an investment in the land, an investment beyond money alone. They expanded themselves to make their land productive as they controlled and utilized its fields and pastures, its woodland and streams. When we at Sweet Briar stand on Monument Hill on a golden October day and look out across the acres of the family plantation which became the college, we recall and celebrate the same kind of initial investment in the land, the putting down of roots which continue to nourish us.

The founders of a family or of an institution do more than merely root themselves in the land when they settle in a new location. In a spiritual sense they also make a commitment to community in several ways. They become part of the fabric of the community which they find, joining in the concerns of the people around them, trading locally, establishing relationships. They become good neighbors to those nearby that they may have good neighbors to call upon in their turn. In these ways they are committed to the strengthening of the community where they find themselves. In another sense both my ancestors and the ancestors of Sweet Briar sought to build their own community; to launch a family, a clan or an institution.

Such stories of itinerant young men looking for a place to put down roots may seem to echo fairy tales about the seeking of fortunes, and perhaps it is for that very person that we attend to these stories when the opportunity arises. We set aside special times and places to recall the vision of life which these forebears possessed and to affirm the validity of what they did in their lifetimes. The meaning and value of the community which shares such stories is enhanced by their retelling. The reiteration of both fact and legend surrounding fact, in the lives of our predecessors, helps us to meet the need for belonging which we all share as human beings, and confirms our membership in the community.

In his book The Sacred and the Profane Mircea, Eliade describes the survival of earlier behaviors and attitudes in traditions which link the 'profane' man of today to his past.

"Do what he will, he is an inheritor. He cannot utterly abolish his past, since he is himself the product of his past...he continues to be haunted by the realities that he has refused and denied. To acquire a world of his own, he has desacralized the world in which his ancestors lived; but to do so he has been obliged to adopt the opposite of an earlier type of behavior, and that behavior is still emotionally present to him, in one form or another, ready to be actualized in his deepest being...modern man...still retains a large stock of camouflaged myths and degenerated rituals. ...The festivities that go with the New Year or with taking up residence in a new house...still exhibit the structure of a ritual of renewal. The same phenomenon is observable in the merrymaking that accompanies a marriage or the birth of a child or obtaining a new position."

As an inheritor my consciousness has been raised by these words as well as by the celebration I've been discussing. But I am also aware of more than events — moves, purchases, bequests and such. I am confronted by the character of those who have preceded me, as well as by their deeds. Our recollections in celebration help us to recognize what kind of people our ancestors were.

There is an example of wider applicability than either my own family or Sweet Briar's in the story which we pass on in our observance of Thanksgiving. When we recall the feast shared with the Indian neighbors in celebration of the harvest and of a year's survival in the wilderness, we also recall who those pilgrims were, seekers after freedom to worship, possessed by a vision of the new society which was to be realized in this country.

So at Founder's Day we remember more than events, more than the settling of the founding family on this land, more than their lives and deaths here, but also the significance of those lives and their concerns.

In writing about stages in human life Erik Erikson says

"I have always called the dominant task of adulthood generativity rather than procreativity or productivity, because I did want to allow for a variety of activities other than parenthood or the making of goods or money — activities which are...."generative" because they contribute to the life of the generations."

Elsewhere Erikson further defines this characteristic pursuit in adulthood as,

"the instinctual power behind various forms of selfless caring (which) potentially extends to whatever a man (or woman) generates and leaves behind, creates and produces."

I feel that this analysis aptly describes one of the characteristic traits of the lady we call Miss Indy, and is part of what we celebrate at Founder's Day. Her concern for rising generations of young women, her plans for the future disposition of her property, and the constructive way in which she channelled the memory of the lost Daisy all attest to the generativity of this remarkable woman. We celebrate this characteristic, with her other qualities, as well as the specific act of founding the college.

In the same way, my family recalled in the truest sense the kind of persons my grandfather and great-uncle were. As we gathered in our turn-of-the-century clothes, with the songs of their day in our ears, the oldest grandson spoke out of his own memories of the kindness, strength and generosity of his forebears, indeed, of their generativity. He made these qualities live for us in his impromptu speech, and his recollections of the two men truly recalled them for those who had known them. We experienced this vividly when in the midst of the applause someone cried out, "They hear what you are saying!" The spirits of the ancestors had really been invoked, called forth out of the past and made present in the process of celebration. It was first-hand evidence for me of an age-old human behavior, a ritual which connects the past and the present and unites this world and the other in a way that is restorative to the current community which shares the tradition.

It is that invoked unity, that restored community and that sense of sharing which validate traditions such as Founder's Day as they break into our everyday routines. They are somehow beyond everyday life, and yet part of it, much as we are both individuals and members of a community, both isolated in time and yet part of a continuum. Traditions matter to us because they link us to a reality vaster than all the concerns of our "real" lives and answer our need to feel at home in the universe. If we attend to our traditions and what they say we transcend our current place and time, and experience what Eliade means when he says, "By understanding the symbol we succeed in living in the universal." ■

Daisy... The Town and Country Girl

As we consider symbols, traditions and founders, a fragile figure emerges to cast, perhaps, the longest shadow over Sweet Briar College.

From atop a small grave on Monument Hill, a marble angel gazes serenely down upon the rolling acres and brick buildings that stand as a perpetual memorial to sixteen-year-old Daisy Williams.

Daisy died a hundred years ago, in January of 1884. As Founders go, Daisy certainly wasn't as impressive as her capable mother, Indiana Fletcher Williams, or her father, James Henry Williams, whose business interests extended from Virginia to New York City.

I've been rereading her diary, written during the last years of her short life and published in a small volume on the fiftieth anniversary of her death.

Ann Whitley, curator of Sweet Briar's antiquities, hopes that money may be found, somehow, to reprint Daisy's Diary in 1984. Ann suggests that an appropriate new title might be "The Town and Country Girl"... Daisy was, indeed, happiest at Sweet Briar, but she spent much of her time in New York City; had she lived longer, she would undoubtedly have taken the "grand tour" of Europe as did her mother, Aunt Elizabeth and Uncle Sydney.

When Daisy and her parents were in New York, her life was filled with school, music lessons, shopping, theatre and concerts.

"Mamma bought a nice maroon dress trimmed with plush from the Co-operative Dress Association and some under clothes from Altmans... Papa bought me a nice pair of shoes and india rubbers at Lord and Taylors...went to a matinee at Booths theatre to see Mary Anderson in a play called 'Pygmalion and Galatea' we all enjoyed it very much...Mama and I walked out and went to Macy's and bought a pair of corsets for me the first I ever had they were too large so we changed them for twenty-two inch ones...I walked to Brentano we got a Century Magazine...we went across the street to the Madison Square Theatre to see 'Esmeralda'...we rode up to St. Thomas's church...walked home from church and saw the Vanderbilt houses...walked home down Fifth Avenue...walked out in the afternoon up Broadway."

Daisy goes on, in various diary entries, to describe the cultural and social life she enjoyed in the city..."Patience" at the Standard Theatre, the Italian Opera with Patti in "La Traviata," Barnum's circus (with the chinese dwarf, the zulus, the wild men of Borneo...a drove of nineteen elephants and a little baby elephant), but on March 16, a wistful note enters. The city girl writes, "A letter came from Uncle Sing (Sidney, in Virginia), he says the daffodils and apricots in bloom I wish I was there."

And so in April, the country girl returns to her beloved Sweet Briar where she happily embraces a totally different sort of life, one that she seems to prefer.

"I went to the hen house and found three turkey eggs...I made a loaf of bread, it was pretty good...we planted tomato seed and lettuce seed, the lilacs are in bloom...breakfast at seven o'clock and worked in the flower garden all day...the Lobelia Cardinalis and honey suckle is in bloom...Martha (a house servant) and I set out the roses in the garden...The most beautiful day I most ever saw. The mountains are clear and deep blue and the air is so sweet with the mock orange..Last night a mink killed four setting hens...I went milking at five o'clock we milk four cows Blossom, Clover, Daffodil and Mayflower..." And in a letter to her mother, in May of 1883, Daisy says "Here I am at last at dear old home...I have just come in from a ride on Bounce (her pony) with Papa. We went to Monument Hill which looks very pretty."

A century after Daisy's death, Sweet Briar College has also established itself as a town and country institution. While treasuring the beauty of its rural setting and the intimacy of knowing each member of the community, the community reaches out to the world. Students and faculty members travel and study in cities and foreign countries; speakers, teachers, scholars and students come here from cultures and climes far removed, indeed, from this once isolated spot in the Blue Ridge foothills. Daisy's unfulfilled life has generated a full life for thousands.

While a reprinting of Daisy's Diary is still just a hope, the Alumnae Association voted last spring to support a reprint of "The Story of Sweet Briar College" by Martha Lou Lemmon Stohlman, published originally in 1956 and now unavailable. Copies may be reserved through the Alumnae Office. The Alumnae Association also proposed that a second volume be written, to cover the years since that time. ■

C.G.B.

In some respects the faculty of 1930-1936, the years of my stay at Sweet Briar, was not at all unlike all faculties at all times, everywhere. There were individualists who were "characters," about whom anecdotes and stories gathered. Miss Elizabeth Czarnomska, the Polish-Irish Professor of Religion until the year I arrived, was such a one. There were the articulate, strong-willed ones, who tended to dominate faculty thought and action. There were "parties" and cliques which separated many faculty members in both policy and social life.

Miss Caroline Sparrow, of the History Department, for instance, could not abide Miss Lucy Crawford, of the Philosophy Department, and vice versa, and groups tended to polarize around these two. Miss Sparrow was my Department head and I was very fond of her and often in her company, so I inevitably became a little marked as a member of her party. On the other hand, Mrs. Dora Neill Raymond, of History, was my office mate for several years and she was also a resident of Red Top, Miss Crawford's home, so that I was able to escape being tagged as an extreme partisan, having a foot in both camps!

Perhaps the essence of the faculty of the thirties was a quality common to most faculties of that day — an intense almost possessive loyalty to the College. There were exceptions and, of course, faculty members came and went, but on the whole they were committed to Sweet Briar as their academic and community home. This had been true of faculties before them, but in coming years this institutional devotion was gradually to change into factors of disciplinary devotion and "hot to get ahead" in the academic world.

As I have pointed out earlier, several members of the faculty and staff had been here since the College opened in 1906. One was Dr. Mary Harley, the resident physician and Professor of Hygiene. Dr. Harley, a somewhat untidy-looking and superficially rather rough and gruff person, reigned supreme in her kingdom in the Infirmary (subsequently named for her). Nobody, but nobody, crossed or interfered with

Dr. Harley. Active in spite of a crippling limp, her red hair and rough green cape made her a familiar figure as she clumped forcefully around this campus. Opinions were divided about her abilities as a medical doctor. She was much given to a rather narrow range of favorite treatments, such as impressive neck swathes for any sore throat or respiratory infection. Rare was the class in winter which did not have at least one girl with neck encased in thick, bandage-like wrappings! Behind her gruff exterior there was a warm and interested heart; I well remember her attempts to console me when my father lay gravely, and as it turned out fatally, ill at the

the year I came. During my stay, however, she was an assistant in the library where her head could be seen bent over books and cards, for she was very near-sighted. She and her sister, Miss Mattie Patteson, who had until recently presided with enormous homeyness over the faculty dining room in House No. 1, down the Row, had built a new apartment house on Elijah's Road. Here, in fact, I lived with assorted other faculty members for four years of my Sweet Briar stay. Now known as Patteson House, it was called The Venture in those days and was graced with the quiet but hospitable presence of the two sisters.

Next in seniority, I believe, was Boxwood Inn. Rather curiously, for all her medical imperiousness, Dr. Harley took little part in faculty meetings.

Another survivor of the first faculty was Miss Gay Patteson. Miss Gay was a very quiet, shy, unassuming person, of impeccable Virginia accent, whose black hair belied her advancing years. She had come in 1906 as an instructor in mathematics and had remained in that post until Miss Caroline Sparrow herself. She was definitely one of the "characters," but a really brilliant one. She was known to the students, perhaps inevitably, as "Birdie" Sparrow. This bird-like nomenclature was reinforced by her bird-like speech and actions. She tended to twitter and she hopped about restlessly whether standing still or walking; she seemed physically incapable of motionlessness or of good balance.

Somewhat careless of dress, her hair seemed to be a perpetual problem, at least to the onlooker. Wherever she went, she left a trail of fallen hairpins, with the inevitable result that her coiffure seemed always on the verge of collapse. She loved to tell a story, did it well and had a great fund ready to hand. One of her favorites was the old one about the Sunday visitor in an Episcopal Church who grasped the Rector's hand at the door after the service and gushed: "Oh, Rector, I was never so impressed with the beautiful lethargy of the Church!" A keen observer of human nature for all her appearance of naivete and absent-mindedness, her conversation sparkled with wit, bons mots and razor sharp attacks on people she did not like, uttered in tones dripping with honey. She had no Ph. D. and was not exactly one of the faculty scholars, but the keenness and agility of her mind, joined to her wit, made her classes memorable ones by all accounts, especially English history. To top it all off, she was a Virginian of the old school; "garden" became "gyarden" on her tongue, "guidance" became "gyidance," etc. As an enemy, she was cutting and persistent; as a friend, she was a lively and most stimulating presence, warm and loyal.

Miss Virginia McLaws had been teaching art since 1908. Her father had been a major-general in the Confederate Army, a companion in arms to Lee and Jackson. Miss McLaws was a Georgia gentlewoman whose presence on the Sweet Briar campus lent an aura of antebellum gentility and helped create the strong southern atmosphere which surrounded the institution in those days. She did both portraits and landscapes. One of her portraits, of blond young Cecil Hunt whose family lived over an Old Stage Road, remains vividly in mind. It was a kind of modern Gainsborough's Boy in Blue. Her landscapes, especially her distant views of Sweet Briar and its Blue Ridge backdrop, were popular and undoubtedly some still grace the homes of alumnae of that early period. Miss McLaws had a determined mouth, but was soft-spoken and mostly stayed out of controversies.

Other senior faculty members were Miss Eugenie Morenus, Professor of Mathematics, who had come in 1910, and Professor Hugh Worthington, who had taught modern languages since 1911. Neither was, at least in my day, a particularly colorful individual, though I think both were able. Miss Morenus served for years in the thankless post of Secretary of the Faculty. With a strong face of the New England type (she was, as a matter of fact, from upstate New York), Miss Morenus was direct and rather cheery of speech but could be a very good sport and companion on long walks and picnics. Mr. Worthington, popularly known as "Pop," seemed to the casual observer rather reclusive and I never got to know him very well. He seldom contributed to faculty discussions but would sit there, rocking back and forth on the hind legs of his classroom chair during faculty meetings, tugging endlessly at his short moustache and viewing the proceedings with a detached and quizzical look on his face. He may have been different in earlier years; he had lost his wife, formerly also a faculty member, in a tragic highway accident several years before. In any case, Mr. Worthington carried with him the imprint of the early builders and I am sure it was my loss that I did not know him better.

Miss M. Dee Long was difficult. She was one of the kindest, warmest-hearted people I ever met, outgoing, sunny of disposition, and withal with a mind of wide-ranging interests. She presided over the faculty table in the Refectory, where I had my breakfasts and dinners and sometimes lunches. Her fund of stories, the ready smile that spread repeatedly over her strong-jawed face, her spasms of helpless laughter — these were just what the doctor ordered for good digestifs. She had an apartment on the second floor of Manson, where she often invited tablemates and other faculty friends for after-dinner coffee and good conversation. This was one way I got to see the inside of a dormitory, for males were decidedly off-limits in dormitories in those days. The large copper beech in front of Fletcher honors Dee's memory and very appropriately so, for she was as sturdy and beautiful of character as any beech.

The Chairman of the English Department was Dr. Carl Connor, a Canadian. He was considered by some women as God's gift to women! His bold regular features, merry eyes and shock of wavy black hair were indeed impressive and he had a way of tossing his mane of hair and throwing back his head just before breaking into a loud peal of infectious laughter. He seemed always to be sharing his good humor with the world, but he could be serious and he often spoke effectively on issues before the faculty for discussion. He was influential with Miss Glass and well-liked by everyone. To this day he is remembered by many alumnae as a good teacher. He lived spacioously in a ground-floor apartment at the east end of Sweet Briar House where I remember many a jolly social hour. One memory especially persists, of the evening when Mrs. Pat Campbell, aging but electric, had appeared on the College's lecture program. Carl invited her to his apartment afterwards, along with me and one or two others. I remember her pathetic eagerness to be reassured that she had done well that evening and her insistence on having tea, not only for herself but for her tiny lap dog!

Another and quite different member of the large English Department was Joseph Dexter Bennett. Joe was at that time in his early thirties, I suppose. Fair of hair and blue of eye, he was a tense, keyed up cigarette smoker, ready to go into verbal pyrotechnics over aesthetic and philosophical matters at a moment's notice. A more improbable character, in many ways, I never met. He exuded sophistication — easy, casual sophistication — of dress and manner; also of speech, than which there could not have been a more genteel Oxfordian example. He had a degree from Oxford, in fact, and the English influence had gone deep. The irony of it was that he was a native of Wyoming, where I believe his father was or had been a newspaper publisher. Maybe Wyoming gave him his warm heart and ready sympathy; the English coolness of manner never quite rubbed off on him. His brilliant, penetrating mind and incisive manner must have made his classes a memorable experience. It came as a great shock when some years later he met a tragic death in Chicago.

Bennett was my first office-mate. Mrs. Dora Neill Raymond was the second. She was one of the truly scholarly minds and figures of the faculty. Rather petite, with snapping black eyes, and a style of apparel which was smart and feminine, she taught history. She had come from Texas and she added to the campus a Texas note of individuality, though one which was full of surprises. She was a hard-working scholar whose lectures were alive, thorough-going and fascinating, according to the alumna who is my wife. Mrs. Raymond was not all that gregarious, though always friendly and a good conversationalist. Somehow, she didn't exactly fit into any campus category. She was in a class by herself, mentally and socially. She lived in Miss Crawford's house, worked under Miss Sparrow's chairmanship, but was a person quite apart from either. She was the most remarkable amalgam of keen scholar and fluttery ingenue I ever met. She could sparkle one moment with historical knowledge and insight and relapse into girlish coyness the next. I used to ride horseback with her sometimes, over the back trails. I remember one day when our canter over a pasture scared up a flapping, cawing crow. As we slowed, she turned to me with her little girl look and manner and exclaimed with an air of helpless feminine surprise, "Oh, did you see that little bluebird!" I nearly cracked up. I shall never forget Dora Neill and never cease to admire her.

Another of those whom I never came to know in any really personal way was Dr. Ewing Scott, in Chemistry. He certainly gave the impression of being a person of ability who would have a mastery of his field. He was a Middle Westerner and no bones about it. Precise, detailed, articulate and influential in faculty meetings, he was all business, with very little sense of humor. He was little involved in the social life of the campus, never seen on picnics and not precisely the life of such parties as he and his quiet wife attended.

On the other hand, Dr. Preston Edwards, of the Physics Department, was an amiable, easy-going, warmly-likable Southerner. He and his wife had been missionaries in China at one time. Mrs. Edwards, also a Southerner, will forgive me from heaven for saying that she gave a first and outward impression of being a New Englander, an impression that didn't last long. Dr. Ernest Edwards, who now graces the Biology Department, was a small boy at that time, when the Edwardses built a strangely modern house in the hollow below the present Amherst High School just off Business 29. Dr. Preston Edwards also served as the Sweet Briar postmaster at the time when the post office was in the basement of Fletcher and then when it later moved into the basement of what is now Alumnae House. He was far too relaxed and good-natured ever to have been a controversial figure or involved in any campus clique whatever. The campus somehow seemed more settled and solid for his presence, a presence complementary in some intangible way to that of the great oak at the head of the West Dell.

Miss Jessie Melville Fraser contributed her own unique brand of spice to the campus mix. She taught American History and presided over the dining room for freshmen which then existed in the basement of Reid. I have no doubt that Miss Fraser was a competent teacher, but in spite of long years of research on one Arthur Lee, she seemed scarcely the great scholar. What she was was a lady. She came from the Low Country of South Carolina, from Walterboro, not too far from Charleston, and she had all the airs, manners and accents of that mannered area. She was the gracious South Carolina lady, the grande dame, as it were, of the campus, an impression she sedulously cultivated.

Ever pleasant and a good friend, she was a well-liked "character" without being a scintillating one. Her courtesy was unfailing and irreprouchable. I remember when, years later, my wife and I were returning to Washington from a brief vacation in South Carolina and Georgia. We stopped off at Sweet Briar and had tea with Miss Jessie. We told her with enthusiasm of our glimpse of Old Beaufort, South Carolina, which we ignorantly pronounced "Bofort." "You know," observed Miss Jessie after a polite pause, "we have a curious mispronunciation of that name in South Carolina; we call it 'Bufort'!"

Somewhat at the opposite end of the spectrum was Dr. Joseph Folsom who taught Economics and Sociology when I first came to Sweet Briar. Dr. Folsom's eyes always struck me as slightly wild and more than a little mischievous. He was viewed generally, and especially by the Old Guard of southern ladies, as vaguely reprehensible, irresponsible, unpredictable and untrustworthy. He was the faculty's resident Unconventional Person!

1936

Whether the economics and sociology he taught were standard or Folsom, I do not know, though I always suspected the latter. With averted eye and disapproving tones, one was told that he was guilty of such acts as jumping out from under his bed with a whoop when his wife came into the bedroom, in order to determine her sociological reaction to such surprises! How such choice tidbits became generally known, I was never able to determine.

At any rate, when Joe Folsom left, in 1931, he was replaced by no less than two new faculty members, both bubbling over with enthusiasm and laughter and each destined to become a landmark of the Sweet Briar scene for years to come. They were Miss Belle Boone Beard and Miss Gladys Boone and the shared name of Boone caused some initial confusion. They also shared a house in Amherst for a year but it soon became evident that they had little else in common, for they were very, very different personalities and not really very compatible, as it turned out. However, they added greatly to the tone and character of the campus. Each was bursting with enthusiasm for her subject. Each was avidly ready for a picnic or a hike.

Belle Boone Beard was the sociologist. Through the years, her interest turned more and more to gerontology and she became world-famous for her studies of older people, especially centenarians. She came from near Roanoke and so added another dimension of "Virginianess" to the campus. She retired some years ago and resides in Lynchburg but remains intensely interested and active in the subject of aging and has recently made a major contribution to Lynchburg College, her alma mater, where a Gerontology Center has been established in her name.

Gladys Boone took over in Economics. English born and educated, she made an equal contribution to the tone of the campus, though she never made quite so wide-ranging a reputation in a given field as did her colleague in Sociology. Nevertheless, Miss Boone was a specialist in labor problems and was widely known in that field.

Like so many of her generation, she was intensely interested in the Russian experiment with communism. Never a communist herself, she hoped for great and interesting economic changes to arise out of the Soviet experiment. She travelled to Russia and was, I think, deeply though silently disappointed that her dreams of a better economic world were betrayed by Soviet excesses and failures. With the three or four other foreign-born faculty members and wives, she lingered on for many years after her retirement, in Lynchburg, and died only in 1982.

In that same year, 1931, there came to campus a couple whose presence grew ever more pervasive and welcome. Joseph Barker came to teach French and with him came his popular and outgoing Breton wife, Jeanne. They, too, entered fully into the life of this self-contained community, eagerly joining in recreational activities and throwing open their apartment over the Book Shop (now Alumnae House) each week to students and faculty who came to tea. The students took to them with unusual gusto. Joe was somewhat frail of health but he loved the outdoors and many were the tramps which he and I took through the woods and fields of the plantation and its environs, in sunshine, rain and snow. He was an able teacher and was to become the administrator of the Sweet Briar year in France for the College. He was the acme of common sense and moderation in the counsels of the faculty. He also was the unusual possessor of a Bachelor of Divinity degree from Yale, and so strengthened the spiritual side of things on campus as well.

Among those table-mates whom I came to know especially well was Dr. Adeline Ames. She was a no-nonsense Middle Westerner who headed the Biology Department. In manner and views she was, I would suppose, a bit inclined to be a precursor of the women's libbers of a later time. Sometimes quiet, and probably inherently a bit shy, she could suddenly plunge into a conversation with a fine mixture of humor and deadly blunt attack. I remember once when the table conversation turned to the subject of love (on the initiative of Miss Hilda Harpster, probably with a mischievous desire to goad Miss Ames, her Department Head). "Hmpff," sniffed Miss Ames, dismissing the subject with finality. "love is only a matter of hormones and glandular secretions." When we all burst into unrestrained laughter, she squirmed, smiled and blushed a rosy red, her frequent reaction to her own outspokenness. The little greenhouse, beyond Guion, is named for her although it seems to me a somewhat inadequate tribute to a dedicated and able teacher and a forceful personality.

Miss Miriam Weaver, too, was one of the variegated band who ate in the Refectory. She taught piano and musical appreciation and was an indefatigable practiser. I know, because my room in The Venture was just opposite what was then the Music Building, formerly a World War I YWCA hut, then the Library and now faculty apartments, the versatile little white frame building just out beyond Alumnae House on Elijah's Road. I would hear her runs and her strong playing throughout many an evening. Miss Weaver was loud of speech and given to violently dogmatic and prejudiced views on all manner of subjects. Without any family, she was essentially a very lonely person and I can still hear the vehement tones in which she regularly announced her hatred for the lonely Christmas holidays. She sought escape from loneliness partly in her music; she had a piano in her apartment in Sweet Briar House, and alternated between it and the instrument in the Music Building. She also took refuge during my years and later in the Committee on Lectures and Music, of which she was the Chairman and to whose work she devoted untold hours of effort. The results were a tribute to her dedication and good judgment, for the College's program of lectures and concerts in those years sparkled with great names — Norman Thomas, Myra Hess, Gertrude Stein, Mrs. Pat Campbell, Martha Graham, to name a few.

A faculty member of great charm and matching teaching ability was Miss Ethel Ramage, in English. Of a commanding height, dark eyes which I remember as beautiful, and beautiful wavy black hair, she radiated warm friendliness. Generous, tactful, smooth, impeccably courteous, this Tennessean could be persuasive and persistent in advocating her position. She lived out on Elijah's Road in a house her mother built in 1932 and called "Windy Mead." That's exactly what it was then, but the mead was long ago swallowed up in the forest of trees which Mrs. Ramage lavishly planted. The other member of the family was the younger sister, Miss Sarah Thorpe Ramage ("the red Ramage," for her hair!), who in years to come would join her sister in the English Department. I myself occupied an apartment in the Ramage house during my last two years at Sweet Briar. Miss Ethel, like all the family, was characterized by sound training, wide knowledge and interests, deep conviction and enthusiastic advocacy.

A wholly different person was Alfred Finch, head of the Music Department. Young and full of energy and vivacity, he was given to outbursts of loud laughter. Al brought enormous drive and enthusiasm to his field and to the College. He really put music on the map and under the force of his driving personality the Glee Club and the Choir thrived mightily and put on beautiful concerts, sometimes with the assistance of musical groups from Washington and Lee or elsewhere. I remember I once expressed a desire to Al to cultivate my singing voice. He took me to his studio, made me try a few things, assumed a sad but kindly expression and deftly dismissed me with an indication that I was not made for prominence in vocal music! A born Thespian, he was active in the Little Theatre of Lynchburg, where I played a minor role against his lead in Elmer Rice's "Counsellor-at-Law," in November 1935.

If Miss Lucy Crawford has not been recalled thus far, it is because I scarcely know what to say about one who has so often been written about in later years. One of the natural giants of the faculty, her presence on campus was always felt as a dynamic intellectual force. I never knew her at all well, doubtless to my own great loss. She might well be compared to the E. F. Hutton of these latter day television commercials: "When Lucy Crawford speaks, the world listens!" One felt the force of a very disciplined and ordered mind. If she did not always prevail in argument, she did so more often than not, and only failed when too many other strong personalities united to oppose her. Short of stature but vigorous of movement and penetrating of glance, she moved about campus surrounded by a wide field of intensely forceful vibrations! Cheerful and hospitable, she exerted a tremendous influence on the students, who loved to pop in at "Red Top" on her days "at Home." The Crawford Education Building stands on Elijah's Road as a tangible reminder of her.

Another colleague of direct and forceful personality as well as most attractive charm, was Miss Mary Pearl, of the Classics Department. In her case, too, one felt a great scholarliness and I was told that her classes in Latin language and literature were extremely rewarding. She was a warm friend, in whose farm home in Michigan I once spent a memorable weekend with her welcoming and kindly parents and sister; she in turn visited in my home in Ohio. She was another of the large faculty group who picnicked and hiked together. She had an attractive and strong face and I always told her she bore a remarkable resemblance to Myra Hess. Of boundless good sense and balanced judgment, she of course became Dean of the College in later years and her premature death was a tremendous loss to Sweet Briar.

Miss Marion Benedict, of the Religion Department, was a gentle, cheerful and ever-generous person. Later generations knew her as Marion Rollins after she married the Very Rev. Wallace Rollins, retired Dean of the Virginia Episcopal Seminary, who had preceded her by some years in the Religion Department at Sweet Briar, from 1908 to 1913. Deeply spiritual, Miss Benedict led many a noteworthy Chapel service. "Benny," as she was then known, also played the cello in the Sweet Briar Ensemble, directed at the time by Miss Eugenia Litchfield, a cousin of Alfred Finch. Like Miss Morenus, Miss Benedict was an upstate New Yorker. In the very early thirties, she built the house just beyond Patten House on Elijah's Road. She was full of enthusiasm about people, about ideas, about religion, and about the simple pleasures which so graced life at Sweet Briar in those days.

One could never be unaware of the presence of Mrs. Bernice Lill, the Registrar. She had a profound effect on the development and calibre of the College. Refreshingly breezy, she was also unbelievably efficient, tireless and devoted to the highest standards. Catholic in taste, she rode horseback, gardened avidly, read omnivorously and practiced French conversation endlessly with Madame Cecile Johnson, of the French Department. She had a two-room-and-bath apartment next to mine at The Venture and I used to listen, perforce (for the walls were thin), to the animated conversation carried on in French by Bernice and Cecile through long afternoons or evenings. Sweet Briar had no more dedicated officer and through the years she worked with single-mindedness to increase the numbers of the student body, but above all to increase their quality. She succeeded admirably. For all her seriousness and for all her breeziness, she was kindness itself in a thoughtfully unobtrusive way. I remember the evening my father died in the Boxwood Inn while on his first visit to Sweet Briar. When I finally returned late at night to my room, there was a wonderful and touching bouquet on my table from Bernice Lill, as a silent expression of sympathy.

Looming very large in the picture was Dr. Emily Helen Dutton, Dean of the College. Where people like Miss Morenus and Miss Pearl were obvious exceptions to the southern character of Sweet Briar, Miss Dutton might perhaps be said, not unkindly, to be a glaring exception! She was a New Englander and a graduate of Mount Holyoke, with a doctoral degree from the University of Chicago. By many of the students I fear she was regarded as a cold and rigid disciplinarian. However, under that sometimes remote New England exterior, she was in reality warm-hearted and sympathetically interested in people. She was a stickler for whatever rules were in force but was concerned that they be the right rules. I sensed that she had two overriding goals. One was to set and keep a high moral and spiritual tone for the students, this in a day, of course, when faculties still felt some concern and responsibility for the moral welfare as well as the minds of their student bodies. Her other goal was certainly to lift ever higher the academic standards and standing of Sweet Briar. She was, like Miss Glass, a classicist, and also like Miss Glass, she was a gracious woman in her own different sectional way. Yet the two women conveyed totally different impressions. Miss Dutton broke out of her seriousness less readily, and she worried more, and more openly. She had dignity but lacked the regally grand manner of Miss Glass. The two administrators complemented each other very well. Recognizing this, each respected, supported and leaned on the other. No light socializer, Miss Dutton nevertheless could be good company at social gatherings and she had a mind that compelled respect. Her seventeen years as Dean were a good period for Sweet Briar.

One's thoughts progress naturally from Emily Helen Dutton to Meta Glass. She was the keystone that held all these other disparate elements together in a working whole and gave increasing form and vitality to Sweet Briar. Miss Glass was the half-sister of United States Senator Carter Glass and of Lynchburg Superintendent of Schools E.C. Glass, as well as the sister of Mrs. Marion Banister, Treasurer of the United States. She shared the family's overwhelming measure of exceptional ability. She used Carter Glass to Sweet Briar's benefit; she never used him in the slightest to her own. Formative years never stop, but if they did one would be tempted to say that Miss Glass' 21-year tenure as President rounded out the formative years. So much has been written about her that there is little point here to anything except a few strictly personal impressions.

First and foremost, Miss Glass had a commanding presence compounded of personal charm, a sangfroid and poise which enabled her to meet any situation with dignity and calm directness, obvious intellectual superiority (somewhat attested by a doctorate in classics from Columbia), as well as a cold authority on occasion which could quell any incipient rebellion or impertinence of manner. At table in Sweet Briar House, she presided regally and with graceful control over the conversation. In faculty meetings, she presided with patience and skill, not suffering bores or fractious quarrelers gladly but shutting them off with tactful finality and guiding discussion constructively. On public occasions, she presided with consummate dignity and good humor, calmly unfazed by any unexpected contretemps. She had a temper (along with her red hair) which she mostly controlled, though woe be to her opponent when she did let fly! There was some building during her administration, both of physical plant and of endowment, but mostly she built up the faculty, the curriculum and Sweet Briar's standing. In later years, I had the privilege of serving closely under Secretary of State Dean Acheson and it only now occurs to me to realize that Dean Acheson and Meta Glass shared many qualities — gentility, keenness of mind, skillful diplomatic finesse, gracious charm, and the ability to hide an iron hand under a smooth kid glove. Both contributed hugely to my own education and growth.

To think of Meta Glass inevitably causes one to think of Lois Ballenger. Lois was the Cerberus who guarded the outer precincts of the President's office, and guard she did! She had come to Sweet Briar sometime in the twenties and she served successive Presidents right down to and including Mrs. Pannell. She was an invaluable aid to Miss Glass in my day. Lois knew everything and she knew everybody. In saying that, I am keenly aware that she will be reading these lines and will spot all sorts of inaccuracies and some judgements that probably do not coincide with hers. She will shake her head and occasionally mutter quite audibly in disapproval! I'll have to risk that, but at least I hope she will agree that she was invaluable! She guarded and protected Miss Glass against people and against interruptions. The President leaned on Lois, trusted her, relied on her for the efficient running of her office. Outside the office, about which she never betrayed a confidence, Lois was a vigorous individualist, smoked a pipe, gardened, rode horseback and joined with zest and her own likable noisy chatter in a multitude of outdoor community recreational activities. Today she lives in Lynchburg, still tends a garden, attends events at Sweet Briar and seems indestructible. I understand she is working on a book about the Revis family, of St. Angelo. Lois Ballenger knows more about Sweet Briar's history and past personnel than anyone living — and maybe anyone dead!

The rolls of memory seem endless and still there are so many I have not mentioned, all of whom contributed in their different ways to the community and college that were Sweet Briar in the thirties. They boxed the compass in type. Salvatore Mangiafico taught Spanish and with his Sicilian-born wife gave a volatile and exotic Latin touch to the scene. So did Madame Cecile Johnson, petite, totally Gallic of air and face, an effervescent conversationalist. Gallicism of a different sort was present also in Miss Maria Boudreaux, a more reserved Louisianian. Miss Minna Reynolds taught English and was so quiet a representative of Southern gentility that I hardly knew her, save for courteous greetings now and then. Cameron King was one of the transients but in his brief stay he brought drama to life. Miss Johanne Stochholm was uncompromisingly and solidly Scandinavian, her tongue giving forth perfect English in the accents of her native Denmark; blunt and forceful, she was by all accounts a good and scholarly teacher of English literature.

Mrs. Bertha Wailes, an early alumna, Swiss-born, taught first German and then Sociology, with her gently, slightly high-pitched and ever so slightly accented voice. Dr. Florence Hague, deceased only in 1982, taught zoology with patient skill during the day and then tended to retreat into her family circle of mother and sister at The Venture. Hilda Harpster, a recent alumna, was decorative, full of merriment and a bit iconoclastic; she assisted in Biology and went on soon after to a long teaching career at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Miss Doris Lomer, a Canadian, ran the Library with smoothness and control. Miss Florence Robinson taught Latin and later Art and was an outgoing member of the community; I remember climbing the Peaks of Otter with a group which included her and Miss Morenus. Miss Harriet Rogers, now commemorated in the Riding Center, was the extrovert, assertive drill-master of the College, a tireless horsewoman from Kentucky and director of the Physical Education program.

Mr. William Bland Dew and his family were cherished fixtures of the Sweet Briar scene from the opening of the College through many decades. He had come as Business Manager and Treasurer. Mrs. Dew was the sister of Mr. Manson, a long-time Overseer and Director. The Dews were characterized by charm, gregariousness, wit, kindness and typical Virginia hospitality. Mr. Dew is commemorated by the dormitory named for him. Miss Helen Mull, of Pennsylvania extraction, taught Psychology quietly but authoritatively; she was a gentlewoman who had restrained "class" in dress and demeanor. She also had means, and built the beautiful residence that is now the Dean's house. Dr. Gertrude Malz assisted in Greek and Latin; she sometimes looked slightly perplexed but was on the contrary very self-assured. Miss Irene Huber was the rather eccentric German-Swiss whose somewhat loud and aggressive manner did not always win friends or influence people. Miss Willa Young came the same year I did, to be what was in effect the College's first Dean of Students, a difficult task she carried on with unflinching good humor and kindness. Lelia Graham Marsh guarded the Dean's office with the same zeal as Lois Ballenger displayed across the hall. Nora Staael in Physical Education was the hearty athletic type with whom I once did a dance with veils in a faculty skit which brought down the house.

The list is long and even so, many have been omitted: Nancy Cole in Mathematics, Elizabeth Adams in Chemistry, Helen Whetstone in Physical Education, Nancy Faulkner briefly in History, later to become a recognized author of children's books, Elizabeth Möller in Psychology, Ernest Zechiel, Reginald Martin and Beatrice Wainwright in Music, Josephine de Boer in Modern Languages, Lois Wilcox in Art, Helen Fogg and Mildred Bard in Physical Education, Ethel Moody in Mathematics, Gertrude Grether briefly in Classics, Thomas Downs briefly in Mathematics, and still others, all contributed their bit to the Sweet Briar of that distant day.

I was young, of course, and I had no experience against which to measure this faculty in which I found myself a minor if eager member. It seemed then a fascinating and rich amalgam of personalities and across the years of memories it still comes through that way. There was plenty of scholarliness to make life responsible and demanding. There were enough "characters" to make it exciting and enjoyable. There was a wide variety of sectional differences and of interests and points of view to make life stimulating. There was no uniformity but there was attachment to the institution and its development to create unity and cohesion.

In short, there were combined in the faculty of the early thirties the essential ingredients of wide-ranging talent, intensely piquant personalities, and a dedicated and unifying force which shaped and dominated much more than the mere academic life of this isolated college community. I thought, and think, it was a rather remarkable group and that Sweet Briar is the better today for the efforts and devotion of that faculty of fifty years ago.

Prothro Commons Houses Symbolic Banners

by Diana Crandall '84

While dining in Prothro Commons one can admire the many attractive works of art displayed there. There are, however, some works that have more significance than being simply decorative. The three large banners that hang in the middle of the dining hall display symbols of the many rich traditions of Sweet Briar College.

The banners were initially displayed in the old Refectory in the late sixties when Ann Gary Pannell was president of the College. They were designed by a couple in Washington, D.C., and fabricated out of eye-catching, multicolored felt by Richard Hyman of Baltimore, Maryland. Each cost in the neighborhood of $900. When Prothro Commons was completed, the three symbolic banners were removed, cleaned, restored to good condition, and suspended from the ceiling of the new dining hall.

The banner on the left contains ten Sweet Briar roses. Inside each rose is a symbol. From top to bottom are: a symbol of Daisy's harp, the senior steps, junior bench, sophomore wall, and the freshman hitching post. The second row from top to bottom contains symbols of the bird sanctuary, graduating seniors, the Sweet Briar seal, the arcade, and a Sweet Briar diploma, again each inside a Sweet Briar rose.

The center banner symbolizes spring term at S.B.C. with its green trees and birds. Sweet Briar House is included among the mountains that surround our campus. At the bottom of the banner are three graduating seniors — they are not milk cans from the dairy as some have mistaken them.

Fall term is the theme of the banner on the right side. Mountains are placed behind Sweet Briar's chapel. At the bottom of the hanging are five representatives of the five areas of learning at S.B.C. The ink bottle and quill pen denote literature and writing; the palette represents the arts; music is symbolized by the note at lower left; the atom and flask in the center represent the sciences and finally, at the bottom right, is the laureate crown of the Olympic Greek Games, a symbol of athletic championship and of Sweet Briar's extensive physical education program.

When Winifred Walker died on November 2, 1982, at the age of 96, it was the first time in almost three quarters of a century that at least one member of the Walker family was not exercising a significant influence on Sweet Briar. Realizing how many students and faculty of all ages have come under this influence, Gertrude Dally Massie '22 sent a generous gift to the Alumnae Office suggesting the possibility of creating a Walker Family Award to commemorate the spirit of that family. Carolyn Martindale Blouin '30, whose life on campus spanned not only her four college years but much of her childhood, sent a letter to a number of alumnae and faculty friends whose names were found in the Walker Guest Book. Helen MacMahon '23 added a few more names. Response was so immediate and enthusiastic that it became evident that far more than the guest book entries would like to be reminded of what the Walker family had meant to the College in order that they might participate. In order to acquaint those who did not have the opportunity to know any of them directly, it is my happy privilege to share some of the episodes told so graphically on tapes in 1954 when Laura Buckham, Martha von Briesen, and G. Noble Gilpin sat Miss Ruby and Miss Winnie down before a tape recorder to catch some of their recollections.

It was in 1883 that Dr. William Ernest Walker, then 34 and the father of six, was told by his doctor that he would be a complete invalid in two years if he continued to live in England. Already, he couldn't raise his arms or tie his shoes.

Dr. Walker began doing research toward a solution. He learned that the Canadian Pacific Railroad was opening up Western Canada by giving grants of land in Manitoba, so that's where he decided to go.

He went ahead to prepare a place for his wife, with whom he had eloped when she was 15, their six young children, and Auntie Kitty, who had already taken up permanent abode with them on account of her gratitude to Dr. Walker for curing her of a painful back ailment. Little did he know he was headed to a wild country where the wolves would steal his boots from under the axle of the covered wagon in which he made the last lap of his journey to stake his claim. So excited was he to be on his own land, he unpacked his clarinet and played until his campsite was ringed with wolves, and he had to keep a fire burning all night to save his life. A dug-out in the side of a hill was the best he could do for a home until a log cabin was completed in three months (August), but the Walkers were not to be kept apart.

Bright red tam o'shanters knitted in a hurry kept the six young children quickly identifiable for the trip across, and Dr. Walker met every train for a week until they finally got to him.

Their life-style, which eventually would emerge as that of precise gentlemen and tea-sipping ladies in lace caps, was anything but comfortable, safe and tranquil. There was constant fear of Indians, wild animals and weather. On one occasion, Dr. Walker came across a small group of Indians stunned by lightning. He was able to revive all but one, which gained him a helpful reputation among the Indians as a magician. They thought he had raised them from the dead. The temperature went down to 60 below zero in the winter and up to 108 degrees in summer; the weather was seldom kind. Mosquitoes descended like a black cloud for three weeks in summer, and the cows, desperate for relief, crowded around the fires until one could smell flesh burning.

Everything the family wore had to be made from material sent from England or pelts which they prepared themselves. Everything they ate had to be fetched from seventy-five miles away or cooked "from scratch," as they say. All their entertainment and instruction came from within the home. The English grandfather sent them a knitting machine which stayed busy all the time.

Three more children, Winnie, Ted and Prairie Violet, were added to the family in Canada, providing a household of an even dozen — enough for a complete small orchestra, a baseball team or a work force, whichever the situation demanded. Their father approved highly of games and exercise, but dancing as such was forbidden, and as they grew older, he was careful to ward off any activity leading in that direction! He told them he would buy the instrument of their choice if they promised to practice a half hour every day.

Ruby tells that she was always the tomboy and would do anything to qualify to go out on adventures with Ernest. Just like Heidi and her goats, Ruby and Ernest took the cows high up in the hills to graze.

They would go back for them before dark. One day they were having difficulty locating them and Ernest persuaded her to take a short cut over the railroad viaduct, which was about 200 ft. above ground in the middle. She was fearful, but dared not admit it to her brother, so they started out. Yes, you guessed it! Right in the middle they heard the train coming. There was nothing to do but climb down and hang under the tracks until the train passed over. They were scared out of their wits, as was the engineer when he saw them and couldn't stop until he had reached the other side. He came walking back, but they were so sure he would put them in jail they lit out and never stopped until they were well into the woods. They ended that trip in the dark, each holding on to the other with one hand and a cow's tail with the other!! Ruby said they never told their father because that would have put an end to adventuring with Ernest.

Dr. Walker, trained as a chemist and company physician for the Sullivan Co. in Widnes, England, had already been forced to learn veterinary medicine and whatever he could in that unpredictable life they were leading. He once treated a neighbor's cow with a bad sore throat and came to the realization that it had diphtheria. He brought the germ home to seven of his children, and before the quarantine was lifted from that, a nurse just off a case of scarlet fever came to see them, and eight of them caught that! Ruby said nobody left the crowded cabin for four solid months!

By that time Mrs. Walker's health was in greater jeopardy than Dr. Walker's had been when they left England in the first place, so it was time for him to start dreaming for a better solution again. This time his ideas of a more desirable climate pointed to Florida and before much time had passed he had contracted to rent a six-bedroom furnished house in Poloma, Fla. for only $15 a month. Of course, it sounded much too good to be true, but they packed up their instruments and their furniture in a damagingly-wide railroad car. All the family, dressed in matching blue serge suits, left Canada in twenty-degree weather and rode a train from Monday to Saturday. They arrived in Florida in 90-degree weather only to find that their landlady was far past the stage of reliability. She had described one house, located a second and priced a third. Nothing was suitable and their situation, being dressed in wool all week without even a bed to sleep in, was desperate. But there was always a savior in their lives. This time it was a wealthy widow, Mrs. Huntington, who was happy to provide a better place not far away in a town named for her family. She became their unofficial grandmother for many years! They lived there for thirteen years and did what they could to make a good life for themselves and those around them. No fencing was required for cattle and hogs, which made a very bad situation. Razor-back hogs got into everybody's gardens and ruined all produce, infested the houses with fleas and caused hard feelings if property owners did anything to protect themselves against them. Dr. Walker worked hard to have a state law passed requiring fencing for hogs and cattle but only succeeded in having his own barn burned. Florida was as hot as Manitoba was cold, so the in-between quality of Virginia began to creep into Dr. Walker's consciousness. Will, the oldest son, was in England and got instructions from his father to stop on his way home to see what was available when the train passed through Lynchburg. He had seen beautiful trees from the train window as he approached. When he inquired and found that Mt. San Angelo was for sale, he wired his father, who came to have a look, and the sale was consummated in September, 1908. The soonest they could take over was in April, 1909, when Mother, Father, Lily and Will came. When the rest of the family arrived in June 1909, there were about 100 pretty girls, Ruby says, all around the Sweet Briar station, leaving to go home for the summer.

From the outset, the Walkers were delighted to become involved in the life of the college. Dr. Walker went out of his way to be friendly with every girl he met on campus and invited them to come to see them at Mt. San Angelo. Dr. Mary Harley, the resident physician 1906-1935, was their first visitor. She walked over with her lantern and kept it handy for that purpose for years to come. The Walkers' hospitality was accepted so enthusiastically that they soon organized it to have students on Mondays and Fridays and faculty on Thursdays. Students came in groups of about thirty at a time and had to be back on campus by six o'clock. They had cut a path down the hill, over the fence, and up to the big white house.

Often it was a mad scramble to interrupt one of Dr. Walker's ghost stories and fall over the fence on the campus side on time. When special permissions were given for staying after dark, the girls were often accompanied by a marching band. Miss Ruby tells about her father with his clarinet, Will with the drum and Ted with the cymbals escorting the crowd to and from the Thanksgiving bonfires. The first one made such a dramatic sight that fire engines were sent from Lynchburg. (No fluorescent signs to dilute the view on Route 29 in those days!)

In time every member of the family, except those who ran off to marry, played a significant role. Dr. Will, the eldest, who took over as head of the house when his father died in 1920, became a veterinarian and exhibited his blooded cattle with great pride. Ted ran a taxi service for the college with a classy flare and later married the manager of the Boxwood Inn. Ruby started with a tea shop in Garden Cottage and then became manager of the Book Shop for twenty years. She was awarded The Algernon Sydney Sullivan Award in recognition of her high spiritual qualities. Miss Glass, in making this award in October 1934, quoted a student as saying that the best cure for selfishness and discontent was to work in the Bookshop. Miss Winnie, after seventeen years in England, returned to Sweet Briar and worked in the Bookshop from 1933 to 1967. The family had sold Mt. San Angelo in 1928 and moved to a more modest home on the opposite side of Route 29. Many years later when the family had dwindled to Miss Winnie and Miss Ruby, they were able to continue the traditional hospitality in a small cottage on Dairy Road.

The only member of the family Sweet Briar can claim as an alumna is the daughter of May, Kathleen Ward Allen '40, whose husband has retired from Syracuse University. They live now in Green Valley, Arizona. Elizabeth Sprague, retired Professor of Biology, has visited the Walker relatives in New Zealand, where Prairie Violet went to live after her elopement.

Few survive who knew all the Walkers, and yet most of us have known some of them and felt the impact of that cheerful, positive and loving spirit with which they were all imbued. Miss Ruby's and Miss Winnie's tapes are a monument to that. They will be permanently stored in the Sweet Briar Museum.

Dr. Walker, having been threatened with complete invalidism at 34, never stopped looking for possible alternatives to solve different problems, and his wife Mary, only 15 when they eloped, followed him apparently unquestioningly across the ocean, from the frozen north to the scorching south, and settled in between to provide a happy life for their nine children and their neighbors. Not exactly a liberated woman by today's standards, but don't forget! She had Aunt Kitty!

The Walker Award will honor a student who exemplifies those qualities so prevalent in the Walker family — the positive, joyous, hopeful, loving, modest and selfless qualities found in abundance in each member of the family who lived for so many good years in our midst. To those who have already responded to Carolyn Blouin's letter, our sincerest gratitude, and to those who are glad to be reminded of the Walker legacy and like the idea of encouraging these traits in Sweet Briar students, a gift may be made to Sweet Briar College for the Walker Family Award, Box BB, Sweet Briar, Virginia 24595. ■

Milan Hapala

Martha Lucas Pate served as the fourth president of Sweet Briar College during a relatively brief but influential term of office from 1946 to 1950. She was born in Louisville, Kentucky. A graduate with honors from Goucher College, she received a master's degree in Philosophy from George Washington University and a Ph.D. in Philosophy from the University of London. Before coming to Sweet Briar she had been associate dean of Radcliffe College and dean of students at Westhampton College of the University of Richmond where she also taught philosophy and religion. After leaving Sweet Briar she was active in organizations devoted to education, welfare, religion, and international affairs such as the Foreign Policy Association, the United Negro College Fund, the Council on Religion and International Affairs, the Fund for Theological Education, the Institute for International Education, the Fund for Peace, the New York Medical College and Columbia University's School of Social Work. She was a member of the French Legion of Honor.

In 1975 she received the International Women's Year Award in recognition of her service in international education and, in 1981, she was awarded by Georgetown University the Patrick Healy Award named for the first black American to earn a doctorate. She was the widow of Maurice Pate, the first executive director of UNICEF, the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, whom she married in 1961.

She died at Memorial Sloan Kettering Hospital in New York on May 16 after a brief illness.

Martha Lucas as she was known to us then came to Sweet Briar with a vision of education for peace and international understanding. She believed that "the liberal colleges of this country must take their full share of responsibility in developing moral leadership which will be competent to deal with the searching and far reaching problems" of the post-World War II era. She thought globally, but she imbedded her ideas locally in the curriculum and the community life of Sweet Briar.

As a graduate student in Europe, she realized that one of the best ways to promote international understanding was through exchanges of students and teachers between the nations of the world. Two years after she became president she announced the establishment of the Sweet Briar Junior Year in France. Today Sweet Briar's Junior Year in France is in its thirty-fifth year and is highly valued for its excellent academic program and for the promotion of international understanding. Martha Lucas brought to Sweet Briar many scholars whose original homes were in foreign countries and who shared with students first-hand information about other countries and peoples. She introduced Russian and Near Eastern Studies to emphasize the importance of area and intercultural programs in undergraduate colleges. She raised funds for the "Nan and Nancy Askew Scholarship" that brought to Sweet Briar students from China, Vietnam and other Asian countries. Her leadership in international education was recognized in 1948 when she was chosen as one of the official delegates from the United States to the International Universities Conference in Utrecht, Holland, and again in 1949 when she served as one of the five delegates to the General Conference of UNESCO in Paris. She was particularly proud of her membership in the National Selection Committee for Fulbright Scholarships that enabled young scholars to study abroad.

During the years of her administration academic reforms were undertaken that strengthened Sweet Briar's academic standing and reputation as a leader in women's education. In 1948 Sweet Briar became the first college in the South to require the full series of College Board Tests of admission. In the same year, comprehensive examinations for seniors as requirements for graduation were extended to all departments offering majors. And in 1949 the granting of a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa brought national recognition of the excellence of the academic program to Sweet Briar.

Martha Lucas believed that a well planned curriculum for world citizenship had to be supported by "a true laboratory of democracy with every group (students, staff, faculty, alumnae and trustees) working democratically for the whole." She organized a Joint Council to give opportunity to students, alumnae, faculty, administrators, and trustees to discuss frankly and fully issues of interest to the entire college community. She kept reminding students as members of the college community to contribute to the solution of common problems "to the best of their energy, training and liberal-mindedness." She hailed the Joint Council as a "new development in democratic deliberations in the undergraduate college." She appealed to alumnae to "re-think Sweet Briar's course of study and re-evaluate the entire college program." She wanted to create at Sweet Briar an intellectual community of debate and discussion. She brought to Sweet Briar many distinguished scholars, ministers, and political leaders whom she called extracurricular teachers to enliven the intellectual climate. She participated with enthusiasm in the intellectual life of the College by giving addresses and debating vigorously with visiting speakers and college faculty.

The leadership of Martha Lucas produced four years of vigor and vitality at Sweet Briar and a sense of being involved in building a community of thoughtful and responsible members aware of world interdependence. Martha Lucas was far ahead of her times in her vision for Sweet Briar, and she practiced what she preached. She was the first to entertain a black college guest in the college refectory. She disliked formality and ceremonies. She greeted newcomers by announcing, "I am Martha Lucas and I work here," and followed the introduction by challenging the newly arrived freshman or faculty member to join in a common enterprise to serve humanity. She reminded all of us that "thoughtful and ethical life can survive only if enough humans think profoundly and act courageously."

Martha Lucas has implemented her thoughtfulness, vitality, courage and her idea of education for international understanding and peace in Sweet Briar for the inspiration of many generations to come. ■

Dean Fontaine Belford's comments at Martha Lucas Pate's Funeral May 18, 1983

At an immense party at the Sweet Briar Board meeting last fall, nowhere near long enough ago, I became aware of the fact that someone was staring at me. I turned around to see who it was and was confronted with the most extraordinarily penetrating blue eyes I had ever seen. "Don't worry," their owner said. "I know who you are and I know what you mean and we are going to be very good friends. Call me."

With that she disappeared into the crowd. "Who on earth was that?" I asked the nearest bystander.

"Oh, that was Martha Lucas Pate. She's like that."

I did call. She was right. We did know each other and what each other meant. Somehow, it was as though we always had.

Now I do not know what Martha Lucas Pate meant by dying. It did not seem to me to be anything she had in mind. But I do know that in the ways which mattered to her, it doesn't finally matter that she died now instead of then.

I will miss, of course, her joy — in ducks, in schemes, in breakfast, in good Kentucky bourbon and in low jokes and high conversations, in us — in everyone who loved her.

We spoke once of Catullus who said that it is not deeds but the teaching of deeds that matters.

What her deeds teach us is that it is the life we live, which is collectively everlasting, which endures, which sustains. For life is love, work, faith, hope; Life is Spirit.

"Light breaks wherever sun shines. Wherever sea flows the waters of the heart push with the tides."

Martha. Holy Mysteries, Amen.

Maxine Garner: Honorary Member of the Class of '83

by
Lisa Wood Hancock '63

When I registered for my freshman classes twenty-four years ago I had room for one elective. Since like many "good" Episcopalians I had never read the Bible, I chose what was then called baby religion. That began a four year experience with one of Sweet Briar's finest professors: Maxine Garner. Happily for me the four years stretched on and I have known her for the twenty years since we graduated.

What can one say to or about a Maxine Garner in an attempt to convey what she has meant to Sweet Briar? The educational facts are these: She graduated from the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina, earned her Masters at Union Theological Seminary and her Ph.D. from the University of Aberdeen in Scotland. But that does not tell the whole story. Awards and honors go along.

She was a Phi Beta Kappa graduate from college and a Fulbright Scholar at the University of Aberdeen. She was a fellow of the American Institute of Indian Studies in Poona, India in 1962. A second Fulbright took her back to India in 1977. She was the Wallace E. Rollins Professor of Religion and is now Professor Emeritus. And as of Commencement last May Maxine Garner is an honorary member of the Class of 1983 — an accolade accorded very few faculty members over the years.

In addition to teaching religion at Sweet Briar she also served as a Resident Counselor in the dorms her entire tenure. Imagine the patience, flexibility and sense of humor it has taken to hold that job during the changing times and changing social rules of the last twenty-five years! Life cannot always have been very peaceful for her. Her sense of humor may have been her saving grace. It has also graced this campus and all who know her have their favorite memories of her wit. She has enlivened many faculty shows — including one famous role as an astro-nymph. She brightened the no longer existant faculty table in the old Refectory for many years. She added wisdom and balance to virtually every faculty committee. She served as faculty secretary with unprecedented skill. She never failed to greet with cheer any member of the Sweet Briar community — student, faculty, or staff member.

At the Alumnae College session on the last day of Reunion this year she spoke on the topic "Don't Sweat the Small Stuff." Fortunately for me and for all her former students, she taught us TO sweat the small and the big stuff — and we are indebted to her for sharing her wisdom, her wit, and her love with all of us.

Ed. note: Because of a last minute change of plans of Miss Garner's replacement, she has returned to SBC as "Professor Resurrectus" for 1983-84.

If it weren't for Kay Macdonald

by
Nancy Godwin Baldwin '57

Kay Macdonald earned her undergraduate diploma from the Bouve-Boston School of Physical Education in 1943, the BS from Tufts College in 1944 and the MA from the State University of Iowa in 1949. Before coming to Sweet Briar in 1952, she taught at Abbott Academy in Andover, Massachusetts and at the State University of Iowa. Throughout her Sweet Briar years, she has been active in the US, Southeastern Virginia and Blue Ridge Field Hockey Associations and has served as a member of the Golf Commission of the Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for Women. In retirement, she will remain active in local golf circles. She is an avid "birder," participating in bird counts twice yearly, and as a long time member of the Appalachian Trail Club will continue to be responsible for clearing a section of the trail.

Faculty Retirements

Those are just a few of the facts, ma'am. Generations of Sweet Briar alumnae and her compatriots on the faculty and staff recall a number of other things about her.

For instance, if it weren't for Kay Macdonald, I never would have graduated from Sweet Briar. Back in the fifties, "successful completion of two years of physical education" was a requirement for the Sweet Briar degree. "Successful" is the key word here; any stumblebum freshman or sophomore clutzy enough to flunk a phys. ed. offering could find herself involved (closely) with the department for the duration. I qualified. There I was as a junior (much to the amusement of my suitemates, two of whom were Varsity all the way) signed up for a two person tennis class; the two people were "Miss Macdonald" and me. By the end of the semester I was able to return the ball and keep score: Advantage Macdonald. End of my sports career. I remember as a freshman seeing a senior race in to the Refec the week before Graduation, wearing her senior robe (also a no-no until all of the basic requirements had been fulfilled) for the first time, shouting "I PASSED ARCHERY!" to the applause of her classmates. Another Macdonald winner in an under-the-wire finish? At least two alumnae owe this funny, sunny, diminutive lady a very special debt.

Others have known her as a sympathetic but no nonsense student advisor, a picnic enthusiast, a lover of cats, puzzles, word games, Yahtzee and zany literature, a stage manager and curtain puller par excellence in faculty shows, an inveterate traveler (England, Scotland, tropical islands for Christmas vacation), a devotee of the Maine seacoast as well as the Blue Ridge, a thrifty Scot who paid 50¢ for a pair of shoes at an AAUW auction and wore them for years, and as a person committed to fairness whether coaching on the playing field or debating the merits of a candidate up before the Admission Committee.

Some remember her looking distinctly like an elf in her emerald green SBC jogging suit, and a photograph exists of her sitting on Santa's (Harold Whiteman's) lap at a 70s Christmas Bazaar.

All recognize her alumna-like pride in Sweet Briar.

For thirty-one years, campus dwellers have enjoyed and benefited from Kay's capability, spunk, flair, elan, warmth, twinkle, kindness. And now that she has retired, whoever will rescue tomorrow's importunate phys. ed. flunkees? Perhaps there should be a sign with an arrow pointing toward Woodland Road: THIS WAY, BOOBIES: HELP AWAITS!

Phyllis Stevens ...Where Learning Begins

by
Lucy Otis Anderson '63

Phyllis Stevens, Professor Emeritus, retired this year, completing 23 years of teaching at Sweet Briar. She came to Sweet Briar via Queens College in Charlotte, N.C., Paterson State College in N.J., and the WACS. She holds an AB from Oberlin and a Masters and Ph.D. from the University of N.C. Miss Stevens was Project Director of a National Science Foundation program until 1981. Currently she is serving as the coordinator of the Lynchburg Chapter of the National Organization for Women and is Financial Coordinator for NOW in the State of Virginia.

Probably most of Miss Stevens' students remember her for her dedication to and enthusiasm for her subject. She imparted to us a genuine respect for Psychology as a rigorous scientific discipline, not to mention the respect many of us developed for those rodents which could learn to run a maze so much more quickly than we could!

Many of us enrolled in her courses — which were never considered "crip courses" — with mixed emotions: we felt real excitement about the subject, but some trepidation about our final grade. But she knew more about us than we knew about ourselves: and we appreciate so much her belief in us and her ready willingness to help us over the rough spots. Nothing was better for one's self esteem than to have completed one of Miss Stevens' courses.

She also gave us a glimpse of what true learning was all about. When I was a senior, and was beginning to think I knew just about everything there was to know, I remember seeing Miss Stevens absorbed in the latest professional literature, always updating her course material, always keeping us informed of the latest findings. Through personal example, she taught us much more than Psychology — she taught us that college is not where learning stops. It is where learning begins.

I can't imagine Psychology at Sweet Briar without Miss Stevens. Twenty three years of Psychology students are proud and grateful that we were here when she was too. ■

Reynolds Burrows ...Every Conceivable Course

by
Richard C. Rowland
Professor Emeritus,
English

Reynolds Burrows came to Sweet Briar as Associate Professor of Greek and Latin in 1962, with a B.A. from Harvard, an M.A. from the University of Michigan, and a Ph.D. from Princeton. Now, twenty-one years later, he has retired and will spend his time in Newport, Rhode Island, where he has long summered.

During those years he has taught almost every conceivable course which falls under the rubric of a normal offering in an undergraduate classics department, as well as some which emphatically do not — for instance, Japanese and Social Studies 136, which deals with the history of Japan. Mr. Burrows is a linguist of amazing competence; modern and ancient Greek, Latin and Italian, French, German, Dan-Norwegian, Sanskrit, Hindu, Japanese are all within his command. Before coming to Sweet Briar he taught at Princeton, Miami University, the University of Colorado, and San Francisco State College. He is the author of The Philosophic Thought of Cicero; De Republica and De Legibus (1981) and many articles in learned journals.

His interests are wide-ranging, but he is especially known for his interest in music and the film. How he learned all those languages when he seems to have spent almost all his childhood watching films which most of our mothers would not have thought suitable for such tender years will remain an unsolved mystery to all of us. Name any movie of the 20's or 30's and Reyn will come up with a full account of the story and the correct date. Jeanne Eagels — who else remembers the two films of Jeanne Eagels? As he was never one to flaunt his talents, none of us is sure just which musical instruments he performs on, but there is no question that he is accomplished on more than one. He was also a devoted master to a series of memorable dogs; classes on the third floor of Fletcher usually contained a Burrows canine.

In 1981-82 Mr. Burrows was a Fellow of the Japanese Institute at Harvard, preparatory to undertaking the assignment in the Social Studies course on Japan. On sabbatical in 1969-70 he was a University Lecturer at Oxford and tutored at Somerville College. He was widely traveled; he used his Japanese during World War II and the Korean War as an interpreter for the army. Few of us will forget the Mikado-like edicts which inundated us during Reyn's period as chairman of the Lectures Committee.

His talented wife Diane had the distinction of appearing in the same year not only as Shakespeare's Malvolio but also as God in the Chapel quadrangle; all this while teaching English at Seven Hills School. Few stage careers have risen to such heights!

The Burrows will be missed at Sweet Briar for their many talents and the wide interests they shared with us. May they be happy in their Rhode Island retreat and may they return to visit us often!

LOIS WRITES A BOOK

by Charles Taylor

Along the shiny wooden bookshelves in Lois Ballenger's small Westminster-Canterbury apartment are many of the world's great literary classics — "War and Peace," "Gone with the Wind" and "Les Miserables." But for Miss Ballenger, who has read all three, they just aren't enough.

So she's writing her own novel.

Based on the tribulations of a wealthy family that lived in a great mansion during the Depression, her book — which she calls a melodrama — is titled, "Beneath the Copper Beech."

Set within the campus of the fictitious Green Hill College, the book is named for the spot where a lead character's ashes are buried. The plot traces the dramatic social lives of the Reubens family through their decline and eventual deaths late in the 1930s.

"Most of the occasions featured in the book are based on actual events and people," said Miss Ballenger, though the family's real name will remain a secret.

Two of the characters in the novel are still alive — a pair of servants, one of whom lives in the area.

"She has grandchildren, but she's still working," said Miss Ballenger of the woman. She comes to Westminster-Canterbury regularly to care for a resident, where Miss Ballenger has interviewed her several times.

At 83, Miss Ballenger has the spirit of a teenager and the crisp memory of a seasoned historian. Dressed in turquoise-striped gauchos and a matching white blouse with turquoise buttons, she spent the first 20 minutes of her interview making her bed or standing behind a sofa, outlining highlights of her life.

But once chatter of her writing began, the brownish-gray haired woman sat erectly on the sofa and began explaining the history of her book and her interest in writing.

"Before postage was so high, I would write a Christmas letter to 120-125 of my friends," Miss Ballenger said. "And I said when I retired, I was going to write a history" of the family.

When Walter Holland, a teacher associated with Randolph Macon Women's College, gave a 12-week course in creative writing, a friend suggested she take it. "She said that might be the spark that would get me started."

It was.

After writing 12 installments for the class, Miss Ballenger has completed much of the family background in her novel, which she read to a reporter with the finesse of a seasoned author.

Occasionally, however, she interrupted herself to throw in a character description that readers mustn't know at that point in her story.

"She was always overdressed and she talked in a childish manner," said Miss Ballenger of one of the principal characters, Mimi Reubens. She knew the woman, but "I took an immediate dislike to her because of her idiotic way of talking."

Miss Ballenger was a bit gentler in her description of the primary male character, whom she calls Halsted: "He was a very able and likeable gentleman, he was indeed. I knew him less well because I was not one entertained at their dinner parties." By her own choice.

Holland, the creative writing teacher who brought inspiration to Miss Ballenger, found the class a benefit to senior citizens and himself.

"What I enjoyed most is that the people seem to be able to recall so many periods with customs that have slipped away," Holland said.

"The importance that they were giving to documenting so many family traditions, things that need to be preserved, was the major interest that I found in their writing."

Of Miss Ballenger, he said, "Historically, she was very sharp. Her writing was very incisive and she had a wealth of knowledge about (the setting her book is based on)."

Still, her interest and abilities in writing stem from studies long ago, before she knew the family she's now immortalizing.

She graduated in the 1920s from the Woman's College of Furman University in Greenville S.C. with a degree in English. During her senior year, she won a gold medal for an essay.

She followed with a year of graduate study at Columbia University in New York City. There, she completed a thesis on her two favorite writers, titled "The Rustics in the Novels of George Eliot and Thomas Hardy."

In 1927, she became secretary to the President at Sweet Briar College, and retained this position through three administrations. In 1955, she took over as manager of The Boxwood Inn, a restaurant on the campus. She retired in 1965, living in a house at Sweet Briar until she moved to Westminster-Canterbury in 1980.

Now settled there, she stays busy walking two or three miles a day, picking and canning blackberries when in season, and permeating her mind with news programs on television and public radio. With time left, she tries to concentrate on her novel.

"This hot weather has taken all the starch out of me, so I haven't gotten a lot done this summer. When I'm walking, I'm pushing ahead, thinking about the book."

Once the weather becomes inspiring again, and once the finished manuscript is neatly typed on her portable Smith-Corona typewriter, Miss Ballenger plans to search for a publisher.

"I'm not sure what I write will merit publication, but I'll submit it first to Bill Smart" (director of the Center for Creative Writing at Sweet Briar College). "Frankly, until I have finished it and proven to someone it's worthy of publication, I won't believe it until I see it."

Addressing the hypothetical suggestion that her novel becomes a huge success, Miss Ballenger said, "If it happened, it wouldn't change very much. I'd have an inner satisfaction which would be gratified. And there'd be the extra income if I sold in the thousands."

A hopeful giggle followed.

It's taken her 20 years to start her book, but Miss Ballenger hopes to finish in a shorter span.

"I hope to finish by the end of the year. If I made a point of writing a segment every day, I could finish in four or five months," she said, but added with a smile, "Knowing myself as I do, I won't set a limit. I'm too social. I enjoy people. There are never enough hours in the day for me."

Still, she feels confident the task will someday be completed — if not for herself, then as an obligation.

"It's a matter of fulfilling something that I have lived with and talked about so long. In order to have any credibility with family and friends, I have to complete it." ■

Dr. Harley

Another excellent issue of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine! You do an excellent job!

I'm enclosing a copy of a letter that came recently from Cordelia Kirkendall Barricks. It's very interesting and anyone who remembers dear, tough, wonderful Dr. Harley will really get a charge out of it! Thanks again for a fine job as Editor!

Carolyn Martingdale Blouin '30

Dear Carolyn,

I just had to write you to tell you how much I enjoyed your husband's column in the summer issue of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine. Please compliment him for me.

I think you will enjoy my story of my experience with Dr. Harley. I was in her hygiene class. I hadn't studied my home work, and didn't expect her to start her class with the letter "K," when according to her custom, she usually started with "A." Dr. Harley said "Miss Kirkendall, if you were alone with someone who became violently ill with pain in the abdomen, what would you do?" I had never been around any illness such as that and it seemed to me a hot water bottle was used for everything, including what might be appendicitis, so I told Dr. Harley I would use a hot water bottle. Dr. Harley asked me how hot, and I said extremely hot. Dr. Harley asked if I would put it directly on the skin of the ill person and I said "No, I would wrap a towel around the bottle, but the extreme heat must get through the towel."

Dr. Harley said, "Miss Kirkendall, you are dismissed from my class permanently. Anyone who has got to college and knows so little isn't worthy of being in my class." I left, and was absent for months.

One day, Dr. Harley spotted me on campus and said "Miss Kirkendall, why haven't you been in my class." I told her why I hadn't attended. She laughed and remarked that I probably would never forget what should be done if one expected an acute attack of appendicitis. I told her I had learned my lesson. She asked me to return to her class, which I did, and got a B for my grade. I was interested that Dr. Harley had brought you into the world. I still plan to go to my sixtieth reunion in 1985; wishful thinking, perhaps! It would be so nice if I were to meet you there.

Loved "Lucifer"

Congratulations on your summer 1983 issue! I read it all and enjoyed it. Can you tell me where I can get a copy of "The Best of Lucifer" by Miss Crawford? I loved Martha Hardesty's article on Miss Crawford and would like to have her writings. May I order it from the Book Store? [Editor's note: Yes.] Thanks for a wonderful issue of the Alumnae Magazine.

Teresa Atkinson Greenfield, '30

Let Us Live in the Present

In "The Editor's Room" of the last magazine, I approved the lone uncomplimentary reaction to the survey on reader interest. In the forty-nine years that I have received this publication, I have kept only one copy — Spring 1970. There was an article entitled "The New Antinomians" by B.L. Reid. Mr. Reid left Sweet Briar to teach English at Mt. Holyoke and the article was reprinted with permission.

What has happened to Mr. Reid and his ilk? Why don't we have more thought-provoking contributions?

Age withers and custom stales the infinite monotony of nostalgia. Let us live in the present. Press on.

Cordelia Penn Cannon, '34

A Good Mix

I am one of the majority who thinks the Alumnae Magazine is enjoyable, informative and that its contents are exceptionally well presented, witness the many honors and awards our magazine has received over the years.

Five members of my family are graduates of Harvard and three earned their masters degrees at Harvard. Our Harvard Magazine never cringed because the Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine was next to it on the library table.

Thank you for the mix of intellectual and nostalgic material which you give us.

Mary Huntington Harrison, '30

Faculty Salaries

Perry Laukhuff, who with a masters degree joined the Sweet Briar faculty in 1930 with a "Munificent Depression salary of $2,400," was doing very well, indeed. I joined the Sweet Briar faculty in 1954 with a Ph. D. (and ten publications) at an annual salary of $3,200. In twenty-four years, beginning instructors' salaries had increased $800 or roughly $33.33 per year. I trust that the rate of increase has improved during the last twenty-nine years.

Summer Issue Delights

I was delighted with the summer issue of the Alumnae Magazine. I haven't been back to Sweet Briar since my twentieth reunion in 1941 and have never met the Whitemans. All the articles about them make me regret that I never knew them.

Perry Laukhoff's article about "Vintage Things" was wonderful and started a stream of reminiscing and nostalgia that will go on for a long time. I am looking forward to the next article about the faculty, especially Miss Morenus and Miss Howland.

Edith Marshall (Ann Whitley's mother) is the only old friend from my class with whom I keep in contact and I do get to see her occasionally. Since she gets back fairly frequently, she keeps me up to date on recent news. Keep up the good work.

Gertrude Anderson, '21

Information Please

I have long planned to write a book based on the Reavis family which lived at Mt. San Angelo, Sweet Briar, during the depression years of the thirties. I am now seriously involved in writing this novel or melodrama. I appeal to Sweet Briar students, faculty or staff, who knew the Holland Reavises and had some contact with them while at Sweet Briar College, to send in writing a statement concerning their visit, conversation or whatever intercourse he or she may have had. I shall be most grateful to one and all who wish to contribute to my writing project which, to date, I am titling: "Beneath the Copper Beech."

I served as Secretary to Dr. Meta Glass from 1927 to 1946 when she retired as President of Sweet Briar, having served the college for twenty-one years. It was a liberal education in itself to be closely associated with such an able, intelligent, vivacious and outstanding woman as "Miss Meta," as she preferred to be called. At this time I am considering titling a tribute to Miss Glass — to be published hopefully a year or so from now — "The Inimitable Miss Meta."

Again, I will be most grateful for all contributions from former students, faculty, staff, friends or members of the Glass family. I will be most appreciative if all contributions can be sent in typed form. My eyes are not as good as they were during my years of service to Sweet Briar College. I have had slow growing cataracts since 1970, and I use a magnifying glass when reading small print or pale handwriting.

Gratefully yours, Lois Ballenger, Secretary to President Meta Glass 1927-1946
Secretary to President Martha Lucas 1946-50
Secretary to President Anne Gary Pannell 1950-55

Present Address: Lois Ballenger — B-110,

Academy and Specials

Helen Eubank Garber writes from Birmingham that her health is good and she can still attend meetings at her literary club and the DAR. She enjoys the many friends from childhood days who live at the Episcopal home, St. Martin's in the Pines, as she does. She also finds her five great-grandchildren "most interesting."

Miriam Jones VanderVoort was inspired by reading the fall issue of the Alumnae Magazine to call Eudalia White Lohrke to meet her at the Glen Ridge Country Club for lunch. They had a wonderful time talking over Sweet Briar days, and then Miriam drove Eudalia home and saw her charming 150-year-old home in Llewellyn Park, West Orange, NJ. Miriam wrote from Florida, where she was recovering from another cataract operation.

Alice Hogg Seneff left Maine reluctantly because at 83 she felt she should be near family in Pittsburgh. She has a one-room apartment next door to the Episcopal Church Home she will enter eventually. She still drives and feels that that fact and living in an apartment allow her to be more independent.

James R. Williams, Quincy, IL, writes for his mother Florence Halback Williams that although her memory is not what it used to be (Whose is?), she still enjoys the Alumnae Magazine. Her activities are limited to a weekly lunch with her friends (all younger) and visits from her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren.

Mary Martha Armstrong McClary lives on Whitehall Farm, Windsor, VT, next door to her daughter, who raises thoroughbreds. Besides enjoying the horses, Mary Martha has a dog and a cat for company. She doesn't drive any more.

Dorothy Yates Frese followed her only son to Monroeville, AL, five years ago and built a small home there. Her two grandchildren live in New York — one a girl, who just graduated from Columbia and was married in the spring, and the other a boy, who graduated in law at the U. of Ala. and married two years ago. Dorothy has been doing portraits in pastels commercially since 1962 when her husband died.

Nannie Claiborne Hudson lives alone outside of Amherst, VA. At 90, she takes care of herself, does her own cooking, and occasionally prepares lunch for a few bridge-playing friends. She also enjoys reading and watching TV when not visiting with her friends and eight grandchildren, who drop in often. Her daughter Nancy Adams, who is the bookkeeper for the SB Library, keeps her posted on Sweet Briar events.

At 89, Jessie Darden Christian feels fortunate to have a son, a daughter, and eight grandchildren (all with degrees from various universities) living near her in Lynchburg.

Through Grace Talmage Davis we are pleased to have found Elaine Wieck Thimmeresch, who now lives in New Orleans. Although she was at Sweet Briar only one year, she says that she will always remember it fondly.

After living in various parts of the country as a teacher and then in Federal Civil Service, Linchen George now lives in Hickory, NC, with her sister. Although 84, she is still active and interested in things. She enjoys housekeeping, painting, needlework, piano playing, and, most of all, traveling. She has just taken a trip to the West Coast by car and recently visited a nephew at the U. of Stockholm, Sweden, and his wife's parents' home in Finland. She also spent some time in Norway, Denmark and Germany.

Ruth Gibson Venning wrote from Greensboro, NC, where she has lived for 50 years. She has a married daughter, who lives in Charleston, SC, and a son, who graduated from Duke Medical School and now practices in Boise, ID. Ruth's sister Margaret Gibson Bowman '17, now also a widow, lives in Connecticut.

Two people made interesting comments about the names of people they were in college with. From Nokamis, FL, Jane Thomas Snow, who says she is pretty well at 92 with the exception of failing eyesight, wrote that on her hall in Gray there lived a Hale, a Sprinkle, a Dew, and, of course, a Snow! Katherine Page, Berryville, VA, remarks that when she was at Sweet Briar in 1918, out of 200 on campus, 26 were named Katherine (with various spellings), and there were 12 Margarets. One of the 26 was her roommate Catherine Wright Hill, who graduated from Iowa State, now lives in Staples, MN, and is very active. She has children and grandchildren. Katherine Page says she is not so active and had to give up gardening. She enjoys the Alumnae Magazine.

Katherine Withers Hamilton's husband died last October after a long illness, and she lives alone in the country near Gloucester, VA, with three Irish Wolfhounds to guard her. Fortunately, one of her sons and his congenial wife live nearby. Her business affairs are well taken care of by her sons, one of whom, as a retired Army Colonel, handles the military angle and the other is accustomed to dealing with estate business for his bank. When she wrote, Katherine was planning to take her daughter-in-law and her husband's devoted nurse on a Caribbean Cruise in April. She adds:

Although we're old and shaky,
We have no time for tears.

Pick up the challenge of old age
And fling it at the years.

Bess Kell Blair also waxes poetic:

I hate to remember
I was 89 years old last November.
Since I am too old to roam,
It's good I can live
In an old people's home.
An old people's home
May sound most frightful,
So I hasten to add
It's most delightful —
A lovely apartment with beautiful view
Of the city of Wichita Falls
Where from childhood I grew.
With heartfelt good wishes
I send greetings to you.

1913

Nell Tandy Winfree is 92 years old and lives in a lovely personal care home in Hopkinsville, KY. Her daughter comes to visit every other day, and Nell is still able to get around. She is quite satisfied with her life. "God has managed things very well," she writes.

1917

Genie Steele Hardy writes that the only news about her is that she is "still alive and going hard." She has worked on behalf of the Red Cross since she founded a group at Sweet Briar in 1916-17. She is on the board of the Southern Debutante Assembly and is active in DAR, Colonial Dames, UDC, and a few other organizations. She hears from Polly Bissell Ridler.

Illness kept Ruth McClravy Logan from attending Sweet Briar Day in the Bay Area after Christmas, but she entertained Dr. and Mrs. Whiteman at a luncheon at the Women's Athletic Club when they visited San Francisco in February.

Secretary

Florence Ives Hathaway (Mrs. Lloyd A.), 14 Kingswood Dr., Apt. 1C, North Abington, MA 02351

Fund Agent

Edith Durrell Marshall (Mrs. Edward C.), 3550 Shaw Ave., Hyde Park Apt. 155, Cincinnati, OH 45208

Marion North Lewin of Fairhaven, MA, is becoming an authority on Shakespeare, for this is her second year of study at a local university. She is also a member of an art group under the sponsorship of the AAUW. We are sure she is winning out in not becoming a "vegetable."

Shelley Rouse Aagesen attended Richmond's Sweet Briar Day luncheon and had her class ring lured away from her by Edith Durrell Marshall's daughter Ann Whitley '47, curator of the Sweet Briar Museum. Shelley says, "To have the ring a part of the permanent collection is enough to make any peacock spread its tail." (The peacock is the class symbol, you remember.)

Christine Gaschwindt Camlin's son of Encino, CA, writes that he is reconstructing the lost biography about his mother's dedication to SBC and the notice of her death five years ago.

Florence Dowden Wood, who lives in Cape May, NJ, was an outstanding student of Miss Howland's, who sent her to Woods Hole Biological Lab. She continued study in the field of human anatomy at Yale, where she received a Ph.D. She married a Princeton graduate student and together they traveled to every known mammal fossil locality in the world. Florence lost her son and her husband within a few months of each other. She is living alone and looks out upon her yard which, when she wrote, was "aglow with SB bulbs."

Nellie McCaa Cole lives near her son and his family in Shreveport, LA. She returns to her home port, Virginia Beach, where she sees Lib Baldwin Whitehurst. She writes with a happy lilt and says she is busy and well. Lib echoes Nellie's words of happiness because she writes, "I am blessed with fifty-five years of marriage with a loving husband." She adds, "My education at SBC helped the cause of marital bliss."

Francese Evans Ives of Montclair, NJ, modestly says she feels her age and doesn't do much. However, she has just received an award for "women whose lives have made a difference in the community, in recognition of her spirit and work for the betterment of all people." She is working hard again this year on the huge annual book sale under the auspices of the AAUW. Furthermore, she has had a book of verse published by the Rainbow Press, Berkeley, CA, entitled A Time to Laugh. Francese, now more often called Roma, her middle name, has an engagingly provocative sense of humor and finds herself in demand for "readings" at the Montclair Library, the Adult School of Education and clubs.

Elizabeth Claxton Lewis of Winter Park, FL, lives with the oldest of her three daughters. One of the others lives in Chicago and is married to the Dean of Education at the U. of Chicago, and the third is married to a staff member of Ohio State U. Elizabeth says that she attended several universities but finally graduated from the U. of Tenn. and that she "loved SB."

Louise Pochat Hattersley and her husband are living in Scarlet Oaks Retirement Home in Cincinnati. She enjoys the programs at a nearby Women's Club, sees Edith Durrell Marshall often, and dreams of her two great-granddaughters going to SBC.

"Lette" (Elizabeth) Shoop Dixon of Suffolk, VA, is thankful for her four years and friendships at college, says that she is able to live alone, plays bridge, and goes to church.

"Lette" (Mary) McLemore Matthews echoes her pal's interests, loves life with her many friends, plays games, calls on sick folk and shut-ins, and still arranges flowers on the altar of the church she attends in Norfolk, VA.

Gertrude Anderson of Findlay, OH, fractured a kneecap but didn't let it deter her from a trip to Memphis and New Orleans via the Mississippi Queen and her plans to see the Agawam Canyon and the fall scenery in Canada north of the 50th.

Edith Durrell Marshall of Cincinnati has probably returned more often to college and visited more clubs and graduates than any other member of our class. She has served SB and our class well. Her daughter Ann Marshall Whitley '47 has two daughters who live in Washington and work for Congressmen. A third granddaughter is now in Germany studying both German and Russian; she is already a Swedish linguist. She graduated from Mich. State last spring. Edith feels she has "done it" and has recently moved into a retirement home. She sent word that our president emeritus Maynette Rozelle Stephenson was in a convalescent home in El Toro, CA, but Maynette's daughter wrote later the sad news of her mother's death after a brief illness.

Catherine Hanitch writes enthusiastically that her nursing home, Chapel View, in Hopkins, MN, is the best in the country. She recently welcomed a nephew who took her to the National Dog Show where 100 wolfhounds with ostrich-plumed tails paraded before them.

Florence Waelfel Elston, who lives in Chicago, tops us all for perpetual motion. Having completed eight years of service at the Henrotin Hospital, Florence took flight, going to Washington for birthday parties, to New York to visit the Stock Exchange, to Bermuda for five days, to Florida, to Acapulco, to London, to Exeter, to Wabash College (where the president lives in Florence's old house) for football weekends, back to Delray Beach, and on to Sweet Briar House for a visit with the Whittemans!

Florence Ives Hathaway of Abington, MA, is happily married after 54 years, three children, ten grandchildren, and no "greats." The coldest months we're in Florida on the west coast, but the 1500 mile journey this year was made by autobus and was most comfortable. We go again to our camp in Bryant Pond, ME, for July.

Dorothy Job Robinson, who lives in Milford Haven, England, sent an air-mail which arrived just under the wire. She wants any traveling SB girl to come see her in the Cotswold, Morten-in-Marsh at the Manor House Hotel during July. Dorothy is living alone and is handicapped, but she is truly interested in all that goes on at her alma mater.

Secretary

Cordelia (Deedee) Kirkendall Barricks (Mrs. Arthur A.), 100 Bay Place, Apt. 2101, Oakland, CA 94610

Sadly, I must admit our numbers are diminishing, but, you still active ones, why don't you write?

We've had our sad losses. Eugenia Goodall Ivey and Helen Harpster died in 1982, and Mary Aleshire Klein died on April 19, 1983. Elsie Munro Haller became a widow in 1982.

Virginia Buffington Wham moved, but is still in the same town, Evanston, IL. Katherine Agard Flewelling moved, but is still in Pasadena, CA, and Mary Sailer Gardiner stayed in Pennsylvania when she moved from a home in Wyncote to an apartment in Rydal! Virginia Burke Miller moved from Englewood, CO, to Grand Rapids, MI. We wish all our happiness and health in their new abodes.

Louise Wolf Arnold winters in Palm Beach, FL, and summers in Nantucket, MA. She is busy painting and recently sold nine pictures. Besides having that talent, she wrote a small book on Tuckernuck which is selling well on Nantucket Island. Apparently her son Bob inherited Louise's painting ability; he paints for a living and is very successfully. Fritz, another son, lives all year round in Mallorca and expected to spend Jan. 1983 with the Arnolds. Mollie, the daughter, who lives in Long Island, is happy with her family and horses but isn't so happy to have broken three ribs in 1982.

Giddy Kinsley Whitehead has already invited me to stay with her when I return for our 60th in 1985. Aren't we optimistic? She wrote that in Amherst, VA, they had nine inches of snow during the holidays. Winter was so severe all over. California had too much rain — with drastically damaging results. Giddy and her daughter Vera Rose were planning an old-fashioned Christmas. Their faithful Buck was to cut a tree and gather some running cedar and mistletoe. Vera Rose had made two wreaths, one for the front door, the other for the "office" door which was formerly the entrance to a tiny building from which food and clothes were to be given to the slaves. Hams, cakes, and venison were all in preparation for Christmas and the Open House. Poinsettia plants and Vera's own-raised red geraniums were to be a part of the decor. Even yellow jasmine was in bloom by Giddy's son's photo. Giddy still misses him so much.

I was at The Towers for my first Christmas. Usually I go to the N.W. to see family, but since they were all coming to make whoopee with me for my 80th in January, I stayed put. So much is done for us at The Tower on all special holidays.

We had Sweet Briar Day on the 29th of December. There were 12 of us Sweet Briar lassies and Constance Russell, the mother of Betsy Chamberlain '42. Others present were Mary Sturr Cornelius '62, Lori Chambers '81, Comer Schmoeller Mori '71, Penn Willets Mullin '66, who did a great job of getting us together and planning, Amoret Thissell '82, Louisa Grace Prince '38, Dodie Purnell Camicia '72, Howell Lykes Colton '38, Patricia Layne Winks '52, Keenan Colton Kelsey '66 and Deedie Kirkendall Barricks '25.

Mary Cornelius is always so generous and thoughtful to chauffeur me, ditto Sue Evans Reeves '68. I do still drive, but am delighted to be in their good care.

Patty Sykes Treadwell '58 was among the missing, because she was skiing with her family. Mary Cornelius is again in college taking a course in accounting and expects to be a C.P.A. My such ambition!

The next gathering of the Sweet Briar Clan was at the Metropolitan Club in San Francisco on Feb. 22.

This was a reception to honor Dr. and Mrs. Harold Whiteman. It was a delightful affair with an attendance of about 40. We were shown a movie of Sweet Briar and given a brochure of the Generations Program. Again Mary Cornelius picked me up, looking like a school kid, coming directly from Chabot College.

Now down to the nitty gritty. I'll clue you in on some of my activities since a year ago. In April I went to Anniston, AL, to help Kess celebrate his 80th birthday. Perhaps you will remember I had been his "drag" at West Point in the early roaring twenties. We went to Biloxi, MS, to visit my cousin. We were entertained there by one of Kess's classmates. I flew home from Atlanta. Louise Wolf Arnold had known Kess as long as I had. Giddy Kinsley Whitehead met him in 1980 when he was on campus with me for my 55th reunion. We had planned to go to West Point in 1984 for Kess's 60th reunion and then in 1985 to Sweet Briar for my 60th. This proved to be wishful thinking. Kess died in Nov. 1982. He hadn't been too well, but we did have one more trip when I again flew to Atlanta in September. Kess and I then drove to Madison and Janesville, WI. At Janesville we were with Kess's Parker Pen friends who were delightful. Kess worked for the Parker Pen Company, after thirty years in the service. They were so happy to see him and gave me a hearty welcome too.

Perhaps the long motor trip was too much, because Kess was stricken with a massive heart attack three days after he got home and lived only a month.

Christmas at The Towers was delightful. The local family came for dinner. My N. W. family, all six, arrived in early January for my 80th; combined with the local family, we numbered 13 adults. We didn't include the three great-grands in the gala parties. Number 4 great-grand was due in June. Time marches on. One party was hosted by my three sons. I received lovely gifts too.

Fred, my bachelor son who has been so ill for five years, did join in the Christmas and birthday celebrations, but since then has been so ill again, hospitalized in February and March. He just returned to his own apartment in mid-April, after being with his brother and sister-in-law for six weeks. They gave him such good care that he went from 136 to 155 lbs. I would like to give him some of my pounds.

We had a joyful Easter at The Towers with my local family here for dinner.

I hope this finds you as well and active as I am, but I do have some signs of going downhill. My new prescription glasses, after five years, had to be a little stronger, and I have some arthritis. Please write.

P.S. These tidbits just came in before I sealed my notes. Dora Hancock Williams and her husband, Coleman (Coley) had a visit with Margaret Hogue Pfautz. Margaret's home is the check-in place for children, grandchildren and great-grands. The latter now numbering three.

Gertrude McGiffert MacLennan and husband Don are still showing genuine southern hospitality. With 10 houseguests being housed under their roof, she found time to write. Please let that inspire you.

1929

Mary Archer Bean Eppes (Mrs. J. V. D.), 447 Heckewelder Place, Bethlehem, PA 18018

Fund Agent

Adelaide Henderson Cabaniss (Mrs. Wm. F. E.), Gunner's Range, Royal Oak, MI 21662

This annual letter is becoming a saga of special milestones, travel and descendants! Most of my news comes from Christmas cards, so it will be rather antique. Our fund agent was in Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, last year and she and Bill came home just in time for their 50th wedding anniversary celebration. They spent their Christmas holidays on Cape Cod, in Osterville, where her daughter Eve lives with her husband Ray Webster, who is an Episcopal minister. Their son has moved to Alberquerque recently. Libber Lankford Miles writes: "Had a grandson married in Richmond in September, which was great fun — all the kids and grands there — but it made us feel a mite elderly. Our U.S.A.F. Colonel son is in Athens, so we contemplate a trip to Greece come March or April. My sister Mary Burnley '33 is not at all well, but we have her in a nursing home in Rockland, ME, where I can see her nearly every day." The Mileses were away last summer when Jimmy and I were in Maine, but we did spend a night with Carolyn Martindale Blouin and Maury on our way home. We complimented each other on our looks, our very active lives, and our amazingly varied interests. An appeal has just arrived from Carolyn for a Walkers' memorial. Wouldn't it be wonderful if members of our class particularly would help in such a worthy cause? I worked in the Book Shop for my junior and senior years and "Miss Ruby" and the whole family live vividly among my most treasured memories of life at Sweet Briar.

Janet Bruce Bailey writes: "We have been spending our winters for many years in our home on St. Thomas, VI., but now we must change our life style. Age seems to be catching up on us although our disabilities are minor. We are going into Lake House Village in Sarasota, FL, just for the winters. We have three married grandchildren...we have eight all together and expect to be great grandparents in December. Hope to attend my 55th Reunion!" I recently heard from a retired Lehigh professor's wife who lives in the same "Lake House" retirement area. We had stayed with this family, the Ashbys, several years ago on a trip to Sanibel Island to visit our youngest son, his wife and our three granddaughters. She wrote that she had just entertained Jan and Lin for supper and bridge when the location Bethlehem, PA, came up — you can imagine what ensued!

Kay Smith Boothe "is as busy as ever." While visiting in Scottsdale, AZ, in March she saw Evaline Edmonds Thoma (who was in the process of moving to Florida) and learned that Carl, who had been ill for a long time, had died in November. We all send our deepest sympathy and love. Also to Jessie Exley Wooten, whose husband Henry died last year, and to Helen Schaumlaffel Feree whose son was tragically murdered in July 1983.

Louise Lutz reports: "I am well, busy, and enjoying life in Chicago and Dune Acres, IN, where I play outside with bulbs and birds. A good life!" June Tillman McKenzie writes: "We are quite well, just a little more age which we all have as each year passes." Virginia Chaffee Gwynn writes from Naples, FL: "Have six grandchildren, one granddaughter married. I work (volunteer) at Naples Hospital and also for Cancer Society in 'Reach to Recovery Program.'" Anne Gochnauer sends word from Upper-ville, VA: "I am busy with house, garden and shop. I have always had German Shepherd dogs, but have reached the age where a Norwich Terrier is my pet now! Do come to see me. I have a fine shop with genuine antique furniture and accessories and this part of Virginia is very beautiful. I expect Nora Lee Antrim for a visit in May. At this time we explore the mountain wildflowers and enjoy our beautiful countryside." "Nori" Antrim, Lisa Guigon Shinberger, Maria Bemis Hoar, and Margaret Montcure Johnson have all been so kind to my sister-in-law Elise Eppes Cutchin who recently moved to an apartment at the "Berkshire" in Richmond. They have also been lovely about entertaining Jimmy and me. We have been commuting to Virginia this past year and since Christmas have spent almost more time there than in Bethlehem, primarily because of the illness of Jimmy's sister-in-law, Sadie Perry Eppes, who died late in February after a long bout with cancer.

Rosa Heath Bridges has retired as a librarian at Old Dominion U. She sent word that last summer she, her daughter and granddaughter stopped by SBC on their way to Lynchburg. "We were all overcome with the size and beauty of the campus. I hadn't seen it for fifty years! We were disappointed not to see S.B. House, but the magnificent boxwoods almost made up for that. Everything seemed and was larger and older (just like me, alas!)."

Sally Callison Jamison sent me the following news of our classmates. "We had a short visit from Belle Brockenbrough Hutchins and John when they were enroute to their winter home in Delray, FL. They now have three married sons living in the Chicago area [The Alumnae Office has the sad duty of reporting the news of John's death this summer.] .... We saw Ruth Meredith Ferguson Smythe and Fred at Torch Lake last summer when they were surrounded by children and grandchildren.... This winter they went to Lisbon and Madeira, and while there they met a Sweet Briar alumna, Julia Benner Moss '22. Jamie and I were in Naples for several months this past winter. Despite poor weather we had a wonderful time renewing old friendships and walking the beach. We had a short visit with Jo Tatman Mason and Mace who looked younger than it was fair to look! I had a glimpse of Mary Marshall Franklin '30 who also looked great. With her was a beautiful granddaughter who obviously inherited some beauty genes from Mary. We received from Virginia Lee Campbell Clinch a book entitled A Walk in the Sky written by her son Nicholas Clinch. It is published by the Mountaineers. Nicholas has tackled mountains on five continents and also put together the expedition that was first to reach the highest summits in the Antarctic. He is the past president of the American Alpine Club, a graduate of Stanford U. and Stanford Law School and is now living in Palo Alto, CA. The book makes excellent reading even if one is not a mountain climber. A letter at Christmas from Eleanor Duvall Spruill tells of a trip to Portugal and Madeira with painters — and she also painted on St. Simon's in November. She says she is painting hard and well, though not as much. How I love to hear from Eleanor! Her letters are priceless! Our daughter Jane Jamison Nesser '59 and grandson Scott came to Florida to visit us and drove us home in April. We see Jane and Frank and grandchildren fairly often. We are fortunate having them only a few hours away. Our son John moved to Williamsburg in June, as he became Dean of the Business School at William and Mary on July 1st. Now we have another reason to return to Virginia! We also have two nieces living in Richmond." Sally wrote to be sure to add her hope that all the '29-ers will be gathering at SBC in '84 for our 55th!

Our youngest son Bennett is a doctor in Shaker Heights, OH. We are at present making our annual spring visit, seeing our youngest granddaughter perform at the annual Cleveland Skating Club show and a musical at Hathaway-Brown School. Bennett has charge of getting the Whiffenpoofs back to Yale for their 25th reunion in May and has acceptances from 12 out of 13! His and Cynthia's eldest daughter, Elizabeth Martin, is a junior at Middlebury and is spending six months at the U. of London studying English and History. Ruth Abell Bear '26, a senior when we were freshmen, lives in a lovely old stone farm house near Bethlehem. We are in a so-called AAUW Literature Study Group and see each other frequently. She has just had a National AAUW Fellowship named in her honor. Anne Mason Brent Winn had a pinched nerve in her leg last year, but still goes fox hunting. She won a trip to Russia, which took place in December and January, and planned to go to New Zealand in February to visit her daughter Mason and family.

My next class letter is due to go to print just before we have our 55th reunion in May, so be sure to send me news by April 1984! Sweet Briar, get ready! Here come the '29-ers for their 55th!

1933

Secretary

Marjorie Morse Emling (Mrs. Ralph A.), 3216 South 95th St., Ft. Smith, AR 72903

Jessie L. Coburn Laukhuff (Mrs. Perry), P.O. Box 689, Amherst, VA 24521

Dear classmates: This column will be my last. I have enjoyed my correspondence with all of you despite bits of illegible handwriting! Memories of our 50th reunion remain with those who could attend. I look forward to our 55th. My husband will attend his 55th at Swarthmore, PA, so I am demanding "equal time." So long till 1988.

Arizona: Because of its content, I am quoting verbatim the note I received from Jeannette Shambaugh Elliott. "Sweet Briar was a one-year transition for me before transfer to Radcliffe. None-the-less I hold Sweet Briar in great esteem: have watched, from the vantage point of Alumnae bulletins, its growth and ever more impressive place among independent liberal arts colleges. You will be celebrating the class of 1933's 50th down there and I will be celebrating the class of 1933's 50th up there in Cambridge. May both these worthy institutions survive in the centuries to come to foster the enlightened, open, active, and discriminating ladies who will assist in moulding the world our progeny will live in."

Arkansas: Your secretary spends much time romping with her two grandchildren. Ralph and I returned East in 1982 to visit relatives and friends and to attend Ralph's 50th reunion at Swarthmore College. This past winter we enjoyed three glorious weeks of sunshine in Guadalajara and Puerto Vallarta, Mexico.

Florida: Babs Barber Wilson and her husband have planned a family gathering (all 12 of them) at a rented cottage for a week in July at Virginia Beach.

Marjorie Ris Hyland remarried January 29, 1983, to John W. Hyland. Her previous husband, John W. Hand, died Oct. 1977. Marjorie has three children by her first husband — Harriet (Mrs. Laurence Margary, Malvern, PA), Carol (Mrs. N. A. Longson, Rockville, MD), and William A. Hand (Lincoln Park, NJ). She will no longer summer in Maine but in Highlands, NC.

Georgia: Alice Martin Cooper's son has just received his doctorate in physics, and his wife Margaret will soon be given hers in anthropology at the U. of Chicago. Along with their new daughter Jennifer they will soon be leaving for Munich for a year's post-doctoral work.

Illinois: Sarah Houston Baker had hoped to make Reunion, but her mother's death in Chattanooga and a visit from her daughter and 15½-month-old grandson, who arrived from Germany, caused her to change her plans. Kathleen Conover Snow writes from Virginia (yes, Illinois) that she enjoyed her telephone visit with Fund Agent Jessie Coburn Laukhuff, who lives near Sweet Briar.

Iowa: From Gail Shepherd Bean comes an addition to the information she wrote for the reunion questionnaire in which she says she has visited the Galapagos "in case anyone wants to reminisce."

Kansas: Rosie Taylor Anderson has just had a physical check-up and was reported to be in good health. She hopes to return soon to Clay Center to resume her responsibilities. Her daughter Sal has a church in New England. Jane Taylor Lacy lost her husband in 1966. She has two sons, Jim, who is president of his own company, is married and has three children: Kim, the oldest, graduated from Kansas U. at the same time as our reunion; and the other sons are Jimmy, 15, and Pete, 13. Jane's other son lives at home with her. Her interests are gardening, photography, cooking, entertaining, and an investment group. She supports her local repertory theater. Jane hopes to see some SBC buddies eventually.

Louisiana: Mignon McKay Ludwig, who owns a children's apparel boutique in New Orleans called "Mignon's," writes that the shop thrives and Karen (her daughter) gets the credit. She does a wonderful job and the catalog is great. Mignon has a granddaughter, Erika Ludwig, who is a sophomore at the U. of Minn., and the other granddaughter Kristin graduates from high school this year. Mignon's son, John Ludwig, is Exec. Director of the National Opera Institute in Washington, OC. Sue Grave Stubbs has three children: Dr. King Stubbs, Jr.; Mrs. Haydn Cutler (Sue Stubbs '61), Fort Worth; and John Stubbs, architect in N. Y. City. There are six grandchildren, one of whom, India Cutler, graduated from Princeton in June. The others are at preparatory schools — Miss Porter's, Groton, and St. Paul.

Maryland: Marietta Derby Garst regrets that she couldn't attend our reunion as she and her husband will be in England visiting their daughter Jane Garst Lewis '61. Leila Van Leer Schwaab writes that she is "doing" The Golden Stairs for '31, '32, '33. She and her husband enjoy walking and hope to do more of it this fall in Switzerland and Italy. Leila does a lot of volunteer work with her main focus for 20 years on Meals on Wheels. Her husband Donald is still practicing law full-time. Virginia Brewer Cobey wrote from Cumberland that she was recovering from a sudden heart attack — very unexpected since she had just had a check-up.

Minnesota: From Jane Martin Person came a card saying that they are still living in their 100-yr.-old farm house and have been there 38 years. They are renting out their tillable and pasture land. Harold maintains his interest in local land-use policies and practices. Jane takes an active part in the county historical society and the local United Charities drives. Their three grown children are married and live close by. Helen Martin, Jane's sister, visited the Persons last summer for the first time in 10 years.

Nebraska: Frances Neville Newberry and her husband have four grandchildren — Kathy, 22; Daniel, 15; John Edwards, 14; and Katie Landes, 4 months. Frances left SBC and graduated from U. of Tex. in 1933. She is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, P.E.O., and Episcopal Church. Mary Nelson Neville Sieman's daughter Mary Ann is married to Jarrold L. Strasheim, attorney, and they live in Omaha, NE. The Siemans have a granddaughter, Sharon, who is married to Dr. Mark Frey and live in Gainesville, FL, and another granddaughter, Lisa, who is married to Scott Johnson and lives in Omaha, NE. A grandson, Alex, is a student at Northwestern U. and another grandson, John, is a sophomore at U. of Neb. Fred is a junior at Westside H.S. in Omaha.

New Jersey: Your secretary received a card from John Dickie with the sad news that Anne Guppy Dickie had died March 25, 1983. She had one son and two grandchildren, John, 4th, and Lauren Elizabeth, who is at Hollins College. Anne and John would have been married 50 years Oct. 12. Connie Murray Waller writes that she and her husband Jack are farmers from May till November and therefore cannot attend our reunion.

New York: Mary Ellen Bell Hare gives us the good news that her husband Stan is feeling much better after surgery last fall. A brief note from Elena Doty Angus says, "Sorry not to see everyone at our 50th."

South Carolina: Henrietta Melton Durham regretted that she could not attend our 50th reunion. She says "Hy" to all the ones she knew.

Tennessee: Mary Elizabeth Clemons Porzelius tells me her only real news is a new grandson, born Dec. 26 to her youngest daughter, Susan Spurgeon. She is still living in her same apartment. She had a trip to Italy last September but has slowed up now. Betty Workman Wright retired from the local Public Library and for five years now is enjoying every minute of her retirement. She spent three weeks in London, Scotland, and Ireland a year ago primarily to see the Scottish "Tatoo." Her chief volunteer job is in the gift shop at the Hunter Art Museum.

Texas: Eleanor Niggli Tyler recalls the time she spent at SBC (one year) — some of the happiest days of her life. Her husband died six years ago. He attended VMI (two years) and shared her interest in SBC. Eleanor now lives in Austin and is very much involved in the 100th anniversary of the U. of Tex-Austin.

Virginia: Anne H. Brooke writes that in an issue of the Alumnae Magazine last year she and her sister Sue Brooke '29 were mistakenly named aunts of Julie Brooke '81. Although they are only first cousins once removed, they are indeed proud to be related to Julie. Also they are extremely proud of their two nieces who are SB graduates. Susan Hobbs Crowder '65 is an artist and sculptor who has exhibited at galleries in New York and London. Several museums have purchased her sculptures. The Crowders live in Briarcliff Manor, NY, and have two small sons; Jeffrey is 6 and Andrew, 4. Herbert is with Citibank. Bettye Hobbs Pruitt '69 received her doctorate from Boston U. Her field is American history and she has published several books on pre-Revolutionary Massachusetts which are used as reference works in schools and libraries. This year Bettye is studying on a fellowship at Harvard. The Pruitts live in Exeter, NH, where Bruce teaches at Phillips Exeter Academy. They have two girls, Sarah, 5, and Katie, 1. Anne's father died in August 1982 at the age of 93. After spending much of her time taking care of her father his last three years, she is now back in circulation. She was elected to succeed her father as one of the three trustees of Galilee Episcopal Church, term indefinite; and she was also elected to a three-year term on the Vestry. She has started back as a Contact Teleministry (hot line) Volunteer. She had other commitments at reunion time. She hoped it would be well attended and a great success. Kitty Gochnauer Slater is working all her free moments on the revised and updated edition of her book, The Hunt Country of America, which will be its fourth printing and should be available from Cornwall Books, East Brunswick, NJ, by next fall. The Hunt Country SBC chapter is growing. Kitty has a 15-yr.-old granddaughter who is now a student at Foxcroft; another granddaughter who is now a student at Foxcroft; another granddaughter, B, and a grandson, 1½. All live nearby. Elizabeth S. Gray had a fabulous trip, called "South of Suez," on the Argonaut with eight other Briarites and Dorothy Jester. The ship was lovely; the passengers, all congenial; Egypt and Jordan, fascinating; and their guides and Egyptologists made it the most delightfully interesting trip. A card from Ella Jesse Latham brings the news that she has just returned from a flower arrangement class in England which was fun but strenuous. The Lathams now have a new grandson, Charles Jesse Latham, born July 28, 1982. Ella and husband Bob plan to be at their cottage for the summer. Margaret Wayland Taylor writes that Robert is still active in his law firm working full time and is Commissioner of Accounts of Albermarle. She stays busy with her mother, now 98 years old. Their second grandchild was born June 4, 1982. He is Daniel Monroe Taylor, son of George Wayland Taylor and Mary Jane Hyde Taylor. A card from Virginia Vesey Woodward indicates that travel has slowed for Virginia and Joe, but they do visit back and forth in Arlington several times a year with their grandchildren, Michael, 4 and Caroline, 2. The parents are Paul and Virginia J. Ginger Woodward Garst '73. Marjorie Burford Crenshaw telephoned from Lexington to express her regret at not being well enough to come to Reunion.

Wisconsin: Marjorie Jones Cook was remarried in 1982 to Mr. John G. Cook. She regrets not being able to attend the reunion as she will be celebrating at Smith College where she spent her junior and senior years

Marjorie says, "I was lucky enough to take a "Round the World" trip on the Q. E. 2 — will be thinking of you all and would love to hear who came."

Either nobody reads this column or they forget very quickly. I resigned last year as secretary, but I have received no word about a replacement and I keep getting notes and cards from the Alumnae Office; so here I am again.

A nice, long letter from Sally Kirkpatrick Fearing, which is full of good news about her family, brought warm greetings to the Class of '37. Husband Jack has retired from his practice and long association with the Washington School of Psychoanalysis, and they have returned to their farm, "Dim View," ten miles north of Leesburg. Sally and Jack have five children, most of whom are married and producing grandchildren. She wrote at Christmas time from their boat, Slewfoot Sal, while they were cruising with their youngest son, Sydney, as crew. They were in the Bahamas but planned to be back in Virginia for spring. One daughter, Sue, teaches English in Hawaii, and a son, John, lives in Tucson. Sally says Jack recently gave her an electric anchor winch which gives her "a great feeling of power." I couldn't even plug it in! A busy life!

Becky Douglass Mapp reports their latest "escapade" was a 2,000 mile trip on the Amazon aboard the World Discoverer. It's still very primitive, she says, but so beautiful! Lots of birds, monkeys, and fish! Becky and George Walter have two daughters with children near them and another married daughter in Atlanta.

Margaret Sandidge Mason had a fine trip to Greece, Turkey, Israel, and Egypt last September and enjoyed seeing her "SB studies of Latin, Ancient history, and Bible come alive." When at home, she stays busy with garden, church, and community activities.

Ellen Lee Snodgrass Park visited the same part of the world that Margaret did last fall. Her trip took her to Egypt, Jordan, and Israel — "a tremendous experience!" Ellen spent Christmas in Miami with her son and his family. She still enjoys her work in the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Marian Leggett Whyte is another traveler. With friends she motored through the Badlands, Mt. Rushmore, Jackson Hole, Yellowstone, Banff, Lake Louise, Jasper, and Glacier National Park. "Such gorgeous scenery!" she says. Early last fall, she and husband George went to New York to see her sister Yvonne Leggett Dyer '39 and then on to a New England cruise to Newport, Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard, and Block Island. "What a summer — I'm a lucky gal!" I should think so!

Agnes Crawford Bates is still a part-time librarian in Gloucester. She keeps busy with the garden club, bridge, and other activities. Her daughter lives in Raleigh and has a 7-year-old son. Her son Bill lives in Englewood, NJ. Aggie recently talked to Lillian Lambert Pennington, who said she spent Thanksgiving with her son in Naperville, IL. Aggie also keeps in touch with Marie Walker Gregory, who recently had an automobile accident. Marie wrote that she had to have seven stitches in her head and banged up her knee so that she couldn't drive — even if she hadn't torn up her car.

Frances Johnson Finley has been a busy beaver with Historic Garden Week here in Norfolk. They had record crowds. Sissy and husband Jimmy plan to go on Sweet Briar's Adriatic Odyssey this fall on the Argonaut. They have invited Tom Corwin (Jane Collins' widower) to play with them in a golf tournament here in Norfolk.

Nancy Nalle Genung writes that she hopes to get her new husband to Sweet Briar this spring. "Plus him, I have a bonus of two more sets of married children and four grandchildren, oldest grandchild in Bowdoin College; youngest is one year." Fund Agent Elizabeth Lee McPhail wrote in March that she was looking forward to seeing Nancy and meeting Al when they visited Charlotte the next week. Elizabeth and Fred enjoyed a visit with Jackie Cochran Nicholson and Chink at Jekyll Island in February. They also visited Epcot. "McPhail grandchildren have jumped from two to four this winter," Elizabeth wrote.

Mary Johnson (Polly) Lambeth Blackwell and Winfield were also anticipating two more grandchildren (not twins) in September — bringing their total to nine. They have three daughters, all married. Winfield continues work in his law firm, and Polly has just started her second term on the Wake Forest U. Board of Trustees.

Harriette Dyer Sorensen is living in Atlantic Highlands, NJ, near her three children and five grandchildren. Peter says her son and his family were written up in the January issue of House Beautiful. They have a beautiful garden — and all have the same hobby.

Peggy Cruikshank Dyer and Holmes were busy planting their summer garden in Massachusetts when she wrote in early May. Having arrived April 30 from Siesta Key, FL, they were already sailing and playing tennis, even though New England was unusually cool.

In Atlantic Highlands, NJ, Dorothy Prout Gorsuch found all the rain this spring was hampering the planting of her big garden and keeping spray on her fruit trees. As usual, she planned to freeze vegetables and fruit for a year's supply. She went back to Rutgers last winter for the Intermediate Landscaping Course and hoped to put her increased knowledge to good use — quite a change from her Sweet Briar days as an English major who was "the last one in on the 'botany trots' with Dr. Ames!" Her daughter lives nearby, and her son, a technical director for CBS, is still in NYC.

We send our deepest sympathy to Mary Turnbull Barfield, who lost her husband in February. Turnie lives in Jacksonville, FL. I am celebrating the recent birth of my second granddaughter, Elizabeth Andersen Cantile, in Richmond, VA. Please get a new secretary soon. My eyes are failing. I have greatly enjoyed hearing from you all!

Margaret Craighill Price (Mrs. Karl R.), 3121 45th St., N.W., Washington, DC 20016

Our traveled Marie Gaffney Barry and Ted are back in New Canaan from California, where they were royally entertained by Potter Duncan, Coralee Kahn Ferro '40, and Edie Vongehr Bridges. They also ran into Marion Phinzy Jones '40. The Barrys flew to Los Brissos, Palm Beach, and Bonita Springs, where they saw Edge Cardamone O'Donnell, who is thinking of moving there.

Jane Loveland Byerts and Bill wrote of a wonderful visit in Tallahassee from Helen Ann Littleton Hauslein and Jane Clark Hartrich — all lunching with Louise Kirk Edwards and son. Word is that Jane Byerts is a wonderful gardener — also a bird watcher.

Frances Watkins Centilli and husband moved in '63 from San Antonio to Devine, TX, where their ceramic shop is all consuming.

Joan Myers Cole in St. Michaels, MD, wrote me of the death of Dorothy White Cummings on Dec. 11 — so many are saddened. Linda Boyle Richardson's husband died recently after a four-year bout with cancer. We send her sincere sympathy.

I saw Ruth Hemphill DeBuys in Birmingham, AL, in her elegant home. She's thin and youthful — takes aerobics. She and John miss their farm now, but she grows "veggies" in her garden — besides painting lovely oils.

Margaret Stuart Wilson Dickey had news of the wonderful SB Day luncheon in New Orleans. She had to cancel the SB Red Sea trip because of Kenneth's illness. We hope all is well now.

Bobbie Clark Dickey is in Mt. Pleasant, IA, where she is working in the public library — "interesting life in a small town after so many big cities."

Pat Potter Duncan toured South America's coast, taking in the Galapagos Islands. We're hoping to get her here for an SB reunion — Marie Gaffney Barry, me, Mary Scully Olney, etc. Pat is in the throes of legalities with some big estate, so she may move East from California. We're all hoping she settles here in Connecticut.

Louise Kirk Edwards, back from the Caribbean, then went to the Orient. She has a new address but is still in Tallahassee.

Peg Tomlin Graves in Lynchburg writes of her son's marriage to Beverly Wright Hendricks '71 and also of the new baby born to Elizabeth Andrews Watts '74 and Bobby, Peg's nephew (son of the late Nida Tomlin Watts '40).

Jane Clark Hartrich returned recently from Seattle and Alaska, where she helped her daughter and new grandchild settle into the inhospitable climate. She and Helen Ann visited Pat Sorensen Ackard in Naples, FL, where they saw Eunie Foss Sneed, whom I'd love to hear from.

Helen Watson Hill and husband celebrated their "Fortieth" in Alaska and then went to France on a houseboat canal trip.

Wilma Zeisler Lee retired last summer after teaching twenty-two years in Oklahoma public schools and traveled to Texas and California visiting offspring. Helen Beaver Platten is retired from government service and living in W. Pittston, PA.

Nelle Hudgens Levvis and Walt, after touring 7,000 miles through Mexico, went to all points in Spain and Portugal. Now loving retirement in Mt. Dora, FL, which is like a New England town, they catch many "snowbirds" stopping by.

Helen Hamilton Lewis bought a tiny new house in St. Louis after having been to Austria. She is busy as the national vice chairman of Visiting Gardens but would welcome a visit from any Briarite.

Louise Duff Maverick and Albert went on a Sweet Briar trip to Spain and France, enjoying the SB fellow travelers most of all. She says Virginia Oliver Bear is a big-wig in Colonial Dames in Montgomery, AL.

Ann Pickard McCarry and Tom love being back in Lookout Mountain, TN, but miss California, so they take a quick trip there every now and then.

Martha Jean Brooks Miller and Tommy are in Charlotte. Martha Jean sells real estate and has time to win in golf — running back and forth to tournaments.

Lucy Parton Miller and husband moved to Punta Gorda, FL, and are loving the warm climate.

Anne Gayle O'Bierne says she's not a jet-setter; she's just enjoying Atlanta quietly.

Piney Martin Patterson and Eugene celebrated their Fortieth by having breakfast in Washington, DC, lunch on the road, and dinner in Philadelphia. This past New Year's Eve they celebrated at Westminster-Canterbury — home by nine, dancing in flannel pajamas and munching Stilton cheese (she says, On Golden Pond!)

Margaret Craighill Price and Karl were going to Indonesia in May where he'll lecture on tax law. Joan Devore Roth is dreading John's retirement but is going to India on heavy museum work — "Treasures from the Tower of London."

Lillian Fowlkes Taylor and Tyler travel constantly with Senior Citizen Golfers and want to hear if any other Briarite is going on any of the trips. Lil just launched a big ball in Birmingham, AL, to benefit the Kidney Fund.

Charlotte Davenport Tuttle and John winter in West Palm Beach and summer in N. Chatham, MA. They just had a wedding for their daughter in San Francisco, their son and wife coming from Paris.

Judy Davidson Walker just returned from South Carolina, where Tony was researching for his book. They loved the historic sights. Judy is busy with garden clubs and church in Rhode Island.

Barbara Holman Whitcomb is running a family block with eighteen tenants. She's also caring for a feisty 97-year-old mother. She traveled to Alaska with Lucy Parton Miller and then to England with the Millers.

"Yours Truly" is driving South (with recently retired husband), where warmth and magnolias are calling me. Keep up news from all of you.

Irene McDonnell Hill is still in Memphis but her children and families have scattered. One daughter is in Winston-Salem and the other one is in St. Louis, while their son and his family live in West Virginia. Betty Healy Cutler and Gordon, now retired, went to Greece with some of his Princeton classmates. Chris Wright Porter and Fred moved into their town house in Holmes Beach on Anna Maria Island, FL, before Christmas. Their son Fred, a graduate of U. of Colo. Engineering School works in Steamboat Springs. Daughter Sue works at a ski resort in Vermont.

Anne Carter Walker Somerville's oldest son and his wife are in Asheville. His job is with the publications and development office at Warren Wilson Col. at Swannanoa, NC. Anne Carter, active in the Garden Club of Virginia, is especially interested in growing lilies. Helen Davis Wohlers and Herb moved to Brevard, NC, on his retirement. "Hel" is active in AAUW and travels over the state to conventions and workshops.

Jean Ridler Fahrenbach is an elementary school librarian at Hempstead School in Spring Valley, NY. Trained in computers at Pratt Library School some years back, she is enjoying helping children use the Commodore 64 computers. A part-time post as Library director of Tomkins Cove Public Library takes up the two "free months." Marvin is assistant director of Clinical Research at Sandoz, a Swiss pharmaceutical firm located near Morristown, NJ. Their oldest daughter is an electrical engineer with IBM, located in Burlington, VT. A graduate of Penn State, Ann will receive an M. A. from U. of VT. by the end of June. Mary, the other daughter, finishes Princeton in June. She is pre-med and hopes to go into medical research. A competitive swimmer since 8th grade, she swam this spring in her last competitive meet. Mary was on the Princeton varsity team all four years. Robert, in the 11th grade, has been a swimmer since age 7. He wants to make a career in engineering, probably audio engineering.

Jodie Morgan Hartman and Jim stayed overnight in Camden, SC, in February with Harriet (Pooch) Porcher Barnwell and Bob. The couples hadn't been together in 22 years. The Barnwell son and one married daughter are in Camden, while the other married daughter is in New York. Jodie attended the Architectural Symposium at SBC in March and pronounced it "fantastic!" Betty (Zu) Zulich Reuter called from Towanda, PA, to tell Jodie she had been playing a piece Jodie played in her senior piano recital. Harriet (Lovah) Willcox Gearhart stopped off in Seattle, WA, on her return from an Alaskan trip to see Mary Vinton Fleming '46.

Jane McJunkin Nelson and Oscar live in Lewisburg, WV, but travel extensively to cattle shows and conventions.

Martha Holton Glesser was in Mexico in October and in Ireland with her daughter-in-law in February. Harriet Hazen Schmoeller is retiring from teaching at school's end. Clyde is already retired, and with married son Joe in Richmond, more trips will be made east. Mary Kathryn Frye Hemphill and Sam get to their home at Grandfather Mt., NC, mostly on summer weekends. Their daughter Kathryn Hemphill '68 is an attorney in Newland, NC. Son Todd and his wife, both attorneys, live in Cary, NC. Their other son, Steve, and his wife live on Long Island. Ellen is in France and has a career as actress and singer with a theater company.

Wylene Chapman Saylor and Henry went from St. Petersburg to Johns Island, FL, to be guests of Hilda Hude Chapin and Ed at the same time Anne Dickson Jordan and Chick were there. Dickson is still in real estate at Virginia Beach. Wylene's four sons are married and two live in St. Pete. There are seven grandchildren — four boys and three girls. Henry has been chairman of the Republican Party of Florida since 1980. He served in the Florida Senate from 1966-'78 and didn't run again.

Susan Buchanan Coupland and Randy and Mary Frances Buchanan Flowers '39 had three weeks in China last October before seeing son Randy and his wife, who are in Malaysia with an R. J. Reynolds Tobacco subsidiary. Perk Traugott Brown continues teaching at Norfolk Academy. Her second grandson was born last August. Diddy Gaylord Thompson and Arthur are enjoying his retirement. They divide their time between Staten Island and Long Island. Frances Bickers Pinnell is active in the Virginia Museum of Art in Richmond and has gone on buying trips for the children's gift shop. Her daughter is married to a stockbroker and lives there. Her married son is completing his medical residency.

Jane Clarke Morrow has been with the Louisville Automobile Club (AAA) for 12 years as a travel counselor, escorting about three tours a year. She did a family tour to Texas in April, conducted a trip to Opryland in June, and will do another tour in the fall. For her own vacation in August she was planning to sail on the Veracruz from Montreal to New York City with stops at Quebec City, Halifax, and Cape Cod. Her "wonderful" grandson Bill Morrow, IV, is almost 5.

nia to visit her son's family with four more grandchildren. She was exhausted by Disneyland, Sea World, and the San Diego Zoo, but the children "had a ball!" Ann's oldest son, now a Marine major, competed in the Ironman Triathlon in Hawaii last October, finishing in the top quarter. Ann hopes to go out to watch his second try — though she thinks he's crazy.

Virginia Decker Dudley is happy to be a grandmother at last. Oldest son Jim and his wife Kathy, who live in Albuquerque, are the parents of a 7-month-old boy. Ginny loves babysitting.

Gloria Lupton Tennon and Harry came to Chattanooga for Betty Avery Duff's daughter's wedding on April 9th. The three children, one son and two daughters, are married and live in Ft. Worth. One daughter has a quarter horse farm outside the city and the son works for Merrill Lynch. There are two grandchildren with two more expected soon. Tutti Hall Peckham and Bob drove over from Asheville for the Duff wedding, as did I. Mill Carolers Healy and Bill gave a brunch with mostly Briarites. Jane Williams Wann's ('44) son Jim has written, produced and acted in his two off-Broadway plays in NYC. Sarah Temple Moore and Tom are busy with two art galleries. Hedy Edwards Davenport and Joe divide their time between Lookout Mountain and their Florida condominium. Joe is a valuable asset on the SBC Board.

Ellen Gilliam Perry and Marvin live in Charlottesville, and he is also a Board member. Edie Page Gill Breakall's youngest of five, James, is finishing his second year at Guilford Col. here in Greensboro. Daughter Page Breakall Beeler '79 and her husband recently moved to Martinsville, VA. Edie Page is Admissions representative on the Alumnae Board. Lyn Dillard Grones, chairman of planned giving, is another board member. Audrey Betts, chairman of Region IV, North and South Carolina, also serves. Julia Mills Jacobsen, director of government relations and sponsored programs, gave a report. El Perry, Audrey, Lyn, Edie Page, and Julie attended the farewell dinner for the Whitemans given by the Board of Overseers.

The only way to keep our class informed about our activities is for all of you to send me news. Please write!

Patricia Brown Boyer (Mrs. Jean Per-

At a meeting some months ago of class secretaries, chaired by Carolyn Bates (who edits, checks and miraculously puts all these notes ... from 1910 to 1983 ... into wonderfully readable, correctly spelled and grammatically proper order), I was somewhat abashed to hear a discussion of how one should organize items in the column. Some opted for alphabetical order; others suggested geographical ... from east to west or vice-versa. Well, this had never occurred to me, I'm afraid, and so I will just report our news in very random order, as usual, as your nice cards come to hand (actually, I shuffle them!). If your name begins with A, or if you live on one coast or the other, I apologize for not putting you at the beginning. Each of you counts equally, and dearly, in these pages, in my heart and to Sweet Briar.

Joan McCarthy Whiteman reports that Wes has retired from the bank after 31 years and joined an investment banking firm in Chicago, after an interim vacation on a Royal Viking cruise from San Francisco through the Panama Canal to Florida. Son Don is to be married this summer, and Joan and Wes approve of their new daughter-in-law! And yes, Joan it will be our 35th!

Mary Fran Brown Ballard had a visit with Marilyn Hopkins Bamborough and her husband Jim last fall when they came east for a family reunion. Mary Fran's mother, Marie Brede Zimmerman '24, joined in talk of Sweet Briar. Mary Fran passed her Pennsylvania Bar exam this spring. Congratulations!

Judy Baldwin Waxler and Bill took his mother and her father to Charleston, SC, where they had dinner at Yeaman's Hall with Stevie Stevens Webb and Rutledge and then heard the Webbs in concert with the Society for the Preservation of Spirituals. Judy sounds busy with skiing, golfing, swimming and tennis (weekly with Peggy Cromwell Taliaferro). She has recently developed a program for elementary school career awareness, photographed people participating in over 100 occupations, and studied and interned in counseling; she is also demonstrating how to teach science through cooking, based on her book, The Science Cookbook.

Stevie also had a visit from Alice Trout Hagan and daughter Kitty. Alice's son Dr. Hugh J. Hagan, III, and wife Ann are living on Sullivan's Island while Hugo serves his orthopaedic residency at the Medical U. of SC. The Webbs plan to go to Columbia in May for daughter Mary's graduation from the U. of S.C. Law School.

Our former Mayor, Katie Cox Reynolds, has finished her term as alumnae representative on the Board of Overseers. "An interesting time to be on the Board," she says, "and gratifying to watch applications grow as word of Sweet Briar's excellence spreads." Katie still enjoys her job handling corporate philanthropy and community involvement for Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company.

Ann Doar Jones is happy to have her son Frank, Jr., and new wife living in Richmond, since daughter Bev has moved with her husband John and their little girl Katie to far-off Massachusetts. John is a Ph.D. in electrical engineering working with a high-tech company near Boston.

Sallie Legg De Martine and Bob are liking life in the far-off north, Rhode Island. She has taken up portraiture at the Rhode Island School of Design. They had dinner with Jackie Tappen Kern and Julius last year.

Many of you promise to come to Sweet Briar for reunion in 1984, and I hope all those promises will be kept!

Anne Bush Train promises! Her son Kirk is teaching at UVA Architectural School, so she can combine trips. On her last visit, she went through Richmond and saw Libby Trueheart Harris and Caroline Casey McGehee. Anne says they cackled as though 1949 were only yesterday (well, Anne, it may have been the day before yesterday!).

Judy Easley Mak is thrilled with her new career in real estate ("don't know why I didn't do it years ago!"). Husband Dayton is in the travel business. The Mak's daughter Holly is still with the Abu Dhabi International Bank in Washington, an assistant vice-president, no less, and she has received her master's degree in international economics with emphasis on the Middle East; her husband Marc Hersh deals with the poorest countries, helping them establish firm economies via his firm. First Washington Associates. Judy sees Flip (Ann) Eustis Weimer often and gets glimpses of Caroline Casey McGehee and Marie Musgrove McCrone from time to time.

Caroline reports that Carden was married last fall to Kristine Maier, coordinator for the acclaimed Renwick Gallery (Smithsonian) exhibition, "Celebration." Stephen and Ruth are expecting the McGehee's first grandchild in July. My sources on campus tell me that Caroline presented a wonderful exhibition and talk on her miniature book collection for the Friends of the Library (maybe she'll share it with all of us in a future issue of the Alumnae Magazine). She, and I as well, wish that many of you would join the Friends of the Library. It's a small donation that does a lot for a fine organization; you'll get an interesting newsletter, too.

June Eager Finney, after a nice compliment to your secretary and editor, writes only of her children: Dan is a banker with Maryland National Bank and father of one son — another was on the way in June '83; Mac is cameraman for TV eye-witness news. His wife Molly (whose mother is an alumna) works at a local florist; Angus is finishing law school and working for a law firm; daughter Lee is to be married and is teaching at St. Paul's School for girls before moving to Richmond in June.

Our biology major, Alice Trout Hagan, is reading Shakespeare every week, of all things, between tennis, bridge, vestry duties and gardenclubbing (not to mention jaunting here and there). "My tongue hangeth out," she says, though she is learning to say no (she says!).

Jody Becker Taylor says that two of her six children were married last year, her son Martin in July and Barbara in October.

The Newport News, VA, Press, Jan. 30, 1983, reported the following:

In a reassignment of corporate offices, Mrs. Dorothy B. Duffy has been elected editor of the Daily Press and The Times-Herald, succeeding Mr. Raymond B. Bottom Jr., who has been editor since the retirement of Mrs. Dorothy Rouse Bottom.

Mrs. Duffy, who is a graduate of Sweet Briar College, has served as assistant to the editor since 1978. Prior to that time, she was a trade book editor for Scribner's, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, and other publishing houses in New York City.

Dot, in a note dated Nov., 1982, says: "Same news as before. Continuing to commute between NYC and Newport News to work at The Daily Press, Inc. My husband John is writing music for a television series, 'Civilization and the Jews,' the first segment to be aired in late 1983. My son Whitney Gilkey has married Laura Larson. They now live in Newport News where he produces, writes, shoots local programs for Cable TV. My own studies have been a bit in abeyance, though I'm still a master's candidate in 16th century English history at Columbia. My work at newspapers is demanding and exciting."

Carolyn Cannady Evans, with whom I shared many hours dissecting frogs (and even more Eskimo Pies at Boxwood Inn, to recuperate!), reminds us again that her nice husband Hervey's last name is Evans, not Jones. Well, Emily Pruitt and Ann Doar are now Joneses, but that's no excuse! I'll treat you to an Eskimo Pie, if you'll forgive me, Carolyn.

Ellen Ramsey Clark says that S.B. Day in Memphis was exciting, with Dean Fontaine Belford speaking. Ellen took her 16-year-old daughter Allison, who will be a senior next year and is interested in Sweet Briar. Older children are Ken III, who works for Wachovia Bank in NYC; Ellen, a stock-broker with Smith-Barney in Dallas; and Ramsay and Marshall, with Memphis firms.

Marilyn Hopkins Bamborough and Jim enjoyed visits with Sally Strickland Johnson in Cincinnati and Mary Fran Brown Ballard and Don in Wayne, PA. Their son Tom graduated from Hope College and spent the summer traveling in Europe and attending Hope's Summer School in Vienna. Marilyn and Jim cruised the Caribbean in February.

Carter Van Deventer Slatery spent three weeks in Europe, part with friends in France seeing the flooded Loire and inundated chateaux and the rest on a Eurail pass. They went to Deventer in Holland to see where Carter's ancestors came from in the 1600s. Charles is back in Knoxville, having opened a local office of Hugh's Ft. Worth firm, Hicks. Slatery Securities: Herbert, III, is still in Knoxville.

Mimi Powell Leonard's news is so long and so traumatic that you may have to catch up with her personally during reunion. In a nutshell, the Leonard's home burned to the ground in September, 1981, and they have since rebuilt on the same foundation. They are across a ravine from Rusty and Kirkland and their three daughters. Cliff is working in Houston as a physician's assistant to an orthopedic surgeon. Bayard is working in Missoula, MT. Woody is nearly through Vet School at U. of Tennessee, making honors and working at night. Jenny and Mimi have moved back, nearby. Mimi is getting skinnier, for reunion!

Katharine Hart Belew's youngest, Kathy, graduated from St. Catherine's in June and will enter Va. Commonwealth U. in September. Her oldest, Lindsay, after graduation from Denison U. in 1979, went to work for Chemical Bank in NYC; now she will enter Harvard Business School in September to get her M.B.A.

Anne Eustis Weimer says she's had a "quiet year." Scott graduated from St. Andrew's and is now at the U. of SC in marine science. The Weimers had a splendid evening with Margy Jones Kennan (with whom Ann went to Europe in '48) and Bill when they took Scott to Columbia.

Betsy Dershuck Gay's son Frank graduated from Duke in May and is now at Emory Medical School. Jack will be a senior at Lehigh, and Bill will be a freshman at the U. of Richmond. Betsy still teaches watercolor at the Pelham Art Center and in Briarcliff, NY. She participates in shows and exhibitions in New York City and Westchester and is a member of Knickerbocker Artists and the National Assoc. of Women Artists.

Vidmer Megginson Downing writes that her son Stanley, a graduate of the NY School of Design, expanded his interior design business in Mobile by buying a Sambo's Restaurant and opening a store — gifts, accessories, furniture and design studio. Vidmer has done all buying with him and loved it. Son Fred, a graduate of Amherst, has bought and restored an Inn in Chestertown, NY. George and Vidmer had a wonderful trip to New Zealand and Australia in the fall. "Children input certainly enriches life," concludes Vidmer. We're all learning that, I think.

Virginia Anderson Simons has given up some of her activities in Junior League and Pi Beta Phi in favor of grandmothering! Her daughter and banker husband have three boys, ages 7, 4 and 2, who are now living in Ft. Worth after seven years in Dallas and two in London. The Simonses' son is a corporate lawyer in Houston; he and his wife have a three-year-old daughter and expect another child "this month" (April).

Pat Brown Boyer traveled to Aurora, NY, last winter to interview Sweet Briar's new president, Nenah Elinor Fry — super job, and we all feel that we know President Fry better, thanks to Pat. She and her husband Jean also traveled to Japan last December, Pat's first visit there. "The country is beautiful," Pat says, and "and the Japanese people very friendly."

Sally Melcher Jarvis is still assistant to the director of the North Museum at Franklin and Marshall College. Membership is her responsibility, also planning and executing about 40 trips a year and leading some of them. Stevie did a wonderful job for Sally's group in Charleston. This year Sally led a tour to California to see the whale migration and saw waves and mudslides instead! "Did you know," she asks, "you have to have an appointment to see elephant seals on their breeding grounds? Through Tidketron!" Sally and John have four children, all out of the nest but living nearby, so they can have the fun of baby-sitting their two grandchildren.

Preston Hodges Hill and Gene were touring the West Coast last fall while we were applauding at Sweet Briar as Pres received the Alumna of the Year Award for 1982, in absentia! They went to England this past spring, after attending her brother's wedding in Washington, DC, in April. Gene, III, and wife Joan moved in May to Las Vegas where he will be head administrator at the county hospital. Margaret started her M.B.A. at U. of Denver in June, and Ginny is finishing her Master's in Geology at Colorado School of Mines.

Lindsay Coon Robinson writes that she is enjoying being a Doncaster fashion consultant on a part-time basis. Her 2½-year-young grandson lives nearby and "it goes without saying that he is both precocious and handsome — will be willing (for a fee) to provide his address to any 49ers with granddaughters!"

Marie Musgrove McCrone has been busy having two more grandchildren — that makes six! "It was fun," she writes, "being with Judy Easley Mak and daughter and Flip Eustis Weimer and John in Washington for Caroline Casey McGehee and Coleman's older son's wedding."

Jackie Tappen Kern writes of her get-together with Sallie Legg De Marline and adds, "Sallie has turned into a tennis-playing jock! Can't believe it. I'm still my lazy old self. However, I am going to be a mother-in-law when my son Bean marries the daughter of one of my bridesmaids. They met at a party, not through us!"

You've all heard more than enough from me, but still I have to add a few words. I'm sitting in Martha Mansfield Clement's office, finishing up these notes between meetings of the Alumnae Board here on campus. Spring has sprung, finally, and everything is beautiful — including classmates Pres Hodges Hill, Katie Cox Reynolds, Libby Trueheart Harris and Mary Virginia Grigsby Mallett. I stopped to see Alice Trout Hagan on the way down, and she drove me over. Reunion plans for Martha's class, '48, are in the air and it's contagious! I can hardly wait for ours, next year! Mark May 25-27 on your calendar.

Walter is fine, as are all four children, two sons-in-law, and three grandchildren (there will be four by the time you read this, if all goes well). You'll see pictures of them and everyone else's families next year in our class scrapbook. Start collecting them now!

Secretary

Jane Perry Liles (Mrs. George W.), P.O. Box 564, Concord, NC 28025

Fund Agent

Olivia "Sug" Cantey Patton (Mrs. Stuart), 1804 Dyson Dr., Decatur, GA 30030

Isabel Grayson Parish is still working in Hav's office and enjoying it. She and Hav have had some grand trips in the plane — to Alaska in July and the Yucatan in October where they explore Mayan ruins. Oldest son, Rob, was ordained to the Episcopal priesthood in September. Three sons are married. Hav is chief of surgery at the hospital, is president of the Albany Symphony (and also principal bassoonist), and is studying karate. Isabel has taken up French after 30 years and bakes bread in her spare time.

Nan Locke Rosa is working at two part-time jobs — she is still directing tour guide service and has recently gone "professional" as a travel consultant with a travel agency. She says it is absolutely more fun to put people, places, and pocketbooks together.

Janie Pieper Meredith writes she and Bill have had an exciting year traveling in Italy and New York (spent the night with Liz Gibson Brooks). Janie says Liz is as young and gay as ever. Son Massie and his bride live in Savannah. Chris is a stockbroker with Johnson Lane in Savannah and is marrying in April. Claire — still sky-diving — has the record on women's free-fall. Molly is a junior at Hollins.

Sarah Ironmanger Greer writes that oldest son, David, who is at Marshall Wythe School of Law, recently married. Jane is a travel agent and Sara is a junior at SBC, majoring in English and theater arts. She is vice president of Paints and Patches and spent the winter term in London. Husband Jack is an attorney in Norfolk.

Jackie Lowe Young and husband Dick took a trip to Peru — exploring Lima, Cuzco and Macchu Pichu. Iquitos and a safari camp in the Amazon jungle. She is a director of the PBS station and "shepherded" the Annie Premier Fund Raiser. Second son, Tom, graduated from N. C. State with a degree in communications but is staying on for a degree in business administration.

Eleanor Johnson Ashby's daughter Elizabeth is married and living in Woodbury, CT. Stuart is holding down the Florida part of the family. Son Linden has finished his second year at Neighborhood Playhouse in NYC. Her husband is in patent medicine business and cable TV.

Liz Ray Herbert Hessler remarried in 1976. She has four sons, two married. The youngest graduates from high school this year, and the next, from college. She is in the process of learning the art of word processing. Hobbies include golf, tennis, and cross country skiing.

Constance Werly Wakelee wrote from Guilford, CT, of her enjoyment of the 30th reunion and her interest in an alumnae college at SBC.

Our class extends its deepest sympathy to Janie Dawson Mudwilder in the death of her husband Bob.

Ginger Timmons Ludwick sent a picture of her very handsome family in Bavaria.

M.A. Mellen Root and John have moved to Greenville, SC. Daughter Frances stayed in Atlanta with E. F. Hutton. David is a freshman at Anderson College, and Randy played football at W & L.

Joan Brophy Tyree and Tom's son Johnny is going to West Point in the fall. Tommy graduates from college in the spring and is going to work for Morgan Guaranty. Billy is taking spring semester in France. David, the only one at home, is in the seventh grade.

Katzy Bailey Nager and C. J.'s son Bailey graduated from Duke. George is a freshman at U. of San Diego and Dwight is at Episcopal H.S.

Kitty Guerrant Fields and Lou have gone back to Switzerland and will stay through the summer. Lou is Ambassador to the Disarmament Conference in Geneva. Kitty is Madame Ambassadors in charge of entertaining various dignitaries from V.P. Bush on down. She and Lou helped our daughter Perry land a job in Jesse Helms' office for interim from SBC. I saw her for a brief visit when we went to check on Perry.

Mary Kimball Grier writes that son Ned is attending Columbia Business School. Daughter Betsy graduated from Skidmore in May, 1982, and is working for the Bank of New England in Boston. Son Roger is a sophomore at American International College in Springfield, MA.

I have missed Dolly Wallace Hartman since her son graduated from Davidson. She has done a portrait of me and you wouldn't believe how good she made me look — a superb artist is our Dolly.

June Arata Pickett is on the board of an animal shelter and is responsible for overseeing the operation of the shelter. She is constantly bringing home furry friends. Son David is at U. Va. and Janice is a senior in high school.

Gloria Rawls Askew visited Cathy Munds Storek last summer in Tucson. Daughter Allison is a surgical resident at a New York hospital; Janice, a senior P.E. major at LSU.

Jane Yoe Duggan's daughter was married in the summer; Randi graduates from U. of Ga. in June.

Anne Green Stone lives in Carson City, NV, and raises Arabian horses.

Mary Abby Joyner Knox's daughter Eugenia graduated from high school in May.

Susannah Mingus Cone is a substitute teacher in a school library in Trenton Falls, NJ, has four children and three grandchildren, and is president of the Mammoth Chapter Embroiders Guild of America.

Carolyn White is on the Salvation Army Advisory Board and does much work for Northwestern U.

Anne Elliott Caskie is living in New Orleans, taking courses at Tulane and doing volunteer work at Children's Hospital.

Ann Lackey is a secretary in Tulsa Public Schools.

Nan O'Keefe is executive secretary of Baylor College of Medicine, is a Republican precinct chairman, does taping for the blind, and is on the boards of the Houston Symphony and Alley Theater Guild.

Katy Turner Mears's daughter Maria is at Sewanee.

Cynthia Moorehead McNair has one grandchild and says, "The empty nest phase is a challenge and such a reward!"

Shirley Rankin Dumesnil is on the boards of the Louisville Ballet, Council for Retarded Citizens, and Youth Performing Arts Council and is a volunteer at New Regional Cancer Center.

Martha Black Jordan is working on her master's at St. Johns College (Santa Fe branch), lives in Mexico, and is an interpreter translator.

Betty Moore Baker is a museum assistant at Allentown Art Museum and is starting a computer course.

Dale Hutter Harris' daughter Frances married an Englishman, John Martin Russell, in May.

We have another judge in our class. Kirk Tucker Clarkson's husband, Jack, was sworn in as circuit court judge on March 18, in Norfolk. Congratulations.

Cathy Munds Storek and family went to Prague for Ben's niece's wedding. She said the young people were shocked by the economy of Czechoslovakia, but loved their many relatives there. The Storeks came home with a new Mercedes. Cathy and Ben are both involved with foreign affairs groups.

Courtney Willard Conger's son Ford graduated from Sewanee in May. Daughter Georgianna is going to SBC in the fall. Courtney is raising horses, Labradors, whippets and Jack Russel Terriers.

Dur son Jock is at N. C. State U. and, needless to say, was elated over the NCAA basketball finals. He has finished building the house at the farm, and it is a dream. Perry has been accepted in the abroad program and is off to Paris in September for the 1st semester. George and I plan to visit her for our 25th anniversary.

See you at the Reunion!

Secretary
Marjorie Whitson Aude (Mrs. Fritz),
RD 3, Box 199, Geneva, NY 14456

Fund Agent
Charlotte Heuer DeSerio (Mrs. Francis W.), 975 Lafayette Rd., Bryn Mawr, PA 19010

Many thanks for your cards and fund flaps with news. Reunion is still getting rave reviews, but some of you silent ones need to write about your lives, even if they seem humdrum to you. I may resort to inserting tidbits from our Reunion Scrapbook.

Jackie Ambler Cusick, Bethesda, MD, reports that she, Helen Smith Davenport, Peggy Jones Steuari '54, and others from SBC and Randolph-Macon had a marvelous trip to Paris, Normandy and Monte Carlo studying impressionists and post-impressionists on an SB Alumnae tour called "Light and Landscape in French Art and Gardens." Also, Jackie's son Ambler was to graduate in June from W. and L.

Bari Baker Hart and daughter Heather spent last school year in Dallas instead of home in Athens, TX, so Heather could attend Hockaday School and perhaps be accepted by SBC. Trouble was, the experience of an all girls school persuaded her not to apply to an all women's college. But Bari had fun absorbing culture and signed up for some classes towards becoming an individual testing specialist. Bill travels extensively in his oil job. Son Lindsay is at U. Tex. in Austin, and son Baker, at Texas A. and M.

Alice Barnes Knight, Rocky Mount, NC, had to miss reunion to finish up her M. A. in Education at East Carolina U. She enjoys her teaching at Edgecombe Technical Col., and son Guy is at N.C. Wesleyan Col., both in Rocky Mount. Son Jeff loves UNC-Chapel Hill.

Jane Best Wehland, Elkridge, MD, says Jane Lee will start her third year at U.VA this fall, and son Charles was to graduate from there in May and start law school in the fall.

Chips Chao Pai, Livingston, NJ, and five others held a mini-reunion on a weekend together after the class one last year and she recommends them for all, saying "Friends are too precious to see only every 5, 10 or 25 years." How true. Surgery prevented her from giving the talk at Founder's Day last fall, but she's fine now. She and David spent several days in Sanibel Island, FL, in January with Virginia Marks Page and Jim. Chips finished her agreed three-year stint as chair of her department and loves resuming full-time teaching, research, and writing.

Fran Childress Lee writes from Jacksonville, FL, of an interesting trip to South Africa and Zimbabwe in June '82 in connection with their cattle ranch. Their son Lewis, Jr., was to be married in March, and daughter Ann, in July. Fran guesses she could be called a child advocate and keeps busy with volunteer work, mainly for agencies working with children.

When Elaine Dies Colmer wrote from Memphis, TN, she was anticipating visiting relatives in Charlottesville for Garden Week in April. Son John went to U.VA summer school last year and stayed to work under a French chef at The Galerie, a country French restaurant. Elaine herself is Cooking School Director for John Simmons, Inc.

Last year Carter Donnan McDowell, Richmond, VA, missed reunion because one son was graduating in Charlottesville. She wrote she was working on a Master's in urban planning at Va. Commonwealth U. She and Charles, a surgeon, also have two other sons. Diane Duffield Wood, Dak Brook, IL, finds her new job in a bookstore provides more regular hours and wages than did substitute teaching. Duffy is our class president now, for your forgetful types.

Speaking of forgetful, Dot Duncan Hodges wants the class polled on how many have faulty memories and/or leaky bladders yet. Other than that, she is greatly enjoying the challenge of being partner in Hodges/Taylor Art Gallery, presumably in Charlotte, NC.

Mariella (Day) Gibson Kerr and Whitney live in Kansas City, MO, where he is a realtor and she claims master's degrees in PTA, scouting, carpools, Junior League and Sunday School! Day's newest interests have been historic preservation and a vegetable garden, so I can understand their buying an old house in the "inner city"; but she complains about all the driving to the suburbs for the activities of their live children. Since their ages are 16 to 24, that is mostly past now, but I know the feeling since we have six kids and live about eight miles from town.

Suzanne Gipson Farnham and Barney live in Baltimore, MD, where she conducts Parish Weekends and Retreats and he is Rector of an Episcopal church. She enclosed a sample brochure about her work which sounded very thought-provoking. They have a daughter, Wendy, who probably has graduated by now from Trinity Col. in Connecticut, and three sons: Brent, Austin, and Whitney who were 15, 17, and 18 last year. They summer in a lake cabin in the Adirondack Mountains in New York state.

Linda Falvey Rowland lives in Washington, DC, now since her husband Bob is a presidential appointee, and their daughter Licie '81 works at the White House. Daughter Linda will be at SBC this fall.

Their daughter Elizabeth's wedding in August was the highlight of 1982 for Sydney Brady Graham and Bill, who also managed a March trip to Austin, TX, to see the bride and groom and spend an evening with Carol (Kim) McMurtry Fowler and Dudley (complete with a four of Lake Austin on their sternwheeler!) The Grahams are in Galesburg, IL.

Ruth Ellen Green Calhoun and William are involved with the tour business in Natchez, MS, with their home open during the Spring and Fall Pilgrimages. She would like to see any SBC friends and says there is something of interest all year in Natchez. Ruthie was to graduate from Tulane in May; Bo is at LSU; and Ellen was a 10th grader last year at Ancover.

Dagmar Halmagyi Yon, Poway, CA, wrote that she was a district sales manager for a newspaper. For the reunion scrapbook last year, she sent a lovely photo of her daughter Laura who has finished her freshman year at San Diego State U. She was interested in ballet combined with sports medicine. Steven will be a senior in geology at the U. of Cal., Berkeley, and oldest son, Joe, married a British girl in August. From London, England, Claire Harrison Greenman sent word that she is a librarian, Barry is an oil company executive, and that she is interested in skiing, music (opera, ballet), travel, languages, Scottish dancing, gardening, and American history and literature. She sent a photo of herself and daughters Jessica, 15, and Josephine, 13, on a ski slope.

Char Heuer deSerio's biggest news is that Fran was retiring from 35 years in Civil Service on April 30, and they were to spend May in Paris in an apartment overlooking the Eiffel Tower. The Alumnae Office sent me an address change for Thelma Houk McGrory, who moved from Dak Ridge, TN, to Gaithersburg, MD, some time last summer. I also now have a Lubbock, TX, address for Yung Shin Lee (Shiney), who is Mrs. Young N. Kim. Joan Lawson Kuhns is in Louisville, KY, where Greg is a pathologist. She enjoys tennis, skiing, tutoring and is on the board of an independent school. Their kids are: Jim, 25; Ellen, 20; Anne, 19; and Hampden, 12.

Roberta Malone Henderson and Ian live in Glenview, KY, where he is a lawyer. Their kids are Wallace, 21; Ian, 18; and another (possibly Malcolm) 13. Her greatest achievement and biggest boo-boo was duck-hunting with Ian in an open small boat at D<sup>o</sup> F. She hopes soon to give up watching junior tennis tournaments.

Anne McGrath Lederer, NYC, visited her sister in Kenya in February — "a vast, beautiful country" — and daughter Sloane went to Egypt and Israel, where she spent Holy Week. Sloane was trying to choose a college for this fall. Beth McMahan Tolbert went to U. Dkla. after leaving SBC, married her longtime sweetheart Jim Tolbert, and they have three sons and a daughter. They live in Oklahoma City, OK, and Beth is President of the Assembly of Community Arts Councils of Oklahoma, which offers support services to the 38 Arts Councils in the state. Carol (Kim) McMurtry Fowler, besides being involved in running a riverboat business in the Austin, TX, area, also does political research and analysis, and runs. Her questionnaire mentions 30 miles a week, with a goal of 50!

Judith Meade Simpson and David live in Winchester, VA, where he is a District Judge. Judy says she is: a staunch Episcopalian, active in the garden clubs of Virginia and America, a flower arranger, a needleworker, a restorer of historic houses in Winchester, and she plays with water color. Their children are Billy, Lucy, and Carter.

Ann Melton Kimzey will have moved by the time you read this to Charleston (Sullivan's Island), SC, and was looking forward to being home again. She will be manager of Coles & Co., an antique dealer in Charleston and Charlotte, NC. From Irvington, VA, Elynor (Suzy) Neblett Stephens was working on all the details of a new dress shop for their resort hotel, from design and decor to labels and logo, which husband-boss Bob insists will be named "Suzy's," so that means a total commitment! Nancy Neighbors Becker, Austin, TX, has four children in college!

Lainy Newton Peters writes from Pacific Palisades, CA, that her son Mark was finishing his third year at Princeton majoring in Astrophysics and DJ-ing on the local radio station. Gregg is working on a new TV pilot at MGM studios. Last fall she and Gregg visited Epcot Center at Disney World, and in May they planned a cruise to the Greek Isles on the Stella Solaris, the ship on which they met. They also planned to see tulips in Amsterdam and the sights in Paris.

Joy Peebles Massie and Jamie farm in Goochland, VA, and take courses in horticulture. Last year she was considering putting up a greenhouse. Their children are Jim, Jr., 25; Alex, 22; and Sara, 17. Janet Pehl Eittle and husband Phil, who retired last year, recently visited Japan, included Kobe, where Phil was born, and Yokohama, where he lived until he was 18. "A fantastic trip!" says Janet.

Jody Raines Brinkley and Art claim to live in Richmond, VA, but seem to travel most of the time! They had three weeks in Portugal in the winter, had a week in Florida where they saw a lot of Marylew Cooper Redd and Lee, and visited her son Randy in New Orleans a couple of times. Randy works for Union Carbide. Daughter Derby was to graduate from UNC in May, and their youngest (Art's) will start at St. Margaret's in September, so "the last chick will be away."

Jane Rather Thiebuad, Geneva, Switzerland, is still in the business of welcoming visitors to that city, both adults and youth. She also is doing research on hospitality in the USA and would love to find a book on the history of Southern Hospitality. If you know of one, write me and I'll send you her address. Sue Roth Olson and Jerry live in Atherton, CA, where he is a physician. She listed their kids as: Susan, 24, U. Pa; Steve, 22, U. Cal. at Berkeley; Julie, 19, Rollins Col., FL; and Mike, 17, Menlo School.

Carolyn Scott Arnold was married in July '81 to Mark and they live in Bronxville, NY. He commutes to NYC as VP for advertising for the Gannett Corp., and he does marketing for the Alumnae Magazine new national newspaper USA Today. Scotty already had three kids of her own and acquired three more with this marriage, plus four grandchildren. Her daughter Susan Dillon graduated from UVA in May.

Margie Scott Johnson, Raleigh, NC, was to have two graduations in May and a wedding in June, but mostly wrote about seeing Mary "Baba" Conway Gwin last fall at a Raleigh meeting of educators. Baba is teaching at Ole Miss and working on her Ph.D. They had lunch together, "and it was as if we'd seen each other last week instead of 28 years ago!" Margie says Baba looks wonderful, has four really attractive kids, and has lost lots of her Yankee accent. They were roommates freshman year.

From Clifford, VA, Mary Landon (Pee Wee) Smith Brugh writes that their two older girls, Carter and Spencer, love working in Richmond. Carter graduated from U. Ga. and works at Investors Savings and Loan. Spencer graduated from Salem Col. and works at a child care center plus a part-time job at St. Catherine's. Lynn IV is an SAE at UVA. Mason and Mary Stuart are in schools in Lynchburg. Pee Wee still enjoys substitute teaching.

Susan Smith Friend writes for the first time in ages that she is remarried, to an investment banker named Thomas, and they live in Winter Park, FL, overlooking Lake Asceola, where they raise orchids for pleasure, not commercially. Three kids are in college "up North" and two are in high school there. Sue works in the Opera Society and has been learning to cut stained glass, with a fireplace screen to be her next project. Depending on who's home or away, she may have an extra bed and would love to hear from those enroute to Disney World or Epcot.

Polly Spessard Neblett has had a Richmond, VA, address since last summer some time, but that's all the news I have. Emily Stenhouse Downs wrote from Washington, DC, that she was buying a house in Virginia, was taking her orals for a doctorate in history in spring '83, and would then start her dissertation. She still works fulltime as Admin. Asst./Acad. Advisor for the Dept. of Economics at American U. in D.C. Her son is rooming with the son of another SBC grad at St. James School in Maryland. Eliza Stevens Baxter has moved from Virginia to Denver, CO, according to a card from the Alumnae Office.

Sandra Stingily Simpson's interests in Birmingham, AL, lie in painting, gardening, the B'ham Arts Festival, lawyer-husband Jim, and sons Evans and Karl, 22 and 15. Her reunion scrapbook photo of the family was unbelievably glamorous. What else would we expect — jeans? Carolyn Swift Fleming is a public health nurse on a hospice team in Omaha, NE, and lists interests in tennis, jogging, gardening and solar energy. Kids are Alice at Wellesley, and Will and Ed who were in high school then.

Barbara Tetzlaff sent her resume for the scrapbook, plus an attractive photo. She has a new address in Albany, CA, and a J.D. degree from U. San Francisco School of Law with heavy emphasis on tax problems, estate planning, and international business. I only remembered her riding horses and building sets for plays — wonderful!

Carol Turner Crosthwait, Waco, TX, had a wonderful time at the Ewald Scholars Symposium on Architecture at Sweet Briar. Sandra Stingily Simpson's son Evans, a senior at Vanderbilt, chauffeured her from the motel and back.

Mary Anne Van Dervoort Large and Bob were kept company in Richmond, VA, last summer by Mary Kathryn, then 11, who took riding and knitting but apparently didn't go to camp. She also plays in the bell choir. Elizabeth, 12, went to riding camp, sings in the choir, and started junior high last fall. Anne, then 15, went to sailing camp, took six academic subjects at St. Catherine's, made the soccer team, and sees her family occasionally!

Carroll Weitzel Rivers, Charleston, SC, was trying to get in shape for a May riding clinic at SBC. She doesn't mind this age mentally, but thinks physically it leaves something to be desired. She has won a few big art honors, is still trying to be the Monet of the watercolor world, and was to have a one-man show in July.

Daughter Reinette '85 loved it there but is transferring only because she wants the best in preparation for primary school education and SBC has no education major.

Anne Wilson Rowe, Fredericksburg, VA, is one of the new vice-chairmen for Fund Agents because of our class's great success last year. She quotes Sandra, "No good deed goes unpunished." Joe is a newspaper publisher, and the kids are Jeanette '79; Florence '80; Sallie, who probably graduated in May from Agnes Scott, and Josiah, IV, who must be 11 by now. Raising him, she says, is a new ball game after three girls!

Cynthia Wilson Ottaway and John moved into a new house in August of '82 and work at keeping tabs on their combined family, when they are not taking R and R in Puerto Rico, Aspen, and Key Largo. Her daughter Allison and her husband are moving to Helena, MT. Elizabeth '82 works for a commercial photographer in Indianapolis. Otto, Penn '82, enlisted in the Marines. The Ottoways' new house, by the way, is still in Grosse Pointe Farms, MI.

If you want to write me, note new box number at the start of this article.

We didn't move; the P.O. just renumbered all the boxes. I am still preaching and leading worship at various churches on occasion and find it very fulfilling. Since reunion I've lost 17 pounds — why didn't I do that sooner? Nancy wants me to sew her wedding dress and this summer I expect to have to learn how to run a computer for our farm business. Nancy's wedding is in August; Lois will start this fall at U. Rochester to study engineering (maybe optics) with a National Merit Scholarship and a Bausch and Lomb Scholarship; Lucy will finish next spring at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in computer science and then get married. Lois is valedictorian of her class of 180 and the third of our four girls to be so named. Our oldest, Laurie, is at the Geneva Agricultural Experiment Station, and Carl and Mark are 14 and 12. Fritz and I enjoyed a week in the Virgin Islands in January.

Secretaries

Janna Staley Fitzgerald (Mrs. Robert E., Jr.), 2018 Sharon Rd., Charlotte, NC 28207

Anne Worboys Buske (Mrs. Neil), 408 Sedgwick Dr., Syracuse, NY 13203

Fund Agents

Catherine Caldwell Cabaniss (Mrs. William J., Jr.), 3812 Forest Glen Dr., Birmingham, AL 35213

Judith Atkins Wall (Mrs. E. Craig, Jr.), P.O. Box 830, Conway, SC 29526

Thanks for your many postcards. I found that I couldn't wait to get home from work and check out the mail box each day. This column is a mix of information gleaned from the post cards, Christmas notes, and word of mouth.

Bee Newman Thayer and son (13) had just returned from a spring house cleaning visit to Kenmore Farm in Amherst, VA. (Remember class picnics and studying for comps at Kenmore?) Bee's oldest daughter graduated from Kent Place School in June and will attend Middlebury College in the fall, following a summer job at the Appalachian Mountain Club. Son Bill (16) is a sophomore at Delbarton School. All of the Thayers enjoyed a trip out West last summer.

Susan Cone Scott writes from Charlottesville about the ups and downs of being a single parent. She is also busy helping to develop a fashion consulting service.

In New Canaan, CT, Nancy Hall Goodale and her husband enjoyed a spring visit from Ted and Sally Mathiasen Prince. Ted was competing in the National Paddle Tennis Tournament. Sally's and Nancy's daughters play on the same women's ice hockey team at Yale. While Nancy and Sally were antique shopping in Darien, they ran into Lucy Giles Richey. The three hadn't seen each other since graduation. What a fun mini reunion! Sally has just opened her fourth boutique, The Lemon Twist Shop, in Bethesda, MD. Lucy has a daughter at Colgate.

Lou Chapman Hoffman reported having lunch with Mimi Lucas Fleming when Mimi was in New Orleans for the National Episcopal Convention. Mimi graduated from Stetson Law School on May 14, 1983. Lou edits a bank magazine. She and husband Don have two boys (14 and 11).

Lucy Canary Church is working toward a Master's degree and teaches government at George Mason U. where her husband Ranny is on the Board of Visitors. Daughter Leslie graduated from U.Va. in May '82, and son Weeks graduates from George Washington U. May '83.

For three weeks in the summer Anne Farnam attended the Attingham Summer School in England, learning about contents, architecture, and preservation of great country houses. She is the curator at Essex Institute, an historical museum in Salem, MA.

Sara Finnegan Lycett and her husband had just returned to Baltimore from a pleasure trip to Italy. While on an earlier business trip to Atlanta, Sara visited with Ann Hammond Dure who lives in Athens. Ann is busy writing short stories. Her son Beau competed in the North American Chess Championship tournament in Philadelphia.

Sheila Haskell Smith's son is at Hamilton College, daughter Kristen is at Western Reserve Academy, and Meghan (10) is still at home. Sheila and her husband stay busy with activities involving the Cleveland Orchestra.

Alicia Laing Salisbury was in Washington, DC, in March on behalf of the Kansas State Board of Education.

Sally Hamilton Staub and daughter Dabney, who is a freshman at NC State School of Design, enjoyed the Symposium on Architecture at SBC. Her son Richard, III, is a junior at UNC. The Staubs had dinner with Ginger Lutz Stephen and her husband Jim and reported that both looked "wonderful." Sally reports that Bambi Iliff is still happy in Denver.

Nancy Coppedge Lynn is enjoying her decorating business and garden club work in Atlanta. Her daughter graduated from Oldfields School and will enter the U. of Ga., where son Worth is a junior.

Marilyn Dreesman Chuang and her husband live in Hawaii. They and their three children (ages 7, 6, and 3) spend their vacations exploring the different islands. Marilyn visits periodically with Katy Mendelson McDonald '60 when Katy passes through from her home in Hong Kong.

Suzanne Carr's aunt wrote that Suzanne has married Michael Fitzgerald, Jr., and now lives in Perth, Australia.

Susie Prichard Pace sent greetings from Richmond.

Willia Fales Eckerberg and her family are looking forward to living in Bonn, Germany, where husband Lennernt will be Swedish Ambassador. Her oldest son, John (16), will be in school in the USA. While in Stockholm, Willia has been teaching adult English classes, working for the Mexican National Tourist Council, and representing East African Flying Doctors in Sweden. She will continue with the latter in Germany.

Louise Cobb Boggs writes enthusiastically about being wife, mother, and lawyer in Richmond. Louise says there are many similarities between being a lawyer and her days as a student at SBC, such as writing wills and trusts at 2:00 A.M., just as she did English papers for Sarah Ramage 23 years earlier. Louise maintains her office in her home and will continue to do so until the children (11 and 13) are older.

Penny Stanton Meyer is teaching kindergarten in Pomfret, VT. Her daughter Suzannah is a 7th grader, and son David, a freshman at Deerfield. Husband Bill has been working on North Captiva Island, FL, and the Meyers are looking forward to his being home for good soon.

Mary Denny Scott Wray writes that life is great in Houston. She and husband Michael and all six children were looking forward to joining the SBC sponsored trip to Africa (Kenya) in June. Mary Denny writes that tuitions are something — with all six children away at schools, including Bowdoin, RISDI, Amherst, U.Va., Middlesex, and Old Farms.

Chloe Lansdale Pitard has a son at W&L this year. Visiting him on parents weekend brought back lots of memories.

Anne Gregg McIver wrote from Brooklyn, where she and husband Bruce have been living in and restoring a brownstone for the past 13 years. She writes that juggling five children and two careers hasn't always been easy, but it is always interesting. Ann, after eight years of college teaching, is starting a new career as an administrator of health care services in the NYC Human Resources Agency. Bruce is Director of Labor Relations for NYC.

Judy Greer Schulz writes that she is still teaching piano, giving recitals, and decorating furniture show rooms for the semi annual markets in Lynchburg. Her daughter Cecily is SBC '85 and will be in France for her junior year.

Patti Birge Tyson wrote that SBC-ers were very much involved in the Annual Meeting of the Texas State Society in Washington, DC. Patti and Linda Falvey Rowland '57 were co-chairmen of the event, and Rue Wallace Judd was elected President. Patti has a new job as executive assistant to the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Margaret Heckler. She also hears from Annabelle Sweeney Ames, who has a gift shop in San Antonio called A Propos.

Simone Aubry has finished a year-long remodeling of her house in Sudburg, MA. She is personal secretary to Joan Kennedy, working at Mrs. Kennedy's home in Boston. The job is fascinating and involves everything from writing letters to wrapping presents.

Faith Bullis Sebring enjoyed a visit from Deeda Hill Bradford and her sons. They had not seen each other in 20 years. All four of Faith's children attend Bullis School, where Faith has been teaching algebra for four years.

Ann Sinwell Gabor and husband John celebrated their 20th anniversary with a trip to Phoenix. Their son, a student at MSU, is an avid sailor, and their daughter is active in lacrosse and field hockey. Ann is now working part time and enjoys it.

Linda McArthur Hollis wrote from Millwood, NY, of their two-month trip out West in the summer of '82. Linda spends some of her time and talent as stage manager for the Chappaqua Drama Group, plays on the town tennis team, and is active with PTA and Bible study groups.

I visited with Anne Worboys Buske and her family last fall after driving with my oldest son to his school in Washington, CT. Anne is busy in Syracuse as a Girl Scout leader and is active with the PTA, Syracuse Symphony Guild, and Opera Theater.

Bob and I had a spur of the moment visit with Celia Williams Dunn and Larry in their townhouse in historic Savannah. Celia is still very busy with her real estate company. She was looking forward to a visit with Rue Wallace Judd and Mary Denny Scott Wray in May when she, Larry, and daughter Celia visit son Laurence at Episcopal High for parents weekend.

That's all the news of 1983 for the class of '61. Thanks for sharing!

1965

Secretary and Fund Agent

Whitney Jester Ranstrom (Mrs. Lee William), 55 Rockledge Dr., Stamford, CT 06902

Many thanks to those of you who responded to my plea for news to share with our class. I have had so much fun reading about what you're doing. Let's just hope I can do it justice. Now for the news.

Dabney Williams McCoy has enjoyed being back in Richmond for the past three years. She is busy as the Public Relations Chairman for the Jr. League and is very busy keeping up with 8th grader Tim, who plays varsity golf at St. Christophers, Christopher (10), and Catherine (4), leaving her little time for an outside career. She attended an SBC reception honoring Mary K. Lee McDonald in her new position as president of the SBC Alumnae Assoc. Mary K., John, and the boys (12 and 8) have just celebrated their first year in their new passive solar home. "We love it — still lots to do, though." The boys are into soccer and scouts which should take the whole family to Canada this summer for the World Boy Scout Jamboree, followed by a cross Canada train trip. John is involved in scouting and soccer refereeing. He is now working for Lawyers Title Insurance Corp. as vice-president and general claims counsel. In addition to her new duties at SBC, Mary K. is into volunteering — United Way, Jr. League, AJL Consultant and a city committee advising the Mayor on concerns of women. In May she was named the 1983 recipient of the Barbara Ransome Andrews Award for outstanding community service and commitment.

Pryor Hale is still at Piedmont Virginia Community College in the psychology dept., but now doing more administrative work than teaching. She has a grant to support a number of projects, a major one being the restructuring of the liberal arts programs. In addition she is working on her Ph.D. Husband Hunter commutes between Charlottesville and Alexandria, VA, where he has his clinical practice in psychology.

In March, Payson Jeter Tilden moved to Alexandria where Roger is the new rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church. They see many French and American friends from their Paris days. She hopes to have a part-time job with the Dept. of Social Studies soon. The two boys are in Fairfax County Schools and enjoying the many opportunities of our Nation's Capitol.

Natalie Lemmon Parker is still in Raleigh and plans to remain. For the last two years she has been heavily involved in church work. Natalie, Joe, Karen (15) and Josh (12) vacationed last October in Hawaii. They spend as much time as possible at their shore home in Oriental, NC, enjoying Joe's sailboat — a scaled down version of a wooden Chesapeake Bay skipjack. In addition, the Parkers are adding onto their Raleigh home.

From Washington, NC, Kathleen Watson Taylor writes from her new home on the river. Carney (13) is a wrestler, Anne (18) is a horseback rider, and Sheldon is 5. All three enjoy soccer. Marshall is busy with his radiology practice.

Jane Moore Stubbs is busy with four children in New Bern, NC. Alice, their oldest, is at Andover in prep school. The whole family plays lots of tennis and the children are involved in soccer, baseball, and basketball. They also spend a lot of time at the beach. Jane hopes to take a computer course this summer.

Judy Howe Behn is in Durham, where Bob is now the director of the Institute of Policy Sciences at Duke. He is still teaching and has just published a book on decision analysis. Mark has just finished 3rd grade and loves soccer. Judy is busy sewing children's clothes, which she sells. She specializes in clothes with appliques which she designs.

From Charleston, SC, Traylor Rucker writes that she loves the area but the rain is hindering her tennis. She was looking forward to a trip to England and Scotland in May to travel with a friend who lives there.

Carole Dudley is in Atlanta and enjoying her new condominium. She received a Ph.D. from Emory in May.

Last summer all six Tates, Elvira McMillan, Al, Minnie (13), Elvira (12), Clark (8) and Edward (5) visited the southwest starting with a weekend stay at Marianne and Kenny Rogers' Malibu beachhouse and ending with a marvelous eight-mile hike into the Havasupai Canyon where they stayed on the Havasupai Indian Reservation.

Laura Haskell Phinizy will be president of the Jr. League in Augusta, GA, next year. She sees several SBC girls at the Jr. League conferences. Stewart is in real estate and loves it. Laura (15) is a sophomore in high school and loves tennis. Louise (13), a 7th grader, takes social dancing and tennis. Marion (10), a 4th grader, enjoys tap, choir, and tennis.

Lane Steele Burnett is happy in Tucker, just outside Atlanta. Bob is an independent computer consultant. They have two boys and a girl — Knox Steele (11), Wayne Randall (6) and Robyn Lane (3).

Carol Reitsnyder Rhoads went back to work full time at the U. of Ky. last June doing research on the immune system of the body. Bob is a professor of biochemistry at the University. Jennifer (14) is (we hope) a future SBC student. The boys (11 and 7) were on the local winning team, "Olympics of the Mind," and go to Louisville for the state event. All are involved in sports.

Augusta Marshall and Scott Andrews, Princeton '64, were married in Feb. 1982. She is busy with volunteer work for the Music Club and Museum in Aniston, AL.

Last summer Elizabeth Hanger Luther and family had a wonderful week of spiritual growth, rest, and recreation in Asheville, NC. Elizabeth

(7), Christina (12½) and Stevie (11) enjoyed camp. The Luthers recently moved to Evergreen, AL, and are becoming involved in the community, especially through church-related activities. SB connections have been a boon in making friends.

Anne Butler was married on Christmas Eve 1982 to Charles Stewart Hilton. She has a daughter, Chase Poindexter (7). Anne is now a full-time writer and photo-journalist. She does freelance feature work for various newspapers and magazines throughout the South and has had two books published, with a third in process. Her most recent book is a children's book of 13 stories, called Little Chase and Big Fat Aunt May. She has also ghostwritten the autobiography of an elderly Japanese-American, James Imahara — Son of Immigrants. The Hamiltons live in the country near St. Francisville, LA.

Eugenia Dickey Caldwell still enjoys her job at the USDA National Finance Center as a data base specialist. She is still dancing on pointe but "no public performances, thank God." Peter's daughter, Kimberly (14) came to live with them 1½ years ago and is doing well in school. At about the same time, Peter acquired a bloodhound named Valentine that is into everything. In addition the Caldwell's have two cats and are thinking of acquiring a parrot. Genie sings in the New Orleans Choral Group that goes every week to the old folk's homes. "It's the most rewarding volunteer work I've ever done."

Dryden Childs Murck is trying to adjust to the absence of Monie (13), who is in boarding school in Massachusetts. Egan (11), who now prefers to be called Elizabeth, wants to be a performer. She's singing in Oliver and with a group called The Singing Angels. Dryden is very active in the local theaters — Olivia in Night Must Fall, Myrtle in Mornings at Seven, and now Edith in Blithe Spirit, in which she sings her first solo. Husband Sandy is out of the country several times a year for ARDAC.

Margy Highlands Gale headed a three-day 1982 Antiques Festival. The proceeds from the Festival were given to the convalescent hospital which is part of Children's Hospital Medical Center in Cincinnati.

Susan Strong McDonald has had a good year with her new career of studio painting and teaching as well as editing the Journal three times a year. Her oldest daughter, Louise, is an AFS student in France. Angus is 5 and Elizabeth is 6. Husband Angus is involved with language education on computers.

Little more than a month before her death in July from Hodgkin's disease, Kay Richards Herrald wrote proudly of her family: 18-year-old Scott, who just graduated from high school and plans a music career; 13-year-old Teri, runner-up in the beginner Miss Iowa Majorette Contest; and husband Mark, a manager in the roto-correction department of Meredith/Burda in Des Moines, who swims a half mile daily before work. Kay knew she could count on their support in the fight against the disease which first struck in 1970 and had recently flared up again. We were saddened to learn that she had lost the brave battle.

From Dodge City, KS, Saralyn McAfee Smith writes, "On the same day (Jan. 20, 1983) our adopted daughter was born, we learned that I am pregnant!...So, at age 40, I will be a mother twice over!"

Jean Craver, Dallas, went from selling SB bulbs to all her friends to selling them houses — and then delivering each an amaryllis as a housewarming gift! She says, "Who'd have thought an interest in art and a master's in English would get put to use mainly writing contracts and ads on some of Dallas' finest homes!"

Sallie Mullins Thompson was divorced in Jan. 1982. She rejoined IBM in Houston after being away six years. Daughter Kathryn (8) is in 2nd grade, takes ballet, and is a Brownie. They enjoy two cats — Sugar and Spice.

Mary K. Peterson Kyger has a busy life with two teenagers (16 and 14) and a 2½ year old. They sail most of the year and have a weekend house on Galveston Bay. For her 40th birthday (this is the first time I have dared mention this milestone for most of us). Mary K. and Ross will spend a month driving through Europe. Ross is a cardiovascular surgeon in Houston.

Sally McCrady Hubbard is still in Houston with architect husband Charles and four teenagers (two of hers, two of his). Sally enjoys singing and writing poetry. She would love to hear from other members of the Couloir Français. Her volunteer work includes being a bilingual (Spanish) volunteer at St. Luke's Hospital in Houston.

Susan Akright Stanton is also living in Houston with husband Paul and sons Scott (13) and Mark (10). Paul works for Exxon, and Susan, for Off-shore Data Services as manager of the Research Dept. doing forecasting, market analysis and research consulting for the offshore petroleum industry. Both boys are involved in sports — basketball and soccer. Scott is on the debate team. Everyone loves skiing.

Babette Fraser has been writing fiction and last fall published her first book, an anthology entitled Her Work. Houston is experiencing a boom in literary activities, making it an attractive place for writers. Her son (9) will be a 4th grader next year.

Mona Thornhill Armistead and Bob stay busy with sons Ashly (14), Wade

(11) and Clay (3½). They have just completed a pool, spa and tennis court in their Los Altos Hills, CA, backyard. Mona is president of the Council of the Peninsula Center for the Blind and has been active in the Hospice Movement, Jr. League and school activities. She would love to hear from any of you visiting the San Francisco area.

Alice McEldowney Jones' father notified the Alumnae Office of the sad news of Alice's death on June 25 following surgery for an aneurysm in her brain. We extend sympathy to her husband and two sons in Santa Ana, CA., as well as to her parents and brother.

Kay Knopf Kaplan has retired as administrative assistant to the chairman of a food company in order to ride herd on three teenage boys — Tag (13) and stepsons Dan (15) and Scott (17). She enjoys taking art history courses and acting at the local college. She also finds time to do fundraising for the public schools. Bob has his own CPA firm and real estate dealings in Texas. The Kaplans saw England and S. France last May and plan to visit Italy this fall.

Helena Papis Rangel and Charles have another SBC prospect, Victoria, born May 5, 1982. She joins Christine (3½). Helena teaches French and Modern European history at the public high school. She still keeps horses but finds so little time to ride.

Bill and Sally Rusco Thomas are still in San Diego. Sons David (11) and William (9) are busy with soccer and baseball. Sally keeps busy with Bar Auxiliary and Jr. League.

Beth Hunt is a psychologist in private practice in Eugene, OR. This year she was honored to be elected to Who's Who in American Women, 1983. Five years ago Beth married Dr. John Alcott, a physician. They have a son, Hunt, and are expecting a second child in October. Beth and John see Mimi Vogt Macht and family periodically. Mimi and her family live in a former schoolhouse in Hood River, OR. Her husband teaches planning law at Portland State U. Boys Marlow (9) and Madison (6) are a great joy. Mimi has been a Cub Scout den mother for two years.

"Greetings from the Pacific Northwest" comes from Trudy Dowd Hatch. Ed continues to teach at the U. of Washington and Trudy has started on her Master's in Marital and Family Therapy at Seattle Pacific U. She loves seeing Blair Both who is four hours away in Canada. Ellie Crockett Jeffers and Lee visited last summer. "It was fun catching up..."

From Paris Bonnie Chapman McClure writes they have lived there for four years. "the longest we have been anywhere..." She and her husband, a town planner with his own office, have one daughter and a tame rabbit. Since leaving the US in 1966, the McClure's have lived in England, Northern France, Southern France near Aix-en-Provence, and Cambridge, MA, while going to Harvard.

Jean Murray McDermid is busy with Catriona (6) and Finlay (3), a bundle of energy. She does part-time lecturing in chemistry and biology. When she has time, Jean helps her husband Len extend their cottage by putting bedrooms in the attic. Someday she hopes to revisit the U.S. and SBC.

Jean Inge Cox had the opportunity of meeting Sweet Briar Alums in and around London when she hosted a luncheon for Dean Belford. "She is absolutely delightful." She and Archie love London after 5½ years, but Christopher is eager to return to America. The Coxes are off to Southeast Asia in May. Beth Hunt writes that Jean will follow Archie and Chris on their bicycles across part of the U.S. this summer. (Jean will be in a car.)

Now back to my area of the country. Mibs Sebring Raney resigned from her job at a social service agency. She then started a weekly hot lunch/speaker program at her church for older people. This summer she will teach a psychology of aging course at a local college. Mibsey will be 16 this summer and that means "driving for her and grey hairs for parents."

Katie Wood Clarke and Dick are still active in Marriage Encounter in Massachusetts, and in February they had a beautiful trip to Barbados, West Indies, to help with the international outreach of Marriage Encounter. Katie continues to enjoy her work as a middle school guidance counselor. Douglas (16) and Christopher (14) are students at the Lawrence Academy in Groton, MA. Lisa (20) works in New Hampshire as a nurse's aide in a rehabilitation center for handicapped people.

Susan Hobbs Crowder is an artist and sculptor. She has had shows in Washington, New York and London. Herbert is with Citibank in NYC. They have two sons, Jeffrey (6) and Andrew (4).

Chris Kilcullen Thurlow lives at ice hockey rinks. Mike (10) is a state All-Star Hockey player and competes as far away as Canada. Katie (12) is a musician (flute and piano) and vocalist. She and Chris sing with the St. Catherine's Choir and are going to England next summer to sing at Canterbury Cathedral. Steve is a block trader with First Manhattan & Co. The whole family is active in sports and travels extensively. This summer they are hosting a child from Northern Ireland at their home on Long Island Sound.

And now for me. Lee and I are both very busy with our jobs at IBM. Both of us are doing more business travel than we would like at the present time. We are looking forward to the visit of Stacy (14), his daughter, for the summer. We'll return with her to Montana in August so that I can see, for the first time, that part of the country. I am really looking forward to that. We live one block from Long Island Sound in an older house with lots of character. Our spare time is spent on remodeling, fixing, painting, etc. — all the things you get with an old house.

Don't forget 1985. That's our reunion year. Start planning now to make it the best ever.

1969

Secretary

Nancy Wendling Peacock (Mrs. Thomas C.), 3410 West Pace's Ferry Ct., Atlanta, GA 30327

Fund Agent

Peggy Davis Molander (Mrs. Peggy D.), Director of Development, Friends School, 5114 North Charles St., Baltimore, MD 21210

Four down and one to go! Next year one of you lucky "readers" will get this fascinating job. My daughter is amazed at all the mail I receive each spring. I am extremely grateful to all of you who answered my urgent plea for news. My article for the fall magazine has to be written and sent to SBC by May 1st. I will share your latest news, listing maiden names in alphabetical order.

First on the list is Joan Adriance Mickelson. She and Charlie still live in Athens, OH, where he continues to teach intensive English at Ohio U. Their daughters, Sara (8) and Kelly (6), are as active as kids that age can be. Their son, Cameron (2½), died in September from an unknown virus. Joan, however, is pregnant and expecting a boy in May. She invites anyone traveling near Columbus to visit her.

Bryan Alphin Bente is working on new instrument designs at one of Hewlett-Packard's analytical divisions. This job involves product definition, software development for microprocessors, mechanical design, and chemical performance testing. She and husband Paul have similar jobs at HP and gladly share responsibilities of their year-old son Paul IV (a.k.a. Ricky). We can all relate to Bryan's lamenting "Oh for the days when time-management meant leaving enough time to change for dinner in the refectory!"

Back in Atlanta, Ann Arnspiger Canipe and I find our lives get closer each year. We have lived in Atlanta since graduation, worked in the same volunteer groups, and enjoyed our playgroup for our preschoolers. Now our daughters are enrolled in the same private school; Ginny (6½) is presently in a pre-first class. As of January, Ann is the bookkeeper and investment advisor for my husband's construction consulting firm! It is a half-day job, so Ann is still free to carpool and continue her volunteer work, especially with the Atlanta Junior League. Ann's husband Kent is now a vice-president with the Trust Company Bank. Kent and Ann bought a beautiful new home the first of the year. When not landscaping this summer, they plan to return to the Carolina beach.

Ginny Kay Baldwin Cox and Tommy have the prettiest daughters for any one family! Elizabeth (7), Katie (4), and Ann Stuart (1) keep Ginny Kay busy 24 hours a day. They hope 1983 will bring the end to five years of construction projects around their lovely lake home in Poquoson, VA.

In Chappaqua, NY, Bev Bassett Kimmel has left investment banking for motherhood. She and husband William have two wonderful sons: Brad (2) and Kevin (6). Taking care of children and a golden retriever has changed her life dramatically.

Nancy Bateman Swisher resides in Alexandria, VA, and has a job as patent examiner in the U.S. Patent Office. She specializes in computer chips, video discs, and medical procedures. Nancy also finds time to be president of the American Needlework Guild Northern Virginia Chapter, a certified and active teacher of Scottish Country Dancing, and a supervisor on the staff of Fishnet Ministries. Nancy has one son, Chip, who is 13.

Liz Beach Baker's life is busy with her three children; Carrie (10), Hunter (7), and Frazier (2½). Liz is currently placement chairman for the Jr. League and the publicity chairman for Le Bonheur Children's Hospital. Liz and husband Tom still reside in Germantown, TN, where he is counsel for First Tennessee Bank. Liz reports that they keep in touch with Virginia through Tom's present job as president of the W&L Alums.

The award for the most interesting job goes to Beth Beckner Henke, who is the training unit coordinator for INTRAH (International Training in Health). Beth enjoys being based in Chapel Hill and yet traveling to Africa via Paris, Rome, or London. She just recently returned from Somalia, where she trained public health nurses in the production and use of visual aids. She was also in Kenya mostly for work but managed to get charged by a male elephant on a visit to Masai Mora game park.

Betsy Blackwell Laundon admits that her lifestyle changed this year when her daughter Beth (6½) entered first grade. Betsy's free time has been given to volunteering for the church and SBC. For the church, she leads a Bible study group, helps with the downtown soup kitchen, and is a member of the Vestry of Holy Cross Church in Simpsonville, SC. For SBC, Betsy has been bulb chairman of General Clubs, a member of the Golden Stairs Committee, and a Vice Chairman for Fund Agents. Next year she will be chairman of the Golden Stairs Committee, an Executive Board position. The Laundons are also moving back to Atlanta.

A brief but happy note came from Avis Brown Yount in Augusta, GA. She and husband Peter were expecting another child in August. Their daughter Lindsay is now three. Avis and Peter continue to practice medicine in Augusta.

A wedding announcement two years late because of my deadline! Courtney Cash married Lloyd Montague Mustin II, a naval officer stationed on the U.S.S. William V. Pratt in Charleston, SC, February 20, 1981. The wedding in Richmond was a great reunion of SBC girls. Courtney and Lloyd lived in Newport, RI, for six months before moving to Charleston, where they found a home in the historic section on the East Battery. They are anxiously expecting their first child in October.

Hattie Coons Babbitt still reigns as First Lady of Arizona, as her husband Bruce won his re-election as Governor. She is still practicing law with the firm Robbins and Green and has recently joined the Board of Directors of Great Western Bank. Bruce, Hattie, and their boys, Christopher (7) and T.J. (5) all enjoy skiing and visiting their newly purchased cabin in the Sedona red-rock country north of Phoenix.

I finally heard from one of the Bum Chums — Nancy Crawford Bent in Wellesley, MA, where she is still working part time in Labor and Delivery and substitute teaching childbirth classes. Nancy reports two exciting bits of news: first, she bought a horse for herself and stabled it less than a mile down the road from Ridgely Fuller and her horse. Secondly, Nancy is expecting her second child in September, just in time for daughter Adele's fourth birthday.

Chester Springs, PA, has one busy citizen — Barbara Duffield Vaskas. She is not only the mother of two active boys (5 and 2), but also auditor for the township, member of the boards of local Watershed Association and Horse Show, and treasurer of Church Fund and school mother's association. When not doing any of the above, Barb says she just sits "around reading penny novels and eating bonbons."

Phyllis Girard teaches Humanities to grades 7-12 in the gifted program run by the Bucks County Intermediate Unit, and she also works on curriculum development.

Cathy Hall Stopher is as busy as she ever was. In June she becomes president of the Junior League of Louisville. She reports that her most interesting volunteer project this year has been to plan the Christmas event for Louisville — The Charles Dickens Night. Cathy and Ed have two children: a daughter Marshall (7) and a son Charles (4).

Go to the Charlotte Eye, Ear, and Throat Hospital and you will find Dr. Claudette Harloe Dalton. She loves her new job, is building a new house, and is pleased with her son Gordon's adjustment to his new school. Claudette and Gordon recently took a wonderful trip to Disney World. She dined with Frere Murcheson Gornto on Frere's recent business trip to Charlotte. Claudette says Frere is doing great things for historic Wilmington. The two of them are already planning our next reunion; Claudette is writing "the song" to the tune of "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Campdown Races," or "Old Folks at Home!"

Bettye Hobbs Pruitt received her doctorate in American History from Boston U. She has published several books on Pre-Revolutionary Massachusetts which are used as reference books in schools and libraries. She is now studying on a fellowship at Harvard. Bettye and husband Bruce live in Exeter, NH, where he teaches at Philips Exeter Academy. They have two little girls, Sarah (5) and Katie (1).

Kay Hutton Eadie works for Coldwell Banker Commercial Real Estate Services, leasing and selling office buildings in downtown Nashville. She has two boys, Baker and Hutton.

Kim Johnson Smith and husband Jim claim Arlington, VA, as their home even though he apparently travels all over the country all year long. Kim quit office work but not work, as her days are filled with taking care of son Jamie (2) and doing volunteer work with the Animal Shelter, the Junior Guild, the Service League, and Children's Hospital!

Blair Josephs Rohrer and Ivon have been busy fixing up their new mountain home and hiking with their children: Anna Blair (4), Ivon, III (5), and Katherine (17). They live in Charlotte, NC.

After last fall's magazine went into circulation, I received my first class note from Melinda Koester Lopez in Tampa, FL. She is the executive director of a non-profit agency that provides volunteer services to Hillsborough County schools. In addition she is completing an executive M.B.A. program. Last year Melinda, her sister, and their children spent one month traveling around Europe, where they met her parents. In 1983 Melinda, husband Robert, and daughter Suzy (6) will house swap in London!

I have so much news from Dr. Elizabeth Lewis that it will be hard for me to condense it. First of all, she is now happily married to Dr. David Thier; they will remain in San Francisco where they both have private practices. After completing her fellowship in child psychiatry. Elizabeth was one of six people (out of hundreds of applicants) accepted in the C.G. Jung Institute; in five or six years she will be an analyst. To escape the medical world, she and David go skiing in Jackson Hole, WY, and Sun Valley, ID. They are also occupied with a one-room addition project on their home.

Mary Mahan Marco and husband Bob had their second son, John Randolph, in December. Their other son, Robbie, is now three. Since Bob has been on sabbatical this past year, they have been able to take many trips: Disney World last September, the Maryland beach in May with Sue Roessel Gibson and husband Gene, and Williamsburg in June to celebrate their 5th wedding anniversary.

Carolyn Mapp Rogers' life in Atlanta is constantly busy with the many activities of her three boys: Michael (7), David (5), and Paul (2). Her outlets are Jr. League work and piano lessons for the first time.

Still in the heart of the Poconos — White Haven, PA — is Kathy "Montz" Miller. She and Ed have been busy with the house and the four kids and enjoyed skiing this winter.

A surprise note from Charlotte Moser Benson — she now lives in Evanston, IL, where her husband is director of biotechnology patents for G.D. Searle Pharmaceutical outside Chicago. There are no children (adoption under way) but lots of dogs and cats. Charlotte is professionally a writer-editor-art critic, currently bi-weekly critic for Chicago Sun-Times and Chicago correspondent for Art News, as well as associate editor of Consumer's Digest magazine.

I actually sold one of my books to a classmate in Nashville, TN, Mary Nelson Wade. Now that Mary's children are "older" — DeeDee (6½) and Mary Fall (4), she has returned to work as treasurer of her husband Alex's general insurance agency. As Mary states, "The psychological benefits of husband/wife mutual enterprise are good and getting better." They recently bought a farm as another way to keep the family together more often, and Mary has a horse. Mother and daughters ran in the One-Miler!

Only Pam Noyes Engelbrecht would write about adding 25 Rhode Island Red chicks and a German Shepherd to her present menagerie of horses, cows, cats, and dogs. She is also trying to find the market for mountain-raised thoroughbreds. When not with the animals, Pam enjoys her job as reference librarian at Virginia Tech, where she received her tenure this year. Pam reports that Melissa Griffith had her second child, Jean, last November.

We are all invited out to Pacific Palisades, CA, to visit Lyn Dakes Miller to see how much fun you can have there. This is only written in jest, as Lyn feels her news in only a repeat of last year's. She is still busy with her two children, Carolyn (5) and Patrick (3). She enthusiastically continues her community involvement (Junior League Exec. Board, Children's Hospital, her children's school, and the L.A. Transportation Commission).

Another SBC grad in California, Carol Osborn, is immersed in studying ancient Egypt as she is singing the title role in Aida at Casa Italiana in L.A. Carol also works at "Women at Work," a career resource center in Pasadena being sponsored this year by the Junior League.

Back in Alexandria, VA, Patsy Parkinson Riley writes that being parent, wife, and professional is exciting yet chaotic at times. Her two boys are now 4 and 16 months. Patsy is now the manager of the Marketing Support Dept. for a company that sells database software — a good combination of technical and sales work. She travels some and is anxious to go to Cincinnati to see Mimi Lane Hamilton, who had a new baby boy in December.

Lynn Pearson Russell's situation in Silver Spring, MD, is rather unusual — she is still working for the National Gallery of Art in D.C., while her husband Bill is in his third year Med School in Detroit. Lynn has applied for a job at the Detroit Institute of Arts and at the Toledo Museum. She hates to leave the National Gallery but is anxious to reunite her family. The love of her life right now is their darling son, Edward Russell (1). As Lynn says, she better have another soon or Edward will be spoiled rotten!

Another alum from Silver Spring, Darlene Pierro, is still teaching math at Maret School in D.C., as well as trying to run the Middle School, grades 5-8. If that isn't enough, she directs at least two plays a year. Right now she is working with 89 kids, ranging from grades 5-12 in the play Fiddler on the Roof. In her free time she is restoring her home and dreaming of a return trip to France.

Anne Richards Camden and Jerry still live in Madison Heights, where he is assistant superintendent of the Public Utilities. They have three children: Tracy (11), who wants to attend SBC; Todd (9), who is actively involved in Little League; and Erin (5), who is anxious to start school. Anne stays busy coordinating all their activities and doing needlework and crafts.

Haden Ridley Winborne and I saw a lot more of each other this year as we both had board positions in the Junior

Committee of the High Museum. Next year she will be the placement chairman as well as a committee member for the opening functions of the new museum. Haden will also be on the admissions committee for the Junior League. When not volunteering, she is busy carpooling her twins, Annie and Lizzie (6½), or supervising the activities of her niece, Elizabeth (16), who has recently been placed in Haden and John's guardianship. Now at the monthly playgroup luncheons (for mothers only!), Haden is instructing us on the do's and don'ts of raising a teenager. The "angel" providing peace on distressing days is her new Cocker puppy, Woody Allen.

Home Education is the latest interest of Maureen Robertson Baggett. She would love to hear from any of you who have taken your children out of school. Maureen has just recently returned to Dwings, MD; since it is an isolated area, she has started a Brownie troop and LaLeche League. Her novel writing has been put on the back burner because of all these moves and adjustments.

Fran Robinson Boyer and Parke had the challenge of getting their twins, Jodie and Paige, from age 1 to age 2 and of getting son Trey (5) ready for kindergarten. After a gall bladder operation and only six weeks of recovery, she made the move to Chagrin Falls, OH, where Parke works as director of floor, grout and coatings research at Master Builders, a division of Martin-Marietta. They did get to vacation again in the Virgin Islands where they did a bareboat cruise on a 44-footer!

Sue Roessel Gibson still teaches full time in the suburbs of Philadelphia and keeps busy with her duties as president of our neighborhood civic association. On a recent trip to Scotland, she was amazed to see the changes in Aberdeen since her Junior Year Abroad. During the winter Sue and Gene went skiing in Colorado and Vermont. Sue recently discovered that Phyllis Girard lives very close to her; therefore, Mary Mahan, Phyllis and Sue have frequent reunions.

There has been another move for Keithley Rose Miller and husband Dwight — this time to St. Louis, MO, where he will be vice-president and general counsel for St. Joe Minerals. Keithley is desperate to see any member of the "Fat City Class" who may live out there. For the time being, she is continuing her decorating business as well as selling real estate. Keithley ran into Kay Giddens at dinner in Oyster Bay: Kay is still living in Washington, D.C.

I can tell Jean Rushin Brown does not miss the Chem Bank in NYC! She is thoroughly enjoying motherhood — Robert being 2 this spring. Jean manages to work in some volunteer work with the Junior League.

aerobics, and paddle tennis. Jean and Jonathan spend as much time as possible skiing in Vermont in the winter. This year she ran into Nancy Trotter Kendall — the first time since 1969!

My special greetings to the world traveler — Scanlan! I never know where she is going next. A month during the Christmas holidays, she and Jared traveled through Egypt, Athens, Crete, and then to Rome, which Scan declares will always be the most romantic spot. Actually, the trip was a "consolation prize" for Virginia's Lt. Gov. Dick Davis's defeat by Rep. Paul Trible. (Jared was Davis's Campaign Manager). Scanlan is professionally working on the Congressional Women's Caucus and seems to be able to contend with Reagan and the Republicans — but only for a short while, as she and Jared are returning to the Orient in the spring. Oh to be footloose and fancy free!

Atlanta received another '69 alum this year — Pam Sinex Subalusky. Her husband Bill is working at the Institute of Nuclear Power Operations. Now that he has retired from the Navy, they hope to be able to stay in one place for more than two years of a time. We hope to get Pam very involved in our SBC Alumnae Club.

Sharon Singletary Vanzant is still living in Columbia, SC, with husband Pete, who is an attorney. Sharon not only works part-time but also actively volunteers with the women's Symphony Association, Junior League, and her Garden Club. It that is not enough, she has two active boys, Christopher (7) and Kevin (4), and a third child was expected in July.

Kiki Stoddard Cook has started a catering business in Stanford, CT. In addition to cooking, she takes care of daughter Courtney (2½), plays lots of tennis, and travels with husband John who is a Pan Am pilot. Kiki recently visited Win Waterman Lundy in Davenport, IA.

Catering is "in" this year — Missy Sumner Huggins also has a catering business called "Missy's Madness." She prepares anything from a few dinner rolls to compliment your dinner to weddings and cocktail parties for hundreds of guests. Missy and Bob returned in February to Roaton, the bay island of Honduras, where the scuba diving is divine. When not cooking or traveling, Missy is busy with the activities of her two children, Samantha (6) and Drew (2), and with her computer work for the Atlanta Junior League.

There was a Christmas reunion for Ann Rhett Taylor Merrill and husband Tony who just returned from 6½ months overseas. Ann Rhett did work in a trip to Italy in September for 10 days to see Tony. Their son Rhett will be one in the spring. Ann Rhett and Tony plan to stay in Norfolk for the next few years.

Over in Birmingham, AL, Terry Taylor Hamilton and Duncan are the proud parents of a son, Duncan, the only boy on either side of the family. Their daughters, Ashley (8½) and Taylor (5), are thrilled to have a brother. The entire family, minus the baby, went skiing in Vail. However, only Terry and Duncan went to the Grand Hotel in Point Clear, AL, for some "sun and fun." Terry is involved in tennis, Junior League, Bible studies, and the Family Violence Project.

Hilarious greetings to my "6:00 A.M. Bird-Walking" friend, Sue Thompson Watkins, down in Tallahassee! I have a strange feeling I will be walking alone at our 15th reunion. Thoms says she and Arch will be in Atlanta as he has joined Robinson-Humphrey in Tallahassee; he will spend one month in Atlanta training. Thoms is avoiding employment "like a plane does a thunderstorm." She directs most of her attention to her darling children, Archie (6½) and Blair (4½).

Only 17,000 people here at the Omni for the ACC basketball tournaments, and who do I hear calling my name in the crowd? Ann Tremain Lee! She and Saint came for the games and stayed with her Atlantan sister. We had a quick but pleasant visit; Ann reports that all her daughters (Maria, Cameron, and Allison) are fine. The Lees still live in Newport News, VA, and have all fallen in love with snow skiing in the winter.

I was chilled to the bones when I read that Nancy Trotter Kendall and Chip just finished adding a hot tub and deck to their home. She adds that it is great in the winter after skiing. I must go to Vermont to find out. Nancy took her boys, Scott and Willie, to D.C. and Williamsburg this winter. Later she and Chip went on a ski trip to Alta, UT; because of seven feet of snow, they were stuck in their condo for three days! On a normal schedule, Nancy is busy with park meetings, paddle tennis, and various volunteer jobs; Chip is active on the school board.

Vallerey Vandegrift Stylianoudis returned from Greece to Pittsburgh, PA, in 1981 with husband Steve and children, Serina (12) and Nicholas (9½). This past fall Serina christened the ship Vandegrift named after Vallerey's grandfather; she was the youngest "woman" to do so in naval history. Vallerey graduated summa cum laude with a B.S. in Business Administration. She is currently enrolled in an eleven-month M.B.A. program at the U. of Pittsburgh. After graduating in July, Vallerey and the entire family will spend one month vacationing in Greece.

Win Waterman Lundy is already planning her trip back for the 15th reunion. She and the two boys, David and Peter, went to Florida again this winter to visit her parents. Win just finished a year as advisory/future planning chairman for the Junior League in Davenport. Next year her energy will be directed to the reunion/ball for the centennial birthday celebration of her preparatory school, St. Kit's.

Sylvia Wederath married a lawyer back in 1978; he is involved in litigation on union pension fund corruption. Sylvia is having her first one-person show of paintings in June in Washington, DC, with the Studio Gallery. She had a baby girl in August, 1981, two days after a trip back from England. The entire family travels overseas as much as possible.

Betsy West Dripp has the same home in the same town and the same number of kids, Wes (12), Marion (10), and Heidi (6). Husband Craig was made chairman of the Math Dept. at Haverford and still coaches varsity tennis. The kids are always busy with every sport offered at school. Betsy sets a good example for those future athletes as she went to the National Lacrosse tournament last year; she was the oldest on the team by eight years. Back in Berwyn, PA, she is still teaching movement exploration in nursery school and plans to get into coaching.

In Dallas, TX, Cherrie Wheeler Weathford and husband Jake have remodeled and landscaped an older home. Their son Eric is in fifth grade and participates in all sports; therefore, much of Cherrie's time is spent attending games. Daughter Amy is 4 and in love with ballet. Cherrie does volunteer work for the Cerebral Palsy Guild, North Texas Radio for the Blind, and the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts League. In between all the above activities, she is constantly polishing up her tennis game.

Pat Winton Schlingmann gave her Yankee husband Carl a complete tour of the Sweet Briar campus. They saw Mike and Anne Richards — Anne is now a full time SBC student! Pat plans to return from her home in Montchanin, DE, to our big 15th reunion.

Barbara Young Pisciotta lives outside D.C. in the lovely suburb of Olney, MD. Her husband Tony is a successful stockbroker, a vice-president of Johnston and Demon, Inc. They have two children, Courtney (13) and Brett (3). Barbara writes that her favorite pastimes are traveling, racquetball and interior decorating.

At last your secretary, Nancy Wendling Peacock, will say a few closing words. My husband Tom still travels constantly with his job as construction consultant. Daughter Jenni (6½) entered first grade; son Josh (3) started a two-morning pre-school.

The entire family have been supportive of all my volunteer commitments. Beginning in May, I will be chairman of the Junior Committee of the High Museum with the grand opening of the new museum slated for October. My revised edition of Atlanta's Best Buys came out in December and has been well received; I was featured on PM Magazine in February. Tom and I still escape alone a couple times a year — Virgin Islands last summer and Mexico in February.

Mark your calendars now — 15th Reunion in May, 1984! I look forward to receiving all your notes next April to compile my last article for the magazine. Most of all I look forward to seeing all of you on that lovely Virginia campus.

1973

Secretary

Louise "Weezie" Blakeslee Gilpin (Mrs. Robert P.), Milton Academy, 300 Centre Street, Milton, MA 02186
Fund Agents
Susan "Scoffie" O'Toole, 103 Lynbrook Circle, Dewitt, NY 13214
Susan Dern Plant (Mrs. David), 1643-A Shenandoah Rd., Fort Belvoir, VA 22060

It is always such fun to receive your postcards each spring despite the secondary process of compiling them! My replacement, MacCuthbert Langley, was elected at our reunion in May, so this is my last column. I would like to thank all of you for submitting your news and for the frequent words of thanks and encouragement which you included.

Alison Baker is sharing a renovated warehouse with Gary, a photographer, in downtown Atlanta. After eight years with an advertising agency, Alison is now a self-employed weaver specializing in baskets and loom woven ikot tapestries and rugs.

Settled in their Coral Gables, FL, home, Anne Billings McDougall and Ed became parents when Margaret Annette (Maggie) arrived on June 9, 1982. With her Jr. League activities, church work, and the baby, Anne reports there is "no time for boredom." Ed is with Coldwell Banker Commercial Real Estate.

Dixie Black O'Connor and husband Paul, a political columnist syndicated in 40 North Carolina newspapers, had a son, Michael George, on February 1, 1983. Previously a feature writer for several midwestern newspapers, Dixie has been public relations director for the North Carolina Symphony for three years. Last summer Dixie and Paul visited the O'Connor clan's ancestral home in Ballinskellig, Ireland.

Dorsie Buck Harrison wrote that the arrival of Jonathan Blair on August 9, 1982, was her biggest news. Her older children, Ben (6) and Kristin (4), and her church activities keep her busy.

The news from Barb Cain Hegarty is that she is married and "getting into the mainstream of American life by trying to buy a house." She saw Chris Mendel Prewitt last fall and runs into Magee Leigh since they are working in the same research labs at UNC-Chapel Hill!

Betsy Cann Akers and Scott had their second son, Philip Morgan, on September 25, 1982 (Scotty is now 3). Although retired from banking, Betsy is doing volunteer work and fund-raising.

Now living in Bellevue, WA, Peggy Cheesewright Garner is a hospital volunteer in the newborn nursery, one of a team of photographers taking the babies' first pictures and an instructor in a "super sitter" course offered to local babysitters. She travels frequently with her "wonderful hubbie" John, often to Hawaii and California.

After redecorating an old house in Memphis, Anita Clarendon Ledinger and Chuck (UVA '72) are moving to Dallas, where he has been promoted to a vice president of Holiday Inns, Inc. After being woman's editor, feature writer, and photographer for a weekly paper, Anita would like to become involved with magazine journalism in Dallas. Chuck and Anita spend their leisure time playing with 18-month-old daughter Leila.

After two years in private practice as a speech pathologist, Justine Cobb developed the Therapeutic Preschool of Atlanta, Inc. (The Northside Readiness School), which opened in October, 1982. The school serves 3-7 year old children with moderate behavior and learning disorders.

Kathleen Cochran Lambo is living in Kensington, MD, and working for First American Bank of Virginia in McLean managing the ATM program.

From Africa's Ivory Coast Dede Conley writes that, "in Korhogo life is great" with time for tennis and photography. Korhogo had a big festival this year with music, dancing and beautiful costumes. At Christmas Dede and Gerard spent two weeks in Upper Volta, "always picturesque with its markets and nomads." They will be in the States this summer visiting family and friends.

Gina Conley Pappas had a lull 1982: she finished her first year of practice with a Philadelphia law firm in September and on December 17th her first baby, Catherine Baker, was born. She is back at work now learning to be a working mother.

Donna Crouch Campbell finished her master's in clinical social work in May of 1982 and started a new job as a psychotherapist in a hospital and a private practice. Meanwhile, she and Bob are restoring a 200-year-old colonial home and raising Heather and Ian. Donna had recently spoken with both Kim Riccardi Ramsey and Betsy Thayer Clough.

Mac Cuthbert Langley, Johnny and Will (4 in April) are known to be residing happily in Mt. Pleasant, SC. (Mac dials long distance instead of sending a postcard, an arrangement I will miss when she takes over as class secretary.) The two of us have long since given up letter writing, a practice only mothers with real will power can continue. Mac is jogging every morning and trying to keep up with her son, the dynamo. Johnny opened his private practice in pediatrics last summer and, thanks to prolific types like our class, he has plenty of patients!

Diane Dale Reiling and Chuck were married in December which involved a move to San Francisco for Diane. She was able to transfer with Flying Tigers, allowing "some continuity in my life." The Reilings see Jane Poits and Bud and Jenniler Wherry Elrod frequently, and Diane lunched with Mary Buxton recently. Diane writes, "It is nice to already have friends in a new city." Chuck joined the Bank of America in June, 1982, after 17 years with IBM. Despite adjusting to new jobs, they were able to spend several weekends skiing at Tahoe.

In September of 1982, Lucy Dennington Kennedy and John were married in Brownsville, TX. After traveling off and on for several months, they bought an antebellum home in Holly Springs, MS, John's hometown. Lucy gave a voice recital last summer and has others planned. She is also singing in a church and learning to play the organ. During a visit to NYC last August, Lucy had lunch with Susan Broadus Hoff and saw Marian Dolan '76 as well.

Sue Dern Plank and David finally were able to move into their house in Canajoharie, NY, in July of 1982. In November David returned to active duty with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and while he attends the Officers' Advanced Course, they are stationed at Ft. Belvoir, VA. Tentatively scheduled is a move to Ft. Campbell in July. On leave from paid employment, Sue is working for certification as a professional genealogist as well as writing the history of their village. Sue had news of Cathy Rasmussen Rentzel who is expecting her third; her other two were recovering from pneumonia.

Christine Eng Leventhal, Peter, and 3-year-old Amy moved to a new house in Wilton, CT, last November and were expecting a new baby on March 31st. Chris teaches ballet and exercise and does free-lance editing; Peter runs a health food store.

Val Fannon Phillips and Tom live in Yardley, PA. Val is a regional account manager for San-Giorgio-Skinner, a division of Hershey Foods.

Alison Fifer Stonecipher, Daniel, a TWA pilot, and 3-year-old Will live in Santa Barbara, CA. Expecting their second baby in August, Alison remains active with the Jr. League and with Flexible Career Associates, an organization dedicated to creating careers for people who choose to work part-time.

Lisa Fowler Winslow, Bill and 1½-year-old Russell recently moved to Malibu, CA, and Lisa wrote, "It has been raining ever since!" She is a part-time law librarian and is active with Jr. League, whose projects include working on the 1984 Olympics. Lisa and Bill see Peggy Cheesewright Garner when she visits her parents who live nearby.

While enjoying her job teaching part-time at UVA Law School, Janie Genster's and John's hearts have been so "utterly charmed" by their 1½-year-old daughter that #2 was due in early June. Although this grounded Janie for our 10th, she managed a mini-reunion last fall with Alison Baker, Alice Fahs and Mary Danford.

In Lookout Mountain, TN, Emily Garth Brown is busy preparing the house, the family, and herself for #4 baby.

Trish Gilhooly O'Neill, her husband and their two Irish Setters have been living in Hong Kong for three years (home was London previously). Trish is studying Mandarin, running her own small clothing business, and traveling a good deal. She has made a number of trips to China and a fascinating trek to basecamp Mount Everest. Plans for reunion were uncertain since Trish was recovering from double pneumonia.

Susan Hancock Duke and Roy had their Franklin, VA, home open for Virginia Garden Week in the spring of 1982 and closed their retail store in July to recuperate from their full year.

Dr. Margaret Holloway Fitch has a private practice in Dermatology in Augusta, GA. Husband Paul is a C.P.A. Their two boys are Brannon, 3½, and Hollis 8 months.

Kris Howell is teaching business and economics at High Point College (NC) and is starting work on a doctorate. A trip to Bermuda with friends conflicted with our reunion, so Kris sent a big hello to everyone.

Elaine Hughey is living in Nashville and working as financial assistant for International Clinical Laboratories, Inc.

After graduating from the U. of Texas, Janie Jordan Crawford moved to Houston where she served as director of communications for the Insurance Corporation of America. In May of 1982 she married Andy and moved to Chicago where she is now a free-lance writer.

Janie Knutson James, Michael, and

Patrick left the northern wilds of Vermont for Connecticut when Michael became editor in sports of the Hartford Courant. They were living in New Britain when Janie wrote but planned to move into their house in Farmington in late May. They are expecting baby #2 in November. Janie went to California and Virginia last year and made a quick tour of SBC.

Karol Kroetz Sparks and Steve live in Indianapolis with their two children, Ashley (5) and Austin (almost 2). Karol has been practicing law with the firm of Krieg, DeVault, Alexander and Capehart for four years. Specializing in banking and securities law, Karol does bank mergers and bank holding company formations.

Linda Lipscomb had back surgery in December, recuperated in Dallas, and only returned to New Orleans in March. Although encased in a body cast until September (ruling out reunion), Linda wrote that one benefit of the surgery is that she is two inches taller! "I will appear at the 15th," Linda promised.

Jane Lucas began her own interior design consulting firm on January 1, 1983, with clients ranging from corporate bank headquarters to a residence in Hoboken, NJ! She enjoys the flexibility and reports, "I get along well with my boss (me!)." The one disadvantage is that her office has taken over much of her Boston apartment. Jane was going up to her family's summer house on Gay Island in Maine to open it up.

Despite a busy winter with Emily (3½) and David (16 mos.), Ann Major Gibb is active with her church, helped start local chapters of MADD and Compassionate Friends, and works with International Health Projects. Ernie took in a new partner last summer, so they see more of him now. Ann and Ernie spent a week in San Francisco last fall during Ernie's annual meetings.

Lisa Marshall Chalmers and David are still fixing up their house and enjoying Marshall who will be 2 in May. Lisa is doing a lot of painting and getting her portfolio together. Summer plans include trips to Pawley's Island and Amelia Island. Lisa sees Betsy Cann Akers, Nan Robertson Clarke, Lee Brennan Kidd and Carter Heyward Morris periodically.

Joan May Harden's and Rick's best news was the arrival of William Lee on May 20, 1982 (a month early but wonderful). Last fall Rick resigned his partnership in his NYC firm and accepted a partnership at Moore & Peterson in Dallas, TX. They bought an old house there which, Joan writes, "I will be decorating for the next decade." Joan talked with Susan Miller who will be in the Orient on business during our reunion. Julie Johnson Evans and Ken moved to Houston in December just a few weeks after their second son, Peter was born. Joan saw Lindy Bennett Sylvan at a baby shower for Julie. Lindy is married to a lawyer and has two sons.

Rachel Mays Fitzgerald writes that there is no news, but her family is "happy and well and involved in their work and play." Doesn't that sound like wonderful news?!

Jan Merritt and her husband David Bethany "tremendously enjoyed" the SBC/UVA trip to the USSR this winter. Jan is writing short stories and David's band, The Killer Whales, is finishing its third album — all songs written by David. They are beginning work on their 100-year-old beach house.

Living in Miami, FL, after nine years in Los Angeles and Santa Barbara, Angela Miller is divorced and "the very happy mother of an 8-year-old son named K.C. Rietz. She owns and operates a Burger King restaurant in Santa Barbara, CA, and has been the assistant to the president of Shafer's Miller Industries, Inc., for a year and a half. Her job takes her to Bogota, Columbia, and throughout the U.S. developing clients for this general contractor.

Living in Temple, TX, Sally Moran Lemmar has a new full-time job in the form of Eric, born September 15, 1982. She reports, "I don't know whether motherhood or our 10th (!) class reunion comes as a bigger shock."

Jane McCutchen McFadden and Barclay live in Guilford, VT, in a 1774 farmhouse with their two boys, Barclay, IV, and Thomas. Jane still runs her natural food/gourmet shop and is active in the Brattleboro Museum. After a spring spent traveling, they were looking forward to spending time with each of their families (in Maine and South Carolina) this summer. Jane saw Susanne Garrison Hoden last fall — the day before Susanne's son was born!

Alice McInnis Hughes and Carol welcomed a new addition to the family, Sarah Elizabeth, on January 16, 1983 — three weeks early but healthy and thriving.

Marion McKee Humphreys claims that she is "your typical but very fulfilled Mom" with her two boys, Hunter and McKee. An extensive family trip to Montana this summer eliminated Marion's coming to our reunion.

Laurie Norris Salywoda and Andy had their second daughter, Cynthia Ann, on February 23, 1983 (Stephanie turned 2 in March). On leave until June, Laurie will return to a promotion as staff assistant to the V.P. at Albany Medical College. She is continuing work for a master's in higher education administration.

In Detroit, Judy O'Keefe Vindici and Joe were expecting their second child in May. Chris Johnson Peterson is to be the baby's godmother. Judy is still in marketing but now works as a freelance consultant.

Scottie O'Toole had foot (feet?) surgery in April to correct crooked bones and remove bunions, involving casts on both feet for two weeks and an enforced six-week vacation. Scottie implied that getting old (!) is less than wonderful. She is still with G.E. as a technical recruiter and loves her Dewitt, NY, home.

Santa came early for Jean Platt Spencer and David with the delivery of a second daughter, Kathryn Jean, on December 20, 1982 (Jessica turned 2 in March). Last May, Jean gave up her amateur golf status and is now a teaching pro. She teaches, works in the pro shop, waitresses part-time in her family's restaurant (where David is the chef) and, obviously, is a Mom.

Jane Potts and husband Bud Sutherland have moved to San Francisco, CA, where he opened a regional sales office for Turner Broadcasting. They see Jennifer Wherry Elrod, Mary Buxton, and Diane Dale Reiling, and they went skiing over Easter with Diane and her husband Chuck at Lake Tahoe.

A second daughter, Kelly Alison, was born to Kathy Pretzfelder Steele and Dave on April 2, 1983, 18 days late but healthy. Tracey, 3, is "thrilled with her baby and is a real helper(?)." After a 6 month leave Kathy will return to her position as marketing analyst for a major insurance company.

Carol Anne Provence Gallivan is kept hopping with Anne Genevieve, 7, and Henry, 2, and she and Mills were expecting #3 in mid-July. In addition, Carol Anne and her mother are partners in Pineapple Galleries, an antique and gift shop they opened in Greenville, SC, last November.

Char Reed-Miller has been chosen by the National Science Foundation Visiting Professorship for Women to participate in a program designed to encourage other women to choose careers in science and engineering. She will spend the fall semester at Washington State U. in Pullman, WA, as part of this program. Char is co-authoring a chapter for a textbook on eyes with a doctor/friend with whom she has done research. In her free time (?) Char is riding, helping her husband raise Jack Russell Terriers, and pumping iron.

In February of 1982 Robin Roden moved from Chesapeake, VA, where she was in private practice, to Houston, TX, to be with her fiancé. On May 14, 1983, she and George Corrent were married in the chapel at Duke U. After a honeymoon trip to Australia's Great Barrier Reef (during our reunion), they will be in Houston for George's medical school graduation. The next year will be spent in Jacksonville, FL, for his internship and, in July, 1984, they will move to Missouri for his ophthalmology residency at Barnes Hospital at Washington U. Robin will continue her work in family practice.

In August 18, 1982, Nan Robertson Clarke and Hal had their third child, Charlie, who joins Boo (4) and Toby (2). Nan has been the president of the Atlanta SBC Alumnae Club and serves as a fund agent with Hal for their W & L law class. She also writes for the Atlanta Jr. League magazine. Nan and Hal spend time each summer with Mac Cuthbert Langley and Johnny at Sea Island, GA.

Dessa Rutter wrote from Metairie, LA, that she had just completed the first commercial real estate transaction in which she was listing and selling agent. She was hoping to "get on" with the World's Fair and looked forward to seeing SBC-ers who are planning to attend.

Now living in Matthews, NC, Sharon Sanders Williams and Dennis had a son, Dennis Keith, Jr., in October of 1982. Dennis is an engineering consultant with Duke Power Company; Sharon writes that she is "learning to be a Mom."

Monica Saumweber Spillias and Ken had a hectic year: Ken won his election (primary, run-off and general) and is now a county commissioner; they had their second baby, Alicia Anne, on August 25, 1982; and they recently moved into a new house. Monica will be returning to work with the U.S. Department of Labor in July.

After a year in Roanoke, VA, Tina Sheris Wood and John report that they feel settled. John has a medical practice there; Tina attempts to keep up with "Mr. Perpetual Motion," Adam (18 mos), and participates in the local medical auxiliary. Their older child, Lissa (5 in June), was preparing for her first ballet recital and will enter kindergarten in September.

Carol Stewart Harper and Doug had their second daughter (it must run in our class!), Elizabeth Stewart, on January 10, 1983; Alison is now five. Still in the Navy, Doug is at the Armed Forces Staff College. In addition to mothering, Carol teaches Sunday school and is a leader in STEP (Systematic Training for Effective Parenting).

Mary Beverly Taylor Haque, a landscape design professor at Clemson U., was asked to host a garden tour of Europe. She and her husband were thrilled except that it coincided with reunion. Mary Beverly became an instant parent when her husband's nephew from Pakistan came to live with them. He has a hearing handicap for which there are no special programs in Pakistan.

Betsy Thayer Clough and David were expecting their first baby in May, so Betsy was otherwise occupied during reunion! She plans to continue her free-lance marketing research on a reduced schedule.

Kathryn Thilding Goto received M.S.W. and M.B.A. degrees after leaving SBC. She now lives in Westminster, CA, and works for Comprehensive Care Corporation in Los Angeles.

Cathy Towers Hardage, Robert, and their tribe (Bobby, 6; Charlie, 4½; and Susan, 1½) will be leaving California in June and moving to their new house in Ocala, FL. Robert will be practicing with a Radiology group there. Cathy reports that "things seem much easier now that the boys are a little older."

Georgia Tucker Tuttle, Chris, and Laura Beth moved shortly before Christmas to London, where Chris was sent by Bankers Trust. Georgia is still enjoying the tourist attractions, often with Laura, who attends the nursery school where Princess Diana taught. Georgia was delighted to run into Jane Hutcherson Frierson '74 at her first London Service League meeting, and she hopes to be involved also with SB alumnae and students in London and Paris. The Tuttle's enjoyed a home leave with Georgia's parents in Houston this summer.

Clement Virgin Durkes had lots of news including the birth of Harriet Steele on March 8, 1983; Frances, 3, is in nursery school. They have moved back to Chicago where Rick is an investment banker with The Chicago Corporation. Clement writes, "We love being city-livers again."

"Life is a little hectic but fun," claims Kathy Waters Marshall. Her third child, John Paul, was born on December 12, 1982. His sisters, Jessie (6) and Laura (3) are very proud. Husband Lawson was recently named executive editor of The Daily Progress in Charlottesville.

Living in Dedham, MA, Lucinda Young Larson was promoted to the Field Service Headquarters Finance Manager at Digital Corporation. She is also president of the Boston SBC Alumnae club, and, presently assistant treasurer of the Jr. League, she will become their treasurer in June. Her husband Dick is a tremendous help — he made all the goodies for her recent SBC accepted student party! A trip to Italy interfered with reunion plans.

Deborah Ziegler Hopkins and George are the parents of a boy, George Denegre, III (Jordy), born on October 18, 1982. Betsy Cann Akers visited during Mardi Gras; so Scott, Morgan and Jordy all got acquainted.

And I, Weezie Blakeslee Gilpin, after careful analysis, realized that my biggest news is that I made it through the last year with no major mishaps! Our three children, Alexa (6½), Blake (4½), and Christopher (1 in April), are all doing the "normal" things, both desirable and otherwise. And, as unliberated as it is. I am continually amazed at what pleasure and fulfillment I derive from motherhood. The 36 adolescents girls in my dorm make me appreciate the relatively simple world of dealing with small children. My course work is at a snail's pace, but, with a paper due last week and another in a week, my one course this term is more than enough. At this rate I may receive my master's in 1985! Bob, besides teaching, coaching debate, and doing a healthy portion of the dormitory staff. He has taken the "daddying," has officially joined the dormitory staff. He has taken the "duty" the night I spend in school — we really do have an equal opportunity marriage!

Jane D. Mooney, 3118 Barnard Ct., Fairfax, VA 22031

Debbie Koss McCarthy (Mrs. David), 2642 University Dr., Durham, NC 27707

Our class is really on the move with new jobs, new travels, and new additions to the family.

In Hawaii, Phooi-Ching Lai has transferred from linguistics into the Education Ph.D. program at the U. of Hawaii. She spent part of the summer in Singapore-Malaysia before returning to Honolulu. Sarah Croit resigned as operations manager of Paine, Webber, Mitchell, Hutchins and took a two-week vacation in Thailand, Burma, and Hong Kong. She sold her house in Puerta Vallarta, Mexico, and moved to Hawaii for six months.

In jolly old England, Christine Weerasingha Hand reports dismal weather but success with planting a garden. She has also been redecorating their house. Christine with 14 other alumnae had a chance to meet Dean Belford in London at luncheon. Her summer plans included a trip to E. Germany. Lola Brock married Jeremy E. J. Meakin Aug. 20 and moved to London where Jeremy lives. She was promoted to gold trader and proposed to all in one day last spring! Since Jeremy is the head gold trader for the London branch of her firm, Lola plans to find work in another firm. Elizabeth Conway Selden and Tennessee Nielsen Indorf '76 were in the wedding.

Libby White writes from Drange County, CA. She was transferred from Boston by Merck & Co., the largest pharmaceutical company in the U.S. She is a sales representative for the veterinary division. Her customers include large-animal veterinarians, dairies, and cattle ranches. She misses New England but has loved rubbing elbows with "real cowboys" and learning the two-step. She has been sailing, riding, skiing, winery hopping, and relaxing in a jacuzzi. Libby saw Vivian Yamaguchi Cohn and Stuart while they were vacationing in Southern California. She also expected Maggie Shriver, JoJo Scott, and Keedie Gronos '76 to visit during the summer. Vivian writes that all is well with the newlyweds and that she cannot believe this is her fourth year of law practice in Chicago. Maggie is still in D.C. and loves her job with Merrill Lynch.

Back at the ranch in New Mexico, Becky Mayer Gutierrez is busy taking care of the mares foaling. She says that "there's nothing cuter than a long-legged, new-born colt." Annie Hamilton has left her position as program coordinator at the Broadmoor Hotel in Colorado Springs. She has joined her father's real estate company as an administrator/assistant secretary-treasurer. She plans to obtain her real estate license soon. Annie was planning to see Mary Greaves at their high school reunion in Kansas City, MD. Mary is in Kansas City working as the auction coordinator for the Public Television station. She raised a quarter of a million dollars during a six-day auction in the spring. Mary planned to visit friends in Boston during the summer.

Becky Frost Good and Steve moved to Dallas last January and bought a new car and a home complete with a swimming pool. Becky has been working as a vice president at Merrill Lynch Private Capital, a new private banking subsidiary. Steve has specialized in tax law at Hughes & Hill law firm. Their first child was due in August.

Edie Durham Sapp and Henry, Corpus Christi, TX, have a son, Edwin Clayton, born in October '82. He is a joy — but keeps Edie busy.

In Lexington, KY, Frances Redmond is office manager for Stonechurch Farms which was recently purchased by an Arab prince. There is so much new construction that Frances comments that there would be an entirely new farm before the summer ended. She is hoping to visit the business headquarters in England soon and to visit Vera Blake Thiers and Gerd in Germany.

From the Richmond crowd we hear that Mary Branch Alexander's son James Thomas Alexander, IV, was born Oct. 5, 1982. Barb Bernick Martin reports that all's well, and she sees Cindy Kendree Thieringer and J.T. Cindy was promoted to commercial sales representative of This End Up and was busy traveling between N.Y.C. and D.C. She saw Sue McGeligan and husband Dick and said they looked great and were happy. Sally Kennedy McGoarty has been busy with new baby Desmond, born Dec. 8, 1982. She has somehow found time to tutor and to fulfill her duties as president of the SBC Club of Richmond.

Patti Wornom Henry, Hampton, VA, took three months leave from work to enjoy Charles David, born March 29, 1983.

Anne Rubel Allen was written up in the Charlottesville paper as a political wife (of Delegate George F. Allen, R-Earlyville) and for her own career as a model and artist.

Linda Uihlein's farm is shaping up, although not as smoothly as she had hoped. She expected four Polled Hereford calves and one thoroughbred foal by summer. She interrupted her work with E-Line Art to concentrate on the farm, but she plans to have it in full swing again soon. She looked forward to picking up her tennis racket again also.

Denise Etheridge has completed two years of the four-year M.B.A./J.D. program at UVA. During the summer she worked for a law firm in El Paso, TX, and one in Charlottesville, each for six weeks. She plans to visit a friend in Africa during Christmas vacation. She hears from Gail Flagg Freeman and saw Stella Wright Martin in Atlanta last Christmas. Glenn King Springer saw Stella too and reports that Stella and Tom are on their way to Hong Kong for a three-year stay. Tom will be Arthur Young's tax expert for Hong Kong, Taiwan, and the Philippines. Glenn is enjoying her volunteer work with Historic Columbus. Daughter Lillian has kept her red hair and blue eyes and is trying to walk and talk. Susie Hatcher Henson was born to Cathy Goodhart Henson and Carlton March 16, 1983. Cathy said that all was well with the Hensons.

In Atlanta, Helen Milner Gordon is busy with her family but has made time to work in the Westminster Alumni Office and to play tennis.

Sally Bonham Mohle and Pete have moved to Fairfax to be closer to work, family, and church. She is still the executive secretary at Town and Country Realtors and is on the board of four corporations. Pete is an accountant at George Mason U. Missy Flanigan Clark went to SBC last spring to see David's sister (and Barb Clark McLaughlin's) graduate. They have just bought a large old house in Norfolk. Missy writes that Barb is expecting in October.

After completing the Master's program in Accounting from Georgetown U. last December, Jo Ella Schneider began work for the accounting firm Reznick, Fedder & Silverman in Bethesda, MD. She still lives in Virginia and finds time to play bridge even during tax season. Tricia Waters graduated to May from G. Washington U. with an M.A. in Art History. She continues to work part time at the Corcoran Gallery of Art in D.C. and has been preparing a small in-house exhibition for the fall, as well as assisting on a catalog for another fall show. She attended Ainslie Jones' ('76) wedding reception in Raleigh, NC, in February and saw classmates Ebet Little Stevens and Clarissa Nielsen.

In North Carolina, Ann Crossingham Cannon's second child, William Crossingham, was born Sept. 7, 1982. William, along with 3-year-old Leslie Ann, models for Spencer's and should appear in the fall issues of Woman's Day and Good Housekeeping. Debbie Koss McCarthy writes from Durham that 3-year-old Courtney was looking forward to being a big sister. The new baby was due in June. Along with motherhood, Debbie keeps busy with Junior League, church work, and music. She teaches piano part time, plays the organ at church, and will be teaching music part time in the fall at Durham Academy. She is also enjoying taking continuing education courses at Duke.

Debbie Epperson Sizer spends most of her time with Steven, 2, and Brian, 6. She is also active in the LaLeche League and church activities. She sells radio advertising part time and has been working on her tenth year high school reunion. She is still awaiting news on her application for a new radio station in South Carolina.

Gregg Smythe finished a law degree at the U. of S.C. Law School in May 1982. She is working for a law firm in Columbia, SC, in the Appellate and Special Litigation Division. She keeps in touch with Sarah Croit. Also in Columbia is Carolyn Williams Seeling who married Stephen Scott Seeling May 2, 1983. Stephen is chief counsel to the State Medical Examiners Board. Carolyn is an international account manager for Intertec Data Systems. She has also assisted rape victims and has delivered speeches for Women Organized Against Rape.

In Alabama, Ellen Newton Banks expected her first child in May. She has been working as the accountant for Greenetrack Race Track in Eutaw, AL, for the past six years and planned to return part time after the baby was born. In Tuscaloosa, Fran Scott Tesch worked for the U. of Ala., tutored freshman college English, edited a new national arts publication, and served as a consultant on magazine writing. Her husband Carol graduated in May in music arranging and is seeking arranging/composing work in Nashville or another music center.

Look for Harriet Dinegar in the Jersey Shore Marathon in November. She has been running 30-40 miles a week in preparation. Harriet received her M.A. in Anthropology at the U. of Pa. and has been teaching at two New Jersey colleges. She worked with state archaeologists on excavations of Indian settlements in New England during the summer. She has also been training and showing her Chesapeake Bay Retriever.

Jean Romanske has spent most of her life outdoors since graduation. After a three-year stint with racehorses she now works as a letter carrier in the Postal Service in a small town in Massachusetts. She recently took a vacation in the Hawaiian Islands, participated in several road races (particularly the all-women's Bonne Bell 10K in Boston) and was re-elected to the executive board of Boston Mensa. September brings a wedding to Kerry Jones, an engineer in computer-aided design.

In Boston, Farnell Cowan is enjoying being a trainee in the Trust Department of the First National Bank. She traveled and visited friends in England during June. Ellen Wahl was promoted in February to an officer of the Irving Trust Co. in N.Y.C. where she has worked for 2½ years. Her work with corporate lending entails extensive travel throughout the South. She has been decorating her new condo and has been on several well-deserved vacations to the islands.

Following the birth of her son, Wendy Congden Stanton moved to Brooklyn, NY.

Patricia Hansbury Wahl is secretary of the Junior League of Montclair-Newark, NJ. Sarah Steel Levine and Jan just bought an old Tudor house in Essex Fells, NJ. They were busy all summer fixing the house and preparing for the arrival of their first child.

Way down yonder in New Orleans, Marian McLellan attended an SBC Club of N.D. luncheon at Arnaud's and saw Lochrane Coleman '76, who was visiting from Birmingham, AL. I missed the luncheon, since Rex and I were bareboating in the Bahamas.

Rex has been transferred to the Dallas office of Price Waterhouse, so we have been frantically trying to do justice to the sights and restaurants of N.D. before we leave in June. Now that the renovation of the house is successfully completed, I have taken up golf and Creole cooking.

I am looking forward to hearing from each of you during the year. Keep me posted on your activities and send me pictures and newsclippings. Next time you hear from me I might have a Texas accent.

Susan Graham graduated from paralegal school last December.

K. Ellen Hagan graduated with an M.Ed. degree from UVa in counselor education with an emphasis in Higher Education on May 22, and she sends this message to Class of 1981: "Thank you so much for allowing me to represent our class on the Alumnae Council. It was a terrific two years!! Once again thank you for your support." She is now back in Commerce, GA.

Harriet Harrison and U. Whitney Leavell, III, were married in Waco, TX, on Sept. 25, 1982. They live in Houston, where Harriet is a tax accountant with Deloitte, Haskins & Sells, and Whitney is with Merrill Lynch.

Caroline Hawk is working in Birmingham as a writer in policy development for the Jefferson County Board of Education. She is planning to begin graduate school this fall seeking an M.A. in English. She is currently living with Virginia Donald.

Moir Holway is in Charlotte working and going to school.

Kim Howard is working as an actress and bartender in Denver.

Barrie Anne Jeffrey is working as a paralegal in Atlanta, GA.

Hope Keating is working at the White House.

Karol A. Lawson finished her master's in Art History last May. She spent the fall of 1982 doing a teaching assistantship and the summer of 1982 at the National Portrait Gallery in Washington, D.C.

Kathy Levi Hoover married Michael on July 2nd of this year, and they are living in Richmond. She is a computer programmer with Southern States Cooperative, and he is a corporate development officer for United Virginia Bank.

Jane Losse Momberger married Joel in August of 1981 and they had a son, John Lee, in November of 1982. She is working as an office assistant for Dr. Glenn Momberger, and her husband is starting law school this fall. They live in Salt Lake City.

Carrie Maynard and Holly Silsand are in New York working for NBC.

Sharon McGrath Gardner is associate development director for Cancer Care, Inc., in N.Y.C. She and her husband are moving into the City.

Sandy Meads Jeffries is in Mt. Pleasant, SC, teaching school.

Presley Neithammer is in New York working for the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Dana Painter Parkey is teaching bilingual first grade class in Houston. Her husband Bob is a production engineer with Exxon Co., U.S.A.

Nancy Palme Hoe married Joe on December 26, 1982. Allison Roberts was bridesmaid. Nancy works as a lab technician in the toxicology division of Mobil Chemical Corp. in Plainsboro, NJ. Her husband works in quality control for Del Monte.

Kearsley Rand wrote that December of 1982 she had lost 30 lbs. and hopes that by our reunion people will be saying, "Please eat — you're so thin." She is working in advertising in New Jersey.

Allison Roberts attended Sotheby's Works of Art course in October of 1981 through July of 1982 in London, England, and loved it.

Margie Robinson is in Indiana, PA, working and going to school.

Anne Sargeant is in her first year of law school at Northwestern U. in Boston after spending a year working for Senator Lugar and in the office of Intergovernmental Affairs at the White House.

Hedley Sipe is still enjoying nursing at UVa. During the summer she worked as an extern in the Surgical Intensive Care Unit at UVa.

Stephanie Skinner is living at home and working as an administrative assistant to the Director of Corporate Financial Services in Wilmington, DE.

Stephanie L. Snead is working at the Ballistics Research Laboratory at Aberdeen Proving Grounds in Maryland as a systems analyst and doing a lot of winter and spring skiing.

Jane Terry Lee was married on June 6, 1981, to Scott and is now living in Fort Mill, SC, where she has decided to go to Winthrop College to get a second undergraduate degree and a teaching certificate.

Tania Voss is teaching first grade at a private school in Washington and is engaged to marry Tom Egar on November 4 in Charlottesville.

In November of 1982 Marlene Weber taught a Creative Stage Movement class at the Lynchburg Fine Arts Center, where she teaches dance. She and Terry Sexton, now in N.Y.C., were guest artists for the annual concert of the Clifford School of Dance in Babcock at SBC in May.

Nancy Weinberg has been working since September '81 at E.F. Hutton in New York in marketing for ERISA services and tax strategy.

Susan Wilson Lyons and her husband Robbie are enjoying life in Lexington, KY, and keep busy between the farm and the horse sales.

Kelly Yeaton is still working with the Federal Reserve Bank in Atlanta as an assistant examiner II in both commercial and trust examinations.

As for myself, on March 4, 1983, Bucky and I had a beautiful 7 lbs. 14 oz. boy named Lucian Archambault Durham, IV ("Arch"). I am still working as a branch assistant at Dominion National Bank of Richmond, and Bucky finished his Ph.D. in biochemistry in August.

You all have a lovely fall and please let me hear from you for the next year's magazine. Be sure to tell me what other classmates are doing.

Paying College Tuition — Alternatives

Situation 1: You have an income producing asset valued at $100,000 generating $8,000 of annual income and you are the parent or grandparent of a college-bound student. College costs are $8,000 per year or a total of $32,000. You have provided in your will for the asset to be given to Sweet Briar College, at a substantial reduction in federal estate taxes, to provide scholarships for needy students.

Alternative 1: Transfer the asset into a trust with 8% payable to you annually during your lifetime and the remainder to Sweet Briar College upon your death. Use the income to pay college costs as before, but you are entitled to an income tax deduction of $11,563, saving you $6,360 in taxes.<sup>1</sup> Total college costs have been reduced to $25,640.

Situation 2: Again, a college bound student needs your financial assistance. Your stock portfolio includes a block of highly appreciated, low income stock valued at $50,000. Ordinarily the income would be inconsequential except that with college costs approaching, every little bit helps. Exchanging the stock for a higher yielding stock is out of the question because capital gains taxes would be excessive. College costs are $8,000 per year; the stock is paying you $2,000. An additional $6,000 per year, a total of $24,000, must come from income.

Alternative 2: Transfer the stock into a trust paying $4,000 annually to the student/child for four years with the remainder to Sweet Briar College. The trustee sells the stock with no capital gains implications and reinvests for a higher yield. You only need additional income of $4,000 or a total of $16,000 to meet college costs. But, you may deduct $36,140 from income for a tax savings of $19,877.<sup>1</sup> You have made a gift to Sweet Briar of $50,000 and sent a child through college in exchange for income of which the present value is approximately $11,777!<sup>2</sup>

For more information on alternatives for paying college tuition, write Sweet Briar College, Planned Giving Committee, Development Office, Sweet Briar, Virginia 24595 or call Walt Kenton, Director of Planned Giving, at (804) 381-6161. Estate planning literature and services are also available to alumnae and friends of Sweet Briar at no cost.

1. Assumes a female, age 45 in a combined federal and state income tax bracket of 55%.

2. As above and income discounted at 5% for 20 years.

The Indiana Fletcher Williams Associates was formed to recognize those who support the College with a bequest or other form of deferred gift.

Christmas greetings

---

The holiday season traditionally evokes our gratitude for remembrances past and our hopes for a joyous future. Although I have been at Sweet Briar for but a short while, I am grateful for the crucial linkages of the present, past and future which comprise the essence of the College.

We of the campus community thank you for your affection, your abiding loyalty and the gift of your service. We wish you and your loved ones a season of joy and propitious beginnings.

Sincerely,

There were over 250 alumnae who returned to Sweet Briar for the Alumnae Council and Inaugural Events this fall. What an exciting and historic time to be on campus.

"In Celebration of Sweet Briar" was the theme of the week. All week there were exhibitions of works by alumnae artists and books by alumnae authors on display in the Babcock Auditorium and the Mary Helen Cochran Library.

The Alumnae Exhibition included works by Sarah Everett Toy '28, Elizabeth Cate Pringle '62, Mary Jane Schroder '62, Laurie Debuys Pannell '64, Fay Martin Chandler '43, Susan Hobbs Crowder '65, and Jean Love Albert '46.

Some of the authors whose books were on display were Phoebe Pierson Dunn '36, Cordelia Penn Cannon '34, Julia Sadler de Coligny '34, Patricia Russell Binnie '60, Elizabeth Copeland Norfleet '30, Anna Chao Pai '57, Martha Von Briesen '31, Annabelle Forsch Prager '43, Nancy Hickox Wright '68, Catherine Lynn '64, and Estelle Sinclaire Farrar '70.

In addition, every day there were concerts or lectures or panels featuring Sweet Briar alumnae. We were treated to two alumnae in concert on Tuesday evening: Diana Martin Gordon '75, pianist, and Lucy Dennington Kennedy '73, voice.

The Founder's Day speaker was Robert Shaw, conductor of the Atlanta Symphony and founder/director of the Robert Shaw Chorale and husband of Caroline Sauls Shaw '58. His address "The Conservative Arts" was delightful, very well received and an inspiration to all who heard it.

A panel on the arts featured Betty Forsyth Harris '60, dance performer and educator, business manager, Dance by Two; Mimi Garrard '58, dancer, choreographer, artistic director, Mimi Garrard Dance Co.; Annabelle Forsch Prager '43, writer and illustrator; and Joan Vail Thorne '51, playwright/director.

Sweet Briar in the professions was represented by a panel whose alumnae participants included Virginia Upchurch Collier '72, physician; Mary Elizabeth Barbour Beggs, '48, radar expert and technical administrator; Elaine Schuster '58, attorney; Anna Chao Pai '57, associate professor of biology, Montclair State University.

We were treated to Molly Haskell '61, film critic of Vogue Magazine lecturing on "Images of Women in American and European Cinema" on Thursday evening.

The final alumnae panel was on networking and featured Frances McClung '80, associate systems analyst, Planning Research Corp.; Mellie Hickey Nelson '67, trial attorney, Dept. of Justice; Margaret Djerf DeRidder '56, education supervisor, Woodbridge State School; and Bryan Alphin Bente '69, design chemist, Hewlett-Packard/Genentech.

As you can see, Fall Council was indeed very unusual and very exciting this year. It was wonderful to hear from so many alumnae as to how Sweet Briar helped them and what Sweet Briar means to them now.

It would not be fair to send this report without including some statistics and other information from all of our business meetings:

1. The Alumnae Fund reached $688,744, exceeding its goal by $68,744.
2. There were more donors in each giving category.
3. There was a fantastic total of 50% participation in alumnae giving.
4. 33% of the students receive financial aid based on need.
5. There are 255 freshmen — largest freshman class since 1967.

6. The total enrollment is 785 — LARGEST enrollment in history.

7. The College has plans to introduce President Fry to alumnae in different areas of the country over the next year.

8. "In Search of an American Foreign Policy" is the theme for the alumnae sponsored Winter Forums.

9. Check with Marilyn Ross, Assistant to the President, about our Visiting Scholars Program (our faculty teaching at secondary schools for a limited time).

10. Admissions has a policy change and will accept the American College Testing Scores and/or S.A.T. scores for college admission. This will give us more access to students from the South, West and Southwest.

The Brass Quintet from the North Carolina School of the Arts provided music for the inaugural ceremony.

Victor W. Henningsen, Jr., Chairman, Boards of Directors and Overseers with President Nenah Elinor Fry.

The Sweet Briar Concert Choir sang "Lift Up Thine Eyes."

11. Career Planning is available to all alumnae and $2.50 will get you a year's subscription to their monthly newsletter. Write to Career Planning Office to get on the list.

12. Tuition is $9,650 — the actual cost is $15,665. Endowment makes up the difference.

13. We now offer Junior Year in Seville and in London as well as Junior Year in France.

14. Planned Giving offers free confidential advice on a 1-to-1 basis on how to save taxes in deferred giving.

15. There are 60 alumnae daughters and granddaughters at Sweet Briar this year.

Betty Doucett Neill '41 was the recipient of the Outstanding Alumna Award for her distinguished service to Sweet Briar as a volunteer.

Virginia Squibb Flynn '32 is the winner of the trip to Holland based on bulb sales. Congratulations!

Winner of the Helen McClure Gager Award for someone in the Sweet Briar College community who has shown excellence in chemistry was Bryan Alphin Bente '69.

Congratulations to all three.

This fantastic week came to its logical peak with the inauguration ceremonies on Saturday. The campus was filled with distinguished guests and representatives from 110 different colleges and universities, as well as present and former Board of Overseers members, and of course, our own faculty and senior class. Mary K. Lee McDonald made us very proud as she brought greetings from the alumnae. It was a gorgeous, clear day and the campus was at its height of beauty.

The celebration ended on a high note on Sunday morning with a worship service at which President Fry's brother gave the sermon. The concert choir sang beautifully, accompanied by the North Carolina School of the Arts orchestra, which had also played at the Inauguration. Soloists for the Bach Cantata No. 29 were Ellen Apperson Brown '72, soprano, and Mary Morris Gamble Booth '50, alto.

Everyone who took part in the festivities this week had a real feeling of exuberance and pride in Sweet Briar. We realize how privileged we are to be a part of such a superior institution!

HYMN (St. Anne)
O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home.

Before the hills in order stood,
Or earth received her frame,
From everlasting thou art God,
To endless years the same.

A thousand ages in thy sight
Are like an evening gone;
Short as the watch that ends the night
Before the rising sun.

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Be Thou our guide while life shall last,
And our eternal home.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS
BY
ELINOR FRY

We gather today "In Celebration of Sweet Briar," to make the inauguration of her seventh President integral to that larger whole. For it is only in that larger whole that what we do has meaning. Like any ceremonial event, an inauguration resonates with symbol and reality, past and present, institutional and personal. I am mindful of that today, with the wish that attention to me be viewed only as honor to us all, to my six predecessors and to each generation that is incarnate in our College today.

There is something propitious about the Seventh — practically every major culture has attached mystic significance to that number — and I claim that promise of the Seventh presidency for us all.

Having sought to deflect personal attention toward communal honor, I would be remiss if I failed to inject a personal note of gratitude. Seated in this place are many of the people who most profoundly have made this day a possible part of my life. My family, for whom there are no words, and my friends: from a college roommate, Jean Curtis Gordon, who put up with my intense period; to a departmental chair, Helen Adams Nutting, who quite properly assumes she taught me practically everything I know; to a college President, Frances Tarlton "Sissy" Farenthold, whose loyalty and grace will, I hope, inspire my own in all my dealings with colleagues. My catalogue of obligations to people in this audience would more than fill the brief time I want to spend with you today, so please — all of you — accept as yours my recognition of the debts I owe.

Sweet Briar College was founded with the high hopes, but indefinite specifications, of its benefactress, Indiana Fletcher Williams. As we considered on Founders' Day, the early years required the careful attention of the first Directors to matters of curriculum and facilities. The Directors weighed alternatives about preparatory and collegiate, vocational and abstract, and adventurously resolved "that Sweet Briar shall attempt this new line of educational effort — distinctly peculiar to our own." To be sure, the Directors were considering a quite limited practicality in combination with the rigorously intellectual, and wisely — we think — abandoned the former to focus upon the latter, as represented in the curricula of the finest women's colleges. (We might note, parenthetically, that in so doing, they probably ignored the wishes of Miss Indie, who had collected prior to her death thousands of yards of cloth and a large number of knives. But had she dreamed that Sweet Briar women would sew and carve, she did not say so in her will.)

The Directors, and especially the first President and faculty, set the College on the course of liberal learning that we still pursue. But in that earlier resolve, despite its specific context, I find an ideal to which we might profitably return: “educational effort...distinctly peculiar to our own.” It is time, I think, that we look at what is ours with new appreciation, that we turn our reality toward the positive challenge and opportunity it represents, rather than dwelling, as is so academically human, upon its possible liabilities.

Let me start with a somewhat playful example, our name, Sweet Briar. How our forebears agonized over the potentially detrimental and unserious implications of that name! Yet Sweet Briar Rose — with a bit of stretching — can be viewed as an oxymoron: Oxymoron, a witty saying, the more pointed from being paradoxical (or seemingly absurd). One does not readily find sweetness in a briar nor think of the briar’s prickly toughness as “sweet.” Of course, it is the rose and not the prickle which allows the briar to become “sweet.” And the prickly toughness may be said to have a purpose, to protect and preserve the fragility of the rose.

While we might be stretching the definition of oxymoron, we need not stretch history at all to note that the name, Sweet Briar, associated with quality and the highest standards, as in our Junior Year in France Program, attracts recognition and admiration: “educational effort... distinctly peculiar to our own.” In our history as well, is the wonderful story of our first President, Miss Benedict, at a meeting of college presidents. One of her colleagues snorted, “What a name! I would as soon have a diploma from Lily-of-the-Valley College.” Imagine then Miss Benedict’s dismay as she saw the formidable M. Carey Thomas approaching; Miss Thomas, already legendary for her no-nonsense requirements for the education of women. Now Miss Thomas was the president of the not exactly euphonious Bryn Mawr; nonetheless, Miss Benedict could have felt nothing but gratification in M. Carey’s observation, “Sweet Briar? What a beautiful name!”

It is time that we look anew at what is ours, at the charge, for example, that we are somehow cut off from what is “real” and inhabit an irrelevant “ivory tower.” Acknowledging the reality of the dangers of our isolation, I would still assert that the image, ivory tower, implies something crucial to our nature: an edifice of extravagant worth which is designed, not to shut its denizens off from the world, but rather to provide them with a vantage point — like Adam's on the mountain with the Angel in Paradise Lost, or Robert Frost's "swinger of birches" — a vantage point from which the broad outlines of the world may be viewed and some idea grasped of its vastness, its complexity, its shadows and its lights. The tower must be a part of the world, resting upon it, sharing in it, but it is not, and never could be, co-extensive with the world or equivalent to it. It is surely as much a potential strength, as a potential weakness, that a college is limited and set apart. Not being the same as the wider world makes it no less relevant, for what other human institution requires the examination of the possible, of the range of creativity and personality? The "ivory tower" (all of the "ivory towers" of the colleges in this land) properly viewed is then a national treasure, a commitment by our society to its young that there is a peculiar space set apart for them in which to grow, in which to learn that humanity is not a biological condition, but an aspiration. A space "distinctly peculiar to our own."

In that space, it is time that we look anew at what is ours and appreciate the vitality of what we are asked to do. In the routine of committee meetings, we can lose sight of the context of our actions and grow discouraged by the apparent redundancy of our ideas and efforts. An historian of the 19th and 20th centuries can helpfully remind us that we live in the midst of the most profound intellectual reorientation, if you prefer revolution, to affect our civilization, since the 17th century. With Einstein and Planck and Heisenberg, the premises on which to analyse the universe were forever altered and what has since happened only deepens our dismay, as it has expanded our technology. Intellectual fragmentation characterizes the age; synthesizing visions, obsessively sought and scathingly ridiculed, have come and gone. While we might point out that the search for unity is old in Western thought — that the plaint can be heard at least as early as Bacon and Descartes — we cannot deny that our times have fallen victim to a particular intellectual indigestion. And, as Henry Adams observed at the beginning of the century:

The difficulties of education had gone on doubling with the coal output, until the prospect of waiting another ten years, in order to face a seventh doubling of complexities, allured one's imagination but slightly.

Accompanying the intellectual fragmentation of our century were, quite understandably, raging battles over curriculum in colleges, for what is a curriculum other than an attempt to order and present the essential knowledge and wisdom of a civilization? Depth and breadth, requirements and electives, liberal arts and careers; all of these war-cries are as old as Henry Adams's wry observation and as far from resolution as is a cultural synthesis. In that light, everything we discuss most urgently as educators is indeed old and even redundant, at least as old as the early twentieth century. But paradoxically, a recent study indicates that the content of the curriculum is being "reconstituted completely every twenty-two years." So we return our attention to the questions of depth and breadth, specialization and synthesis, requirements and electives, liberal arts and careers, in the full knowledge that there is no perfect or final curriculum and that, at least in our century, there was no set curriculum.

We did not have some pure ideal of liberal education which irretrievably has been lost, nor were the ways things were ever more than temporary accommodations with the best that was thought at the time. Educators, above all, must be wary of the allure of a specious certainty in an alleged Golden Age — even if that Golden Age is as recent as our graduate education — and of the self-protecting assumption that change necessarily is equivalent to decline. Since a precise definition of the substance of liberal education has eluded us for nearly a century, we surely need not be threatened by its absence now or unwilling to think again about what it might mean in the last decade and a half of the century. To think again is to affirm, not the futility of what we do, but the vitality and cogency of our curriculum in the context of the wider world.

In thinking again, Sweet Briar must pursue "educational effort — distinctly peculiar to our own." What are some of the essential elements of that distinction? We are, above all, a teaching institution and teaching — whatever the knowledge it conveys — remains what always it has meant: "a care and concern for the future of humankind, a Platonic love of the species, not for what it is, but what it might be." The teacher then is at the same time the conveyor, the end, and the justification for what he or she "professes." The teacher exemplifies the merit of the "examined" life and by that example encourages students to think that such a life is "worth living." It is not too much to expect an historian to live with the humility and equanimity that the study of history encourages or the scientist to convey that passionate commitment to the verifiable that is the hallmark of the disciplines. In a small community, the teacher looms larger than what is taught in the liberal education of students. And the interplay of the generations of learners — faculty and students — molds the openness to learning that is liberal education's highest product. I am not suggesting that teachers must be giants or super-humans; I am suggesting that they must understand greatness and desire it for themselves and for their students. More than research, more than "faculty development," the humane confidence of the teacher in the supreme importance of educating young women is essential to good teaching at Sweet Briar. And however difficult it is to assess, the promotion of good teaching must be our primary institutional concern.

We also are distinctive for the sound and prudent financial management that gives the College the foundation on which to develop curriculum and to promote good teaching. (Few college presidents could make that statement!) At the same time that I pay tribute to all of you whose energy and generosity have made that true, I must caution against complacency. The times are not congenial for small institutions; enrollment must be our unremitting concern, as well as increased endowment. We must remain watchful stewards of our College's resources, but always remember for what purpose we undertake that stewardship. Like the 19th century utilitarians who failed to realize that happiness could never be an end of human life, too much of higher education today fails to realize that financial solvency is not the end for educational institutions. To be sure, without it, nothing else is possible, but having it in the absence of educational purpose is fruitless, in the truest sense. To be solvent, to be well managed are essential means — and only that — to the end of every college of distinction. The end remains the conservation and re-translation of the "best that has been thought and said." "Management by objectives," will never substitute for leadership with vision, the vision that facilitates "an educational effort... distinctly peculiar to our own."

We are distinctive finally by virtue of being a college for women, one of only a few more than one hundred that remain. We have not begun to capitalize upon what that truly might mean (or imagine the "things unknown" to give them "a local habitation and a name.") Women's colleges have an opportunity and obligation to demonstrate that the conservation of the “best that has been thought and said” — all of it, and including the gifts of women — can be an original contribution to our culture. That full spectrum of experience, vigorously analyzed and synthesized, presents the first complete picture of our shared humanity. And it is the necessary foundation of the education for equality that must be available to men and women.

Let us bury forever the aardvark notion that women’s concerns are faddish and trendy; most of our fields have been profoundly altered, in content or affect, by them. And the women and men who were the “children of the Sixties” are about to send their children to us. The assumptions of those children, the assumptions with which they have been raised, are an enduring legacy of that troubled time. The best of the Sixties will come to us in students who expect equality, expect institutions responsive to them, expect a world preservable from destruction. They will expect of their College a curriculum large enough for their aspirations and their needs and I encourage you to look at our resources in all the disciplines to focus upon the multi-national and American dimensions of the world they will live in. No one could do that better than we, for we have resources in our size, location, and tradition that are “distinctly peculiar to our own.”

When I spent my life full-time in a classroom, I had a private and personal custom. The last class in any year was almost unbearably poignant to me, especially in my favorite course in the 19th and 20th centuries. Having taken the students through the hoops of methodology and Metternich, I would come to the end and confess, as now I do to you, I have nothing more to say. But, I would continue, if you still wonder what I have been about, in all this, let me quote from Camus:

My role I know is not to transform the world nor man. For that, I have neither wisdom enough nor clear-sightedness. But it is rather to serve where I can those few values without which the world even new would not be worth living in nor man even changed would not be worthy of respect.

Educators are no longer clerics, but education may still be a calling. With that spirit, I undertake the seventh Presidency of Sweet Briar College. ■

Betty Doucett Neill '41, flanked by The Reverend Myron B. Bloy, Jr. and Mary K. Lee McDonald

Mary Elizabeth Doucett Neill of Southern Pines, N. C., was honored as recipient of the Sweet Briar College Alumnae Award for 1983 at the College's annual Founders Day celebration. This award recognizes an alumnae who has given outstanding volunteer service to Sweet Briar.

Betty Neill, who graduated from Sweet Briar in 1941, is a former member of the college's Board of Overseers. She has served the college in many other capacities and is currently chairman of Alumnae Fund Agents and chairman of The Boxwood Circle. She has also been a member and a regional chairman of the Executive Board of the Alumnae Association, and has served on the Finance and Nominating Committees of the Association.

While a student at Sweet Briar, Betty was business manager of the Briar Patch, a member of QV and Tau Phi, and active in various student organizations.

She has an advanced degree in occupational therapy, and has been active as a volunteer working with retarded children, as well as with the PTA and the Meals on Wheels program.

Her husband, John E. Neill, an alumnus of Washington and Lee University, is former vice-president and director of W. W. Norton Co., book publishers, in New York. Before his retirement, they lived in Chappaqua, New York. They have three children, John, Jr., Douglas, and Marty, who graduated from Sweet Briar in 1972. ■

The Frame You Are In

Opening
Convocation Address
September 13, 1983

by Maxine Garner,
Wallace E. Rollins
Professor of Religion,
Emeritus

I am delighted to be here — abashed a little, but delighted. Those of us here who are not students have students as our chief concern. You will see that I am addressing young learners of all ages. Almost any action that we contemplate has drawbacks, difficulties, disadvantages. I want to commend to you something that has none of these.

It will enable you to have more fun, to see and appreciate more of the world about you. Worlds, you will find, often make little enough sense. We must get all the help that we can to make as much sense as possible out of ours. It will help you to hear more in music, to participate more in whatever art comes your way, to enjoy more heights and depths in what you read, to understand more in whatever you hear spoken, to have more centers of response alive to all life's variety of stimuli.

It will make you more interesting to your friends, and the best of them more interesting to you, enabling you to entertain and to be entertained. It will give you a sure sense of doing better by your family to whom you are endlessly obligated. It will prepare you for employment, will make you more employable on every count listed by the career counselors. It will equip you for travel to far places, to taste flavors undreamed of by most in Moscow's Red Square and on Rio's Copacabana beach. It will companion you with meaning in the lanes of your birthplace and on the streets of your childhood. It will support you in company — in the company of strangers and around the table with the people you know best. It will furnish you for solitude, will undergird you in loneliness, will equip you to endure and sometimes to delight in aloneness. It will make you at home in your language. It can bring you to see that her, him, and me have as rightful place in human discourse as do she, he, and I, and that it does not behoove the likes of you and me or even of him and her to deny it to them or deprive them of it.

It will. I think it is safe to promise, help you to be in better health, to realize whatever optimum level of wellness is achievable for you, and will sustain you in whatever ailments nonetheless overtake you.

You will have guessed that it is learning — the liberal learning — a foundation of acquaintance with the range of human knowledge on which we must build all our lives long — which has this wonderland of rich well-being to bestow.

Multitudes of the world's population — many of them more richly deserving women bearing inescapably heavy burdens — some of them far from us — half a world away — and some of them very near — do not have this option so compellingly open to us in this place, this week.

No one anywhere has more favorable circumstances for this pursuit. Recall for a moment the incomparable supports lavished on us here, to free us to learn in comfort and with pleasure. Consider the services: the food service, the health service, the Chapel, and that attractive array of assistance waiting for us in what a new student, about this time last year in my hearing, so felicitously called "the bottom of the Church!" Think of the Book Shop. Think of the pool. Think of the Library where all those friends stand ready to put the right book in our hands. If they do not have it, they look at a magic screen, push a magic button, and have the book sent from Boston or Atlanta or whatever in a day or two.

Early in this short hot summer, I had visions of giving you tonight some ringing exuberant call to the joys of learning, climaxed by pointing to the excellence of your teachers, then of breezing away into the night. My circumstances have changed. Instead of breezing off through the night, I will go from here with you back to the dorms and at 8:30 in the morning face the music with you again.

I am not complaining. I simply must ask you to permit me, forgivable or not, not to tone down my estimate of your teachers nor the gravity of the burden of obligation on us all, students and teachers.

It is a special honor that you have been selected to study in this good college. It has been a good college for a long time. In large measure, the kind of college that it will be in this year we are beginning is in your hands. President Fry and Dean Belford, their fellow administrators, and their fellow members of the faculty must share that responsibility with you. However wise and proper their efforts, the quality of the College can rise no higher than the quality of the work that you can bring yourself to do. All those supportive services are just that: the business of the College is learning. Learning cannot take place without your deliberate interest and intelligent effort.

The mathematician-philosopher Frege said that after a lifetime of study he was on really familiar terms with the first six digits. By his standards, I cannot claim to know any number at all. There are some words that I have watched and liked a while, and I lay claim to acquaintance with a few of them. It is with numbers and words that learning is done, so don't neglect either of them. I don't want to seem to imply that results are our principal focus. To put off learning, to short-change it, to refuse the time and energy that it takes is to deprive yourself of the most enduring and absorbing fun.

A treasure beyond price in this experience you will find in the men and women who teach you. They also were selected — for fewer vacancies and from a more competitive pool. Do not be bemused by evaluations into concluding that they are on probation. They are not. Evaluations are just one of many tools by which you can make your needs known. That no one of the teaching staff is your adversary, that they are superbly fitted to guide your learning, eager always themselves to learn, and entirely committed to your best development — none of these is open to question.

Along with this superior direction, which cannot really be over-valued, no learner ever had a better physical setting in which to do this crucial and delightful work. The dorms to which we will go are very like a place dreamed of in Buddhist sutras centuries old, where the water is hot when you want it hot and sparkling cold when you want it cold — not always sparkling clear, but let me reassure you, bathing in and drinking all colors of Sweet Briar water for twenty-five years leaves not a single ill effect!

Our work is done in this beautiful place where cones fall from the Deodar Cedars the first week in November, where the gold finches swarm through the trees in the quadrangle around April 17th every spring, where a wondrous cloud of white azaleas breaks into bloom around the front of this building about May first, the same week that a double dogwood flowers just to the right of the entrance to the Infirmary.

Then before classes end, the northern orioles will begin to nest in the first trees to the right at the Boathouse.

A gifted reader found the book of James in the New Testament dull and pedestrian and, assuming that the writer was Jesus's brother James, wrote a rhyme about him. The book is, I think, too late to have been written by one of Jesus's own generation, and I don't find the writing James as bad as did the poet. But I like the rhyme:

Of all the mistakes of the ages, the saddest methinks is this:

*To have been the brother of Jesus
To have played with him day by day
And never to have caught the vision that glorified his clay.*

It is that kind of sad mistake, not a thinkable mistake, really, to spend time on these splendid areas and to miss the vision of what Sweet Briar College has to offer.

I have of course a wealth of first-class advice about how to learn.

Don't spend these irreplaceable days on small beer like trading roommates. Get along with her, whatever it takes. It will take ingenuity and generosity and grace, equipment that will come in handy for your enduring commitments in the Camelots down the roads.

Get an alarm clock — an alarm clock that you can program, that never fails.

Listen in class with all your pores open. Get some clear understanding of what goes on, and write down enough to remind you flawlessly of that clear understanding. Get it completely straight before you preserve it. Don't write down anything that you don't understand. Try to relate the material to all that you are. Realize that however able and gifted your instructor (and I know first-hand that they are able and gifted, indeed) he or she cannot accomplish much alone. A good class has at least two persons totally involved in making some part of some subject come alive and take sure root in your understanding. If just one is working at this joyous miracle, it will not come off. You must make it possible for them to do what they are so fitted and eager to bring about, for you and with you. That cannot be brought about without your constant and, let us face it squarely, sometimes strenuous effort.

I must implore you to go to class, always; to make no appointment that conflicts with any class; to redouble your efforts when difficulty erupts in your network of caring, even off these acres, when the people dear to you have problems. The people dear to us all have problems off and on. The Buddhists are surely right here; pain and difficulty go with the territory, with every territory. The best gift (frequently the only gift) you can give is to do as superbly well as you are able your work on that day. Help something in their life to go wonderfully right, as right as you can make it. Certainly it is no time to absent yourself, to flee from your work, to neglect your obligations, to compound whatever troubles there are with deliberate and uncalled for failures of your own.

In each class (remember you are unfailingly there), in sickness and in health, you will get some clear marching order. You will get new material to confirm and enlarge and clarify in your textbooks and in the Library. The Library is a fantastic powerhouse that we all neglect at our peril. Try very hard not to put the new material away on cold storage; keep in some living relation with it; free it to percolate through what you knew before and into what you are learning on every other front.

The title of this piece comes from a story told in our household before I went to any school. I thought then — grown-ups will laugh at anything.

An old friend was recalling a beautiful evening on a nearby lake, a muddy lake that figured in the life of our town much as Lake Louise or Loch Lomond or Windermere must figure in the lives of some. He told of the just-right angle of the moon and of some unearthly fragrant bloom around the water's edge. My parents and their friends laughed (a good deal more, I thought then, than his story was worth) as he went on to tell about his companion. "Juanita," he said, "is, as you know, a fine looking girl. I thought as I smelled the flowers and saw the moon on the water that this must be the most beautiful scene in God's whole creation. You know and like her," he said, "and she will not mind my telling you that the most wonderful thing about that most wonderful picture was the frame she was in."

I commend that story to you, certainly not for boats and lakes and moons (you need no advice there, at least, none from me) but in classes, in your room, in the Library in the long weeks between the Deodar cones and the gold finches, in those long stretches between the holidays when the term settles to what threatens to be a drear monotony marked by head colds and unsettling telephone bills, fevered by the frustrations and anxieties of us all, it is then that the frame you choose to be in can make all the difference.

And (let us not delude ourselves) it is largely a matter of choice. You can decide whether your year will sing or flounder or grind along in deadly dullness. I beseech you to take part in classes, in the services of worship, in lectures, in concerts, in the inauguration on October 15th, in films and programs of all kinds, to read and think and ask, to prepare and help and care, to remember that in learning the ball is always in your court; it is always your move; it is never appropriate for you just to sit there, casting the burden on somebody else to educate you. Let the professors watch the clock. It is their job; they are good at it; they are all watching it now.

At the end of the book of Proverbs in the Jewish scriptures is a description written some 2300 years ago of a woman trying to be all that she can be. In the original Hebrew, it is an acrostic, with each line beginning with a different letter of the Hebrew alphabet which is not discernible in translation or of much relevance for our purpose.

A few years ago from this very lectern, Bess Myerson spoke of this passage and poked fun at it, a little. That seemed to me then a mistake. The woman described in Proverbs is no slouch, no one to whom Bess (certainly no slouch herself) should want to condescend. A practice or two mentioned there, such as her weaving the fabric for her family's clothes and getting up before sunrise to prepare their food, we may want to leave to her ancient moment. In other ways, however, we have not begun to catch up with her. The verses run—

"Strength and dignity are her clothing
And she laughs at the time to come."

Rarely do we handle anything well enough that we can laugh at the time to come. And that is my wish for you, for us all. May you in this year, in all your years, work and play at such a level of excellence, of earnest and glad accomplishment (not too much to expect of persons so endowed and so blessed) in each week, in each day, that you can laugh at all time to come. ■

In those long stretches between the holidays when the term settles to what threatens to be a drear monotony marked by head colds and unsettling telephone bills, fevered by the frustrations and anxieties of us all, it is then that the frame you choose to be in can make all the difference.

Sweet Briar offers two new foreign study programs

Seville

by Alix Ingber, Assistant Professor of Spanish

For many years the Sweet Briar Junior Year in France, widely known for the excellence of its program, has brought the college national attention. It bespeaks, in the clearest possible fashion, our commitment both to academic quality and to the necessity for internationalizing the educational process as a means of achieving this. Because we want Sweet Briar College to retain her position of leadership in this area we have been actively exploring other possibilities for overseas programs. What follows elaborates on two new programs which have emerged as a result. In addition to these, we have negotiated a special arrangement for our students with the Middlebury Program in Florence, Italy, and have affirmed our long-term warm relationship with the University of Heidelberg in Germany.

Although Sweet Briar College already has the largest proportion of foreign students of any of our sister schools in Virginia, we are always seeking ways to internationalize our campus further. The more we can be made aware, through participation in one another's lives and cultures, of those bonds which link the human community, the better we are prepared to serve it. And this is surely at the heart of what education at Sweet Briar College is all about.

*Fontaine Maury Belford
Dean of the College*

During the summer of 1983 the Boards of Overseers and Directors of Sweet Briar College approved our acquisition of the Brooklyn College Program at the University of Seville. Renamed the Sweet Briar College Junior Year in Spain, the program will begin its first full year of operation under our direction during the 1984-85 academic year. We are at present — with the expert and much appreciated assistance of the director and staff of the Junior Year in France — preparing all the materials needed to publicize the program and recruit our first group of student participants.

The program, at least for the first few years of operation, will be a small one, with no more than fifteen students enrolled during 1984-85. While we encourage all students to participate for the full academic year, we understand that some students may find this impossible, and offer them the option of enrolling for either the Fall or Spring semester. Students participating in the program will be able to enroll in two types of courses at the University of Seville, regular University courses in a wide range of fields, and special courses for foreign students (also taught in Spanish by University of Seville faculty) in the areas of language, literature, history, art history, and Latin American studies.

We believe that Seville is an ideal location for our Junior Year in Spain Program. In addition to providing a truly traditional Spanish atmosphere for students in the 18th Century baroque building long associated with Bizet's opera Carmen, The University of Seville has the advantage of accepting only four programs from American universities. Students enrolled in these programs have access to the regular University curriculum. In Madrid, by contrast, there are so many American programs that these are all housed together on a separate campus and do not offer students as much opportunity to study with Spanish students.

We expect that this program will benefit Sweet Briar College in a number of important ways. Its very existence should enhance our attractiveness to high school students interested in spending their junior year in Spain. The program itself should also build on the prestige already earned for the college by its Junior Year in France. And, finally, our administration of the program should give us a greater degree of control over our students' academic experience in Spain. We will be able in this way to both maintain high academic standards and guarantee adequate supervision for our own students and participants from other colleges.

England

By Ralph Aiken, Professor of English

Sweet Briar always has been eager to enable its students to spend their junior year in Great Britain, but we have avoided setting up the kind of American ghetto for them that too many American programs over there unfortunately are. We have helped them to find places in Scottish and provincial universities such as St. Andrews and Exeter where they would be treated as first-class citizens, but we have not until now been able to open up anything but occasional places at the University of London.

This past June our dean, Fontaine Belford, sent me off to look into possibilities in London, and I spent a week calling on a number of the colleges that make up the University of London. It was an instructive week, and at the end I decided to recommend, for a variety of reasons, Royal Holloway College as the place with which we ought to try to set up an arrangement. We entered into negotiations with them in September, and now, at the beginning of November, we have every hope that five or more Sweet Briar juniors will be spending 1984-1985 there.

Royal Holloway is a college of about 1,500 students, located at Egham, Surrey, some 18 miles up the Thames from central London and quite close to Windsor; it is very beautiful. Not the least of its advantages is that it is a residential college like Sweet Briar, and our students will be able to eat, sleep, study, and go to classes in the midst of the regular British undergraduates. Central London is only half an hour away by train.

Sweet Briar students will find a full range of programs there. Majors in mathematics, computer sciences, and experimental sciences can go there for a year without losing touch with their majors here, as can those in social studies and the arts. Royal Holloway's history department will be the largest and strongest in the University of London with the arrival of Bedford College; the two colleges are in the process of amalgamating. The already strong English department also will be augmented by the Bedford faculty, and Katharine Worth, the only professor of drama and theatre in the University, is building up a very fine department in that field.

Sweet Briar is currently negotiating for fees that will be lower than those ordinarily charged overseas students, and part of this arrangement will result in our taking one of Royal Holloway's students free each year, thereby adding to the international flavor of our campus at home. Still another plan is to exchange a member of our faculty for one of theirs each year. All in all, an exciting prospect; I hope that in two year's time we can give you a glowing report of this arrangement's success.

A program that we already can report on glowingly is the Virginia Program at Oxford, in which Sweet Briar has participated along with Hampden-Sydney, Mary Baldwin, Roanoke, VMI, and Washington and Lee since its beginning in the summer of 1981. The aim here is to duplicate an Oxford term during the summer for those students who, for one reason or another, either cannot spend a year abroad or do not want to. This past summer, when I was the American director on the scene, nine Sweet Briar women were part of the group of 28.

The participants live, eat, and work in St. Anne's College, Oxford, and concentrate their minds on the history and the literature of late 16th-century and early 17th-century England, the Elizabethan, Jacobean, and Caroline periods. The idea is to study one subject well, and if this year's lecture list is any index to excellence we did very well indeed; some of the most noted scholars in history, such as Robert Ashton and Christopher Hill, and in literature, such as Anne Barton and Christopher Ricks, spoke to the group.

Each student also met each week with a history tutor and a literature tutor, to read her essay and discuss her work. These tutors are British (I cannot say "English" because one is a Scot), and our program is perhaps unique among the many American summer schools in Oxford in that, although we set it up and supervise it, all the tutoring and lecturing that are the essence of the Oxford system are done by teachers from Oxford and other British universities.

Sweet Briar students very much enjoy this program, which includes theatre trips to London and Stratford-upon-Avon, and we are happy that we may also be able to offer one or two of our best juniors a full year at one of the Oxford colleges.

I discovered this past summer that the University of Oxford will now allow its colleges and halls to accept a few year-abroad students, and I made the time to call on some of them to explore possibilities for our students. They all said that they would look at applications from those who are exceptionally able, and the Principal of St. Hugh's College, Oxford, from which former Sweet Briar president Anne G. Pannell Taylor received her doctorate, is going out of her way to call on us at Sweet Briar in February to look further into the matter.

All in all, the prospects for Sweet Briar students in Britain look good. We are confident that in the next few years some of our best students will be spending their junior year in colleges of the Universities of London and Oxford, while others will be expanding their minds during the summer in the Virginia Program at Oxford. Not flashy; just the real thing — the English way in conjunction with the Sweet Briar way. ■

The Government and Sweet Briar College Past, Present and Future

by Julia Mills Jacobsen, '45
Director of Government Relations and Sponsored Programs

The government has been involved with colleges and universities for a long time. Drexel Institute had a contract with the government to do the research and develop an iron battleship for the Lincoln administration. The range of research, training, and community service projects has been expanding ever since.

Since 1968, when I accepted the part-time position as coordinator of government relations at Sweet Briar, many changes have taken place in the government involvement with higher education and colleges like Sweet Briar. These changes have been of two kinds: change in the emphasis of federal funding, and changes in the government regulations and requirements of those who accept federal funding.

In the first case, the government is a reflection of the citizenry and acts to meet the needs of the public expressed through several thousand interest groups and associations. Colleges and universities, through their associations, called for help to expand their facilities in the 50s and 60s as the number of 18-23 year olds and the college-bound percentage of this group exploded. They built dormitories and new academic buildings with federal support. In the post-sputnik period the government reflected public concern for scientific obsolescence. In addition to research, the National Science Foundation (NSF) provided support for training, instructional scientific equipment and curriculum development. Sweet Briar benefited from construction loans and a $273,000 construction grant and received over a half-million dollars from NSF for scientific equipment and curriculum development over a period of several years.

Somewhere in the middle of this period, a bill sponsored by Senator Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island created a student financial assistance grant program which allocated funds for students rather than institutions. The students who meet the needs analysis test on an annual basis can use these Basic Educational Opportunity Grants (now known as Pell Grants) at the college of their choice (assuming they qualify for admission). This program grew from $900,000 a year to, along with other student support programs, several billion dollars per year. All of the higher education community has lobbied hard to sustain the student support program. The outcry of concerned parents and students joined with college and university officials succeeded in turning the budget cutters in the Congress to other issues for the time-being.

In the second case, new regulations came as fast as the federal dollars. One group of regulations applies to the public at large with or without federal dollars. These are the civil rights laws and regulations which are aimed at preventing discrimination. There are regulations to protect almost anything that lives — minorities, foreign nationals, women, handicapped, human subjects of research, children, and the elderly. A recent interest group has succeeded in getting bills on the floor of the House to prevent all use of animals for scientific experimentation. Regulations are already in force to insure humane treatment of laboratory animals. These regulations make it impossible to use animals without 24-hour care, separate rooms for mice and rabbits and a veterinarian consultant.

With the change of administration came a myth that the government would back out of its involvement with higher education. Funding cuts were enacted. It turned out that the cuts were more threatening because they were selective and in many cases based on limited information. Social science research was cut drastically and influence of the Moral Majority was suspect. Science education and undergraduate scientific equipment funds were cut out before a real examination of current funding purposes was conducted.

The science budget cuts bring us up to the present. This proved to be an untimely mistake and during the past year the administration, the Congress, industry, and the higher education community have expressed alarm over the state of science education in the country. Numerous commissions and committees have been established to study the matter and they have all come to the conclusion that our scientific efforts are falling behind other industrialized nations and public education at the precollege levels is lacking in quality. For over a year I have worked with a small group of Washington-based representatives known as the ad hoc committee on science education. The group's Higher Education's Agenda in Mathematics, Science and Technology Education report is the backbone of several important bills offering support for equipment, teacher training and curriculum development at undergraduate colleges.

It doesn't take a crystal ball to see that the next decade will be spent trying to sort out what the colleges' role must be to improve the quality of precollege education and how the colleges will meet the cost of keeping up with new generations of equipment, renovating old buildings and providing opportunities for faculty to keep up with new knowledge and new technologies. The cost will be enormous.

At Sweet Briar we are fortunate to have increasingly generous alumnae and good management which enable us to operate in the black. But no college today is prepared to meet the catch-up and advancement costs without outside support. The cry can once again be heard from the higher education community. Public and private institutions have made their case for more government support for instrumentation, faculty development opportunities and curriculum change. The response to the colleges and universities is contained in several bills which will most certainly be enacted and signed by the President. Close to a billion dollars in appropriations is proposed in these bills with higher priority for mathematics, engineering and computer science. And in the meanwhile a few revised regulations are put in place. Two are notable:

1) the NSF will let us make more local decisions on use of grant funds if we have an OPAS (Organizational Prior Approval System) — Sweet Briar has an OPAS;

2) we can have our own audit firm provide specialists in government to do the audit of federal student financial assistance fund and all other grants. The college, not the government, will pay for it, too.

Sweet Briar has consistently held to a policy of seeking federal money only for needs already carefully considered and approved and for not getting involved in add-on-type activities which eventually become a financial burden to the college. Our past federal support runs in the millions. The proposals Sweet Briar faculty submit for funding are competitive in terms of quality, so we can expect a continued high level of support. We are not dominated or under undue influence from the federal government and we use the federal (tax payer's) dollars carefully and effectively. This will be a decade of changing priorities for federal involvement, but rest assured that Sweet Briar will remain independent and the federal government will still be in business and spending some 23 billion dollars annually on research and other interests in colleges and universities.

We will be watching the Congress, the executive branch agencies, the lobby groups and our crystal ball to be sure proposed changes of emphasis and new regulations are not going to harm the interests of a small, liberal arts college for women, and we may need your assistance in getting information to your Congressman as the future unfolds. ■

Julia Jacobsen serves Sweet Briar as Director of Government Relations and Sponsored Programs and commutes to campus about every two weeks from her Washington office. For the past five years Sweet Briar has been part of the Association for Affiliated College and University Offices (AACUO), a cooperative Washington office established by Julia Jacobsen and Flora Harper, director of the East Central College Consortium. The arrangement has made it possible to provide members with far more extensive informational and advisory service on government grants and regulations than would be financially feasible for any single institution.

Everything's coming up Blooming!

Courtney Stevenson, National Bulb Chairman, reports another record year in the bulb department.

A total of 38 sellers were bonus winners this past year. Sixteen sold between $500 and $749, nine sold between $750 and $999, and there are now thirteen Bloomin' Alumnae (those with sales over $1,000).

Starting at the top, they are Irene Mitchell Moore '42 of Greensboro, NC, who sold $2,803.62 worth of bulbs, closely followed by Genevieve Marsh Fisher '38 of Washington, DC, with $2,695.22. Other big sellers were Rue Wallace Judd '61 Washington; Virginia Squibb Flynn '32 Fairfield County; Sara Callison Jamison '27 W. Lafayette; Gwen Speel Kaplan '60 Fairfield County; Emily Hunter Slingluff '55 Virginia Beach; Nancy Keen Butterworth Palmer '51 Nashville; Margaret Stuart Wilson Dickey '41 Texarkana; Laura Lee Brown Deters '63 Louisville; Becky Trulove '79 Richmond; Pat Calkins Wilder '63 Rochester; and Lydia Goodwyn Lorentzen '34 Richmond.

Virginia Squibb Flynn, is this year's winner of a trip to Holland in the spring, when the bulbs are flowering.

The top-selling clubs in 1983 were Washington, DC, $10,643; Richmond, VA, $6,549; Atlanta, GA, $5,768; Greensboro, NC, $5,753; Fairfield County, $5,071; and Indianapolis, $4,177.

Congratulations to them, and to all the sellers, clubs and Solos (individual sellers) who worked so hard. Sweet Briar and her students appreciate it!

Did you know...

that if each of Sweet Briar's 13,779 alumnae sold $10 worth of bulbs, we would have sales of $137,799 and $55,000 more for scholarships!

Bente wins Gager Award

Bryan Alphin Bente, design chemist for Genenchem, was presented with the second Helen McClure Gager Award in Chemistry at Sweet Briar's Founders Day ceremonies on Wednesday, Oct. 12.

The $400 award honors the late Professor Gager, who taught chemistry at Sweet Briar from 1976 to 1980, and was established in her memory by her husband, Forrest L. Gager, Jr., of Richmond, and other members of her family. The award recognizes distinguished work in the field of chemistry by a member of the Sweet Briar community, in this case an alumna.

Bryan, who graduated from Sweet Briar in 1969, has a Ph.D. in physical chemistry from Cornell. She has been an applications and design chemist for Hewlett-Packard since 1975. Genenchem is a new joint venture between Hewlett-Packard and Genentech, based in California.

ELDERHOSTEL at Sweet Briar

"Too good a secret to keep" is how the sixty enthusiastic Elderhostel participants at Sweet Briar College felt after last summer's program. Computers, home gardening, music, decorative arts, literature, natural history and ecology were the courses taught by Sweet Briar College faculty to the elder citizens here on their academic vacation. Sweet Briar College will again host Elderhostel the first two weeks in June, 1984. A detailed description of the courses will be available in the next bulletin.

Committee seeks nominees

The Nominating Committee of your Alumnae Association is always seeking names of Alumnae who might be interested in serving the College as members of the Executive Board or participating on various committees. Please consider yourself or other Alumnae you know. Send names and a brief biography to the Alumnae Office.

As we strive for a balance of age and geographic distribution, we will not be able to use everyone in any given year, but all names will be kept on file for future use. We will appreciate your help.

1984 Alumnae Travel

Australia and New Zealand

Jan. 2-17, 1984 (too late to apply).

APPLY IMMEDIATELY FOR:

Galapagos Islands, Ecuador, and Peru

(Guayaquil, Quito, Ambato, Lima, Cuzco, Machu Picchu and Galapagos Islands — seven-day cruise). Jan. 27-Feb. 12, 1984. $2799. From Darwin's "living laboratory of evolution" to Machu Picchu, secret city of the Incas, discover some of the highlights of South America and follow summer to the southern hemisphere.

Italy: Painters, Palaces, and Patrons

(Stays in Rome, Florence, Venice and Milan, as well as excursions to Orvieto, Siena, San Gimignano, Lucca, Ravenna, and Vicenza). March 30-April 14, 1984. $2992. A cultural visit to Italy especially designed to interest Sweet Briar Alumnae.

Uncommon Europe: Prague, Vienna, Dresden, and Berlin — East and West

April 26-May 10, 1984. $3089. A fascinating look at a less familiar part of Europe.

ANNOUNCEMENTS WILL BE MAILED SOON FOR:

Ireland

July 24-August 4, 1984

Classic Greece

Oct. 5-16, 1984

Further information may be obtained from the Alumnae Office, Box E, Sweet Briar, VA 24595. Telephone: 804/381-6131.

ADDITIONAL TRAVEL OPPORTUNITIES:

France: Forty years after the Liberation

Sponsored by the Junior Year in France. March 16-25, 1984. $1627. Visits in Paris and Normandy with seminars and lectures.

For information write Professor Robert G. Marshall, Director, Junior Year in France, Sweet Briar College, Sweet Briar, VA 24595.

Classical and Byzantine Greece

A study tour in Greece. May 24-June 22, 1984. Conducted by Professors Kenneth T. Wright, Jr., and Gregory T. Armstrong and designed for students, this tour will be open to a limited number of alumnae with a serious interest in classical antiquity.

Approximate cost (based on 25 participants): $1475, not including trans-Atlantic transportation, lunches/dinners, and admission fees.

For more information, write immediately to Professor Kenneth T. Wright, Jr., P.O. Box AX, Sweet Briar, Va 24595. Telephone numbers: office — 804/381-6107 and home — 804/381-5780.

Early, Early Days

Dear Briarites,

After reading the articles on Early Days at Sweet Briar (First Things by Tom Hartman, Fall 1982, and Vintage First Things by Perry Laukhuff, Summer 1983) I feel inspired to write about my impressions of Sweet Briar in the early, early days.

I entered Sweet Briar in the fall of 1911, spending two years in the "prep" department and four in the college, graduating in 1917 with an A.B. degree. I believe that Emmy Thomas and I are the only girls who spent six years at Sweet Briar. Emmy graduated in 1915. At that time there were only about 259 students and you knew most of them by name.

Lights went out at 10:30 p.m. after blinking a warning at 10:20. Breakfast was served promptly at 7:30 a.m. The doors were closed at 7:40. It was a custom to take a bacon sandwich to a roommate who had missed the deadline. This consisted of a slice of bacon in a biscuit.

There were only three dormitories at this time: Gray, Carson and Randolph. Manson was being built. A teacher lived in each dormitory. When Manson was completed we were required to attend chapel each morning after breakfast. It was held in the basement of Manson.

We were also required to take an hour of exercise every day, walking, tennis, basketball. You had to fill in a card saying what you had done. When Miss Gascoigne came over from England to be our physical instructor, she introduced la crosse.

I majored in chemistry and math and have exchanged letters with my instructors for many years. Leonora Neuffer Bilger (L.D., Little Docas, we called her) entertained us royally when we were in Hawaii. The Bilger Chemistry Building at the University of Hawaii is named in honor of the Bilgers.

Mt. St. Angelo was remodeled for the residence of the college president. Miss Benedict, however, preferred to live in Sweet Briar House. Consequently, it was sold to the Walkers. They had come to Sweet Briar from Manitoba, Canada. Ruby and Winnie came with Dr. and Mrs. Walker, also "Auntie," a sister. Dr. Will came later. I never knew their other daughter, Prairie Violet. She had married and lived in Manitoba. On Sunday the Walkers faithfully attended our church service in the basement of Manson. They sat on the side under the windows.

The Walkers were always "At Home" on Monday, and we used to walk over for tea and sandwiches. Thanksgiving night, Dr. Walker would build a huge bonfire and the entire college walked over for the event. This was followed by tea and mincemeat tarts.

The Book Shop was in a room in the basement of Randolph. They sold only books used in the classrooms. The Tea House was located in Daisy's Play House, next to Sweet Briar House. Besides serving afternoon tea, they had delicious chocolate cakes which you could buy to celebrate a birthday.

Many of us did not return home for the Thanksgiving break. That morning Mr. Martindale, the superintendent of grounds, invited the men of the Lynchburg Hunt Club over to Sweet Briar for a fox hunt. They came for breakfast and were a colorful sight in their red coats. They then let the fox loose and started to follow, returning at lunch time.

Mail was delivered to our rooms by the "mail girl," usually about 11 a.m. The doors to our rooms were never locked. There was only one telephone on campus and that was located in the Linen Room on the first floor of Gray. Miss Dix presided here, as did Miss Carroll in the refectory.

In my Junior year, a rumor went around that Miss Benedict was leaving. To settle the matter she called a meeting of all students, explaining that it would be a temporary leave, as she had always wanted to study medicine. However, the board did not go along with this, and Miss McVea became our second president. Of course, everyone loved Miss Benedict, so Miss McVea had one strike against her.

The Sweet Briar rose, for which the plantation and the college were named, grew along the arcades between Gray and Randolph.

There were two dances each year, one on Founders' Day and the other on May Day.

The boys came over mostly from Washington and Lee and V.M.I. The night watchman saw to it that they left the campus at midnight. I remember one dance especially. One of the Southern girls had sent home for a barrel of Spanish Moss, and it was a beautiful sight to see it hanging from the sidelights and the balcony.

These changes have come gradually for me, since I had returned to the college many times, for reunions when I was on the Council and during the time my daughter, Jean, was a student.

Dee Long was not Difficult

Alas and alack! I have to report that the gremlins which infest every editor's office and every printing plant made a smashing frontal attack on my article in the Fall issue, on "Vintage First Things: The Sweet Briar Faculty." In consequence, I have to ask that you publish this in the next issue so that the historical record is straight, and my reputation as a writer slightly redeemed!

The first and worst error concerns what I wrote about M. Dee Long. This occurs in the second column on Page 12, at the beginning of my description of Dee. The article as printed has me saying that "Miss M. Dee Long was difficult!" What I actually wrote was:

"Miss M. Dee Long, of the English Department, went back in service to 1919. She was a Kentuckian and proud of it, and she took to me like kith and kin when I revealed that my mother's family had been from Kentucky. Not that friendship with Dee Long was difficult."

The text then goes on as printed. What obviously happened was that somewhere along the line this passage was telescoped by joining the first words of the opening sentence with the last word of the third sentence. Dee Long was the most undifficult person I ever knew and it chagrins me deeply to have appeared to say such a ridiculous and untrue thing.

A second error of much the same sort developed in the last sentence of my description of Gladys Boone. This occurs in the last sentence of the first paragraph in the second column on Page 14. Here I am made to say that "With the three or four other foreign-born faculty members and wives, she lingered on for many years after her retirement," etc. Again it is case of telescoping. What I actually wrote was:

"With the three or four other foreign-born faculty members and wives, she added a cosmopolitan touch to the southern atmosphere. She lingered on for many years after her retirement," etc.

None of this reflects on Gladys. It only makes the writer look silly. I can just see all the foreign-born faculty members huddling together in Lynchburg after retirement! No doubt their years at Sweet Briar afflicted them with a severe case of Americanophobia!

Perhaps I should also call attention to the fact that in the second column on Page 12, I am made to say that Eugenie Morenus was "cheery" of speech. What I wrote was that she was "chary" of speech, a somewhat different attribute.

Again, at the end of the third paragraph on Page 11, I describe modern faculties as motivated by such factors as "hot" to get ahead' in the academic world." I hope your readers recognized that what I actually wrote was "how to get ahead" in the academic world."

One or two other typographical errors will be readily corrected by the eye and mind of the reader. At least two of the foregoing are, however, too serious to let pass without notice. Even though your readers will have long forgotten about the article before this letter can ever see the light of day, I hope you will print it for the sake of the record — and of dear Dee Long's memory.

This is a good opportunity to confess that the gremlins got an assist in the errors department from me myself. In writing of Dr. and Mrs. Preston Edwards, I said they had served as missionaries in China. The fact is that they served in India and I would like to set the record straight on this point, too.

Perry Laukhuff

The Whitemans and the Goths

The enclosed letter comes from a close friend of our children. While we were at Sweet Briar, we had the annual gathering at Thanksgiving of the "Goths"; a group of Yale students who were close friends. They came from all directions...Texas, Tennessee, Boston, New Jersey, New Haven, New York. We celebrated with banquets, touch football, basketball and croquet. We were invaded by the "Goths"!

We have received many wonderful responses concerning the Sweet Briar Magazine about the "Whiteman Years." Thanks again.

Edith Whiteman

Dear Whitemans,

I read the recent Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine with interest. I was engrossed in reading one of the articles about your stay there and it mentioned that you started there in '71. I was floored!

It really didn't seem possible that it was 12 years ago that we all started reconvening for Thanksgiving festivities.

The only letter missing from the Alumnae Magazine was the one from a Goth. As you know, a Goth's language is not very couth and his spelling can be atrocious, so I suppose there was a reason for the omission of the Goth letter.

There are quite a few Goths who cherish fond memories of Turkey Days at Sweet Briar. It has brought a great decision before the Goths of the world whether 'tis nobler to continue to descend on Sweet Briar each year and assist the new president in her life there, or whether the Goths should follow the lead of the Whitemans and move their annual convocation to the streets of New York City.

I feel like a Sweet Briar alum, myself. I have very fond memories of my visits there. A lot of the goodness of the memories comes from the reunion with old friends, but a lot of it has to do with your hospitality. Thank you for letting us invade, pillage and plunder Sweet Briar and thanks for joining in the fun.

Robbie Quinn (Dr. Robert Quinn)

Vintage Faculty — Another Perspective

Mr. Laukhuff's nostalgic recollections of the faculty he knew at Sweet Briar touched me deeply. It was almost the same faculty I knew, even though I knew them four years before Mr. Laukhuff and he knew them six years after me, so his Part II Vintage First Things enables me to look back at a significant decade of Sweet Briar professorship. My gratitude for Sweet Briar's academic and moral education continues to grow, even into old age. As a teacher and the wife of a teacher, I have spent half a century among teachers, and from that vantage point, I realize that I had superb teaching at Sweet Briar.

The reason I am making so bold as to comment on Mr. Laukhuff's article is that I felt his emphasis was more on the eccentricities of many of the professors he knew than on their innate scholarliness. We students enjoyed their eccentricities, but forgot them in class because our professors were educators in the classroom. They had respect for us as students, as ladies, and as women. They were personally interested in our welfare and ever helpful in our difficulties. I remember very few classroom lectures; we were usually in seminars where we contributed and were deftly guided in our thinking.

I regret that Mr. Laukhuff never knew Miss Alanette Bartlett, a real French scholar and a wonderfully amiable companion out of the classroom. She died tragically in the Spring of 1930. I feel Mr. Laukhuff missed a great experience in not having a class with Miss Czarnomska. As beyond my intellectual reach as she was, a good deal of what she purveyed in class is still vivid in my memory. From Miss Weaver, for all her fractiousness, emanated much of the world's culture as she led us through the history of music. Miss Fraser was the first person in my life to start my understanding of scholarship as she helped us unfold the history of western civilization. We knew Miss Crawford, of course, as the great scholar, but in class she gently opened up our immature minds to what lay hidden in our spiritual life. I was never fortunate enough to take Dr. Connor's Shakespeare nor Dr. Raymond's modern history, but a classmate of mine who did both and has been a companion since our student days, still speaks of her debt to them both as great teachers with lasting effect on her own subsequent interest in both those subjects. We all recognized Miss Glass as the lofty scholar who was writing original Latin, but once I had the rare privilege of having her substitute for my regular Latin teacher. Latin took on a new importance for me from that moment, and I would have majored in it if my family had not objected. Yes, they were great teachers.

When I look back imagining how unstimulated their lives must have become as they passed those lean years before earned sabbaticals and the "publish or perish" goad to their own self-enlargement, my admiration for them is doubled and my sympathy quickened. Their slender financial means did not allow much summer study and few real holidays. They had to keep tapping the source without ever really replenishing the supply. Their scholarship, I am convinced, lay in their deep knowledge of their subject and their genuine talent for teaching. Their students went out from their Alma Mater to pursue scholarship on their own with the best preparation possible for those times.

Flag Waving Is Not Enough

Having just read the Fall 1983 issue of the Alumnae Magazine, I am moved to comment on the Memorial article about former President Martha Lucas Pate.

I never knew "Martha Lucas," as my time at Sweet Briar was with Meta Glass. I am glad to know now of her exceptional contribution to the College.

Sweet Briar was fortunate to have such a woman with a vision of peace and international understanding as president. If all our educators since World War II had taken the lead in developing a sense of moral responsibility in student bodies throughout the country, perhaps the profound and dangerous problems of today might have been avoided.

Flag waving is not enough, and indeed has fed the fires of national sovereignty that now no nation can assume with impunity. Today we must think globally, and act with understanding and courage, but also with compassion. If we are to be leaders, we must move out of tribalism and into that state of interdependence of all peoples working together to preserve life, not to destroy it.

We have become wealthy, but spiritually we are impoverished. Hopefully in this nuclear age we can pull back from the direction we are moving in as a nation and seek those things that will enhance the inner life and move us into deeper truth and greater service to humanity.

I am happy that such a leader as Martha Lucas guided Sweet Briar even for such a short time into an awareness of the responsibility educated, thoughtful people have in building a world of peace and justice.

May her spirit and her teaching spread from the beautiful hills of Virginia into many hearts, especially women's hearts, encouraging them to take part in the vision and movement for world peace.

Nominee from the Alumnae Association to the Board of Overseers

Anna Chao Pai '57

The Executive Board of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Association submits the name of Anna Chao Pai '57 to the members of the Association as a candidate for election to the Board of Overseers of Sweet Briar College.

Anna (or "Chips," as she is known to her Sweet Briar friends) is Associate Professor of Biology at Montclair State College in Upper Montclair, New Jersey. After graduating from Sweet Briar College as a biology major she earned an M.A. in embryology from Bryn Mawr in 1959 and a Ph.D. in genetics from Albert Einstein College of Medicine in 1964. She has been a teacher since 1959, first at Moravian Seminary, followed by Albert Einstein College of Medicine, and Montclair State College. From 1979-82 she was chairman of the Department of Biology at Montclair State. She has received additional training in her field at Jackson Laboratory in Maine, Carnegie Genetics Lab, and Roche Institute for Molecular Biology. More recently she was a Visiting Scientist, Department of Cell Biology, at the Roche Institute where she continues to collaborate in research with Dr. Michael I. Sherman. Her list of publications and professional memberships is extensive. In 1972 she was inducted into Sweet Briar's Theta Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa.

As an undergraduate at Sweet Briar, Chips was vice-president of the freshman class; house president; vice-president of the Judicial Board; a member of Q.V. and Tau Phi. She received freshman honors and was consistently on the Dean's List. She played varsity hockey, varsity lacrosse, varsity basketball and was head of softball; sang with the Glee Club and choir; was on the Orientation committee and was elected to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. She was a student waitress for four years. Said Chips, "I consider that activity one of the ones of which I am most proud, and which gave me some of my fondest memories. I wish everyone could have had those cherished moments we shared in the student waitress' room, where we burrowed amongst the piles of uniforms to discuss anything and everything."

Chips is married to Dr. David Pai, Executive Vice-President of Foster-Wheeler Energy Applications. She is the mother of two sons: Ben, 18, is a freshman at Duke and Mike, 17, is a senior in high school.

Over the years Chips has given a number of talks at Sweet Briar, including being a panelist at the symposium "Can the City Survive Without the Country?" in 1970; opening convocation speaker in 1972; and a panelist on "Alumnae in the Professions" at the Inaugural celebration in early October.

Other names may be added to the ballot if they are sent to the Director of the Alumnae Association, Sweet Briar, Virginia, accompanied by fifteen signatures of members of the Association and written consent of the nominees within two weeks after publication of this name as the Executive Board nominee. If no additional nominations are made, the Director of the Alumnae Association is instructed to cast a ballot to elect the proposed slate. The elected candidate's name will be submitted to the Board of Directors as the nominee from the Association for election at the spring meeting of the Board. ■

1918

Margaret McCluer attended Johns Hopkins U. after being at SBC, and during World War I she was city bacteriologist for Richmond. She retired in 1961 as librarian of the Medical College of Virginia's Magaw-Tomkins Library and was made library emeritus. Since 1977 she has been living at the Extended Care Unit of the Stonewall Jackson Hospital in Lexington, VA.

Cilla Guggenheimer Nusbaum writes that she is "about halfway house-bound" but manages to get out for special occasions, such as a 25th wedding anniversary of friends and the latest Norfolk excitement, "Water-side." She thought the latter was great.

Elizabeth N. Wilson, who was at SBC only one year before transferring to Vassar, now lives in Sun Valley Lodge, which she describes as a wonderful retirement home in Sun City, AZ, a community of retirees.

Since Elizabeth Lowman Hall and Asaph are both in their middle eighties, travel no longer interests them, but they enjoy having news of the College, especially regarding academic requirements. They live on the edge of Elmira College in New York State. Gardens are their main joy, and when she wrote in May, Elizabeth said that their Sweet Briar bulbs were blooming.

1922

Alice Babcock Simons has been at the South Carolina Episcopal Home at Still Hopes for the last year and a half.

Catharine McCann Becker wrote of the death of her sister Isabelle McCann Hibbard on May 15, 1983. Catherine and Isabelle came to SBC together in 1918-19, and both had many pleasant memories of the College. Catharine's daughter Joan Becker Taylor '49 also attended Sweet Briar. While staying in Marietta, OH, Catherine has moved to Isabelle's apartment.

Julia Benner Moss retired several years ago from the Media (PA) Courthouse, but she does some volunteer work, especially Red Cross. She also travels quite a bit. On a recent trip to Portugal and Madeira, she met Meredith Ferguson Smythe '29. (Briarites may turn up anywhere!)

Julia goes to Carmel, CA, twice a year to visit her daughter. She still regrets missing her 60th Reunion — and has hopes for the 65th.

Grizzelle Thomson is now living at a Westminster-Canterbury apartment complex and enjoying the contact with other Sweet Briar graduates residing there. They have a lovely view of the Chesapeake Bay with spectacular sunsets.

Lillie Maddox Whitner is fine. She stays busy with family and friends and working in her yard. She was looking forward to the birth of her third great-grandchild in September.

Maylen Newby Pierce, Coral Gables, FL, is still writing, but not poetry this time. She is writing amusing instances of her three sons in early Miami Beach and Coral Gables and of her travels — with the hope that her 11 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren (two born in March) will enjoy the the material some day. One of her sons, Walter, has sold his fast food business in England and is going into the export-import business. He came from England for Maylen's 80th birthday, and he and Staples, another son, gave a luncheon for 40 in her honor. A granddaughter, having just traveled around the world, is a model for Vogue in Paris. She plans to enter UVA in '84; her sister is a student at Columbia U. Another granddaughter will make her debut in Miami this winter. One grandson has just completed building his home while teaching, and another has just become engaged. Maylen was looking forward to visiting son Staples at his summer home in Blowing Rock, NC, in September-October in time for the fall foliage.

Classmates and other friends will be distressed to learn of the death of Gertrude Dally Massie in August. Gert was on campus briefly in April while visiting her two sisters in Amherst. Her daughter Adrienne Massie Hill '60, Fairfield, CT, has two sons — Malvern, III, a junior at Vanderbilt, and Gordon Massie, a June Exeter graduate, who is a freshman at Vanderbilt. Adrian, Jr., and Eleanor Gilmer Massie '66, have two sons, 6 and 4 — Adrian M., III, and William Gilmer. Some of Gert's friends, mindful of her life-long interest in music, completed in her memory the fund needed to purchase a piano for Prothro Commons — a fund started by Gert herself at her 60th Reunion.

Edna Lee Gilchrist had a condominium in Naples, FL, this winter and while there went to an SB lunch given by Gert Dally Massie '22. Guests included Eleanor Harned Arp, Bernice Hulburd Wain, Dodie Von Maur Crampton, Caroline Flynn Ely (all '24) and Kitty Blount Anderson and Edna. The biggest family news for Edna is a new grandson. Thomas Lee Hollohan, Judy's first child. Joan has two (Michael, 14, and Katherine, 9). Edna is a trustee of Seven Hills School in Lynchburg, a lay reader for St. Paul's Church, and an occasional worker for the Fine Arts Center. She sees Bebe Gilchrist Barnes '27 and Dick in North Carolina and was expecting them to visit her and Joe in the summer. She also hoped to see Mart Bachman McCoy when she comes to Charlottesville to visit her daughter. Edna thinks SB's new president is terrific.

Lois Peterson Wilson had a good winter — two weeks in Mexico (Mexico City and Guadalajara) and two weeks in Phoenix. She also had a stay in New England and the Cape and was planning a long trip this fall which included three weeks in Austria and two weeks in Budapest, where she would stay in one hotel the entire time and take day trips out. This tour (her 15th Maupin tour) is planned, as Loey says, for the "mature traveler."

Gudnun Eskesen Chase married Bob Smith on February 26, 1983. They live in Goodie's apartment in Abbey Delray, enjoying the advantages of a retirement place. Good friends keep a social life busy, and they take day trips to nearby sights in the Abbey bus. She had a fine visit to her son in Washington, DC, in May. Son Tim is a neurologist at the National Institute of Health in Bethesda. She has two grandsons in college.

Frances Dunlop Heiskell is still house chairman of Dumbarton House, a museum in Georgetown and national headquarters of the Society of Colonial Dames in America, and secretary of the SB Alumnae Club. When Louise Fuller Freeman spent a week in April with Francis, she and Jim had Marg Shepherd and Ruth Will Beckh and Karl (up from Richmond) for lunch.

Marjorie Shepherd also wrote of this wonderful luncheon and the great reunion. Marg also sees Elizabeth (Cibby) Cobb Sutherland and Don. She talks often to Betty Moore Rusk when Betty visits her daughter nearby.

Betty Moore Rusk spent 10 days with Peg Krider Ivey in Devon, England, the last of April and had a "gorgeous" time. She met some of Peg's attractive friends and spent a couple of days with Peg's son Harry and his charming family. Then Betty did 10 days in Spain with her oldest daughter and Betty's granddaughter Louise, who was at the U. of Madrid for the second semester of her junior year and was a great guide. Then Betty went back to Hamilton College for her oldest grandson's graduation. After a great week with her son and his family in Houston, she planned to go to Maine to open camp for the summer.

Margaret (Peg) Krider Ivey's best news was about Betty's super visit in April. They saw wonderful gardens of azaleas and rhododendrons and visited the West Country. Peg is thankful for good health. She has four grandchildren, two in university and two taking exams for the same.

Dorothy Marie Fairbairn Miller, Virginia Beach, engages in the usual activities for a widow — visiting daughters and grandchildren, traveling a bit, and participating in League of Women Voters and the work of the Episcopal Church.

Mary Elizabeth Loughery Arthur is living at Arbor Acres (Triad Methodist Home) in Winston-Salem, which she finds is the answer to many problems. She is busy, busy and content.

Eleanor Calwell Mullican is also enjoying her retirement home, Cathedral Village in Philadelphia. She has many friends and three grandchildren.

Gertrude Collins Calnan and Eric brought their daughter Arline home to Bridgehampton, NY, in May '81, five months after Arline's tragic auto accident in Tuscany. They expect to take her to New York soon for her third plastic surgery; her general health is now excellent. Gertrude had a cataract operation with an implant last June, and Eric is home after major surgery. They have sold their villa in Italy and are now living in the lovely community of the Hamptons.

Martha Bachman McCoy writes she is doing just great — safe in the happy world of horticulture far from computers, Ataris or Vidaris. She had a welcome note from Edna Lee Gilchrist.

Frances McCamish McNeel's son writes that Frances is presently in Sarah French Home Nursing Wing with a condition known as Alzheimer's Disease. She is much aware of daily happenings but is subject to confusion from time to time. We '26-ers send Frances our love.

Margaret Posey Brubaker is still on deck, volunteering in The Brother's Book Store at the local Pennsylvania Farmers Museum and at her church retirement center. She has had no big trips this summer but lots of small ones with the local Historical Society. She spent a week in Virginia for Garden Week and had a trip to Salem, NC. She is enjoying her grandchildren.

Ruth Abell Bear attended Cub's 60th Reunion in '82 at Cornell U. Her daughter and granddaughters (8 and 12) live in Massachusetts and her son lives across the creek from them. Ruth has had a National AAUW Fellowship named in her honor — wonderful recognition of her work and dedication.

Our love and deepest sympathy go out to Dorothy Keller Iliff in the loss of her beloved husband on June 14, 1983. Colonel Seward Iliff had served his country many years, receiving many distinguished medals. A memorial service was held in the chapel of The Iliff School of Theology, the school Seward's family helped found. He was on that board, Historic Denver, his church, and many civic boards and philanthropies. Dot has been involved as well in many of these volunteerings.

Mildred Gribble Seiler is moving to Atlanta, GA, to stay with her daughter until Mildred is fully recovered from her stroke in April. She is already much improved and is sorry to leave her many friends and church activities, but she counts her many blessings.

Ellen Newell Bryan's granddaughter Ellen Tozzer entered SBC this fall following graduation from St. Andrews, Sewanee. Since her mother is Ellen Newell Bryan Tozzer '55, she is the third Ellen in the family to attend SBC. Her brother Brent Tozzer is a sophomore at Macalester College, St. Paul, MN. Mary Lane Bryan Sullivan '58, our classmate Ellen's younger daughter, has a son at Yale and another at Clemson. We '26-ers all send special thanks to Ellen for the great job she has done as our class Fund Agent. She and Wright were in Cuernavaca, Mexico, where Ellen attended for the 14th year the meeting at Cabana — World Center of the Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts. They have been commuting between Sea Island, GA, and Atlanta and spent the month of July in Maine. Earlier they saw Rebecca Ashcraft Taylor, who is recovering splendidly and now walking again. Ellen read all the information sent to Wright as a former SB Board member about SB's new president and thinks she is great.

I know you have all had sad experiences with computers. Some of your notes for '82 were omitted in the transfer to printing. (This transfer is not done in the SB Alumnae Office.) Carolyn Bates and I apologize for this omission, especially after you all had been so great to write me. I'll try to catch up on the news omitted but know there are some changes during the year.

Elizabeth Rountree Kellerman wrote that they were heartbroken to miss our 55th Reunion, but health problems prevented their coming. We hope they are feeling fit now and that George is able to golf again. Lib and George were planning a trip to Manila to see their son and on to New Zealand. We do hope this beautiful plan was carried out. Lib is still busy with many charitable and worthwhile activities.

Ruth Will Beckh wrote in Nov. '82. She and all three daughters and all the family had a big get-together at the Holiday Inn in Old Alexandria to celebrate Karl's 80th birthday. Then there was brunch for all the next morning in the oldest grandson's apartment in Alexandria. They had a great time! Last April they took their middle daughter to Georgia (where the oldest daughter lives) and attended the Masters in Augusta — always a thrill. They went to Savannah and had luncheon at the Pink House with Mildred Gribble Seiler. Ruth and Karl spend some time at Sandbridge Beach, Virginia Beach, where their middle daughter has a cottage. They are thrilled over their second great-granddaughter, the first grandchild for the middle daughter, whose son is now a Presbyterian minister serving a small church in High Point, NC, after graduating from Union Theological Seminary.

With great sorrow we heard of Dorothy Hamilton Davis' death April 2, 1982. By now you all probably know this; I was upset that it was omitted from the 1982 news — it was to have appeared in the section which was left out through error. It is hard to realize our dear, pretty "Joy of Living" Dottie is gone. I had a happy, laughing letter from Dottie about my goof in changing her last name from Davis to Harris in '26's 'B1 news. Dottie was active with her husband Allan in planning and developing Maryland's Scientific Center as a keystone of Inner Harbor development in Baltimore. In recognition of their time consuming efforts and many other philanthropies, the Academy trustees are naming the Science Center's 225-seat planetarium The Dorothy and Allan Davis Planetarium.

Our Denver group were so happy to have a visit with President Whiteman and Mark Whittaker on Feb. 17, 1983. There was a beautiful reception at the University Club (about 40 came), followed by a small dinner at the Brown Palace Hotel. Personal calls for the Generation Program were made the next day.

Helen Dunleavy Mitchell spent a week in April in Phoenix and was looking forward to flying to Copenhagen July 28, 1983, for two weeks' cruising on the Royal Viking. She is on three volunteer boards.

Hearing from you has given me great pleasure. I thank you for making the news column possible. My deep appreciation goes to Dot Iliff for her interest and generous support.

Peg Krider Ivey enclosed this smile — Spring is here and so am I, But at my age, I wonder why If nature can be born anew, Why can't I be recycled too?

Gladys Wester Horton (Mrs. Leonard W.), P.O. Box 308, Short Hills, NJ 07078

Elizabeth Gorsline (Scottie) broke her right elbow but can now write. She has lunched several times with Louise Nelson Redd and had heard from Mary Huntington Harrison, who wrote that she was off to look at birds in England. Scottie said she spends most of her time in the kitchen feeding a male cousin from Canada who is setting up his M.D. practice in Virginia. Gladys Wester Horton wrote she had seen Emma Riely Lemaire in Palm Beach in January. Emma was considering moving back to the U.S. Gladys had gone on an SBC cruise on the Argonaut to the Mediterranean, taking her daughter-in-law. They enjoyed the SBC people aboard but had a bad experience. They took a cab in Rome to a restaurant, but the cabs are not allowed in the squares because of pollution; so they had to walk through a dark alley, and Gladys's purse was snatched. Her passport, credit cards, and money were gone. She was fortunate in replacing all, and they sailed the next day. She didn't say how. I assume the embassy helped.

Piggy Sproul Bush and Ned celebrated their 44th anniversary on May 31st. On her birthday Dec. 28th her children gave her a lovely party. Hannah had a cake made decorated with Pooh and Piglet with napkins to match. Ted and family sent flowers.

Piggy expects Missy and Ted and families to visit in June. Martha Lambeth Kilgore (Lammie to us) and Hardee have moved from New Orleans to Nashville to a retirement apartment. They both went to Vanderbilt, so celebrated by going to the Homecoming Game. They are happy being near old friends. Their children are scattered. Mary Douglas (Dougie) Lyon Stedman wrote she and Don are still enjoying bridge and golf, and Doug enjoys aid work. They spend seven months in Key Largo and five in Rosemont, PA. They have seven grandchildren three college graduates, two college seniors and two high school seniors. Eveline Edmonds Thoma has moved back to Englewood, FL. While was in Florida, I looked up Lib Marston Creech. She looks fine and we chattered about old times.

Mary Huntington Harrison has sent news of her lovely trip on the Argonaut. On the trip Mary saw Eda Bainbridge Kolbe '31 and Gracey Luckett Bradley '39, who was on board with six members of the family, including two grandsons, ages 8 and 9. Mary also wrote that Anne Mason Brent '29 had been kicked by a loose horse and was laid up with a broken leg. Elizabeth Copeland Norfleet is to be thanked for her gifts to SBC of three books she has written. Among my notes I found that Elizabeth Cather Lansing has sons and grandsons but no daughters or granddaughters. An article in the St. Petersburg Times is about the Salvation Army giving Mary Burke Saltz thanks for a half century of volunteering. It is called the "Others" award. She is active in many organizations — all to help others. Mary Bruce Dailey Dawson wrote she has moved from L.A. to Sun City, AZ. They took a trip to Lake Louise, Glacier Nat'l Park, etc. Last year they drove 6,526 miles to see their children in Louisiana, Kentucky, Colorado, etc. She was hurt in an accident and finds weather in Arizona is helpful.

So our 50th Reunion is almost here. I am anxious to learn how many of you will recognize me and vice versa. Thanks for your news items. There were so few suggestions about how to conduct our celebration we shall assume that means you will enjoy whatever comes along.

Eleanor Alcott Bromley had a wonderful visit with Helen Hanson Bamford and husband Bill in Daytona Beach in April. They hope to stop for reunion en route home from New Smyrna Beach next May. They stay busy with children and seven grandchildren. They plan a jaunt to Michigan in July. Last fall I enjoyed a trip to Egypt, Jordan and Israel, which I found fascinating. The West Bank was in process of eruption again, so we made our way to Galilee via Israel. There we visited the Golan Heights and the Friendship Gate on the Lebanese border.

Our annual trip to Stratford, Ontario, with Nancy Russell Carter and Jim and Mary Lee Ryan Strother and Porter was cancelled because Mary Lee is suffering from a pinched nerve in the cervical area of her back and driving is impossible. Nancy keeps busy, as always, with her blind cross-country skiers, besides tennis, golf, and swimming. She is also becoming more involved with her brother's widow who requires dialysis regularly.

From Denver, CO, Connie Burwell White reports a winter of shoveling snow, followed by the prospect of trout fishing and a trip to Washington state to view the azalea display.

Nancy Butzner Leavell reports on the doings of her children, all of whom appear to practice medicine or whose spouses do. In April she visited one child whose husband was doing research in Paris and fell in love with the French people. She plans to be at Reunion.

Betty Carter Clark just returned from husband Bill's 50th at Dartmouth. She enjoyed it and looks forward to her own.

Another wife, Eleanor Cooke Esterly, had a preview reunion experience with her husband Dan at the U. of Pa. They hope to make it to SBC from California.

Jo Fink Meeks, while theater hopping in N.Y.C., talked to Lib Scheuer Maxwell, who was preparing to move to Charleston, SC. She saw Sue Fender Miller, who was on a buying trip for her shop in Martinsville, VA.

Surgical Dept.: Bonney McDonald Hatch had a successful hip operation in April, I'm told. Mary Ann Page Goyal had a successful heart operation at the Mayo Clinic in May. Maybe they can compare experiences at SBC.

Edie Knox Bogard regrets that she will have a reunion at Coe College, from which she graduated, at the same time as our's. She is active with the Episcopal Church and the Iowa Divorce Council.

Mary Krone Sells, a widow for five years, lives in a condo in Somers, NY. Last year she had a trip to Kenya and spends each winter in Scottsdale, AZ. She is a member of the Advisory Committee of the Manhattan Savings Bank, a twig member at the Thrift Tree for the hospital, and, at the present time, executrix of an estate.

Marjorie Lasar Hurd may not be able to make Reunion because she is starting a new job as administrator of the Chatillon-De Menil House, a restored ante-bellum house. We hope she can get away to be with us.

Charlotte Lee Fishburne just returned from Nantucket and is preparing for a trip to Paris.

From Mary Walton McCandlish Livingston we learn that she is still employed at the National Archives and is still doing Scottish Country Dancing.

With great enthusiasm Liz Mayfield Chapman reports a visit to SBC recently and a chance to see the new Museum. After a stop at Charlotte, NC, she heads for New England for the rest of the summer. She plans to attend reunion.

Kitty Means Neely spent the winter in Vermont. She offers to help Nancy Russell Carter with any jobs to be done and plans to attend Reunion.

Further medical notes: Jane Morrison Moore, after suffering increasingly frequent attacks of dizziness and nausea from Meniere's Disease, is fully recovered after successful surgery on the inner ear. Wonderful!

Ruth Myers Pleasants and Cordelia Penn Cannon are planning to come to Reunion. Ruth is planning a cruise from Copenhagen to Scandinavia and Leningrad, to be followed by weeks at home and week-ends at Blowing Rock, NC. Cordelia says she has been a frequent visitor at SBC for meetings of Friends of Art, etc., but never for a Reunion. Her daughter returned for her 25th at SBC recently. Cordelia is a landscaping consultant and published a book, Landscaping with Native Plants under Cordelia Penn.

A move to a retirement home, Sherwood Oaks, 25 miles north of Pittsburgh, has given Mary Pringle a new outlook on life and new interests, although she still keeps up with some activities in Pittsburgh.

Julie Sadler de Coligny says she spends most of her time at her place in the country, Amherst, but edits the Sweet Briar Library Gazette. She is looking forward to Reunion.

Marie Stephens Sheridan has been frozen out of New Hampshire and is moving this fall to Midlothian, VA, with her husband. They will still spend summers in Dorset, NH. She hopes to "reune" with us.

After surgery for both Betty Suttle Briscoe and her husband they will concentrate on recuperating so they can join us at SBC.

Dottie Turno Gardner reports that she had a good visit with Lou Dreyer Bradley over the phone, but they couldn't get together because of the illness of Lou's husband.

Bonnie Wood Stookey remembers what fun she had looking at pictures of children and grandchildren at an earlier reunion and hopes we will do it again. So please send your pictures for the scrapbook in time to allow them to be displayed. Bonnie has just moved into a smaller house in Cotuit, MA, designed by her son. She still sees Mary Moore Rowe and Lib Scheuer Maxwell — but not often enough.

Nancy and I hope to see as many of you at our 50th Reunion as can make it. Until then —

1938

Notes from our 45th Reunion Scrapbook: (Compiled by Frances Bailey Brooke)

Although we were unable to have a reunion this year because of the small number of classmates who could attend, I had a gratifying response to the questionnaires I mailed to you all, and I thought you would enjoy hearing some news from those who replied.

Gertrude Alexanderson Young enjoys sailboat racing at Lake George, NY, where she and her husband Charles, a retired G.E. engineer, own a camp. Their three children and five grandchildren are their great pleasure. Alex hopes any SB classmates who come to Lake George will call her. She and Charles recently spent a weekend in Arlington, where her father was inducted into the National Inventors Hall of Fame.

A wonderful joint questionnaire arrived from Kitty Corbett Powell, Janet Forbush Fead, Dottie Gilbert Browne, Virginia Guild Colmore, Sammie Hamilton Schuck, Betty Hopper Turner, and Helen Walton Andrae — all having their own reunion with husbands in a "gorgeous condo on Sanibel Island." With no divorces in the group (though two are widows) and 35 grandchildren, they are all involved in community service projects, church activities, and politics. Husbands' occupations include four lawyers, one doctor, one professor, and one banker. They appreciate the Sweet Briar experience, in which they learned to study and made wonderful life-long friends.

Our reunion chairman, Marion Brown Snider unfortunately spent the Reunion weekend in the hospital in St. Petersburg with an injured back, but she sent many pictures and much information. She is currently president of the Pen Women of Florida, a job that requires a great deal of travel. She has two sons — one an Air Force pilot and the other Ass't State Attorney General — and two grandchildren. She considers her book, The Beneficent Blaze, her greatest achievement.

Mary Cobb Hulse reported from Key West that she and husband Frank, an aviation executive, enjoy swimming, fishing, and serving in various civic activities — and especially visits with their two grandchildren.

Frances Cordes Hoffman is very active in Pittsburgh, serving on the boards of her church, school, garden club and numerous other civic groups. Her husband Frank, an ophthalmologist, retired in May. They are the proud grandparents of eight! Fritzie credits SB with opening the doors to many interesting experiences and giving her a love of Virginia.

Barbara Derr Chenoweth and husband Arthur live in Birmingham, where he is a retired surgeon and Babbie is active in church, garden club, and Junior League. They have five grandchildren and another on the way. One daughter is a marathon runner, who was preparing for the April marathon in London; one is an art education teacher; and her son is a cattle investor in Fort Worth.

Justine Domhoff Wright writes from Valencia, PA, that she is a retired corporation president, having taken over her father's company after his death. Her husband Robert is also retired from his trucking company. Justine is a licensed brailist and works as a volunteer in a school for the blind, tutoring blind students.

Barbara Ferguson Hill spends time between homes in Stuart, FL, and Mashpee, Cape Cod, and enjoys tennis, golf and sailing. Fergie feels her greatest achievement has been surviving the deaths of husband, daughter and son.

From Weston, MA, Marion Fuller Kellogg writes that she is involved in the Red Cross, church, Boston Symphony and Museum, Audubon Society, and historic activities. Sports include tennis and cross-country skiing. Husband David is retired, and they enjoy their eight grandchildren — two more were due in the summer! Macky values her liberal arts education at SB and the many friendships she made there. She expects to come to our 50th Reunion.

Bessie Lee Garbee Siegrist has been active in church and community work in Amherst, but has had to give it up because of rheumatoid arthritis. Her husband Joseph is a retired civil engineer. They have three children and three grandchildren.

Katharine Gardner Stevenson lives in Quincy, IL, where her husband Walter is a retired ophthalmologist. One of her sons is also an ophthalmologist, and the other, a stock broker.

Dorothy Gipe Clement writes from Toledo that Junior League, art, swimming, sewing, horses, reading and family activities occupy her time. Husband John is president of the Bock Laundry Machine Co. She credits the SB family for giving her knowledge, experience, and love to last a lifetime! Raising a family — six children — and keeping an "open, active, and curious mind" are her greatest achievements. She and John have six grandchildren with another on the way.

Emma Glass Beasley is a real estate broker — in business (Panorama Properties) with her two daughters — in Houston. Husband James is a bond dealer. Emma was a teacher and librarian in junior and senior high school for over 30 years before taking up a new career. She credits SB with giving her a "love of nature and sports, a respect for research and an appreciation of fine literature."

Lucy Jane Gregory Marrow, an M.D. from Duke U. School of Medicine, lives in Tarboro, NC, with husband James, a retired merchant farmer. One son is a lawyer, one is an M.D. in pathology, and her daughter is with the American Petroleum Institute in Washington, DC.

From San Mateo, CA, Winifred Hagberg St. Peter writes that since the death of her husband she keeps busy with stamp collecting, needlepoint, and crossword and cryptic puzzles. She feels fortunate to have been able to travel all over the world.

Josephine Happ Willingham writes that she is a retired housewife deeply interested in ecology. Her son John is the fourth generation to head the family business in architectural woodwork. Another son, Joseph, is a landscape architect, and her daughter Helen is interested in weaving. An appreciation of the values of truth and beauty was strengthened at SB. She enjoys her 2-year-old grandson Spain — "a spectacular child!"

Helen Hays Crowley is a divorcee whose greatest achievement has been "bringing up two children alone who apparently are successful, happily married and well-adjusted." She enjoys living-room learning courses, handicrafts, and several volunteer jobs. She feels SB taught her "to think and to achieve self-discipline and organization."

Virginia Heizer Hickenlooper — "Billy" — calls herself a housewife and "factory worker" in the family business, Emcol Co. in Cincinnati. Her husband is retired from Procter and Gamble and is chairman of the company. Golf, bridge, and church are Billy's recreation, and she enjoys her four children and nine grandchildren.

Katherine Hoyt teaches in the Adult Division, College of Notre Dame of Maryland, and lives in Towson. Her other interests include puppet ministry of the church, golf, hiking, birding, and reading. Kay credits SB with her interest in dramatics and pursuit of knowledge.

Jane Job Manning lives in Atlanta. After two years at SB Jane completed her A.B. at the U. of S.C. She is very involved in the First Presbyterian Church of Atlanta and in Meals on Wheels and Care Fellowship. Jane says she first went to SB at the age of 6 weeks when she, her mother, and nurse accompanied her sister Dorothy there in 1917!

Rebecca Kunkle Hogue lives in Fort Meyers, FL. A just-retired elementary school teacher, Becky also is involved in the Hospital Auxiliary, Edison Learning Center, Nature Center, church, and garden club work. She enclosed a happy group photo with her children and their families. A visit to SB in 1981 impressed her with its fantastic progress and changes. Becky is looking forward to our 50th Reunion.

From Fairfax, VA, Nancy McCandlish Prichard writes that her husband is a lawyer and that of her three children, one is a medical doctor and two are Episcopal priests. She has five grandchildren — the youngest (4 months) arriving from Korea in April.

All the way from London Martha Jane Mooney McGrath writes that she is United Kingdom representative for Azienda Castello di Gargonza of Tuscany, Italy. Her children are Michael David, ass't manager of Market Garden; John Terence, yacht captain in Spain; Patricia Martha Jane, a secretary; and Kathleen Marion, a clinical tutor at the Hospital for Sick Children., St. Ormand St. She has four grandchildren. Her husband is deceased. She feels her greatest achievements have been ambulance driving in World War II and "having only one husband for 40 years and four great children."

Sigur Moore Whitaker, whose husband is deceased, calls herself "retired," but she is active in symphony, ballet, repertory theater, art museum, and Christ Church Cathedral in Indianapolis. She has two children — one living in Tampa, FL.

Eylese Miller Latham lives in Hampton, VA, where she is the retired director of guidance at Pembroke H.S. Among her activities are chairman of the Commission on Education, chairman of the Music Committee, and member of the Administrative Board of her Aldersgate Methodist Church. She has two children and three grandsons. Her husband Arthur is retired from his civil service job at Langley Air Force Base in Hampton. Eylese thinks her greatest achievement has been to manage a house, rear two children, pursue further education and a full-time career, as well as participate actively in church, school, and community. She feels her life at SB has led to greater educational opportunities and a deeper appreciation of life in general.

Marjorie Miller Hein lives in Hilton Head, SC, and is active in hospital, church, Meals on Wheels, swimming, biking, beach walking, and bridge. M.J.'s daughter Marian runs two classes in physical fitness and another daughter, Marjorie, owns and manages a school of horsemanship. Her son William is manager of the N.Y. office of Bruggeman and Co. Since losing her husband last year, M.J. says her three super children are her "comforting blessing."

Pollyanna Shotwell Holloway lives in Baton Rouge, LA, with realtor husband Bob. One son is an architect, one is a medical doctor, and her daughter is with the Dept. of Education. She has five grandchildren and one great-grandchild — a first!

From Greenwich, CT, Jessie Silvers Bennett sent her questionnaire and a wonderful letter. She and retired husband J. Edgar manage vacation homes in Estapona, Spain, and Marigot, St. Martin, F.W.I. Jess has an adopted son, plus a daughter and son of her own — and two grandchildren. Her 45 years of married life have included a successful husband, frequent moves in the U.S., and fabulous private jet trips to Europe, Asia, South America, and South Africa.

Dorothy Selbert Smith lives in Venice, FL, with her retired husband George, a mechanical engineer. Golf, reading, bridge, swimming, gardening, and "dogcaring" are her busy activities. Her two children and four grandchildren are her pride and joy, and she says her greatest achievement is being married for 45 years!

Molly Talcott Dodson is a busy grandmother, living in Roanoke, VA, who found time to take an M.A. in Liberal Studies at Hollins College, graduating last May. Her other interests include vestry and people's warden at St. John's Episcopal Church and first mate of the sloop Blue Heaven. Her husband Grif is a lawyer. Molly says she is still bragging about her experiences at SB — four really happy years. "Snagging Grif Dodson, producing three dear children and five beloved grandchildren" she considers her greatest achievement.

Lucy Taliaferro Nickerson writes from Fair Haven, NJ, that she does part-time work at a Red Bank bookstore and is interested in the literature group of the AAUW and bridge. Husband Charley is vice-pres. of the National State Bank in Elizabeth, NJ. They have lived in the same house 33 years — always with a German shepherd. Lucy T. includes several notes with news of classmates which I shall mention later. She feels SB gave her a deeper interest in culture, reading, and traveling. She is proud of being mother of three well-rounded children.

Marjorie Thaden Davis lives in Gainesville, TX, where she is a part-time real estate broker. Her husband William, now retired, was formerly ass't treasurer of Time, Inc. They have three daughters — Suzanne, head of the news desk at Time magazine; Linda, secretary to the Board of Trustees, Beth Israel Hospital, Boston; and Ann, Vice pres. of the Texas Commerce Bank — and one grandson. Marge has served three terms on the vestry of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. She enjoyed her one year at SB and the long-lasting friendships she made there. Her marvelous experience in winning a trip to Holland during the year she sold the most bulbs was especially exciting.

From Richmond Ida Gray Todman Pierce writes that golf, travel, and church activities are her special interests. Her experience of two years at SB gave her a greater awareness of the importance of a college education and broadened her interests.

Maud Carson Tucker Drane lives with her husband Hardy in Cleveland Heights, OH. Her many interests include the Cleveland Museum of Art, Garden Club of Cleveland, Junior League, and church work. One son is married to a Dutch girl, one daughter is married to a Dane and is living in England, and another son and daughter live in Cleveland. There are two granddaughters in England, so Maud C. and Hardy make frequent trips there. Their most recent trip was a fabulous four weeks in Mexico — part of the time with a friend from Smith whom Maud first met at St. Andrews.

Annie Rose Wallace Buchman, whose husband died two years ago, lives in Memphis, TN. One daughter is the wife of the English Dept. head at Sewanee, a son Jim is a sculptor and Guggenheim fellow, and her daughter Dana is the top sweater designer for Liz Claiborne in N.Y.C. Annie has four grandchildren.

From Saranac Lake, NY, Anne Williams Tobby writes that her husband Roger is retired, and she is active in library and hospital work. They have three daughters — one of whom attended SB — and one son and six grandchildren. Anne hopes to come to our 50th Reunion.

Columbus, GA, is the home of Moselle Worsley Fletcher, a physician. Her interests include golf, bridge, and the Episcopal Church. They have two daughters and a lawyer son and one 9-year-old granddaughter.

Genevieve Marsh Fisher writes from Chevy Chase, MD, that her husband Yule died in March. He was the retired executive director of the National Highway Users Federation. They have two sons and a daughter.

Anne Eugenia Old Mercer, our hard-working class secretary, lives in Dallas, TX, with her retired husband Blair. Nancy lists her occupation as "retired chauffeur." Her special interests are the Arthritis Foundation, vestry of the Episcopal Church, Visiting Nurse Assoc., Women's Council of Dallas County, and fishing. Nancy and Blair have two sons and two daughters with three grandchildren in Baton Rouge, LA, one in Dallas, and two in Tyler, TX. She credits SB with teaching her the value of "get up and go."

Cecily Jansen Kendrick sent a long letter from Denver and a picture of her beautiful daughter Kit, who is getting married soon to a "dedicated bachelor from South Carolina." Kit is one of the top vice presidents of the Colorado National Bank, and her fiancé has the same position in the United Bank of Colorado. Cec's beloved husband Charlie died two years ago. Her son Clinton is in international trade in London, and another son, Charles, Jr., lives in Baltimore and is deputy director of UDAGE. Cec has four grandchildren.

Our deepest sympathy goes to Judy Bemis Wills in the loss of her dear Allan in November. A dedicated V.M.I. graduate in the Class of 1934, Allan was often here in Lexington for his Reunions.

Since returning questionnaires for our scrapbook, two valued members of our class have died — Jane Gray Kent Titus of Fort Meyers, FL, and Midlothian, VA, and Virginia Mitchell of Madison Heights, VA. Jane Grey is survived by her husband Rexford, three children, and two grandchildren. Virginia had retired in June from her position as administrative assistant to the superintendent of the Amherst County Public Schools.

As for me, Frannie Bailey Brooke, life in Lexington is relaxed but busy. Although George retired from teaching at V.M.I. three years ago, he is busier than ever writing books and serving on various civic boards and committees. My special interests include travel, needlepoint, and bridge, with service on the Stonewall Jackson Hospital Board, in church work, and presently on the board of the Garden Club of Virginia. We have two wonderful children and five super grandchildren. SB has given me a keen interest in people and events, both here and abroad, and a desire for learning. Friendships made at SB have remained strong through the years. George and I joined other alumnae from SB and Randolph-Macon in June for a fabulous photographic safari to Kenya.

It was a pleasure to see Betty Bowley Phillips at SB when I took the scrapbook to the Alumnae Office on Reunion weekend. Betty was there to see her sister-in-law who lives on the campus and supervises the Greenhouse and flower arrangements at the College. Betty lives at Gig Harbor, WA, and was enjoying her first visit to SB in many years.

Dorothy Tison Campbell lost her beloved Jim in November, and we all grieve with her. Their son James, Jr., is a professor at V.P.I. in Blacksburg, VA, and another son, Ed, practices law in Manchester, VT, the family home. One daughter, Dorothy, lives in Boston, and another, Pauline, is in Suffern, NY. Dot has agreed to be our Reunion chairman for the 50th, and I know we will assist where we can. Let's plan now to come back to the Patch in 1988!

Fund Agent

Sally C. Walke Rogers (Mrs. Sally C.), P.O. Box 451, Marshall, MO 65340

An invitation to celebrate "100" years came from Betsy Gilmer Tremain and Mike last June. They were married 40 years, and Betsy finally reached 60. Expected for the big event at Farmington Country Club were their three daughters and husbands, seven grandchildren, grandparents and friends. We hated to miss it but did see them last January at Sea Island for a tennis get-together and dance weekend. Those 100 years have been kind to them.

Others are celebrating new grandbabies, retirement, travel, and moving, while some have bereavements to share with us. First to report was Ruth Jacquot Tempest from Pensacola, FL. She had "just survived" a visit from No. 2 son, wife and two children and was anticipating a visit from librarian daughter Jill and then No. 1 son and his two children. She says the white beaches and golf course home are quite a lure. "Rut" is retiring in October as editor and publications director with the U. of W. Fla. Her husband retired a year ago.

Alice Sweney Weed and husband George became grandparents on June 18th when daughter Ginny had a baby boy in N.Y.C. She was to bring the baby to St. Paul for a visit in July. George, Jr., received his Master's degree in forestry and is job hunting.

From Waco, TX, comes this tidbit: "Harry and I have linally become grandparents. We have a granddaughter born March 2, Elizabeth Tipsett Swann. She and her parents live only a few blocks away." No signature. Who? [Editor's note. Pattie

Rose Early Trippet]

Another new grandmother (for the second time though) is Betty Hanger Lippincott. Her daughter Hadley produced a brother for little Katie, and Bettie flew to Pasadena in June to see and help. Betty's second daughter, Edith Jones, with a Master's from Wharton, has just taken over the presidency of Delbar Products, and son Roger is C.P.A. with Price Waterhouse. Betsy is enjoying her senior year at Denison as v.p. of her sorority and co-captain of the lacrosse team. Betty and Schuyler have recently moved into a fabulous contemporary house. She says, "You won't believe how easy it is." They've also bought and renovated a summer house at Jamestown, RI.

Jeanne Sawyer Stanwood says it's "dream come true dept." for her and husband Chris. They sold their house on Cape Cod and bought a condo in Kennebunk, ME — and of course Squirrel Island in summer. Son John, Sarah (expecting in September) and 2-year-old Emily were arriving for a visit as "Sawyer" wrote. He teaches English at Choate-Rosemary Hall, and daughter Cindy enjoys her job with Blue Cross-Blue Shield in Boston.

Speaking of sons who teach, Eloise English Davies says her Ronald will be chairing the Drama Dept. at SBC again this year. Ouring the summer he was to be at Stanford, where he hoped to complete his Ph.D. thesis. Eloise is still maintaining a busy appellate trial schedule, and Tom is still consulting several days a week for Piaseeki Aircraft in Philadelphia, building the prototype "helistat" — a giant airlift machine for the Forestry Service.

All those who made it to Reunion last year expressed the sentiments of Margaret Preston Moore who said, "Wish we could have our reunion all over again — it was such fun." Her No. 4 grandchild, James Inglis, made his appearance in November of '82. Margaret flew to Sacramento in February to see daughter Kent Newton Slaton '62 and husband Bill and then to Guatemala in March to Gerald's niece's wedding. They were planning to tour the West in August.

Alice King Harrison enjoyed a family reunion in June at daughter Letitia's house in Wichita, KS. Present were Letitia, husband and two daughters, daughter Mary and three children, and daughter Frances and her husband, just graduated from Vanderbilt Medical School. They're moving to Richmond to Medical School of Va., Frances will continue as a senior computer analyst at DuPont.

Other Richmond news comes from Lucy Call Dabney, who writes: "No news at all but I'll write to say hello." (Take note all you non-communicators!) They saw the Sprunts (Dougie Woods) on a "country" weekend and Peggy Gearing Wickham another weekend.

Si Walke Rogers is moving to Charlottesville after seven great years in Missouri. She wants to be nearer her children and six grandsons, whom she plans to take camping in the Blue Ridge — separately. Si plans to work part time. "Adolescent girls are not most people's idea of fun, but I enjoy their quirks and seem to reach them," says she. Her daughter is recuperating from a bad bout with hepatitis, and Si will help her in Boston before landing in C'ville in mid-October.

Eleanor Ringer Linn writes from Flushing, NY, that her husband John is not well, so their activities are limited. They are building an extension on their house, which is "an horrendous way of spending money." They have a neurotic cat that howls all night, but thank heavens for the T.V., library, friends, and a sense of humor.

Jean Hedley Currie's husband died in May of a brain tumor. She is thankful he did not suffer long. And Frannie Meek Rowe's husband died last November, exactly two years after her former husband Fred Temple. Frannie wrote that she was just beginning to paint again (as of last May). Both girls expressed such a beautiful spirit of thankfulness for last year's Reunion. I know the rest of you join me in sending them our special love and sympathy.

Our beloved Helen (fund-raiser) Sanford wrote of her dear mother's death in March after years of invalidism and then went on to tell of her flitting about to visit sisters in New York and California, of taking up tennis under a blistering Texas sun ("all the nice early-morning times are reserved for Jr. Tennis Camps"), of plans to take up skiing, for which she does "not expect to have a talent," and one more quote, "Hope your card brought some spicy but reportable news." Maybe next time — or this might qualify: "Have decided to try for a third time on a husband — if I can find an 85-year-old millionaire with a bad cardiac condition and no living relatives" — Army (Lucy Case Wendelken). She is busy being a counselor for the Epilepsy Foundation of Kansas in Wichita, has another grandson to report, and says son Larry is great.

Bobbie Engh Croft's 35-year-old bachelor son was married June 5, making all their five children happily married — quite a record. Three of the five live in the Chicago area and are in the family business. They have eight grandchildren, travel, play tennis, garden, go to Eaton's Ranch in Wyoming in the summer, and really enjoy living. Eighty-seven-year-old great-grandmother still drives all over. They had an Engh reunion in Tucson in January

Another go-go gal is Margie Troutman Harbin, whose five doctor sons are all married. They have nine grandchildren (five there in Rome, GA) and Margie is at present auditing a course in entomology. She says, "It's hard to start collecting bugs after so many years of avoiding or squashing them." She's involved in the Marshall Forest Preserve as chairman of the local committee and bicycles nine miles a day! She and husband Tom (also a doctor) were heading for Ireland in July with the Ga. Trust for Historic Preservation. Dorothy Malone Yates and I had lunch with Margie in Rome (GA, that is) in May.

Rene Mitchell Moore and husband Beverly visited that other Rome on their way home from a trip around the world. They attended an international bar meeting in India last fall and this summer were flitting from the Homestead, to Asheville, to Wrightsville, to Atlanta.

News of more international travel from Margaret Leonard Proctor. She and Karl spent a month in Spain last November and were to leave in September for Italy, where they have an apartment in Florence. Her other big news is a Jack Russell Puppy! She says it's rather age-making to have her oldest grandson off to Mid-dexex this fall.

And on the subject of grandsons, Mary Stone Moore Rutherford writes that she and Julian felt as if they were on a honeymoon while their two grandsons, ages 12 and 10, were on a trip with their father for six days. As if keeping up with lessons, soccer practice, swim practice, and scouting were not enough, they've started a distributorship, and Stoney has been having color fashion coordinating and make-up demonstrations at home. That's not all folks: they also are lay readers at St. John's Episcopal Church, where Julian serves on the Evangelism and Renewal Committee and Stony on the assistant rector's Sermon Critique Committee. One last note: a new grandson was 7 weeks old in June.

Other news from Roanoke comes from Virginia Moomaw Hall. Gege and husband Bill went to London and Edinburgh last fall with the Chamber of Commerce. Their daughter Betty Powell moved from Savannah to Charlotte, where her husband is the new North Carolina manager with Metropolitan Life Insurance.

It was good to hear from Grace Lanier Brewer after such a long time. Her daughter Betty '70 was married a year ago and lives in Chester, SC. Their youngest daughter, Carol, is in Franklin, VA. Grace enjoyed a trip to Europe in May and then met the children and spouses at a North Carolina beach in June.

We're such a traveling group! Ann Hauslein Potterfield and husband Tom had four great weeks in France in April. "No cities — just inns in the country — such food, such wine, such scenery and rain," writes Ann. She and Tom attended the big 100-year celebration of the Tremains and were spending the summer at their house on the river in West Virginia, where the children come and go non-stop.

Another interesting European jaunt was reported by Shirley Hauseman Nordhem. To celebrate the 500th anniversary of Martin Luther's birth, tours are being given through East Germany, which Shirley says were a revelation as to how grim life is behind the Iron Curtain. The contrast between East and West Germany is like night and day. Her husband Al stayed home to christen his new Pearson cutter on Lake Michigan. Their lovely daughter Paula, with degrees in Greek and the Classics from Vassar and the U. of Chicago, will be entering Yale Divinity School in September.

June found Barbara Ripley Furniss and husband Todd closing down their Washington, DC, lives and starting their annual pilgrimage to Maine, where they help run the National Audubon Society's Ecology Camp above Boothbay Harbor on Muscongus Bay.

Eddie Syska Peltier wrote, "We're enjoying a small summer place we bought on the water in Sag Harbor, NY. It's near most of the family, and we're having great reunions." They arrived there from Naples, FL, via cruise ship with their car aboard. "Beats driving all those miles," says Eddie.

Betty Duffield Fajans (Duffy) missed our 40th but made the 40th at Wheelock in Boston. She still owns and manages a country inn in south Vermont. Her eldest son Norm has his Morgan Horse breeding farm on the premises. Wendy was married in October and lives and works nearby. Libby and husband are in Missouri. She teaches and he works for Ecology and Environment. Her twin Jean works for a vet in Brattleboro. Their youngest son finished four years in the Air Force and is the sound and lighting engineer for a country music group and teaches soccer.

Good news from Laura Graves Howell's husband Gordon! He is getting along fine following a five-artery by-pass at the Cleveland Clinic.

Ann Morrison Reams reports that she has been traveling more than usual this past year. She hosted the Sweet Briar trip to Kenya in January and said that it was the trip of a life time. Since then, she learned from Dorothy Malone Yates that Beatrice (Betty or Brownie) Brown Borden has written a wonderful children's book about the animals of Kenya, so has ordered copies for her grandchildren. Two days after Reunion, she and Bernie made a spur-of-the-moment trip to Scandinavia and enjoyed it tremendously. She encourages all traveling alumnae to take a good look at the alumnae tour program. The trips are well planned with Sweet Briar alumnae in mind. Travelers are congenial, but there are plenty of occasions to go off on your own if you prefer. The list of travelers usually numbers 30 or so, though there have been fewer than 15 and as many as 80. On the trip to Russia last winter there were 54. Ann also reported that her family had another successful beach gathering this summer. She and Bernie, plus four married children with mates and seven of their eight grandchildren, shared a house at Pine Knoll Shores, NC, and loved every minute of it.

Some of you addressed your correspondence to Betty when you saw that Hanger name. You forgot that I (Studie) married her darling brother Bill. We just celebrated our 41st anniversary in July and are leaving Aug. 1 for a trip to Vienna, Budapest, and a cruise on the Danube. Auf Wiedersehen. P.S. We had our 12th grandchild, Janes Edward Hanger, V, in January.

Thank you, again this year, for news of what is happening in your lives and for your comments about the class notes. The Alumnae Office also deserves a note of thanks for all the information sent so promptly to your class secretary.

First of all, here is the news that arrived too late last year for inclusion in the notes.

Jeanne Parham Coors and George played golf in France and visited a cousin in rural England. The youngest of their four daughters was married in the fall. The three older girls and five grandchildren live within a block of Jeanne's dinner table. She has assumed the presidency of the Memphis Garden Club and hopes to see SBC friends at meetings of the Garden Club of America.

Julia Bristow reports that she finally visited Devon and Cornwall, which was a life-long dream.

Pat Groesbeck Gordon missed the '81 Reunion because their Lindsay was graduated from Berkeley, and husband Ralph had his Hill School 40th Reunion. Son Ralph, III, and wife presented grandson R.T.G., IV.

Now comes the news that no one wants to report — or to read.

A card from John Bryden arrived in October '82 which said, "Patricia Luke Bryden died September 12, 1982, after an exceptionally courageous battle with cancer."

Eden Taylor Persons died on September 8, 1982, in Macon, GA. She had been active in the Museum of Arts and Sciences, the Stratford Academy, the restoration of the Grand Opera House and Siney Lanier Cottage, and many other valuable local and state projects.

You have all received the touching letter from Candy Greene Manbeck concerning the death of Anne Owens Mueller on Feb. 7, 1983, in an automobile accident near San Diego.

We were all so fortunate to have known their friendship. We will feel their loss deeply, and we extend our heartfelt sympathy to their families.

Jessie Strickland Elcock and her husband have retired to the hills of Big Canoe in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains 50 miles north of Atlanta — "close enough to family and far enough for time together."

Louisa Lloyd is continuing to care for a paralyzed polio patient and is inspired by her ability to face life cheerfully despite her physical dependence on others for everything including breathing.

Charlotte Dinsmoore Olin's two youngest, Carla and Judy, are in graduate school. Her husband Frank is retired, and she is a reference librarian at TCU.

Wheats Young Call says that she and P.V. are still river-rattin' along and see each other at church, tennis, etc. Wheats is already talking '86 — as aren't we all!

Mary Lou Holton Effler is spending half the year in Pampano Beach and the other half in Toledo. Guess which half. She had a great SBC Russian trip with Betty Ann Bass Norris, Adeline Jones Voorhees, and other SBC-ers, as well as a good trip to San Miguel Allende in March.

Robin Evans Stroud, Sacramento, visited her daughter on the East Coast this spring and from there went to London with the art group from Crocker Art Gallery.

Barbara Hood Sprunt's son will graduate from Rice and go to Carnegie-Mellon for a Ph.D. in electrical engineering this fall. He has promised to familiarize her with the computer. She says that Miss Pearl and Latin seem like vanilla in comparison with that project.

Betty Ann Bass Norris has the same great things to say about the Russian trip as does Lou. Besides Moscow and Leningrad, she mentions Tbilisi, Samarkand, and Tashkent, one of the mildest winters ever in Russia, and a delightful 24 hours in Copenhagen.

Louise Wilbourn Collier has published a book, Pilgrimage, a Tale of Old Natchez, which is the story of a family and their home, built in 1832. Louise is the great-great-granddaughter of the progenitor. The book deals with the struggles of the family and the state to survive the horrors of the war and its aftermath.

Bertha Lee Toole has moved back to Augusta with husband Bill and son Tom. Bill is now on the faculty of Augusta College in the Fine Arts Department. They miss the big Apple, but it's nice to be home again.

Ann Farr Lewis went to Scotland and Italy this year with Jane Richardson Vieth and husband. Ann's son John is a neurologist teaching and working in San Diego. Her grandson, 10, is her pride and joy.

Caroline Rudolph Sellers spends a lot of time in Florida in the area humorously referred to as the Red Neck Riviera, with vineyards where they bottle a good red wine. The beach is beautiful, the July breezes the same, and the family has had a great summer.

Jennie Keeling Mansfield's daughter was to be married on Oct. 29 on Jennie's wedding anniversary and will live in Memphis. Betsy Bowman Townsend and Rod have just moved into their house on the river there and everyone has become boat crazy. Rod rows to and from work. Commuters, please note! "Grammer is a long way past."

Bea Dingwell Loos had lunch in Cincinnati recently with Nancy Dawd Burton and Mike. Nancy had just been appointed to the Board of Overseers and was leaving the next day for a fund-raising trip for SBC! (We should have an asterisk or a Sweet Briar rose in the margin here.) Bea also had dinner with Betsy Gurley Hewson and Tom and lunch with Catherine Smart Grier, who is enjoying life with no children at home.

Mary Mae Holland Harter and husband are moving from Blacksburg to Virginia Beach to get away from the frigid climate. (Don't try New Jersey!) Their son is married and lives in Birmingham. Their daughter went to SBC and graduated from UVA.

Martha Titterington Leonard and Byron were going to Europe in October. He has lived in Italy and Spain. As for herself, as Twitter says, "After 59 years' wait, who's excited?" She is working with the American Cancer Society, and Byron is content with consulting work. They would like to sell the house and become world travelers.

Eleanor Myers Cole gives a "final change of address in Tallahassee" — across from the country club. She and Walter started to build on Valentine's Day and moved in on June 3. They also spend a lot of time in their condo on Panama City Beach.

Margaret Sibley Lewis and her husband traveled to Russia and Hungary this year, as well as to Austria, Germany, and a cruise on the Danube. She says that no matter how great foreign travel is, it makes you appreciate the U.S.A. more each time.

Anne Hill Edwards and husband have gone to Florida and Europe this year and attended the U.S. Open with Betsy and Tom Hewson as usual. She is continuing her piano teaching career, as she says, "So that I can enjoy all this play."

Beverley Randolph Knight reported the sad news of the death of her husband William Wilder Westburg Knight on Sept. 1, 1982. "He was a verayr parfit gentil Knight."

Ellens Robbins Red is learning to use a word processor and may now write a book which she's been wishing to do for some time. She also reports that Crutcher Field Harrison's son and his wife had a child on May 18 named Joy Crutcher Harrison. Ellen went to Great Britain this year with the Dallas Audubon Society, climbed mountains in Scotland, and ventured into the North Sea.

Dorothy Corcoran Hartzler has written to say how much she enjoyed our '81 Reunion (as did I, Tody). She wrote on Bastille Day to report that son Jonathan graduated from UVA with High Distinction.

Hallie Tom Nixon Powell's niece Nan Cunningham '75 was to be married to Patrick Watson on Nov. 12, 1983, in Corpus Christi and will live in San Antonio. Hallie's son Tyler was married on August 13. Her husband Jack has two quarter race horses in New Mexico, and they fly 1,000 miles each way to watch a 20-second race. She is on the Garden Club of America Nominating Committee, member of the Altar Guild, in the Literary club, etc. "I rather long for those quiet hills of Virginia."

Adriana Jones Wittke and husband were planning to spend part of October in Greece. We talked while selling bulbs at the SBC booth at a benefit garden show in Princeton. SBC bulbs are well regarded, but so many other catalogs come out long before ours do.

Helen Murchison Lane has announced the birth of twin granddaughters (anticipated but not yet arrived in last year's notes). Helen Palmer and Emma Gray Emory are entered for the Class of 2000. Their mother Anna Lane Emory graduated from UVA, and their aunt is Palmer Lane Middendorf '73. Husband Ed continues as chairman of the Board of Atlantic Bancorporation. Son E.W.L., III, enjoys the practice of law in Ulmer Murchison, and son Charlie is a junior loan officer with the Atlantic Bank.

Sarah McDuffie Hardaway says that the SBC-RMWC trip to France was even better than anticipated. Her trip to Winterthur, Longwood Gardens, and the other charms of the Philadelphia area with Wistar Watts King was also rewarding. (Because we live between NYC and Philly, I can second the motion.)

Please keep up your outstanding jobs of assistance to your class secretary.

Elisabeth Elmore Gilleland (Mrs. Guy W.), 1098 McKean Circle, Winter Park, FL 32789

Eureka! First Betty Todd Landen spotted her looking "marvelous" and acting "efficient" in Cincinnati while attending a convention. Then Sally Bianchi Foster (Verona, NJ) read of her daughter's wedding (and Margaret Lewis Furse's daughter's) in the NY Times. In from the cold came Garland Hunter Davies of Atlanta, where she is relishing her career as director of the English as a Second Language Program at Georgia State U. and is the proud granny of Katherine Hunter Sanders, born on her anniversary Sept. 2, 1981.

Alert to others living in Atlanta: Jane Munnerlyn Carter, Muffet Murchison Corse, and Bettye Wright Schneider. Marilyn Ackerson Barker's daughter Margaret is anchor person on radio station WJS and the nighttime news. Marilyn's September vacation from her job managing a branch library and doing reference work for the Main Library in Knoxville was to be a stay in Holland in a rented house in Noonwijk on the coast.

Sally Bianchi Foster's son Andy is no longer in D.C. but in law school at Berkeley after touring Europe last summer. "That makes two of my brood who like the sun, sand, and freedom of the state on the fault." Sally planned a September visit with her daughter Kate in San Luis Obispo (for you Easterners, that's on the right, over the mountains from the Hearst Castle two hours north of L.A. and 2½ hours south of S.F.). Meg, the eldest daughter, was married in March to her beau of long-standing, now a fledgling lawyer. They live nearby. Sally and Bob plan to attend the Summer Olympics to celebrate their 30th anniversary. Meanwhile, she daydreams a lot at work, but hopes to hang on for a pension, works less in the house, reads more, plans trips she sometimes takes, quilts a bit, knits a lot, and feels no guilt about not improving her mind or the life of mankind. The extra 10 lbs. and a few prominent veins don't quell her mean tennis racquet. All the above was on one postcard.

As for Betty Todd Landen (Cincinnati, OH), it was the year of the weddings. Margie, #2 daughter, graduated from Vanderbilt and was married two weeks later to a new 2nd Lt. USMC. They live in Quantico, VA, and will wander. The "one to care for me in my old age" will be Libby, #1 daughter '81, who planned a November wedding to a beau of five years, a lawyer practicing in Cincinnati. Though Betty's husband Jake is no longer on the SBC Board, we still have representatives of 1950 at SBC. Both Frances Cone Kirkpatrick (Wilmington, DE) and Dotsy Wood Letts (West Palm Beach, FL) have daughters in the sophomore class. Christy has found the perfect college, according to Fran. These two Moms can look forward to good times visiting SBC if the pattern follows Kay Lang Gibson's experience. Kay, Gib, and son Chip came down from Larchmont, NY, for daughter Kit's graduation. Sitting under the trees listening to Elisabeth Janeway's admonitions to women of '83, Kay thought of our simple pathways 33 years ago: to find the "right" man, marry after perhaps a little nothing job or a trip to Europe, and then children, the Jr. League and good community works — no career goals or meaningful relationships to ponder. Kay, for one, is glad she didn't have to feel guilty just being a mother with no career. Thanks to the SBC connection (Alumnae in finance and Wall St.) and her internship during the winter term, Kit works for Citicorp, NYC, in the brokerage division. (My observation is that no one leaves work until 7 PM in NYC.) Kay went to the ordinations of Nancy Drake Maggard's daughter Rev. Mary and husband Rev. Whiz in Campbell Hall, NY. The festivities afterwards left Nancy too tired to even look in the kitchen.

Julia Freels Chwalik (Miami, FL) hopes her youngest daughter (16) will go to SBC. It would be a homecoming to the area her forefathers set their mark on in 1730. Daughter Judy attends Auburn, and Cindy is at U. of Ky.

Meanwhile on the farm in Weston, VT, Bill Bailey Fritzinger and Fritz have added a chicken house and pig pen. Son Stephen graduated from Brown and works for an architectural firm in Pittsburgh.

Now for the grannies. A first grandchild for Dottie Barney Hoover (Darien, CT), who is enchanted by his "Paul Newman" blue eyes, is Timmie, born in January to daughter Dee (30). Not much baby-sitting is needed because Dee is a full-time mother who occasionally helps out in her law firm. Hap (32) is married and works for Richardson-Vick in Wilton, CT. Son Peter (27) teaches at Rumsey Hall School, Washington, CT. Daughter Holly (23) attends U. of Ariz. In addition to volunteer work, Dottie has a part-time job in a designer consignment shop, doing needlepoint for pleasure and pay, while husband Jack is an executive recruiter with Ward Howell in NYC.

It's a new granddaughter, the second, for Ernie Woods Cox, in Birmingham, AL, born to Charley, their #3 son and his Hollins grad wife Alice.

Debbie Freeman Cooper (Wallingford, PA) has a grandson named Benjamin, born 14 June to her meteorologist son Jim and wife Linda, who live in Wheaton, MD. She spent a weekend in Atlanta with her daughter Sally defending herself against a 15-month-old dynamo granddaughter Rebecca. From Debbie comes word that Willie Massey Kearns battled a baffling and virulent cancer with enormous courage, even making two trips to their house in Ireland between chemo-therapy treatments. All miss her terribly.

When is Peg McDonald Humphrey (San Diego, CA) not in a hurry? She phoned huffing and puffing to say she was due in 10 minutes to pick up her son Whiting at his summer job in the accounting dept. of a bank between a switch of colleges — Bucknell to UCSD. AND she was leaving pronto for a month's vacation to recover from the wedding of her daughter Eleanor '78 to Stuart Comer. Her daughter Elan, Eleanor's twin and already the mother of Heather (3), had given birth to Sarah two weeks earlier. Peg merely hired nurses to tend babies while nursing bridesmaids attended the reception in the garden below. Peg is an R.N. herself, and husband Harvey, an M.D., tho' that may just create more worry. Attention, Sally Lane Johnson. Peg to this day is amazed by your brain in breezing through biology and says you were the nicest part.

Now for the vacationers: Jody Livingston McFall (Jacksonville, FL) was at the beach in July with some of her family — daughter Gardner and husband or son Dodge from NYC?

Henrietta Hill Hubbard (Montgomery, AL) and Charles were shipwrecked Sept. '82 in Alaska. Did they avoid avalanches in the Grand Tetons in Sept. '83? Who saw Henrietta on the Today show? She began the year as president of the Alabama Mental Health Assoc. $10,000 in the red and raised $80,000 in seven months. This year, she is serving on the Bi-racial Committee in Montgomery.

Peachey Lillard Manning (Haverford, PA) visited Nantucket. She has four daughters (and is still "slender and beautiful" to quote Ann Belser Asher): Ellen, married five years, living in Cary, NC, near Raleigh, where husband Phil Wessell works for Data General; Julia, a labor lawyer in Chicago; Susan, new Denison grad, hoping to teach; and Amy, a sculptor, in her last year of art school. Peachey plays tennis weekly with Barbara Birt Dow '51 and Polly Plummer Mackie '49. She may be in training for our 35th to take on Ginger Luscombe Rogers (Hudson, OH). Ginger spreads herself a bit thin playing golf and riding her TB "Sweet Cappy" and being president of the Hudson Preservation group, currently moving a Greek Revival house to save it from demolition. And she visited England last spring to see her daughter Larkin, who was interning at Gidleigh Park, Devon, from the Culinary Institute of America, Hyde Park, NY. And she was going to Dallas to visit her daughter Sarah, a commercial artist. Her son is a junior at St. Lawrence U.

Another for England was Pat Owens Purvis (Fort Worth, TX). Pat toured with her family for two weeks, then took a three-week history course at Oxford. Cheers to her daughter Lisanne '78, now a member of the New York bar.

Ann Belser Asher (Washington, DC) planned a break from gardening, altar guild, and being president of the Hospital for Sick Children to visit Europe and her youngest son John, who is with the army in Germany. Husband Norman will be on vacation from the Institute for Defense Analysis.

World traveler B.G. Elmore Gilleland (Winter Park, FL, near Epcot) stayed local, walking through snow on Pike's Peak in Colorado and taking a white water raft trip down the Arkansas River. Husband Guy nixed her plan for a plane and helicopter ride over Grand Canyon.

Frindy Burden Gronen (Dubuque, IA) will answer any postcards and letters written from those exotic places.

Betsey Sawyer Hodges (Tequesta, FL) loves her second career so much it's doubtful she wants more vacation than the alternating 7 days off she has as a staff nurse on a surgical unit at Palm Beach Garden's Hospital. Her routine gives her time to enjoy her husband, house, garden, sewing and three of her six grandchildren. This year husband Allen begins study for his second career, the Deaconate, which he will pursue when he retires in a couple of years from Pratt & Whitney.

Louise Moore (Lexington, VA) is content in her second career in the law. She visited Dotsy Wood Letts, but missed Frances Marr Dillard's daughter's wedding in May.

Kata Edwards Crane (Longview, TX)'s daughter Katharine graduated from U. of Tex., Austin, and is in the job hunt. Son Edward is in his last year at South Texas College of Law, Houston. Some of these bright new lawyers might take the suggestion of a classmate to consider and make more equitable the rights of women in divorce proceedings. Too many are treated as second-class and paupers. Observing my daughters, I see tremendous improvement in opportunities for independence, but what about our age bracket when things fall apart? Can laws help?

Diana Dent (Greenwich, CT) contacted Nancy Storey White (Sarasota, FL) who has agreed to gather personal recollections of Martha Lucas Pate by our class to aid in the possible publication of her writings by the Pate Institute for Human Survival. Nancy thought it best to tape memories at reunion, but you could write Nancy now.

I'm off to the Redwoods with my tent-mate and Dr. Scholl's.

Fund Agent

Mary Hill Noble Caperton (Mrs. Bernard M.), 611 Preston Place, Charlottesville, VA 22903

There's some good news and some bad. For the latter we extend our sympathies to Erwin Alderman Davis and family. Their 26-year-old son, Earnest Cary Davis, III, died in June after a long illness. Our sympathies go also to the children of Peggy Crowley Talbott who died by her own hand shortly before last Christmas. Peggy was very active in the Denver SBC Club, holding many offices over the years. She was founder of the Denver SBC scholarship.

In a happier vein, Sue Bassett Finnegan is now married to Dr. Richard B. Hornich, and she was listed in Who's Who in the East. I don't think I have previously reported that Vicky Toot has been Mrs. Jerry L. Johnson for a couple of years. Vicky still teaches high school French in Great Falls, MT.

Because there are so many classes sending news for each issue of the Alumnae Magazine, we secretaries have been asked to limit the news of children and concentrate on the accomplishments of our class members. However, you'll be receiving a questionnaire early in 1984 on which you can devote reams to your children's accomplishments, and we can all read it at our 30th Reunion. I hope you're all planning to come and bring husbands.

Notes on us: Anne White Connell has moved to Memphis, where she is getting her master's degree in teaching at Memphis State. She sees a lot of the '54 group there — Sissy Morris Long (who is president of the Memphis Symphony League), Betty Gene Drr Atkinson, and Peaches Davis Roane.

Sally Bumbaugh, Ocean City, NJ, is the "solo" bulb chairman for SBC. Ann Henry Lake has been studying accounting to help in husband Bill's new business in Tulsa, OK. Weezie Aubrey MacFarland is a middle school guidance counselor in Columbia, SC, and Mary Jane Roos Fenn, Huntington, NY, loves her new career in real estate. Margie Morris Powell, Baltimore, is executive secretary of the Maryland House and Garden Pilgrimage and also teaches an exercise class. I'm teaching dog obedience again — for the YMCA.

Nancy Maury Miller is lifestyle editor of the Delray Beach News Journal — writing articles and taking and printing accompanying pictures. She won first place for feature picture, weekly division, in the Florida Press Association annual contest.

Caroline Chobot Garner and family have moved to Lookout Mountain, TN, to be nearer their families and for Thom to pursue careers in teaching and parish ministry. Camilla Brewer Klos and Jim have moved to Ship Bottom, NJ. Maggie Mohlman Degler has at last left N.Y.C. and now lives and works in Greenwich, CT. Lynn Carlton McCaffree and Mike are back in their own house in Annandale, VA, while Mike is at the Pentagon. Now that he's a commodore, they find themselves in the midst of the black tie dinner circuit in D.C. Peggy Hobbs Shaw and Tom have moved again — back to Southport, CT. Peggy's and my mothers are neighbors at Westminster-Canterbury House in Virginia Beach.

Jean Gillespie Walker and George are spending several months of the year at their new house on Sea Island now that George is retired. They also had a week at a tennis camp in Arizona.

Meg Hetley Peck and family had a trip to England. Other trips include Ann Thomas Donohue and Tom's week on a 40' sailboat on Chesapeake Bay and a weekend with Karen Looker Hyde and family at the latter's magnificent mountain place near Lexington. Ann Collins Teachout and Bill went to Spain, where Julie was at the U. of Madrid; mother and daughter went on to Paris also. Bev Smith Bragg and husband really take advantage of the empty nest with an exotic trip each year; 1982 took them to Vienna, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Romania, and Hungary. Ruth Sander

Smith and Norman make several visits to their apartment in West Palm Beach from their home in Randolph, NJ. Jerry Dreisbach Ludeke took part in Roger Wagner's sing-a-long Messiah in L.A. She and husband John, who both teach at Baker State, have been on sabbatical — he to study historical sites prior to writing a history of Kern City and she visiting learning centers to help in her job as a learning disabilities specialist — and then both went to Alaska.

Ruth Frye Deaton and Hugo sail a lot and joined Dilly Johnson Jones and Paul, Vaughan Inge Morrisette and Taylor, and Ann Collins Teachout and Bill in Mexico for their annual get-together. Joan Chamberlain Engelsman spent two months traveling around Italy and France. Bill and I had a week in England, followed by a week in Denmark. We also saw Meri Hodges Major, Joyce Walmsley Wellford (who loves living in the country in Virginia now), and Joy Parker Eldredge at Louise Major's lovely wedding at Belle Air on our way home from taking John to Berkeley in Boston.

Thanks for all your Fund flap information. I'm sorry there's not space for every child and now grandchildren too! Look for the Reunion questionnaire and do make plans to attend. A really neat time was had by all at the 25th. The 30th will be even bigger and better!

Jane Shipman Kuntz (Mrs. Edward J., Jr.), 646 Runnymede Rd., Dayton, OH 45419

Fund Agent

Claire Cannon Christopher (Mrs. F. Hudnall, Jr.), 2837 Reynolds Dr., Winston-Salem, NC 27104

Our 25th Reunion has come and gone and we all had a sensational time! Over thirty of our classmates attended, four with their intrepid husbands. Everyone looked marvelous and, I would say, seemed content with themselves and their lives — but not complacent. Despite the vagaries of weather our enthusiastic ladies sallied forth, armed with umbrellas, to hear about the state of the college, visit with former professors and staff, see the wonderful new museum, take tours of the campus and environs, and even bend an occasional elbow. We sat up until the wee hours talking about our families, careers and interests — visiting on the stairs, or the smoker or our rooms (Grammer Commons was bolted and unavailable). To those of you who couldn't make it, we missed you. The Class of '58 lived up to its reputation for doing things in a big way: we were able to present a class gift of $54,651! Claire Cannon Christopher and Lynn Crosby Gammill spearheaded the campaign, and Polly Benson Brown and Camilla Mueller Parker joined them in making a $25,000 challenge; the donations came from all of our classmates, representing 61% of the class. It was a truly memorable 25th!

Polly Benson Brown came to Reunion all the way from Santa Monica, CA, where she is a systems engineering manager for IBM. Polly took her M.B.A. at Stanford in 1970 and settled in California permanently. Polly's husband Doug is the president of Brown Marine Engineering. Her hobbies are needlework, sailing and growing orchids.

Mary Taylor Swing also made it to Reunion. Bill is Bishop of California. (Episcopal) and they live in San Francisco. Mary is development secretary for Cathedral School and is also treasurer for the Board of the Conference Center and chairman of the Episcopal Women's History Project in California. Their children are Alice, 20 and Ted, 18.

California was well represented at Reunion. Joan Black Davidson lives in Palos Verdes Estates, where she is a realtor. Keith and Joan have three daughters: Dianne, 20, at Stanford; Cynthia, 19, at U. of Calif., Davis; and Suzanne, 17, also at U. of Calif. Joannie is involved in the National Charity League, a national mother-daughter organization and enjoys Bible study and tennis in her spare time. Keith is in marketing for Xerox.

Patricia Ashby Boesch also lives in the San Francisco area; she is in the Development Office at Stanford as director of Donor Relations. She and Bob have two children: Tom is at S.M.U., and Katy is a high school senior.

From Ross, CA, Patty Sykes Treadwell writes that she is busy with the SBC Alumnae Board as V.P.; she also sings in the church choir and helps a friend in her art gallery/gift shop. Her husband Dick is a professional money manager. The Treadwells have four children: Connie, 22; Allan, 19; Richard, 16; and Paul, 13.

Peggy Arduser Gates lives in Tulsa, OK, with husband Ron who is an ophthalmologist. They have four children: Tracey, 25; Ronnie, 24; Heather, 22; and David, 19. Peggy is president of the Tulsa Co. Medical Society Auxiliary, a board member of the Okla. State Medical Assoc. Auxiliary, and on the Board of Directors of Parents Anonymous.

Another realtor is Sally Kendall Bundy in Beaumont, TX. Sally and Howard, who is an engineer, have three children: Kendall, 23; Benn, 21; and Jenness, 16. Sally is active in the Beaumont Art Museum, the Jr. League and St. Mark's Episcopal Church; she also enjoys a good game of tennis.

Winnie Leigh Hamlin has an impressive array of activities to keep her busy in Dallas. She teaches a weekly Bible study class, serves on the Vestry of St. Michael's-All Angels Episcopal Church, and was a delegate to the Triennial Commission of the Episcopal Church in New Orleans. She also finds time to be on the P.T.A. Board of Highland Park H.S., to be a member of the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts League, and to act as a sustaining advisor in the Jr. League. Winnie is also a Regional Chairman for the SBC Alumnae Board. Davis, her husband, is V.P. of Electronic Data Systems. Their children are Jeff, 20, U. Va.; John, 18, Dartmouth College; and Frank, 15, Highland Park H.S.

Linda McGuire Last and Bob have been married 27 years and have four children. Lisa is 26, Pam is 24, and the twins, Lynn and Lee, age 17, just graduated from high school in Duncanville, Tex.

There is lots of news from Camilla Mueller Parker, San Antonio, TX. She has been a board member and long-time volunteer for many years at the Brighton School, a school for children with learning disabilities; she also is a former board member for her alma mater, St. Mary's Hall. Besides being a member of the Jr. League, she is past president of the Charity Ball Assn. and on the board of the San Antonio Symphony. Camilla studied for a year in the field of clinical pastoral counseling and is a member of the Hospital Ministry Team at Christ Episcopal Church; she also volunteers at Southwest Texas Methodist Hospital and is a member of its Auxiliary Board and the Hospital Foundation. She and Bill, an oil operator, are the parents of Camilla, 21, an '83 SBC graduate; Bill, 20, a student at U. of the South; and Alicia an entering SBC freshman. Camilla took up skiing three years ago and loves to garden and do needlework; she was one of the generous financial challengers for our class gift.

Windy Winter Cocke, San Antonio, lists her occupation as "volunteer"; she does a great deal of work in the community and participates in both Bible and piano study. Bartlett, who is a general contractor and Windy are the parents of Reagan, 20; Bartlett, III, 19; and Martha, 13.

Sue Rosson Tejml, Bay City, TX, writes: "Am finding being a 'part-time' city attorney for a small Texas town (pop. 20,000) is the challenge of my career. I'm a combination personnel director, city prosecutor for the Municipal Court, real estate broker (sans commission), ordinance drafter, complaint taker, defender against far-out civil rights suits, and chief advisor at council meeting..." Sue's daughter Tammy entered the U. of Texas Law School this fall.

June Neighbors Morton, Fort Worth, TX, writes that she was unable to make reunion because her daughter was making her debut this summer.

Alice Eller Patterson practices law in Winston-Salem, NC, after graduation from Wake Forest Law School at age 39! Her son Frederick is 20. Alice is active in the Forsyth County Juvenile Council, the Jr. League, and First Presbyterian Church, and she is a tennis buff.

Claire Cannon Christopher and Hudnall still live in Winston-Salem, NC. Their children are John, 21; Ashley, 16; and David, 15. Claire loves the performing arts, literature, writing and "the wonders of nature in all seasons." She and Lynn Crosby Gammill did a yeoman job of organizing and successfully completing our class gift campaign — congratulations! We all were most envious of the photography of Claire and Paul Newman taken at an auto race, his arm draped casually over Claire's shoulder. She looks like the cat who swallowed the canary!

In Charlotte, NC, Dana Dewey Woody has taken a very active role as a volunteer at the Mint Museum; she has been a Jr. League docent, a board member and president of the Friends of the Mint Museum, board member of the Collectors' Circle and the Women's Auxiliary. She has also served on the board of the Friends of the Library of Queen's College and was bulb chairman for the SBC Alumnae Club. In 1973, she sold the most bulbs in the country, which earned her a trip to Holland. Dana loves the fine arts, music, drama, gardening and cooking. She and Joe, an ophthalmologist, have a son Jonathan, 16, who is a junior at Charlotte Country Day School.

Sandra Eider Harper and Tom have just settled in Burlington, NC, after Tom's retirement from 24 years' service as a U.S. Navy officer; they lived abroad during most of his tour of duty. Sandra enjoyed seeing so many old friends at Reunion and said she is ready to get involved in something constructive within her artistic interests.

Although Ruth Carpenter Pitts could not attend Reunion, she sent a good family picture and a newsy letter. She and Bill live in Birmingham, AL, where he is a plastic and reconstructive surgeon. The Jr. League, Colonial Dames, church work, gourmet cooking and book club, as well as docent training at the Museum of Art, keep Ruth on the go. Elizabeth Berrien (Berry) was a member of the SBC Class of '82; William Henry Pitts graduated from U. of the South last spring; and Charles Carpenter Pitts, a sophomore at W. & L., spent his spring semester in Japan.

My apologies to Jean Cabaniss Harrison, also of Birmingham, if her news is not accurate; I had a little trouble reading her note but I was glad to hear from her, so here goes: her son graduated from Hampden-Sydney in 1981, married a Richmond girl, and lives in Birmingham; Joan's daughter is a senior at Auburn, and her other daughter is a high school senior.

Also in Birmingham are Susan Davis Briggs and Dick who practices medicine and is a professor of medicine at U. of Alabama. Susan is retired from her career as a research chemist and high school teacher. She keeps busy with the Jr. League and school P.T.A.'s, teaches an Old Testament course at her church, and is active in the state tennis association because her children are tournament players. She and Dick are both tennis enthusiasts too. Their children are Adrienne, 18, at U. of the South, and Dow, 16, and Daniel, 13, at home.

Jane Oxner Waring, Charleston, SC, is active in cultural activities as a member of the Arts and Historical Committee for the City of Charleston; she is also 1st V.P. of the Charleston Museum Board of Trustees, V.P. of the Preservation Society of Charleston, and past president of the Jr. League. She and Charles are the parents of Charles, III, 18; Eveline, 16; and Laura, 12. The South Carolina girls, Jane, Eleanor Cain Pope, Betsy McCutcheon Williams, Flo Buchanan Heyward, and Ann McCullough Floyd added a lot of zest to Reunion with their humor. I have a great snapshot of "Coon" in her graduation togs!

Speaking of Ann McCullough Floyd, she has her own interior design studio in Columbia, SC. Ann is active in the Jr. League and her Presbyterian Church and enjoys aerobics, tennis, and golf. Her husband is a stockbroker with Merrill Lynch, and they have two children — John, III, a junior at Wake Forest U., and Dinja, a freshman at Converse College.

Julia Olive Craig Brooke, Jacksonville, FL, also lists "volunteer" as her occupation. Her interests include the Jr. League; the Episcopal Church — she sings in the choir; the Board at the Bartram School, where she was formerly alumnae president; the board of the Central Crisis Center; the Music Committee of the Cummer Gallery of Art; and Heart Fund chairman for the board of the Heart Assn. Richard is V.P. and director of group insurance for Independent Life. Their daughters are Julia, 23, an '81 graduate at SBC, and Cathie, 20, a student at SBC; their son Richard is 21.

In 1976, Cornelia Long married Dick Matson, a stockbroker and analyst. Besides her own children, Anna, 24; Julie, 22; and David, she acquired three more: Janet, 22; Jillian, 17; and Kristin, 13. Cornelia was a professional fund raiser in N.Y.C. and was one of 13 charter members of the Certified Fund Raising Executives (CFRE) of N.Y.C. Through the Jr. League she lectured at the Metropolitan Museum; she also established training for women in prisons, securing the first federal funding for her program. The Matsons moved recently to Sarasota, FL, where Cornelia is establishing an antiques business, concentrating on French country furniture. She kept busy at Reunion seeing old friends.

Watch your bookstores for a cookbook written by Dianne Stafford Mayes, entitled Rush Hour Superchef. Dianne says it is geared "for the 'on-the-go' person who likes to eat well, entertain graciously, and doesn't have time to cook." Dianne is also President of Dianne Creations, Inc.; her husband Rog is president of Carthage Marble Co. and Carthage Underground Storage. The Mayes live in Carthage, MO, but also have a home at Hilton Head Island. Their son John is at SMU, and Rich is at U. Mo., K.C. Buffy Fairfield Creighton also lives in Carthage, where she teaches the first grade. Buffy has three daughters.

Annie Laurie Lanier Samuels, Mansfield, LA, has a very unusual occupation as V.P. of the Louisiana Blood Center; she is a "blood banker." Annie Laurie travels throughout the state in her job but has found time to enter the M.B.A. program at Centenary College in Shreveport. She vows that her husband Harvey is patient with her "spare time activity" and that Ben, her son who is a student at L.S.U., helps her with statistical math.

Caroline Sauls Shaw calls herself a "traffic director." She and Robert, music director and conductor of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, lead a very hectic but fulfilling life. They travel extensively, for Robert does a great deal of guest conducting around the country and the world. At Reunion Caroline had pictures of a charming old farmhouse in France which the Shaws have just purchased and plan to renovate. Her two sons, who are both delightful, are Alex, 14, and Thomas, 6. It was at Caroline's suggestion that we organized the career panel at Reunion.

Also at reunion was Barbara Elliott Eddins; she heads Barbara Eddins Interior Design in Atlanta. Barbara and Tom, a manager of Group and Pension Division of Aetna Life and Casualty, have two children, Susan, 22, and Tom, III, 20. Besides playing tennis weekly and taking winter ski trips to Colorado, Barb is involved in a weekly inductive Bible study course and she partners for the elderly in the Atlanta inner city.

Lynn Crosby Gammill sent a beautiful brochure on the Crosby Arboretum in Hattiesburg, MS; she is president of the Arboretum Foundation established in her father's memory. She is also a general partner of Crosby-Mississippi Resource Ltd., her husband Stewart has interests in lumber, oil, and gas. Their children are Stewart, 21; Crosby, 20; and Jennifer, 16. It was fun to talk to Lynn during the challenge campaign; she has been a good and generous friend to the College, both in time and money.

Marietta Eggleston Burleigh and Bob are residents of Memphis. While Marietta was still living in Nashville, she was a commercial lending officer, then a dean at Harpeth Hall School. Now she volunteers with Grace-St. Luke's Episcopal Church Outreach Comm. and is a member of the board of St. Mary's Girls' School; she is also a Jr. League sustainer. She and Bob, an estate planner, love to ski and play tennis. Marietta's children are Fontaine, 21; Douglas, 19; and Kathryn and Stephen, 18, who graduated from high school.

In Nashville, Gertrude Sharp Caldwell is the associate executive director of the YWCA; she helped form the Career and Life Planning Center for Girls and Women. In addition, Gertrude has served on the Vestry of St. David's Episcopal Church, has been a member of the board of the Jr. League, and was president of the Board of Directors of the University School of Nashville. Her husband Ben, a physician specializing in OB-GYN, is also an authority on Southern antiques. Their children are Trudy, 23; Sarah, 18; and Ben, III, 15.

Ootsie Woods McLeod took time out of her busy schedule to attend Reunion. The McLeods live in Nashville, where Alex is a doctor. They have a son Sandy, 14, and a daughter Dot-sie, 10. Her interests are Colonial Dames, the Jr. League, Sweet Briar Alumnae Board and the program "Reading is Fundamental."

Janet Wynn Dougherty, in Knoxville, is president of Jandi Classics, a line of designer clothes for children. Janet has a son James, 22, and a daughter Claire, 20.

In Washington, DC, Betsy Worrell Gallagher is director of development and public relations for the National Cathedral School. She sent a very impressive and professional newsletter for the capital campaign which she is heading. Betsy's three children are Lynn, Class of '82 from Amherst; Sara, a senior at U. of Penn; and Larry, at St. Alban's School. She is married to William J. Gallagher, an engineer.

A member of the career panel was Julie Booth Perry, a free-lance writer and communications consultant. She has written, edited and published three cookbooks and raised $500,000 for a senatorial campaign. Julie is an active participant at Immanuel Church-on-the-Hill as a lay reader. She also plays tennis in her free time. She and Charlie, who is a lawyer in the Washington area, have three children, all at U. Va.: Armistead, 22; Katherine, 21; and Robin, 18.

Beedy Tatlow Ritchie lives in Bethesda, MD, and is assistant to the consultant for the Presidential Inaugural Trust. She is involved in the Children's Hospital National Center, the National Aquarium, and the Jr. League; she also loves tennis, skiing, and travel. Her three children are Chad, 22, at Duke; Hank, 19, at Tulane; and Laura, 12, at Westland Intermediate. Beedy saw many old friends at Reunion.

In Leesburg, VA, Ceci Dickson Banner is active in the Episcopal Church, local politics and community affairs. She is a professional consultant in the field of fund-raising. She and her husband Roger, a Maritime Administrator, have three children: Virginia, 20, a student at Albion College; Lawrence, 18, at Lawrenceville; and Rebecca, 17, at Emma Willard. She also has four step-children.

Mollie Archer Payne and John still live in Norfolk, where Mollie is a secretary and John practices law. Mollie added a lot of fun to Reunion. Their three children are George, 20; Archer, 17; and William, 11.

Betsy Pender Trundle has embarked on a challenging new career as publisher of Port Folio, a bi-weekly newspaper of the Hampton Roads area which is a Landmark publication. Betsy participated in the career panel and gave some fascinating insights into her profession. She has participated in the community as a former Executive Comm. and board member of the Virginia Opera Assn., ex-officio member of the board and former president of the Norfolk Forum, a board member of the Virginia Beach Beautification Comm., and a member of the Virginia Beach Maritime Historical Museum. The Trundles have two daughters, Audrey, 17, and Elizabeth, 15, and a son Robert, 13.

Louise Dunham Williams is a part-time secretary at the Diet Center in Richmond. She also serves on the Jr. Board of Retreat Hospital, the board of the Historic Richmond Foundation, and the Altar Guild of her Episcopal Church and is a sustaining member of the Jr. League. Harold, a banker, and Louise's children are Elizabeth, 23, and Harold, 22.

Mary Johnson Campbell calls herself a "haus frau" and real estate salesperson. Despite the conflict of David's U. of Penn. reunion, Mary made a whirlwind stop for her own. The Campbells are skiers and tennis players; their children are Margaret, 18; David, 17; and Winifred, 16.

Joan Nelson Bargamin and Paul also live in Richmond, where Joan is a therapy counselor and handles memorial donations for the American Cancer Society. The Bargamins have two sons, Paul, 20, and Stephen, 19, Joan is active in the Tuckahoe Woman's Club, St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, the Women's Comm. of the Richmond Symphony, and the Federation Arts Council. Because of an accident two years ago that left Joan with a weak ankle, she can no longer participate in dancing and modeling, a favorite pastime.

Patty Williams Twohy is in real estate management and sales in Richmond; she is also involved in historic restoration. Patty originated a fund-raising auction project for the Collegiate School and is a sustaining member of the Jr. League. Patty and Edward have two lovely daughters, Patricia, 19, at U.Va., and Elizabeth, 16, at Collegiate School.

From Franklin, VA, comes news of Mary Ellen Sample Edmonds. She was in merchandising in Atlanta and N.Y.C. for ten years. When she married she moved first to Chicago, then to Franklin, where she and Frank are raising sons Franklin, Jr., 13, and Rice, 12. Mary Ellen's husband is manager of converter sales for Union Camp Corp. She is very involved in such activities as the hospital auxiliary, school, church, the YMCA, and the Garden Club of Virginia.

Poogie Wyatt Shields has been in St. Germaine en Laye, France, this past year. She put her three younger children, Carter, 17; Julia, 16; and Wyatt, 13, in the Lycee International. Sarah, 19, is a student at U.Va. Upon her return home to Greenwood, VA, Poogie plans to become a school counselor; she will finish her M.A. in Religious Studies at UVa next year and is halfway toward an Ed. Special in Counselor Education. One of her hobbies is growing her own food.

Dianne Chase Monroe is also an active volunteer; she and husband Sam, a banker, live in Baltimore. Diane is an avid tennis and platform tennis player; she serves on the Johns Hopkins Women's Board and has been SBC Club secretary, SBC Club treasurer, and a bulb representative. The Monroe children are Sam, 24; Jeannie, 21; and Chase, 18.

Also in New Jersey is Ruth Mackie Gabay, of Mendham. She is a part-time teacher and is active in the League of Women Voters. Ruth also serves on a Christian Education Comm., participated in the Music Boosters and a Bible study group, and is interested in French conversation. Her husband is a senior marketing representative for I.B.M.; he seemed to enjoy being at Reunion with Ruth. Their children are Mark, 20; Allison, 18; John, 15; and Matthew, 8.

Val Parker Storms is an elected representative to the Greenwich (CT) Town Meeting; she and Cliff, General Counsel for C.P.C. International, live in Cos Cob. After working full time for two years, Val is "reassessing her priorities." Her hobbies are tennis, platform tennis, swimming, needlepoint and sailing. Her children are Mark, 24, a graduate of Columbia U.; Chris, 22, at Amherst; and Dan, 18, at Hotchkiss; she also has two step-children, Catherine, 26, and Cliff, Jr., 24.

Alice Pfister Auty and Donald also live in Greenwich; Alice does substitute teaching and Don is president of Vicks Toiletry Products. Alice is a board member of the two independent schools in Greenwich, is a Girl Scout leader, works for the United Way and Red Cross, and is active at her church on the Board of Deacons; she is also a member of the American Women's Group in Paris. She enjoys golf and bowling and the performing arts. The Autys' children are John Douglas, 20, at Amherst, and Patricia Anne, 19, at Smith.

Evelyn Pedersen Gebauer could not attend Reunion because her younger son Dhuane, 22, graduated from Amherst; her older son Davin, 23, is a graduate of Mercer. Evelyn and George live in Darien, CT; she is active in the Jr. League, the YWCA and NARAL and enjoys tennis and sailing.

Lynn Prior Harrington was on the career panel at Reunion; she is an administrative assistant with Morgan Stanley Asset Management. Lynn lives in N.Y.C. during the week and Bay Head, NJ, on the week-ends. Her daughters are Dana, 20, and Sarah, 17.

Eleanor Humphreys Schnabel owns a gallery/frame shop in Hingham, MA; Hank is a real estate executive for the Taibot's. Eleanor is involved in the Jr. League, Colonial Dames, the China Students' Club, and St. John's Episcopal Church. The Schnabels have two daughters, Eleanor, 20, and Elizabeth, 17.

Adele Scott Caruthers letter was written in the most beautiful calligraphy. She is a registered occupational therapist in Wellesley, MA. Adele has found great satisfaction in being a lay reader and chalice bearer at St. Andrew's Church. Her children are Susanna, 15, and Bruce, 14.

Cathy Hill Loth, retiring president of our class, did a great job of keeping us all on track during Reunion. Cathy lives in Barrington, RI, where she works in admitting at a local hospital. She is pursuing a degree in nursing and is interested in women's issues. Her children are Jenniler, 18; Christine, 17; and Bruce, 15.

Joan Lamparter Downs is the managing editor of The Dial, national public television magazine. She lives in N.Y.C. and claims that her greatest achievement is "overcoming a fear of computers."

Our class scrapbook is filled with clippings concerning Beth Mears Kurtz. She is a choreographer and artistic and director for the Capricorn Theater Company. The production of a 1617 masque, Ben Jonson's The Vision of Delight, was presented at Columbia U. and Marymount Manhattan College to favorable reviews in the N.Y. Times, the Daily News, and BackStage.

Betsy Robinson Taylor is an actress in off-off Broadway productions and also with her own act. She works with a psychic on dreams and the "inner life." Her son James, 24, is in Italy; her daughter Lucy, 22, lives in Massachusetts; and her other daughter Jenny, 17, is in Arizona.

Also in N.Y.C. is Hope Sparger Hanbury who is a writer for Avon Products. Her husband Harry is an executive of J. Walter Thompson Advertising. They love to sail, and Hope enjoys cooking and writing.

Eleanor St. Clair Thorp is a travel agent in Bronxville, NY. She and her husband, a banker, have three children, Ridgely, 18; Vicky, 16; and Lindsay, 13.

June Berguido James just received her Master's of Social Work while acting as a book dealer in Buffalo, NY. June previously worked as a solid waste management consultant and environmental activist in the '70's. Her children are Rebecca, 18, at U.Va., and Molly, 15, in high school.

Philadelphia is home for Lee Cooper van de Velde. She did a great job of chairing the panel at Reunion. Lee is a consultant/V.P. with W.K. Gray and Assoc., a personnel agency. Lee also finds time to be V.P. of the Executive Comm. of the United Way, participate in a community Leadership Seminar Program, and serve on her local civic association. Lee has three sons, Graham, 24; Cooper, 22; and Alexander, 20; she also has two step-daughters, Tamara, 15, and Tara, 13. Martha Kuntz enjoyed the van de Velde's hospitality when she was living in Philadelphia this fall.

In West Chester, PA, Carol McClave Mercner has launched a whole new career as Marketing Manager for Southeast Farm Credit Assoc. She also has three job-related community/board positions. Carol loves to play tennis and to travel. Carol and Dick, a sales representative, have two daughters, both graduates of Penn State, Karen, 26, and Barbara, 23.

Gov. Blanchard of Michigan appointed Olivia Benedict Karlstrom as director, Office of Services to the Aging for the State of Michigan. Libby ran for the Lt. Governor of Michigan in the last general election — the first woman to run for that office in the state. A resident of Flint, Libby finds time for racquetball and skiing and is interested in public radio. Her children are Elizabeth, 23; Ben, 22; and John, 19. She is stepmother to Olaf's two children, Sten, 24, and Kiersten, 22.

Judy Graham Lewis and Jim moved to Ann Arbor, MI, last fall. Jim is the rector of a large urban parish church and Judy is an R.N. at U. of Michigan Hospital. I had breakfast with Judy right before she moved, and we had a grand time catching up. In Ann Arbor she volunteers at a shelter for the homeless, sings in the church choir, plays tennis, and enjoys gardening. Jim and Judy have four children: Stephen, 24, in Charleston; Elizabeth, 21, at William Smith College; and Katherine and Deborah, 19 — one at College of Wooster and the other at Denison U.

A busy alumna in Grosse Pointe, MI, is Ethel Ogden Burwell. She is admissions director for the University-Liggett School; she also serves on the Alumnae Executive Board for SBC. Ethel is involved in the Friends of the Grosse Pointe Library, Colonial Dames and the Grosse Pointe Memorial Church. Her husband Armistead, an engineer for Chrysler Corp., was one of four husbands who had the courage to attend Reunion. The Burwells have two SB daughters, Ethel '82, who is a member of the Alumnae Board, and Elizabeth, Class of '84. Son John, III, is at University-Liggett School.

I had one letter from overseas, from Letha Wood Audhuy who lives in Toulouse, France. She is a university professor in American Studies. Last year she had a very rewarding experience as an exchange professor in the English Dept. at Ohio U. in Athens, OH. Her two children, Leslie, 9, and Thomas, 7, accompanied her and spent their spring term in a "real American public school." Her husband Patrick is in the executive search field. Lee loves skiing, tennis, windsurfing, and gardening and is involved in the environmental movement.

It has been a busy year for the Kuntzes. Martha spent the first semester of her senior year in Philadelphia. She had an internship at KYW-TV as assistant to the producer of the daily talk show, People Are Talking. Lee was captain of the field hockey team, third high score in the league, and selected to play on a regional club team. Lee and Martha both graduated from Albion College in May and are now venturing into the business world. Anne, our younger daughter, has just started her senior (2nd) year at St. Mary's (Jr.) College in Raleigh, NC. She sang with the school chorale and was a teacher's aide in a local public school last year. This summer Anne was a tutor at the Alpha School, teaching children with learning disabilities. Eddie and I took a marvelous trip in the late winter. We joined friends for a week on a houseboat on the St. John's River in Florida; it was a scenic, relaxing vacation. We then trekked across Florida to Sanibel, where we met all three daughters for their spring holidays. The girls and I also had two weeks at my mother's cottage on Burt Lake, in northern Michigan, this summer. I have retired from my position as a development director so am once again a "professional volunteer." I now serve on the board of the Alpha School, sit on the Worship and Arts Comm., and sing in the choir of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. This spring our garden club hosts the G.C.A. Zone X meeting and I am chairing a committee for that; in addition, I sit on the garden club board as program chairman. I am also working on the Performing Arts Fund. Tennis, platform tennis, swimming and needlework remain my hobbies.

And, of course, our 25th Reunion! I cannot tell you what a treat it was to go back to Sweet Briar, see old friends, drink in the beauty of the campus, and feel the deep pride in our College.

Everyone please keep in touch; I love to hear from you. It is your column.

Secretary

Patsy Carney Reed (Mrs. Brad), 231 Deer Park Dr., Nashville, TN 37205

Fund Agent

Nancy Fleshman Bowles (Mrs. Bowlman T., Jr.), 11 Amphill Rd., Richmond, VA 23226

Millie Anderson Stuckey (Mrs. George C.), 4201 Oxford Circle, E., Richmond, VA 23221

Your class secretary hasn't changed since SBC days — I forgot this article was due August 1 — Please forgive me for lack of breadth and send me news so I can do better next time!

Mary Hannah writes that she still loves her position as associate professor of psychology at the U. of Detroit, where she is also writing and doing research on attitudes toward the handicapped. She enjoys a new role as a "delightfully innocent red-headed clown named Bravo."

Laura Connerat Jelks now has a degree in science education and is director of the planetarium at the Savannah Science Museum. She reports that Sally Scherer is practicing law in Raleigh, NC.

An Atlanta newspaper columnist wrote a complimentary description of Dlema Inn, gateway to Point Reyes National Seashore, in his account of a visit to Marin County, CA. The inn is owned by Donn Downing, husband of Leitia Sanders.

Ginger Borah Slaughter, having returned from two weeks in Great Britain, is conducting a 22-county poverty analysis for the Atlanta Presbytery. Vogue magazine reports that she also owns a catering business and gourmet shop, "Proof of the Pudding" with Jane Devol Lottich '82. They welcome all alumnae! It was great hearing from Eve Pringle Boyd whose eldest child will be a junior at Episcopal High this fall. Beth Johnson Phillips writes glowingly of her four children and labels the Phillipses a "busy and lucky family." Chloe Fort Lenderman is focusing her talents in work toward a degree in interior design at D'More School of Design, Franklin, TN.

Fran Early wants all to know that she has a new condo: in Houston, Texas. She is still head of six divisions at Prudential and has passed the National Association of Security Dealers exam to enable her to sell mutual funds and annuities. During her recent trip to Europe she saw Louise Durham Purvis, who is responsible for instigating the Prison Fellowship Program in all of Scotland. Louie also helps her husband John with his many duties, one of which is representing 14 Scottish constituencies in the European Parliament. Elizabeth, their oldest child, attends Oxford. Anne Allen Symonds has succeeded in raising the final dollars to fund a chair at Vanderbilt Law School in memory of her brother David.

Ann Ritchey Baruch is Europe bound where Ritchey is playing international soccer for the third year. He will be at Lawrenceville in the fall, and Marcy will be at Dana Hall. Welcome back to Nancy Hudler Keuffel and family, who I hear are living outside New York City after many years in South America. Jingles Street Robinson writes that she enjoys community involvement in San Antonio and homemaking for her husband and children, ages 12 and 18. From Louisville Elizabeth Farmer Owen relates that she has been busy with the opening of a new wing at the art museum and keeping up with two teenagers.

Congratulations to Betsy Pearson Griffin who has been chosen executive director of the Houston International Protocol Alliance. In this position she promotes business between Houston and foreign countries and arranges schedules of visiting dignitaries. Word is that Buzzy has been a real sport about living in black tie! Aside from caring for four children, Anne Parker Schmalz relates that she is in plant maintenance, teaching retarded and emotionally disturbed, redeveloping city greenhouses for citizens use, and community gardens. The grapevine reports that Ann Percy has a wonderful job as assistant curator at the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

This fall Alice Allen Smyth's two older children will be at Andover, where Jordan has been elected president of student government. Alice has been busy designing and making fabulous, one-of-a-kind ball gowns. Betsy Smith White's ('59) daughter Margaret was lovely in an Alice creation at her Charlotte, NC, debut.

While visiting in Memphis with her 6-year-old daughter Keithy, Douglas Dockery Porteous mentioned that her mother had taken her son Will on an African safari! Allison Moore Garratt and Tom are enjoying their new cabin at Horseshoe Lake, AR, where GeeGee Tayloe Chandler '60 is next door. Congratulations to Tom who is the new president of the National Bank of Commerce. The Garrotts report that Mina Walker Wood's family is happily settled in their lovely new house in Lynchburg where Mina's landscaping skills are beautifully evident and that their son Sackett will be a freshman at UVa this fall. MayBelle Scott Rauch and Ted have been enjoying their vacation house in Caesar's Head, SC. Ray Henley Thompson was seen there and also in Houston, attending the Garden Club of America meeting.

Our family is contemplating a year's sabbatical in New Zealand starting August 1984. Please send any info, and/or advice you might have!

Brooke Hamilton Cressall writes, "Sweet Briar is still one of the rarest of all our experiences...and increases in value and importance with each passing year." I certainly agree! Please keep in touch!

Secretary

Lin Campbell, 35 Willow Place, Brooklyn Heights, NY 11201

Fund Agent

Nancy Conkle Swann (Mrs. David C.), 800 Raintree Court, Winston-Salem, NC 27106

A year's time gets shorter and shorter as I grow older and older, yet it's plenty of time for major life events, and some nice minor ones too, to have occurred in the lives of the members of our class.

Frances (Gidget) Babb Griggs and Lt. Col. John (W&L '63) have moved around the world a good deal over the last 17 years. Frances now is in Atlanta with their two teen-age daughters, and they expect to be there for another three years, while John finishes a tour of duty in Korea.

Gracie Butler Johnson reports that Jotham just started a new job as director of development for Recording for the Blind. Gracie says this means he'll be in Princeton, where they live, again, and is ending an awful two-year commute to NYC, where he was director of Cornell U.'s public affairs. "I'm finally done with my nursery school involvement — Tommy starts kindergarten in the fall!"

Frances Butt Fisher reports the March birth of Virginia Spencer Fisher to Frances and father, Greg. This is Frances' third child.

Mary Anne Calhoun Farmer writes that she hasn't darkened the hallowed halls of SBC, but raising three potential SBC students, breeding Jack Russell Terriers, decorating a new home and playing as much tennis as possible leave little energy and time for anything else." Her tennis coach is going to the SBC tennis clinic in July. Although the Farmers live in Newnan, GA, most of the tennis occurs in Atlanta.

Kathy Carroll Mathewson makes me nostalgic for Mark Twain: "Enjoying life on the Mississippi. We live on bluffs overlooking the river around St. Louis." Dave is the international manager of Winchester and travels a great deal. Kathy will join him on a trip to Scotland in the summer for a vacation prior to assuming the presidency of the Greater Alton (IL.) Junior League. Kathy saw Marcia Pace Pennewill, Ann Kerr Preaus and Diana Rediker Slaughter at the J.L. conference in Dallas and reports that four of our class members are J.L. presidents.

Nancy Conkle Swann, Dave and 13-year-old Chris just returned from a vacation in Bermuda. Andrew (5) stayed with his grandmother and is starting "big" kindergarten in the fall. Nancy looks forward to increased free time as a result. Dave stays busy with Wachovia Bank. Nancy thanks all who helped to make her job as fund agent so easy. Katie Clay Barret says that she and her husband haven't moved from Kentucky or changed jobs. "My life is my girls, the house, the yard, the flowers and my exercise class. Not exciting, but for me satisfying."

Jeannine Corbett Squires and family say life continues about the same in Asheville, NC, except that oldest daughter, Jeannette, just hit teen-age. "It's hard to believe we're old enough to have one." Margaret (10) is going on 25. Jeannine took her family by SBC in June, and all were impressed with the green hockey fields.

Cynthia Craig Bliss and William report the birth of William Saunders (Sandy) in October; also, they've moved to Jacksonville, FL.

Robin (Randie) Cutler Maw writes that her family is enjoying Washington, DC. Elizabeth (10) loves National Cathedral School, and Carlyn (8) will start her last year at Beauvoir. Robin is co-producing a 3-part series for PBS' American Playhouse called "Roanoke" about the first English settlements on Roanoke Is., NC. She's also starting a 13-week tele-course for colleges on Indian-white relations across America in the 16th century. It's called "American Frontiers." She enjoys combining her media and history interests.

Evie Day Butler has had a busy year serving the Area III Junior League Council and looks forward to having Courtenay Sands Wilson as a Council member next year. Evie went to SBC to be trained as an area rep. She was pleased to have both Dean Belford and the College's president in Memphis over the last year. Geoff and two of their sons were off in Wyoming and at camp this summer, leaving Evie and third son, William (6), on their own for a while, until they all join up at Jackson Hole.

Ann Dreher wrote (!) after a silent spell. She is "celebrating 5 years with husband #2 (sounds like a game show, doesn't it?) and they live with her three kids — Jay, 13; Lulu, 12; and Fanny, 4. Husband Bob Hungerford is an administrator with the public schools. Ann is in her 11th year of teaching theatre and speech at the U. of S. Carolina. "Bob is an avid actor, and I mostly direct plays, now." She's doing a kids' production this summer and Trojan Women in February "See — that Greek comes in handy..."

The Rev. Makanah (formerly Nancy) E. Dunham Morriss reports "exciting changes" in her life over the last year. She was ordained into the Unitarian Universalist Ministry of Education in November and continues to serve at the First Unitarian Church in Richmond, where she has been for five years. Her ministry involves curriculum development, teacher training, pastoral care, inter-generational activities, worship for children, youth and adults. On July 2, she married Robert L. Morriss, (Hampden Sidney '66), a counselor in private practice with two children, Jeff (8) and Sara (6). "A whole new busy, happy life awaits me!"

Marlow Engelhardt Peters says she can't remember contributing to "Class Notes" before, and she brings us up to date. She and John are in their fifth year of work for the Air Force, living in Germany. She's in charge of the Air Force Library service to remote sites throughout Europe and part of Asia. She sets up new libraries and trains local staff. She and John met 12 years ago in Greece, and they love being abroad and traveling. "A primary concern of every trip is food, so we've spent four vacations at cooking schools in France and Italy."

Anne Frothingham Cross, Dennis and Louisa (8) are restoring and re-decorating their 1840 Greek revival summer house in Nantucket. In the winter, busy life in NYC continues with chamber music, opera and singing, Louisa's violin study, and Ann's Suzuki-Orloll-Kodaly piano lessons for very young kids. She has also started a piano program for a violin school in New Haven, and is a Suzuki parent teacher.

Marilyn Garabrant Morris sends us all a Hong Kong "Hello!" They love it. She is now able, after studying Cantonese, to take taxis and shop the markets. "Thank God one can speak English here, or I'd be lost." They've traveled to the Philippines, Thailand, Korea, and hope to get to China soon. "It turns out that there are SBC grads here!" — Jeanie Campbell James, from '66, even. They plan a visit to the Maine Coast in July and look forward to their first home leave and a visit with Ellie Gilmore Massie.

Peggy Gillmer Myers says, "Same house and farm near the Parkway in Amherst County. Same husband — Sammy (beef and cattle farmer). Same children (Sarah — 11, Henry — 9, Cinda — 5, Ginny — 3). Same job — teacher of American Studies in Lynchburg. Same living happily ever after."

Mary Meade Gordon Winn says the postcard is too small for her news. In brief, she works for three doctors in Roanoke, VA, one of whom is her husband, and spends the summers with her four kids in their many activities. "We have a very satisfying life with more highs than lows — our children provide the high points." Tom (14) is working on an Eagle Scout project, Gordon (13) excels in soccer, Andrew (10) has spent the year on a scoring projection on the Georgia basketball team and playing the piano, and Meredith (8) is enjoying her horse. "writing letters without having been threatened, and going to literally hundreds of her brothers' ball games." Mary Meade saw Bitsy Taggart Fitzsimmons and Anne Mason Curti in Florida and Marty Rogers Brown over the summer.

Vi Graveure Patek says Mark is still happy after 17 years with IBM and is now manager in White Plains. She has been a French/Latin teacher in Ripowam School this year. And the three girls, Sarah, Sheila and Emily, continue with school, piano, and violin (Emily is the youngest member of the district orchestra). They planned a cruise this summer.

Gail Harrison Gregson writes that her family is doing well and plan a move from Santa Monica to Pasadena. "The Derby Winner, Gato Del Sol, is fine and ready to make a comeback next week-end."

Harriette Horsey Sturges says, "I'm still under 40 and under 200 lbs., but I'm gaining on both. Since last year, I have become familiar with microwaves and computers. I'm always a decade or so behind. I'm teaching two foreign languages to Americans now — French and English! I was tongue-tied for months before I would say anything ungrammatically correct."

Lorne Lassiter Boatright was written up August 18, 1983, in the Charlotte Observer for her very successful exercise business, Workout, with three locations, 18 teachers, and close to 500 clients.

An unsigned card, looking suspiciously like Midge Lundy says, "I've recently bought a huge old house with barn and spent buckets of money fixing it up. It looks great, but it's the structure I'm worried about. I'm selling new homes — $6 million in a year's time. No time for men or horses." It was postmarked "Denver" and included a note wishing me well in N.Y.C., with a comment that she doesn't understand why anyone would want to live here...

Lee MacKubin Miller writes that their lives are full with new baby Anne Lacy, who was born in March. Patrick (12) and Macon (7), Rick, and Lee "adore her." "I have divorced myself from community work for a few months."

Martha Madden Swanson and husband David have been busy finishing extra degrees — Dave an M.B.A. and Martha an accounting degree. "It'll round out my B.A., M.A." She's been getting great grades and appearing on the Dean's List, "which I never did at SBC," and she blames this on the relative ease of the course work. (Some of us would plummet to new nadirs in accounting.) She hopes to gain both knowledge and more gainful employment with this new tool. Michael (12) and Sarah both enjoy soccer. David is still working at Georgetown University.

Anne Mason Curti, Elizabeth (11), Andrea (9), and Tate (4) all live in Westport, CT, where she sees Sally Dunham and Ruthie Schmidt Igoe in a book group. "None of us is at all older looking, just wiser." What's your secret in Westport? Ponce de Leon looked all over for it.

Jodie Moore Griffin, Chuck, and the boys moved from Venezuela to Lima, Peru, where Chuck will be general manager of Kodak, Peru. Jodie finished her Master's in Educational Administration and is doing pre-doctoral work. She asks anyone coming to Lima to look her up.

Suzy Moseley Helms, Nelson, Pen (13), and Teddy (8) are happy in Louisville. Pen is a computer champ and will go to camp for that this summer. Teddy lives horses. "Nelson is still lawyering. I love my job in P.R. at the Louisville Presbyterian Seminary. Still active in church, taking piano and French." Suzy expected to see Kit Baker Sydnor, Susan Sudduth Dodson, Sally Dunham and Jane Nelson at Makanah Dunham's wedding.

Wick Nalle Rowland and Rob report Emily's birth. Julia is 3. Wick is very busy with the girls, Jr. League, and Rob's law firm specialists in business litigation, which he recently joined. "We entertain a lot for business reasons. I'm on a constant diet, which is a drag."

Abby Patterson Shultz reports she's too busy, as usual. "Both girls

— Ashton and Parker — are foxhunting and ice skating in winter, doing Pony Club and Combined Training rest of the year, and a variety of musical pursuits. All I do is drive, do pony club paperwork and occasionally escape to my garden." But she has been able to travel a bit with Gary this year. She saw Sarah Dean McGill in August.

Andrea Pearson Pennington has changed jobs, having been appointed referee for Mobile County Youth Center. "In this capacity, I sit as judge on juvenile delinquency and custody cases. Al is in private law practice and has two partners. Katy is 3½, and we expect a second child in August." (Sec'y's note: I'm glad someone with Andrea's sensitivity and good sense is serving in such a vital capacity to youth.)

Laura Penick Fell, Bob, Elizabeth (13) and Emily (12) have survived the last winter in their cold, old Japanese house in Hayama. "thanks to layers of sweaters, long underwear, and kerosene heaters. Japan has definitely been a cultural shock, but everyone seems to be adjusting well. Bob spends lots of time at sea as the meteorologist for the Seventh Fleet, but we've been able to meet him in exotic places like Hong Kong, so at least we're getting to see the world."

Lida Pierce Small, Wayne, Kyrsta (15) and Courtenay (14) are in Danville, VA, with their Hallmark card shops there and in Lynchburg. The girls are doing exceptionally well in school and "all other normal activities." The family planned to spend three weeks in England in July.

Katie Pritchett Harris wrote the following only, "Am now selling real estate and have closed 1½ million $ this year in residential sales."

Courtenay Sands Wilson writes from Jacksonville, FL, that she is looking forward to serving on the SBC Alumnae Board, beginning in the fall, with Courtenay Stevenson. "I had a great visit with Jane Utley Strickler at Ponte Vedra, and another with Mary Anne Calhoun Farmer and Bitsy Taggart Fitzsimmons. Courtenay continues her hectically busy activities with the Area III Jr. League Council. She looks forward to seeing Marcia Pace Pennewill and Evie Day Butler in Memphis at a Jr. League Conference in the fall.

Marty Spangenberg Moore, John, Clay (14) and Stacey (12) are in Wichita, KS, where John is Sr. VP for Cessna Aircraft. "Our kids are typical busy kids, and I am enjoying them immensely. I am still playing lots of tennis and, in general, am enjoying life! After 17 years of living many places, I finally ran into an SBC grad — Toni Naren Gates '67, and we have appalled people with our rendition of the Sweet Briar song.

Susan Sudduth Dodson is proud mother of daughter Penn (8) who enjoys school and tennis and soccer and does well. Susan is VP and co-owner of CSI, Inc., which designs and installs computer systems for small businesses and home management. She has just retired as co-leader of THEDS, a self-help organization for widowed persons. Since she and her husband's business partner started their chapter in Little Rock, three other Arkansas chapters have begun and over 200 attend meetings.

Patty Thornhill Edwards says life is moving fast in Raleigh. They just moved into Roger's grandmother's house. Daphne (16), Hale (15), Sally Scott (12) and Roger (10) keep her busy "mothering the little darlings." Patty also does community work, has a part time job at an art gallery, and "pays some attention to her own mind and body."

Wing Todd Sigler and Ed "are still enjoying semi-retirement in Umatilla, FL, while trying to finish their flirtation with higher education. Barring acts of God and natural phenomena, Wing should have a Master's in Elementary Education and Ed a Doctorate in psychology in 1984." This is semi-retirement?

Brooke Tucker now not only is teaching at Houston Baptist U., she also seems to hold every top award they give. She was named Faculty Woman of the Year in 1982 and was chosen as one of the Outstanding Young Women of America the year before. Besides teaching history, she enjoys traveling, particularly in the West, but she went to SBC in February and saw many former professors.

Jane Utley Strickler writes: "I am looking forward to an exciting year in London with 12-year-old Leigh (14-year-old Kathryn will remain in Atlanta with her father to be a Westminster School cheerleader). I'll be studying at the Royal Academy of Dancing, a program for those who teach ballet to children. Leigh will attend the American Community School."

Muriel Wikswo Lambert gets the biggest baby award — 11 lb. 4 oz. Phelps James Peter Lambert arrived in December and did not fit in the newborn pampers. His sister Anastasia is 3. Muriel is still in the Pathology Dept. at N.J. Medical School in research and teaching. Clark lectures in Dermatology and will go to Venezuela for a presentation in the fall. They will all make the trip. Muriel says they enjoy Montclair, NJ, and "every year I plant more Sweet Briar bulbs."

Penn Willets Mullin and her family are still in California, where her three children thrive. She writes, "I have been lucky enough to get a job with a publisher, writing novels for teenagers with reading disabilities." She has seen Randi Miles Long and Keenan

Colton Kelsey around the S.F. area. The children are Lucy (2½), Mary Hadley (8), and Brennan (12).

Virginia Williams Stanley writes from Rapidan, VA, that their lives are "bubbling along." Peter is working now as a research analyst for a brokerage firm in Richmond, but under Virginia's tutelage, he will study computer science this summer in order to be able to spend more days each week in Rapidan. "It's an exciting prospect. The boys are thriving. I am surviving Christopher's being 13 (and I thought the terrible 2's were bad!). George and Jimmy at 10 and 8 are still somewhat manageable." I'm still enjoying most of life in New York, subways and summer heat and general filth, aside. I'm still working for Planned Parenthood of New York City, now as the director of the Brooklyn Center. I get to walk to work most days, which makes my mood much improved for my staff and me. My work with support groups for diabetic youngsters and adults grows, which is both wonderful and demanding. And, I'm still writing. I also pay bills, do laundry, grocery shop and other titillating little things. I need to take Patty Thornhill Edwards' course in having time for one's own mind (if I can find mine) and body (which I find too much of). I see Susan Kjeldsen Roos in the neighborhood and am happy to report that she made it through a wonderful house redecoration with great success and sanity. I saw Linda Reynolds in Washington in May, as funny and beautiful as always and the very proud mother of George and Gracie, of the feline species. I got pictures of Sandy Hatten Hartwell's three children at Christmas and another letter (that made me laugh till I cried) on general life in Pass Christian, MS. Why is it that everyone else's life sounds so glamorous? If I'm lucky I'll travel either to the Bronx or Queens within the year...

Secretary

Emmy Moravec Holt (Mrs. J. Williams, III), 105 Rockingham Rd., Greenville, SC 29607

Fund Agent

Debrah Denemark, 1255 New Hampshire Ave., Apt. 930, Washington, DC 20036

This is a landmark year for most of us 1970 classmates as we ring in our 35th year, ready or not. From all accounts, we are passing through our mid-thirties with busy, ever-changing, and happy lives.

Candace Buker Chang packed up "kids, cats, sacks, and lives" and moved to Oregon, where she hopes to stay forever. Having earned her M.S.W. in May 1982, she now does administrative and planning work for a consortium of private agencies in Portland: issues of runaway kids and juvenile prostitutes. Her own children Jean (9) and Sonia (5) are doing well — keeping Candace entertained and endlessly busy. Susan Hampton Ver-Nooy and Stan moved back to Fresno, CA, in February after living in San Jose for more than seven years. They wanted to get out of the "Silicon Valley rat race" and increase their quality of life. Susan has become a sales rep for Creative Circle needlecrafts. They have a two-year-old and a 1st grader.

Three classmates from Denver wrote their news. Margaret Sharp Howell's second daughter was born last December, Lorene Elliott, to join Ruth (3½). Tauna Urban Durand is PTD president this year at her son's school and is teaching Sunday school. She and Doug moved to a new house in the foothills with a spectacular view. Tauna looks forward to a trip to Washington, DC, at Thanksgiving to see her parents and, she hopes, SBC roomie Carol Covington Bellonby, who also has twins. Luci Lombardi Evans wrote that they survived Denver's snowy winter, saying that the only good thing about it was that she and Stew had fantastic skiing later into spring. Stew qualified for and ran in the Boston Marathon. Luci is very much looking forward to performing in the Jr. League's children's Theatre this year, trouping elementary schools around Denver.

From deep in the heart of Texas came word from Karen Hartnett, who has changed jobs and is now an officer of Republic Bank Corp. in Dallas. As human resource officer, Energy Banking Group, she lends money to oil and gas companies, primarily in the Dallas, Houston, Denver, Midland areas, and makes sure that the personnel needs of landing officers are met. Karen likes her job and the people and says that it proves that there is a life in business for English majors! Karen, Pam Piffath Still, Kay Parham Picha, and Susan Lykes Mueller all met in Florida in March for a fun time. Kathie Kraemer Quayle saw Debbie Warren at an alumnae function in Houston. Kathie is busy as an educational consultant with Discovery Toys (educational toys from birth to adult) and says that it's a great way to combine motherhood and career. Her mothering is with Patrick (5), Lisa (3) and No. 3, due in September. Ann Gateley has moved back to Texas, where she is an assistant professor of internal medicine with the U. of Tex. Med School at Houston. Her job is challenging — lots of teaching, research, interesting patients. She has bought an older home — a cottage near the Medical Center — which means she never has to approach a freeway. Also in Texas is Cynthia Cocke Sutton, who married Bill of Little Rock, AR, in May. They are both licensed stockbrokers and financial planners with E. F. Hutton. They live in San Antonio with sons Harrison (11), Duncan (10), and Brent (9). Cindy has taken a leave from Hutton to tend the new family and will possibly resume work in the fall.

Pamela Walker and her husband Scott Stafford bought an old house in the historic district of Little Rock that is on the National Register. The plaster work was finished for the Spring Tour in May. Pamela is busy in private law practice, although she says that she would rather just practice law without running a business. Husband Scott is getting a Master's in tax law and is teaching at the law school there.

Joanne Hicks Robblee and Lieutenant Colonel Paul are stationed at Ft. Knox. Joanne just completed a Master's Degree in counseling and keeps busy with Clay (10) and Jessica (6), with soccer, gymnastics, and swim team.

Barbara Brewster Miller sent news from Louisville, KY, of a baby girl, Pritchett Louise, born Oct. 11, 1982. That makes two — Brewster is 5 — and everyone is doing well. Kitty Litchfield Seale reports that she had a lazy summer at their lake house with Turner (9) and Kate (6). The building slump seems to be over, and husband Turner is moving into a new office, while "Miss Kitty" is still busy as dance director of the Montgomery Performing Arts Co. Barbara Waters Larson is also in Montgomery, AL, with her family, where she is assistant to the art curator of Blount, Inc. She is now concentrating on promoting the Alabama Shakespeare Festival, which will move to a new theatre in Montgomery in 1985. She credits the Junior League for the PR training she needed for the position. Barbara sums up her children — David (12) and twins Beverly and Lula (9) — and her 14-year marriage to David all as miracles. She says that Lida Bennett Volz lives in Tuscaloosa with Emily (11), and Adelaide Johnston Skoglund and John are fine and live in Minneapolis. Kathy Potterfield is assistant director of the Dept. of Physical Therapy at Charleston (WV) Area Medical Center. She is very active in the state P.T. chapter and has attended the national convention as a state delegate for the last two years, where she has seen Susan O'Malley '71. Kathy spends what free time she has with her rock garden and needlework.

Salli Shropshire LaGrone and I keep missing each other on her trips here to see Welling's family. She lives in Nashville with Welling and their two sons. This summer they all went to Hilton Head for a visit with Fielding Clark Gallivan, Gally, and their three sons, Tricia Mast George, Ken, and their two sons, and Put Mundy Edinger and Charlie.

In Atlanta Kathy Barnes Hendricks is enjoying their little son while doing much gardening and helping her husband restore a 19th-century plantation as a hunting preserve. Kathy is in charge of the public opening of the new High Museum in October and serves on many boards, including the Botanical Garden and Museum Members' Guild. She also manages the Cooks Corner in Atlanta. In Atlanta too, I bumped into Kate Schleich, who is an attorney with the U.S. Dept. of Justice, Anti-Trust Division. She was in Vail for a ski week in March. Also in Atlanta, Sydney McCampbell Glass continues to enjoy daughter Porter (7) and Robert (3½) and plays a good bit of tennis. Fred is still in commercial real estate. She had a fun day last winter when Page Kjellstrom came to Atlanta for business, and they got together at Sydney's with Cathy Louis Lovell and Vieve Minor Moeckle. Page went with them to a party that night, where she knew over half the people there! Cathy Louis Lovell and family are doing well in Atlanta. Cathy's husband Wood is in real estate, and they have "two rascally, curly-headed boys" (8 and 5), while Cathy still teaches Latin at Lovell and says that she is always tired.

In Macon, GA, Margaret Arnold Jackson teaches at Macon Academy for Learning Disabled. Mary Scales Lawson is in Greenville, SC. She will be busy this year working with the art museum as a docent and board member and in her Presbyterian Church, where she was recently elected elder. Joseph (1½) and Margaret and Roselle (7) keep her running. She and Jeff loved seeing Terri Eoff Walsh, Dave, and Drew (20 mos.) on a Virginia trip this summer. Terri just had a baby girl. Marcia Pollock Ragsdale is in Easley, SC, with Bill and sons Will and Craig. She is directing a choir for 4th, 5th, and 6th graders in her church. She is currently working on an Education degree from Clemson U. and is serving as president of the Greenville Sweet Briar Club. Betty Brewer Caughman sent word that she is nearby in Chester, SC, where Jerry is working for Canal Wood. They keep busy re-doing an old house in the town's historic district. She also does publicity for the library and is involved in organizing a Friends of the Library and with the Arts Advisory Committee. Betsy Edwards Anderson, Andy, and children have moved to a larger home in Charlotte, NC, one that can accommodate Claire, Charlie, and Caroline. In Greensboro, Molly Woltz Carrison is active in the Jr. League. Kay Parham Picha reports from Jamestown, NC, that Mandy (7) and Tom (6) are busy with Suzuki lessons. This past spring they had a family trio at school with one cello and two violins. Kay is also playing piano and computers. David's business, Classic Dyestuffs, is doing well and was moved into a new building this summer. The Pichas planned a trip to Washington State this summer. Frances Gravely Frankstone, David, Susan (4½), and Lee (1½) continue to adore living in Chapel Hill. She is about to start a wholesale import business of Italian dinnerware. David is merging his law practice to be a partner of the new firm, Midget, Higgins, Frankstone, and Graves. Betty Rau Schewel is busy with David (7½) — 3rd grade and Suzuki violin, Sara (5) — kindergarten, and Matthew (1½). Marc just converted the family furniture business to a computer for inventory, etc. — and spoke about it at the Atlanta Furniture Market. They went to Barbados in May.

In Richmond, VA, Betty Glass Smith has kept very busy working full time at First and Merchants National Bank as an operations analyst and keeping up with Ran (1). No. 2 is due in October. Bill has just passed the 15-year mark with Virginia Electric and Power Co. Also in Richmond is May Humphreys Fox, director of planning for the State Dept. of Health. Husband Charlie heads the Investment Advisory Dept. of Scott and Stringfellow (regional brokerage firm). They have been sailing, wind surfing, and racing their mobjack a lot. They look forward to seeing Wallis Wickham and Mary Jane Hipp Brock when they vacation at Cape Cod and Easthampton, L.I. May spends her spare time with two children, Chamber of Commerce, United Way, and Planned Parenthood. Kathy Waldrop Kerkering and Tom are fine in Richmond — and lived through first grade with twins Heather and Emily, and John turning 3. She continues her work in neonatology.

Susan McGrath Moses and Garnet (11) are still in Charlottesville, where she manages a ladies fashion store, Ashby's, a division of Best Products. She sees Jean McKee Carmichael often, as Jean is one of her regular models in her monthly fashion shows at Hollymead Inn. Anyone passing through Charlottesville could catch them both. Alison King claims that nobody can say that she rushed into marriage! This past June she wed Jim Deter, who is president of Sprigg Lane Investment Corp. in Charlottesville. They took off for a honeymoon in France, drove across the Alps, and spent a week in Vienna with the opera. She says she is delighted to have married such a wonderful man and glad that she was patient. Alison's company, Le Jacquard Francais, now has over 600 retail customers throughout the country and requires a lot of travel, but she loves to sell a beautiful French product and to use the French that she learned at SBC.

Lots of classmates are in the D.C. area. Dayna Kinnard Shah was appointed as judge on the House and Senate Building Office Commission Board of Contract Appeals. Her husband is now a counsel in the D.C.-based law firm of Abourezk, Gobol, and Trister, headed by former Senator James Abourezk. Their work, however, has not kept them home — they spent four months abroad, visiting Pakistan, the "Golden Triangle" in India (Delhi, Agra, Jaipur), and four republics in the Soviet Union. Jane Elizabeth Gott is a sales rep for Sterling Drug in the D.C.-Northern Virginia area. She spent time this summer with roommate Barbara Dfutt Mathieson and family in Palo Alto, CA. It was their first reunion since graduation, and Jane says that Barbara has two adorable children. Debrah Denemark's news was an announcement that she has joined Northern Telecom, Inc. as a marketing controller for the new Federal Systems Group. She says that the work is exciting and challenging. She spent last year on the Junior League's Ad Hoc Financial Advisory Committee with Sarah Becker, who is this year's vice-treasurer. Debrah will be serving as an assistant treasurer — lots of math-minded classmates we have! Anne Adare Wood has changed careers from lawyering/lobbying to real estate and says that she enjoys combining interests in tax and finance and working with people. She has joined the McLean office of Shannon and Lucks, working with people interested in buying or selling residential or investment properties. Frances Dornette married Tom Schafer in June, with Debrah Denemark and Sandy Hamilton Bentley attending the wedding. Tom is an attorney at the office of General Counsel, U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development. Frances is still with the Internal Revenue Service and is currently chief of the Tax Shelter Staff. Tracy Savage has bought a house in Vienna, VA, while she is associate director of development and president of the faculty at Foxcroft School in Middlebury, VA. Before this, she had taught for several years in L.A. and then got her J.D. from W&L. Tracy keeps in touch with Sally Campbell Carroll and Kate Schleich. Put Mundy Ebinger and Charlie live in Bethesda, MD, where she is assistant dean and director of the Undergraduate Program, School of Foreign Service at Georgetown U. Still in Annapolis, MD, Louise Hyman says that her daughter (13) is teaching her all about eye make-up and boys. She has kept up with Barbara Waters Larson and Milly Walton Bright Louise changed jobs and is now a public relations officer for Union Trust Bank, one of Baltimore's largest banks. Also in Annapolis are Baird Hunter Campbell, Bill, Neal (2½), and Clay (5 mos.). Baird writes that she has been doing the "usual housewife things — church, Jr. League, tennis, etc." — spending any free moments trying to catch up on sleep. In Exton, PA, Sandy Hamilton Bentley keeps very busy with her two boys, Andrew (4½) and Matthew (1½), sometimes trying to recall by-gone days when she got paid for working! Nia Eldridge Eaton and Gil live in Jefferson, PA, and seemed to have launched promising careers in computers — Gil is technical support and operations manager for a computer store on the Main Line; Nia has been promoted to branch manager for a company manufacturing portable computers, the "lovable luggables" of the industry. They enjoy being in the same industry — she sells them and he understands what makes them go. Nia is secretary of the Philadelphia chapter of NAPS (National Association of Professional Saleswomen), dedicated to provide a network of training and support for anyone in the sales industry. For fun, they dream of a pool soon to replace the huge hole in their backyard.

Kris Herzog wrote from Bloomington, IN, that she is busy as art director of the KAPPAN magazine, a journal of professionals in education. Janet Hutchison Karpowicz sent news that after years of working at Northwestern U. Medical School, she got a new job last December: full-time mother to Steven John. She is enjoying her change.

Wilma Packard Silberbogen announced the birth of their third daughter, Bonnie Rose, who joins Rebecca (9) and Amy (8) in Berkeley Heights, NJ. Wilma has been working for the Junior League and will return in September with babe in arms. Denise Mullen is currently teaching print-making at Jersey City State College and doing her own work in color etching and exhibiting through dealers and national competitions. In May '82 Denise married Mark Arywitz, a writer currently working and teaching in the area of screenwriting at NYU. Mary Jane Hipp Brock spent some of the summer in East Hampton, L.I., which involves introducing marketing concepts and techniques. She has seen lots of classmates either in the N.Y.C. or Richmond areas. Fran Griffith Laserson writes that the Sweet Briar connection continues to be a big part of her life. She, Mary Jane Hipp Brock, and Pat Swinney Kaufman are V.P.s of the N.Y.C. Jr. League, and the three spend every Monday evening together. During her presidency of the N.Y.C. SBC Alumnae Club last year, the first market resource directory was published — a project to be adopted by other alumnae clubs. The directory combines business and career information with personal data on families and other activities, making it an invaluable resource for N.Y.C. alumnae. Fran has seen Corbin Kendig, who has married Tom Rankin in Richmond, VA, and David and Carter Burns Cunningham and daughter Maisie, Fran's goochild. Fran, Steve, and Tenley (3) spent a month in Northern Ontario with Pat Swinney Kaufman and daughter Lily Hayes (3). Page Kjellstrom is also in N.Y.C., working and traveling for Letitia Baldrige Enterprises, Inc., having been to some 30 cities since September '82 to launch the Stately Homes Collection for Baker Furniture. One good thing about traveling was that she got to see many SBC-ers along the way. She has seen Mitty Walton Bright, who is an interior design business and sells some hand-smocked nightgowns on the side. Did anyone see Mitty's kitchen in McCalls? Page wrote that Lee Giannakis Miniadis is doing well in a new house in Greece. Lee says that everyone must go stay at the Apollo Hotel, which is run by her husband. Page enjoyed visiting her sister in Hong Kong, where she didn't take enough money — everything is cheaper there. Elizabeth McKee Werlinich is still working for Estee Lauder International in N.Y.C. and is marketing manager for Asia — Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, and the Philippines.

In Brooklyn last December, Laurie Louise Hawkins married Roy Olivera Brady, Jr., an M.I.T. Sloan School classmate of Sally Gipson Tully's ('69) older brother, Ralph Gipson. Roy is senior statistician for Value Line. She has been working for the editorial department of the Metropolitan Museum of Art as a bibliographic researcher, her most recent project being the bibliography and footnotes for the Manet catalogue, which weighs five pounds! Up in Loudonville, NY, is Barbara LaLance Kelly and family, including Sarah (6) and Rachel (3). She keeps busy with Jr. League work and her daughter's school.

Elsa Jones Foster, Rod, and children are enjoying Beverly, MA, where they are fixing up an old colonial home. She is working 2½ days a week at Addison Gilbert Hospital in Gloucester, doing echocardiography and is starting a year as co-president of the Beverly League of Women Voters. With Alexandra in first grade and Roddy in nursery school, this may be the year that she goes crazy, although she claims that they are lots of fun. Rod enjoys an easier commute now that he has moved his practice to Waketield. Suzy Yates moved from Washington, DC, to Cohasset, MA, and is working as a special events consultant to Brandeis U., planning the inauguration of their new president. She says it's "lots of deadlines, crises, and 100 people who need to confer over the tiniest details." Wallis Wickham has recently divorced and is out in the changed world, reliving college days. She enjoys Boston and her job as guidance counselor in Brookline Public Schools and manages to keep up with lots of SBC-ers. Mary Kyger is currently working as assistant director of the M.I.T. Alumni Fund. She has an 11-year-old son and has been living in Boston for the past nine years. Connie Haskell is over half-way towards her Master's in Educational Media and Technology at B.U. Along with her coursework, she has been working part time at Digital (Computers) in the Educational Services Dept., helping to create computer-based instruction. After a six-week training program, she says that she finally has a handle on the computer and hopes that the job will develop into a full-time position later on. Connie has seen Kim Muller-Thym at Martha's Vineyard and tells of Kim's activities in Baltimore, working at the Jewish Times, teaching, and doing free-lance graphics. Mary Beth Halligan Griffin wrote from White River Junction of a happy year, enjoying Lindsay and Garrett, tutoring in Spanish, and trying to keep in shape with racquetball and Nautilus. She and Vaughan went to Greece, Egypt, and Turkey last spring and loved all the sights.

I continue to enjoy life in Greenville, SC, with Bill and Will (6), Elizabeth (5), and Emily (2). We do Suzuki piano and live at the "Y." I'm enjoying gardening, docent work at the museum, volunteer work at the children's school, service on the Speech, Hearing, and Learning Board, and other community work. I'm presently taking a sign language course at night. Any extra time seems to be spent making lists of things needed to get done. I loved hearing from so many of you. Perhaps next year I'll collate the news with the help of an Apple and printer!

Secretary

Jane E. Piper, 24 Log Cabin Rd., St. Louis, MO 63124

Fund Agents

Janice Renne Kile (Mrs. William L.), 5084 Lakeshore Rd., Port Huron, MI 48060

Patricia Barnett Greenberg (Mrs. Phillip H.), 2109 Fernleaf Lane, Florence, SC 29501

In spite of a very last minute call for news, class members speedily responded with the following information.

EAST: Several reports come from New York and environs. Mary Shaw Halsey now has her own architectural firm with work in the city and down in Virginia.

Bonnie Chronowski Brophy now lives in Summit, NJ, and is still doing Junior League and aerobic dancing. She was in New York to watch a rehearsal of All My Children and also spent a vacation on Nantucket with Donna Crouch Campbell '73 and her family.

Alethea Lee reports she is teaching regular and special education in Ossining and is currently painting her 118th picture. She is also swimming a mile a day to keep in shape.

Helen Travis writes she is Assistant Personnel Manager at Doyle Dane Bernbach Adg. in New York. At the DDB Christmas party she was in a number from A Chorus Line on the Waldorf-Astoria stage. Her traveling included a trip in 1982 to Ixtape, Mexico, a week this past August in Italy with her sister and her family and one week in September in Tucson, AZ.

Mary Lee Birch Weil is busy with her son, but found time to go to the Junior Year in France 50th Reunion at SBC.

Sandy Taylor continues to enjoy Rochester, NY. She was visited by Debbie Hart Eislerle and Dave who are expecting baby #2 soon.

Up in Massachusetts Beth Meyer Costello has a son, Philip Wadsworth, born Oct. 19, 1982. She has retired from stockbroking as he keeps her busy.

Also up in the Springfield area, Dr. Mary Witt is Assistant Professor of Pediatrics at Baystate Medical Center. She will be doing patient care, student and resident teaching, and clinical research. This past summer she had three articles published in medical journals. She saw Edie McRee Whiteman and Mac and Emory Furniss Maxwell while in Washington in May.

Joan Buckley married Robert M. Saunders in Florida in Jan. 1983 and moved to Cambridge, MA. They honeymooned in Greece in May. Joan continues her job with Delta Air Lines.

Marcia Brandenburg Martinson and Terry announce another son, Eric, born Nov. 17, 1982. They were at Andy Francis' wedding on Long Island in May.

Maureen Hynes Binder has a new daughter, Meghan Elizabeth, born July 11, 1983. She is temporarily retired from her press secretary job.

Down in Philadelphia Janita Carder is teaching history at a private school after completing her master's in history and teacher certification from Bryn Mawr College.

Pat Carroll Bankenstein is enjoying motherhood. In addition to continuing renovating their home, Pat is still working as a consultant once a week.

The class extends our deepest sympathy to Penny Lagakos Turak whose father died two months before her marriage to George James Turak on Sept. 19, 1982. She and George have founded the Lagakos-Turak Gallery specializing in 19th and early 20th century paintings in Haverford, PA.

MIDWEST: Sarah Johnston Knowblauch and Michael were up on Cape Cod before returning to the Cleveland area where Sarah taught art and gym at Ruffing Montessori School. On Apr. 28, 1983, she and Michael had a son, Brendan Dowd Knowblauch.

Christine Weiss Pfeil is head instructor of the Offshore Center for the Sailing on Lake Erie up in Cleveland. She is certified as a sailing school instructor by the American Sailing Association and holds a charter boat captain's license from the U.S. Coast Guard.

Betsy Bigger Hellmuth and Ted are moving back to Cleveland. They have a new daughter, Kimberly, born May 14, 1983. In June Jeannie Manning Schmidley, James, and son Max stopped by the Hellmuths' on their way back to San Francisco.

From Columbus, OH, Wendy Cherry reports she married Ted Kern on Sept. 11, 1982. He's an attorney, and Wendy is now a stockbroker for the Ohio Company.

Coleen Dee Butterick and Merle have moved to Wisconsin where they are running three Domino's Pizza stores. She says Sophie Sharp is alive and well at Nags Head.

Meg Sullivan's husband John is the Democratic mayoral candidate in Indianapolis. Mouse continues as office manager for a law firm and is expecting child #1 in November. John is on leave of absence from his law firm during the campaign.

Up in Interlochen, MI, Mitch Dore is teaching metalsmithing to 22 students. She plans to complete her M.F.A. in metalsmithing next year at Cranbrook Art Academy near Detroit and go on to her own studio.

Down in Chicago Karen Fennell Holty and Don expect a baby in October. Don continues as General Manager of the East Bank Club in Chicago while Karen has retired, but continues to write for horse publications.

Laurie Epstein is back at work after suffering through mononucleosis and hepatitis. She has been elected an "Outstanding Young Woman of America" for 1982. She also fitted in a vacation to Hawaii in January between Kilauea's eruptions.

Contrary to popular belief, Jane Piper did not go to England this September. She will go back next year as she is now a council member of the American Museum in Britain. In April she spent a day in Galveston, TX, seeing Sherrie Snead McLeroy and Bill just before Sherrie retired as administrator of Ashton Villa.

Cindy Sorenson Sutherland has gotten very involved in Kansas City with her Claire and Peter and showing "Stoney Point" at "A" Hunter shows. She also built a polo and hunter barn last fall and is enthusiastic about gardening.

WEST: Out in Livingston, MT, Gini Nolte Rude and Dean have set up house. Dean is chief accountant with the Montana Power Company. Gini keeps an eye on her two boys and is venturing into gardening and plans to get involved with the local art center.

Christine Cummings Bass had a boy, Daniel Cummings, on Nov. 23, 1982. She and Wayne have sold ERA Bass Realty, but are keeping the ERA of Alaska franchise.

The Bay Area of San Francisco has several of our busy classmates. BeBe Wheelock Zavell writes she and Stephen were in Europe for several weeks: Southern Germany, Switzerland and Italy. BeBe was also back in D.C. seeing Mary Killorin, Karla Kline, Ceci Kirby, Laurene Sherlock, Sally Clary and Sally Rebenisch Randolph. BeBe is looking for a job, meanwhile freelancing; her current job is for Atari.

Betsy Banks has discovered weaving, but to be on the safe side she is taking a course in accounting at San Francisco State U. She also sings with a group at a neighborhood music center.

Jeannie Manning Schmidley had a son, James Maxwell, on Jan. 27, 1983. She was back at work in August.

Catherine Williams Sullivan, also in San Francisco, is fashion editor/features writer for the Penninsula Times Tribune.

Down in Monterey, Andria Francis is still working at CTB/McGraw-Hill, but has a husband as well as herself to look after now. She was married May 28, 1983, in Huntington, NY, to Fred David Haruda, a neurologist in Monterey and Salinas, CA. Marcia Brandenburg Martinson and Terry attended. There were three receptions, one in Huntington, one in Ellensburg, WA (Fred's home), and one in Monterey.

From Los Angeles Hannah Pillsbury claims she'll never go north again. She did see Jane Maloney in Philadelphia over a weekend and Sue White came out to L.A. to see her. Hannah still plays tennis and hikes and sees Phyllis Becker who is national sales manager for KTTV in Los Angeles. Phyllis had Kirk Coleman Lammerding, John, and Patrick over for dinner. Phyllis' roommates are six cats and one dog in a condo in Hollywood.

Julie Shuer visited Carolann Kroese at her condo in Newport Beach, CA. Carolann is a sales representative for Eastman-Kodak. Julie's practice keeps growing; she now has eight employees. She hopes to spend part of the fall in Italy and Israel.

SOUTHWEST: Las Vegas has a new resident. Randy and Debbie Pelham Bigum have a daughter, Lindsay Pelham, born Feb. 27, 1983. They were back in Illinois in June for Lindsay's christening.

According to Susie Fitzgerald Dahl, she and Ty are very delighted with their daughter Katherine Fitzgerald, born Feb. 28, 1983. Ty is a lawyer with Oklahoma's largest law firm. Susie keeps her hand in with the Junior League, where she sees Cheryl Willis Booth, the library's Literary Program and a school for teen parents where they can complete their high school education.

Barbara Ashton Schiller and Scott keep busy down in Amarillo, TX. They saw Nancy Lea Houghton and Casey in Albuquerque, NM, over July 4th. Later in July Barb and her mother went to Italy for two weeks.

Ann Stuart McKie is now toy and children's accessories buyer for Neiman Marcus. This gives her the chance to see England, Germany, New York, and Japan on her business trips. For pleasure she skis at Jackson Hole, sails, and plays tennis. She al moved into a condo.

Pau Tollingsworth-Thomas writes she had a son, Charles Stephens Thomas, IV, on Aug. 17, 1982, amidst remodeling and renovating their house. She and Steve continue working in Dallas.

Also in Dallas, Susan Stephens Geyer and Mark had a girl, Julia Hunter Geyer, on Dec. 21, 1982. Susan worked with the Junior League's Artreach, a clearing house for unused tickets to cultural, sports, etc., events. These are sent to needy groups around Dallas. This year she is teaching art workshops in the children's wing of the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts as her Jr. League placement.

From Waco, TX, Mary Landon Barkley writes that Bob's practice continues to expand as do her Aerobic Dancercise programs. She will start classes in Dallas, Houston, Taylor, Grandbury and Gatesville in September.

Patty Shannon is now living in Houston.

Mary Ann Reese was married to Dr. Bernard Allan Rosenberg on Nov. 14, 1982. Bern is a psychiatrist in private practice in Houston and Mary Ann continues as editorial assistant for Journal of Clinical Ultrasound at Baylor College of Medicine. Mary Ann is participating in a study on pregnant mothers (she's due Feb. 14, 1984) that monitors growth measurement of normally developing fetuses at various stages of pregnancy.

Meredith Thompson spent Christmas in Vail with her family, attending a reception for Cliff Robertson, the actor. She then returned to Houston for dance rehearsals for the 1983 Junior League Charity Ball. In July she was in France, Switzerland, and Germany.

The class sends our sincerest condolences to Sherrie Snead McLeroy whose father died July 7, 1982. Sherrie was in Dallas in May for the American Booksellers Association Convention where she ran into Mr. Fitts of the Sweet Briar Book Shop.

From Arlington, TX, Leslie Elbert Hill writes she has been busy with her color consulting business and son Justin. Baby #2 is due in mid-December. She plans to see Susan Stephens Geyer more frequently.

SOUTH: Ann Pritchett Van Horn keeps busy in New Orleans. Woodie is in clinical ENT practice there. She was back in Danville, VA, in August seeing family. Marion Van Horn Eagan and Lee have a new daughter Amelie born Aug. 6, 1982. Marion and Lee were in Mexico in May minus the children. In August they were in Florida, and in September they were at Newport for the America's Cup Races.

From Memphis, TN, Ruthie Willingham Lentz writes she is single again and worked in Jackson, MS, in the Governor's Office of Federal-State Programs until Aug, 1983, when she moved to Memphis to work in the Public Finance Dept. of Morgan-Keegan & Co., which is located downtown right on the Mississippi River.

Returned to Lexington, KY, is Mary Combs. She is now finance director for the Republican Party of Kentucky. On the family farm, she is building a pre-fabricated house which she is dubbing "Runner's Roost." Her brother and his bride will reside in the main house, "Runner's Rest."

Pam Reynolds continues as assistant branch manager at the First National Bank of Mobile. She bought a condo and is slowly collecting furniture and "etc.'s" for it.

Cheryl Viar Upchurch keeps busy with her three girls, volunteer work and tennis. Sam is a busy lawyer in Birmingham.

In Atlanta Eli Plowden works as a licensing officer for the vice president of research at Georgia Tech, marketing inventions that are developed under the Georgia Tech Research Program. In June she went to a political bar-b-que with Liz Thomas Camp, Jack and Harry. Eli plays tennis with Andrea Niles '73.

Speaking of Liz Thomas Camp, she says she has the same job, same husband, same child. She went to New York on business and saw Janie Reeb Chadwick at the Atlanta airport, ran into Mary Combs on Madison Ave., and saw Lianne Johnson in the lead of an off-Broadway play. Nancy Lea Houghton, Hoot, and Casey came and visited the Camps during the summer.

Mary Bush reports she has started a media brokerage business with her boss. They put buyers and sellers of radio and TV properties together. Mary is the first female member of the National Association of Media Brokers and may well be the first female independent media broker in the U.S.

Rossie Ray is now a producer (sales) for an insurance firm in Atlanta. She sailed the British Virgin Islands in May and will be president of the Altanta Sweet Briar Club this year.

In Quincy, FL, Mimi Hecker Dyer is a registered nurse, working full time as assistant director of nursing at Gadsden Memorial Hospital. Husband Terry is pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. They have three children, twin girls, 5½, and a boy, 1½.

From Nancy Hardt Winter in Micanopy, FL, comes the news that she has finished her fellowship in Maternal-Fetal Medicine, took her boards, was promoted to Assistant Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the U. of Florida Shands Teaching Hospital, and had a baby girl, all in three weeks! She and Bill have named their daughter Katherine Hardt (born July 15, 1983). Bill is in diabetics research at Shands Division of Pediatric Endocrinology. Nancy's horse Joe is going first level dressage, and they hope he'll be at second level by 1984.

Cathy Bonis Pearson and Michael still love St. Petersburg and the children keep Cathy busy. She also does aerobic dance, teaches Vacation Bible School, is involved in an investment club, and attends school in ticketing and computer work which she plans to use when she goes into travel counseling. Michael is business and industry chairman for United Way of Pinellas County this year. In August Cathy planned to see Drea Peacock and Debbie Hooker Sauer up in South Carolina.

Trish Barnett Greenberg and Phillip were vacationing in Hawaii earlier this year before returning to Florence, SC, to await baby #3, due in mid-August.

The news from Lisa Blakely Martin is that she is department manager in data processing at First Federal Savings and Loan in Greenville, SC. Husband Tony is working in the home building field there when he is not playing all-star baseball.

Wanda Cronin Dess now holds a master's degree in Business Education from the U. of South Carolina. She and Drea Peacock Bender continue as co-chairman of the Sweet Briar Club in Columbia, SC.

VIRGINIA: Lee Wilkerson Warren says it's "business as usual" in South Hill, VA. They plan to start remodeling the house shortly.

From Norfolk Eleanor Magruder Har- ris and Sandy announce a son, Edwin Upham, born Feb. 10, 1983.

Elizabeth Andrews Watts and Bobby visited Jane Hutcherson Frierson and Allen in November of 1982 in England.

Ellen Bass Brady and Chuck have started their own Shaklee business. Chuck is a sales representative for Pitney-Bowes, and Ellen keeps busy with their three boys.

In Richmond Debbie Ryan Cairns reports she and Scott had a girl on Oct. 7, 1982. In February, 1983, she was at the 2nd Annual Sweet Briar-Meta Glass dinner with Elizabeth Nicholson Lewis, Katherine Vuicich Schinasi and Mary Satterfield Worrell. Cindy Craighill was away on assignment for IBM.

Cynthia Hardy McCabe had a daughter, Tiffany Kristen, on Dec. 19, 1981. Cyndi and David transferred to Union Theological Seminary in Richmond last summer. She has a new business "Baby Bandler" which provides monogrammed baby blankets with the baby's name and birthdate, delivered like flowers to new mothers or sent UPS. In August she and David were up at Keuka Lake in New York state for a month.

Julie Cooper continues her job with the Virginia Division of Support Enforcement Programs, supervising the investigative staff for the Lynchburg Region. She now has a Master's of Administration degree in Personnel Management from Lynchburg College School of Business. She still models and travels when time permits.

On March 14, 1983, James Frederick Marion (Fritz) was born to Nancy Blackwell Marion and Dave, and since the age of ten days he has accompanied Nancy to work at The Design Group. After six months he is still only an apprentice.

D.C. AREA: On July 17, 1982, Marilynn Marshall Livingston and Bill had a son, Marshall Downing. Now with two sons, Marilynn says she is too busy to do much else.

Jean Conner married Paul Churchill, and they now live in Arlington. They are due to have a child in October; in the mean time Jean is a social worker with Catholic Charities, working with unmarried parents and adoptions.

Sally Rebenfisch Randolph and John have a daughter, Elizabeth, born Apr. 8, 1982, and are expecting #2 in mid-January 1984. Sally says John is doing well in real estate despite the fluctuating market.

Karin Lawson and Keith Teel have bought a house in Old Town Alexandria. They both enjoy being attorneys in Washington in spite of the long hours involved.

Sheila Conner Kerber and Dave had a girl, Rachel, on Nov. 2, 1982. She reports that Mittie Jordan Harvey had a baby girl, Sarah, on May 11, 1983.

Edie McRee Whiteman is back part time at her job at the Smithsonian. She sees Emory Furniss Maxwell more frequently as Emory and Charles have moved to the Baltimore area where they have a house across the street from the water. Emory was at Sweet Briar for the Junior Year in France Reunion.

Winton Smoot Holladay and Hap have a son and are renovating a house they moved into in July.

Vicki Bates Roy still works with computers for the National Bureau of Standards in Gaithersburg and has attended several seminars in connection with her work — including a ten-day session in Rochester, NY. When she and Daniel are not busy working on their house in Columbia, MD, they have enjoyed sailing with Karen Greer Gay and David and with Emory Furniss Maxwell and Charles. Daniel is excited about an amateur group he belongs to which has successfully launched a satellite.

ABROAD: Claire Sandifer Tuttle writes from Paris that she and Ty had a baby girl, Solange Alienor, on Feb. 3. Clare took a leave of absence from Michelin until August, when they also moved into a larger place in the same area. This year their only vacation was ten days in the Bordeaux area with Claire's family, but in September of last year they visited Italy, including Venice. Solange's grandparents (Her grandmother is Charlotte Davenport Tuttle '41.) stopped to make her acquaintance on their way home from Greece.

Mimi Hill Wilk and Kenneth have moved from Calgary, Alberta, to Regina, Saskatchewan. On Dec. 5, 1982, Kenneth Walter Wilk, Jr. (Beau) was born — Mary Killorin is one of his godmothers. Besides enjoying motherhood, Mimi is in Junior League, Zazzercise, and Newcomers.

I am so delighted at how many of you are already planning to be at our tenth reunion next year. Let's make it another memorable turnout and continue to prove our class motto that "Nothing like us ever was!"

1978

Secretaries

Suzanna Stryker Ullrich (Mrs. Rick), 155 South Chapel St., Newark, DE 19711

Cannie Crysler Shafer (Mrs. Edwin H.), 215 N. Essex Ave., Narberth, PA 19072

Fund Agent

Lu Litton, P.O. Box 74, 110 Berkshire, Greensboro, NC 27402

First off, we should all congratulate ourselves for having a record breaking turnout at our 5th Reunion this past May. We certainly reminded SBC that, although we were gone, we were not to be forgotten! Dew will never be the same!!! Many thanks to our class officers and those that helped make it a success, in spite of the rain.

Secondly, we were all sorry to have missed those of you who couldn't make it, but hope to see all of you at our 10th!

Special thanks to Barbara Behrens and Mari Monahan for compiling the class notes for us to read at Reunion, a lot of which is contained herein, with some update from those who wrote in July.

Now,.....

Leslie Anderson Battle married Michael Ward Battle in April '82, and they have settled in Miami. Mari Monahan, Anne Baldwin Mann, Ann Ramsey Hill, Katie Brown, and sisters Helen Lewis '79 and Hillary Lewis '81 were all bridesmaids. Leslie and Michael spent a fabulous honeymoon in Europe, cruising the Greek Isles and touring Italy and France. After buying a house in Miami recently, the two of them are hard at work fixing the place up for any and all SBC visitors. Leslie has even shocked herself, discovering her new ability as a tile layer!

Edith Baird, when last reported, was busy getting ready for the "First Annual Great Falls Festival," a project co-ordinated by the Great Falls (VA) Historical Society. Edith was also able to fit in a trip to Hawaii.

Since retiring from the work force, Anne Baldwin Mann has enjoyed being at home very much, with most of her time occupied with: moving into a new house, training a Golden Retriever puppy, teaching water skiing, playing on a tennis team and learning how to play golf! This past summer, Anne and sister Janet '79, were attendants in Florence's '81 wedding.

This past summer, Eva Baskowitz resigned from the White House as Deputy Special Ass't. for Intergovernmental Affairs. Shortly thereafter, Eve started a new job with the Dept. of Commerce/International Trade Administration serving as the special ass't. to the Ass't. Secretary for International Economic Policy. She loves D.C. and "obviously, politics," but feels like a "lone Cardinals baseball fan."

Helen Bauer Bruckmann is still enjoying tutoring learning disabled children in Mobile and is learning to play golf. She also has her hands full with a golden retriever puppy on the loose! In June, Helen and husband David were visited by Emily Dick. Helen was also planning to go to Ft. Worth for Lisabeth Lambert's wedding in August and Michelle Tarride's wedding in October.

Carol Baugh is working for Cutters Exchange as an assistant to the V.P., involved with marketing, advertising and public relations. She is also working on a business degree. Carol writes that she is still happily single. She has been working on a lot of fund raising activities, such as Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Nashville. After having knee surgery in July, Carol was already going crazy after one week in an immobilizer, a type of cast, with seven weeks still to go!

Jean Beard Barden and her husband Bob have been busy working on their 200-year-old house in Stamford, CT, with fantastic results! Jean and Bob had a great time seeing Suzanne Stryker Ullrich, Rick and Alex when they all got together for a July 4th celebration, complete with fireworks. As of Sept. 1st, Jean was to be starting on the Asian Territory of Chemical Bank in NYC and was thrilled at the aspect of "having" to go to Japan! Jean also gets to see Marianne Hutton Felch '79 fairly often as they live minutes apart.

Joan Bogert is living in NYC with Barbara Behrens and is currently a paralegal at a small law firm. She still volunteers at the Legal Aid Society in East Harlem and keeps busy running around Manhattan.

Mimi Borst Quillman married Scott in Sept. '81, and they have bought a house in New Orleans. Mimi saw Leith Colton and Ginny Craig in New York over Thanksgiving '82 and had a blast with Meg Richards Wiederseim and husband Bill at Mardi Gras this past spring. Mimi started a new job "using my Anthro," at the Delta Regional Primate Research Center at Tulane in Covington, LA, where they have 2000 monkeys for breeding and research. Mimi and Scott were also both looking forward to their trip to Scotland in October, when Scott, not Mimi, would be doing some grouse hunting. Mimi has also been able to ride a few times a week, but said the weather had been too hot to do much of anything else!

Melanie Bowen Steglich and Lee are in Dallas, TX, where Lee will once again become a "bookworm husband" while in his second year at Baylor College of Dentistry. Melanie says she keeps busy as treasurer of the Dental Wives Club. Melanie also reports that Cathy Patton Brant and Doug had a little girl, Meredith, in May and that Ann Thrash Jones and Bob are living in Athens, GA, where Bob attends UGA Law School, and Ann keeps busy with 2-year-old Christopher. Drusie Hall is also busy with her duties as "aunt" in Nashville!

Patricia Boyce Tuohy and Kevin, Shewsbury, NJ, have a son, Timothy Francis Tuohy. Patricia is a bank teller at First United Bank.

Paula Brown has been enjoying the hectic life in real estate while working on her own condo near Olde Towne Alexandria, VA. This past summer Paula was able to do a lot of sailing with friends and was so psyched that she took some sailing lessons at the nearby Washington Marina. In June, Paula headed south to Suffolk, VA, for Cathy Finley Onder's wedding, caravan style, with Michelle Youree Hostler and her husband Bobby, and Suzanne Stryker Ullrich.

Lee Carollo Plorsich is still teaching chemistry and biology in high school and was to be getting her certificate in microcomputers at U. Cal. Riverside this past summer. Besides being Department Chairman, sponsor of two clubs, and training horses on the side, Lee is busy at home with her and Tom's first child, Robert Spencer, born June 21, 1982.

Claire Cartwright Vaughan married George on Oct. 30, 1982. Libby Freeman Goetz, Nancy Hatch '79, Jane Lauderdale, Ann Yaeger, Debra Littleton Watson, and Katherine "Kit" Newman '76, all attended.

Toni Christian Brown was to be finishing up her Master's in Early Childhood Ed. at Lynchburg College this past summer; then she and Jim are planning a move from Maryland back to Lynchburg at the end of August Toni will be teaching 1st Grade at a private school in Lynchburg while the two of them keep looking for a farm!

Libba Coleman Dorrance was married in Oct. '82 to Frank and is now working for IBM in Raleigh, NC, in new product development.

Suzanne Collins says that her business, Briar Patch Designs, is going great guns and that some of her things were in Talbots January and spring catalogs and Jos. Bank's spring catalog. Now she only keeps her fingers crossed that her luck and intuition for design continue.

Carol Cordell is still in Oklahoma City, where she likes her life in the Mid-west, but really misses her Virginia friends. She resigned her job at Trust Company of Oklahoma. Her evenings are busy with groups such as the Junior League and The Forum, a professional women's networking group. Carol also finds time to go schussing down the slopes at all the big ski resorts in the Rockies. She "shot" Royal Gorge in Colorado on a raft in August.

Cannie Crysler Schafer married Win, Nov. 28, 1981, and both work where they met, at Episcopal Academy in Merion, PA. Cannie is big in sports as a coach of the 7th and 8th grades basketball teams last year and J.V. field hockey this fall and varsity lacrosse this coming spring. This past summer Cannie and Win were both up at Win's family boys' camp, Camp Susquehannoc, in Brackney, PA, where Cannie had 200 boys in the crafts cabin. Cannie also reports on her sister Sophie '81, who is to be married in Williamsburg, VA, some time this fall. She is marrying Clifford Hart whom she met at U.Va. Grad.

School. In Jan. '83, Cannie and win saw Mary Page Stewart and Deb Davison Weidner at a Tams concert in Baltimore.

Debbie Dalton is working as a patent examiner for the federal government in D.C., but since her engagement to Kevin Yeahy last Christmas, she has been busy planning a Sept. 17th wedding. She and Kevin will then be relocating to Hershey, PA, where Kevin will be an intern.

Becky Dane writes that she was so thrilled with the turn out for Reunion. "Many thanks to all that could make it and hope to see those that couldn't at our 10th!" She says that she is going to have some oral surgery done and will have to have her jaw wired shut for 2 months. "If that doesn't beat Dr. Atkins!!! or Cambridge..." Becky is also coordinating accommodations, etc., for ABC News which is sponsoring a symposium with Carter, Nixon, Ford and Reagan. The Four Seasons Hotel will be housing the group and she says that it should all be quite exciting.

Lucy Darby got her master's in marketing research in Dec. '81 and has been working for Burke Marketing Services, Inc., a consulting firm, since Jan. '82. Lucy keeps in touch with Karen Kuhlman Geishe, and saw Barbara Mendelsohn and CeCe Garcia-Tunon at Janet Todd Findly's wedding in June '82. Lucy gets to travel east on occasion and got to see Barbara Behrens and Diane Ball when the three of them got together for drinks and dinner last year at Christmastime. Lucy has also gotten involved with the arts through several local and national organizations. She says that she is also looking for a man who combines both the small and great virtues — likes cooking and cleaning, yet is loving, sensitive and humorous!

Deb Davison Weidner and husband Doug have moved to Baltimore, MD, from Houston, TX, and Deb says that she enjoys being so close to some of her '78 cronies.

For the past two years, Dana Dolten has lived 20 miles outside of Tokyo, Japan, where she was assigned to Naval Air Facility Atsugi as the base administrative officer and a C-12 pilot. She has had the opportunity to see Japan, Korea, Okinawa and the Philippine Islands. In August Dana was due to be transferred back to the States and assigned to Fleet Reconnaissance Squadron Four at NAS, Patuxent River, MD.

Carolyn Ennis is also having an interesting foreign experience. She is working for the International Council of Museums in Cairo, Egypt, where they are building a new "Museum of Egyptian Civilization," renovating the Egyptian Museum, and also building a Museum of Nubia in Aswan. Besides enjoying stimulating colleagues, Carolyn has made friends from all over the world. She has also done much scuba diving in the Red Sea and has been writing short stories and articles (mostly on travel and diving) and also done some photography.

Addy Eshbach works as a paralegal at a law firm in Boston and she rides once in a while.

Laura Lee Farmer Gebhardt "Buster" is working as a loan closer with the Richard Gill Company. On July 18, '82, she had a baby boy, named Trevor Ryan, and will be getting her B.S.B.A. in Business Administration this fall. Laura Lee and her husband were planning to build a new home some time this year.

Cathy Finley Onder was married to Tuna on June 11, after which they moved to Virginia Beach. Cathy is now working in Norfolk, VA, as a paralegal for McGuire, Woods and Battle.

Dori Formato Legg is in NYC pursuing an acting career after having established herself in the Washington area at Ford's Theatre and the Source Theatre. Dori is still married (in her eighth year!) and commutes to McLean, VA, on weekends to see her husband Gene who is "bankrolling" the "Big Apple Venture" in hopes of an early retirement! Dori's most outstanding performance in D.C. was in Jacques Brel Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris, for which she received media raves.

Christina French Pope is an officer in the Marketing Division of the Connecticut Nat'l Bank. She was married to Dave on April 30, '83. After a honeymoon in Hawaii, Chris and Dave moved into their newly built home in Granby, CT.

Muffy Hamilton is still working for the O.S.U. Development Fund. She helps find out which people, corporations and foundations have the giving potential in the financial area. Muffy also completed the Certified Legal Asst. Program at Capital University Law School in December. Muffy also keeps busy as the class agent for her high school with development work for the Ronald McDonald House of Columbus and is also working on her family's genealogy. When last heard from, Muffy was planning a move sometime in August and said she would keep us posted.

As of July 1st, Susie Heitmiller had moved to the State Alcohol Safety Action Program office in Richmond, VA, as a case management specialist. She stayed with Julia Sutherland for the first two weeks in July but then moved into a place of her own in mid July.

Jane Hemenway graduated from law school and for the past year has been working as a criminal investigator with the Superior Court in D.C. "The work is demanding but very interesting. Each client poses a different challenge, and I've learned that trials are won on really small technicalities." Jane says that she has even won a few cases!

Kim Hershey Hatcher's big news is that she and her husband George had a baby girl on July 29, 1982. Kim left her job to spend more time with Mary Anne and says that she couldn't be happier.

Dudie Hiemenz DiLeo is now working at Citicorp in their bulk loan department. Dudie's husband, Tony, is still at Coopers and Lybrand as an attorney and a CPA. They see Ann Key Lucas and her husband Jim, and Dudie keeps in touch with Lisa Nevenschwander Smith. When last heard from, Dudie and Tony were planning a trip out to the Denver area.

Eelen Humphrey Gora had her second little girl, Sarah Cecilia, on May 31st, so she is getting used to juggling a baby and three-year-old Heather all at the same time. Earlier this year, Ee and husband Al moved into a larger house in anticipation of the latest addition. After Elinor Humphrey Comer's wedding to Stewart Comer on June 25th, the two toured California for their honeymoon. El works in the investment department of a locally owned bank monitoring trust portfolios while Stewart is studying biochemistry at U.C. San Diego. The funny thing is that, as Ee reports, their two husbands are best friends from way back when! "One big happy family!"

Betsy Hurley has moved from D.C. to Austin, TX, where she is still working for the Republican Party and was looking forward to the 1984 Republican Nat'l, Convention in Dallas this coming summer. Also in Austin is Mavis Ray Griffith, whom Betsy saw at a shower for Mavis' first baby. In her travels around Texas, Betsy visited with Cathy Patton Bryant in Odessa a few weeks before the arrival of their first, a little girl. Betsy also asks everyone to save pictures from the 5th to share at the 10th!

Anne Jarrell Berry had a great time at her wedding on February 26 to William McDowell Berry III. While living in Newnan, GA, with a Lab puppy, Anne and Will are busy renovating a house, waiting for the arrival of their first child in January.

Kathy Jackson Howe and Root had a baby in February, named him after his father, but decided to nickname him Trey. Kathy says that "life having a young'un is definitely different." She is still selling real estate "but working just as hard juggling time, babysitters, work, husband, dog, cat, etc., etc." Root has three more years to go in his general surgery residency. Kathy also says that she and Root were both very happy to be having Mary Page Stewart and Bob in Winston-Salem. "Jackson" is now SBC Alumnae president in Winston-Salem and was planning an Old Dominion Party.

A. Meredith John transferred from SBC to U. of Tex. at Austin and graduated with a B.S. in chemistry. She then attended Oxford U. from '78-'81 on a Rhodes Scholarship, where she earned a B.A. in Philosophy, Politics and Economics. After spending a lot of time rowing and wandering around Europe, she has now settled down in Princeton, NJ, where she teaches at the Woodrow Wilson School of Public Affairs.

Carey Johnson Fleming married David on June 24 and says that she "has never been this happy." Carey is an asst. trust officer in the Employee Benefits Dept. of the Kanawha Valley Bank. When in D.C. last January, Carey saw Suzanne Stryker Ullrich and her son Alex, Paula Brown, Robbie McBride '79 and Liz Williams while there for Marybeth Lipinski McAdoo's wedding. Since she married David, the two of them have been doing a lot of traveling and met Marybeth and Scott McAdoo in Pinehurst for a weekend.

Robin Jones Eddy is still a village shopkeeper and endures the winters on the Rhode Island Coast. Early in '83 Robin made a rejuvenation trip and saw Suzanne Collins, Susie Heit-miller, Catherine Taylor Moore and Kathy Jackson Howe with her new baby boy.

Nancyellen Keane is in Richmond, where she took her Bar Exam last summer. She and a friend are starting their own real estate investment company, dealing with buying, selling and renovating. She has also been spending her spare time teaching Criminal Law at St. Catherine's School and being a staff director at Camp Merrie Woods, NC, during her summers.

Ann Key Lucas is a merchandising mgr. for Knights Ltd. Catalogue. She is also active in the St. Louis Junior League and is seeking a second undergraduate degree in Accounting. Ann gets to see Peggy Stryker Horne and her baby Trey when they are in town.

After having recently accepted the presidency of the SBC Club of Chicago, Karen Kuhlman Giesche is hoping to motivate all the local idle alums. While still with Elgin Nat'l., Inc., as a corporate internal auditor, Karen and husband Gary were looking forward to an extended vacation in Mexico after a long hectic summer. They were also planning on attending the Old Dominion Day Picnic July 31 with Roger and Anne Stelle Sadler.

Lizabeth Lambert's big news was that she was marrying her high school-college sweetheart, Brian Bowden, on Aug. 20th, and she mentioned that Helen Bauer Bruckmann, Emily Dick, Mary Dorrier, Lisanne Purvis, Michelle Tarride and Audrey Townsend were all planning on being in Ft. Worth for the wedding. After that, Lizabeth and Brian were going to be in Cambridge, MA, while Brian finished up his last year of law school at Harvard.

Jane Lauderdale has left the agency side of advertising to join the client side and is now the media services coordinator for Sunkist Soft Drinks, based in Atlanta, making it easier to keep tabs on lots of SBC friends, and is also an elder at Northwest Presbyterian Church.

Maggie Laurent Gordy has decided to go back to school for a second B.A. in computer sciences. She says that it is a little more lucrative than Italian. In '82, Maggie was able to do an extensive amount of traveling with her husband, Joe — Chicago, Savannah, D.C., and New York. She hears occasionally from Susan Negaard Mendel, Cathy Cleland, Leigh Ramsay, and Betsy Wood.

Karen Lemon Hassett and husband Mark moved to North Carolina, where they live only ten minutes from Karen's sister Carol Lemon Barrett and her family. After having opened a deli restaurant in the area, Karen and Mark were looking forward to buying a house and starting a family.

Lu Litton is an asso. manager for sales promotion for Wrangler Brand, a division of Blue Bell, Inc. Her responsibilities include national sales promotion and individual retailer promotion. Lu is also the past president of the Greensboro SBC Alumnae Club and involved with Admissions. Just before Reunion, Lu was able to get a few SBC-ers together at the beach, including Becky Dane, Cece Garcia-Tunon, Julia Sutherland, Janet Smalley Todd, Ann Maricle and Jeanne Beard Barden.

Catherine Lumsden graduated from the Navy OCS in Newport, RI, on June 3rd and was commissioned as an ensign. She is now stationed in D.C. at the Navy Yard and is thoroughly enjoying her work.

Tricia Mason is still with the Italian Trade Commission in NYC as an asst. director of the Italian Tile Center and lives with Nannette Cooper. Tricia's job takes her all over the U.S. and Italy, but for pleasure she likes to ski in France and raid shoe sales in Italy! Lee Carollo Pforsich reported that she was hoping to see Tricia on July 30 in San Diego and that Tricia is also off to Italy again this fall, this time on a holiday!

Leigh McDonald Forrester married John on Jan. 15 after they met on a tour of the Soviet Union. She is now working at Templeton Tours in Greensboro, NC, as sales manager for the Group Dept. John took his GMAT's this past summer, so now it is wait and see."

Cindy McKay is still at Blue Cross as a marketing analyst while working on an M.A. in Journalism at OSU. When in Philadelphia in August '82, Cindy was able to get together with Louise Wright Schmucki '79, and Robbie McBride '79.

Jeannette Mehl has been teaching art history, music history and dance history at different universities in and around Mexico and also finds time to teach dance at home, and give art lectures at the Museum of Monterrey. On top of that, Jeannette has been married for 3½-plus years!

After having gotten married Oct. 16 '82, to Christian Golterman, Cathy Mellow Golterman and Chris spent their honeymoon in the Bahamas. They are now settled in their condo in St. Louis and Cathy was looking forward to starting a new job this fall teaching first grade at the P.E. Pegnita School, just up the street from where she and Chris live. Chris works at his family's business, the St. Louis Braid Co., but the two of them have found time to travel all summer to Bermuda, Michigan, and Wisconsin. Cathy and Chris are already planning a trip to Scotland and Ireland for next summer.

Barbara Mendelsohn recently gave a small dinner party for Becky Mulvihill McKenna and her husband Ken at her hideaway in the woods (way) outside D.C. Janet Rakoczy Hudson and her husband John and Paula Brown and Cece Garcia-Tunon were also there. Aside from that, Barbara writes that, "Life for me consists of work at Wang Laboratories, visiting Wesley in NYC, playing with my house, and having fun in general."

Mari Monahan last reported that she was off to Nantucket, MA, with "Babo" Barbara Behrens for a week's vacation from the heat of NYC.

Betsy Moore Rice and John are in the Washington area, where she recently earned an M.A. from Gallaudet College (in counseling the hearing-impaired).

Becky Mulvihill McKenna and Ken's greatest news is that Becky is pregnant, due in mid December. They are both "really excited." On the education end — Becky and Ken both finished their Master's in Education (Guidance and Counseling) this past summer and have both already started their Doctorates in Education, concentrating on Marriage and Family Therapy and hoping to someday do co-therapy with engaged and married couples.

Jamie Murray works as a sales administrator for a young and dynamic investment firm. She sees a lot of her boyfriend Jon, a post-grad periodontal student at Harvard. Last winter Jamie was off to Aspen for a vacation.

Rochelle "Robin" Muske changed careers from sales to insurance, where she records and forms management. She was married April 30th to a trial lawyer from Minneapolis named Chuck.

Susan Negaard Mendel finished her Master's in Medical Microbiology and was recently promoted to project engineer at American Converters, in the Research and Development Department. Susan writes that she has read about all the babies that all of her classmates are having or expecting, but doesn't have any plans for her immediate future.

Katherine Nesbit is still living in Southern California and is working for Computer Science Corp. in El Segundo. She's pursuing her B.S. in Computer Sciences at CSU in Dominguez Hills.

Ileka Osinga says that life at Sweet Briar is still the same — never boring. She is still "yoghurting," with a 25% growth each year. Ileka has started work on an M.B.A. through night classes at Lynchburg College and shares a house with Leslie Forbert '79 and their dogs.

As of Aug. 6, Bob and Mary Page Stewart's new address was going to be in Winston-Salem, NC, where Bob would be working on his M.B.A. (Suzanne Collins' little sister lives just two doors away!) Mary said that she would be supporting them "somehow" and already had some interviews lined up.

Liz Perkinson bought a condo in July '82, renovated it, and moved in January. In March, Liz went out to Chicago for Anne Stelle Sadler's wedding to Roger.

Julie Pfautz Bodenstab and husband Mark are enjoying the D.C. area after moving there from Jacksonville, FL, in Dec. '82. With Phillip, born in January, Julie now enjoys being a full time mom and stays busy with Water-baby classes, where she ran into Carrington Brown Wise '76 and her infant son in the same class. Julie and Mark also see a lot of Cindy Whitley and Libby Whitley '75, as they are back door neighbors. After leaving Jacksonville, Mark was stationed at the Pentagon Annex with the Navy, but both he and Julie look forward to his "getting out" in the near future.

Valerie Phillips will graduate with a Master of Arts from Bowling Green State U. in Ohio, after which she will be off to China with a tour group.

Lauren Place Young started with Denby Real Estate on Nantucket, MA, on June 1, absolutely loves it, and is doing quite well. Prior to that she was running her own shop, The Whale's Tale. Lauren is still renting her apartments year round, but finds time to restore an old house that she and husband Chris bought as a joint venture with Chris' parents.

Katherine Powell is at U. Mass in Worcester "medical illustrating" after graduating from Johns Hopkins Medical School with a Master's degree in Medical Illustration in May '81. At the same time, Katherine is keeping her eyes and ears open for any leads for such a job in Cleveland, where John, her "young man" (dubbed so by Annie Stelle Sadler at Reunion), is doing his residency in orthopedic surgery. Until then, Katherine says that she will be in New England and might even learn to ski and ice skate this winter, after admitting that she is "really a beach bum at heart" and misses her summers on the "southern shores of Nags Head, NC."

Lisanne Purvis is now an attorney and an actress in NYC, single, and loving it. Before being admitted to the Bar in May '83, Lisanne was at the U. of Utah in Salt Lake City, where she received her B.F.A. in '78 and her J.D. in '82.

Ellen Quinn, when last reported, was still in Richmond working as a supervisor at a workshop for the mentally retarded. She was also looking forward to finishing up her degree at VCU in May '83, while planning a June '83 wedding to Cleve Jones.

With Paula Brown acting as their realtor, Janet Rakoczy Hudson and husband John closed on their new townhouse in Alexandria, VA, and are slowly getting moved in. The two of them are having lots of fun discussing all that goes into decorating a new place, and Janet complains that only one of their dining room chairs was lost in the move. Before moving to the O.C. area, Janet and John were in Arizona, where Janet kept busy with tennis lessons, jazzercise and aerobic dancing.

Leigh Ramsay completed her Master's in International Business in Phoenix in May '82, then spent that summer in D.C. working for U.S. News. In Sept. '82, Leigh began a new career as an asst. account executive at Grey Advertising in NYC, with her first boss none other than Martha Glover. Having been technically hired for the international division, Leigh was to have been sent abroad after training.

Ann Ramsey Hill married John David on Jan. 16, '82, with Leslie Anderson Battle and Anne Ross '75 as bridesmaids. Anne Baldwin Mann and husband Randall were also at the wedding. Last December Ann and Dave bought a house in Orlando, FL. Ann has been working for a small CPA firm, passed her CPA exam in May, and was due to become fully certified in August.

Katie Renaud is now living on a small island called Petersburg in Alaska and working for a company called Icicle Seafood, Inc. Katie also keeps her hand in teaching and day care and has met a lot of great people.

Meg Richards Wiederseim is married, living in Houston, and working for Getty Oil as a senior oil and gas title analyst/supervisor. Meg is riding again after not having been in a saddle for three years and had been asked to judge a local show. Meg and her husband Bill were in New Orleans visiting Mimi Borst Quillman and Scott during Mardi Gras.

Anne Riordan is working for the Bankruptcy Court and really likes her job, in which she gets to travel two weeks out of every month around the state of Washington.

Maria Rixey Gamper and Dickie moved into a house that they renovated in downtown Baltimore. Maria has been named senior commercial mortgage underwriter at the Baltimore office of Rouse Real Estate Finance, and Dickie is still with Union Trust Bank. They were able to see a lot of Mary Page Stewart and Bob until they headed south for Winston-Salem, but will now get to see Deb Davison Weidner and Doug, since they have moved back to Baltimore.

Nancy Robinson Lindberg is busy getting settled in Rocky Hill, CT, with her husband Mike. Although she is still looking for a job, Nancy is working on a paper for publication which she and her former boss will be presenting at the Neuroscience meetings in Boston in November. Nancy writes that the title is "Vestibular receptor-calyx specializations: A quantitative ultrastructural study in the developing chicken," which she would rather have sub-titled "Does a chicken have ears?" That title was vetoed!

Carrie Ruda Clark and Jack are still living in Leesburg, VA, renovating an old home. Carrie is an officer with the Nat'l Bank of Washington working in the marketing division.

Betsy Ryan writes that she is still in Atlanta working for Robinson-Humphrey Law Express as an Investment Banker. She went to Catherine Taylor Moore's wedding in May where she saw Liz Day, Eve Jackson and Lucy Eubank Peak '77. Betsy was also planning a trip to Italy in October with her sisters Kathleen '74 and Dede '76.

Sallie Sexton McKinney married Robert on Sept. 5, '81, and still works as an asst. manager for Beaky Records.

Anne Simonds Lowe and her husband Rick bought their first home in Garland, TX. She writes that they stay pretty busy between work and involvement in their small Baptist church. Anne is in the research department at Eppler, Guerin and Turner, Investment Bankers, and Rick is a software engineer at E-Systems. Anne is also actively involved as a discussion leader in Bible Study Fellowship during the school year.

Lucy Smith Rogers was married last December to Robert (Bob) Henry Rogers, an engineer with M.W. Kellogg. They now live in Houston.

Debbie Sneed Shrader writes that she and her husband Tom are still enjoying "the quiet life" in Amherst.

Tom is now an attorney with First Colony Life Insurance in Lynchburg, and Debbie is still with the SBC Development Office. They've bought a house and are having lots of fun remodeling.

Dru Springer Oswald, Mobile, AL, has a son, Joseph Harris, born in September, 1983.

Elizabeth Spruill was married to Lawrence Tucker Darby, III, in the SB Chapel Sept. 24, 1983, with Lenore Cox as one of her attendants. Elizabeth is employed by the Lynchburg Division of Social Services, and her husband, who graduated from the U. of Richmond, works for Babcock and Wilcox.

Annie Stelle Sadler and Roger were married on Mar. 5, 1983, and Lu Litton was a bridesmaid. In order to keep up with their hectic work schedules more easily, Annie, with Merrill Lynch, and Roger, a V.P. at Continental Bank, were planning a move to Downtown Chicago in August. They had also been traveling almost every weekend, "looking forward to find that special parcel of land in the country for the weekends." With a bullish market, Annie reports that business is still busy and profitable!

Peggy Stryker Horne says that much as changed since she left SBC after her sophomore year. She graduated from UNC-Chapel Hill with a B.A. in Political Science in 1978. She then went to paralegal school and worked for a law firm in Atlanta, GA, for three years. In August '80, Peggy married Rick Horne of Atlanta. For the past two years she has been managing a women's clothing store, "a nice change from the legal world of three piece suits!" On Mar. 22, '83, Peggy and Rick had a baby boy, Frederick Boykin Horne, III, or "Trey" for short. Peggy still manages the shop three days a week but loves being a mom and spending more time at home.

Julia Sutherland is the asst. to the press secretary of Gov. Chuck Roff's personal staff. She has been in the Governor's office for more than a year now and enjoys the work and the people very much.

Ann Swain Larkum writes in that she and her husband Phil recently celebrated their 6th anniversary and already have three boys — Christopher, 5; Richard, 2½; and Michael, born Mar. 15th of this year. Ann also spent a week at Diocesean Asso. of Christian Educators Conference at Shrinemont, VA, with Fontaine Harris.

After being involved in an accident in the beginning of '83, Becky Talbert has been recuperating in Colorado Springs. Starting Sept. 1, Becky will be continuing her Masters in Community Planning and Development at the U. of Colorado at Denver at night and will be working for a planning research firm full time during the day.

Michelle Tarride was marrying Warren Wayne Frazier in October. Before that, Michelle said that she was still in Houston, TX, loving it, and ran into

Holly Harrison '79, who lived in the apartment above her. "Small world!" In August Michelle was to sing at Liz Lambert's wedding in Ft. Worth. Michelle wrote that it was going to be a busy fall with wedding plans, etc., on top of teaching general music to junior high students at a private school in Houston.

Catherine Taylor Moore was married May 28, '83 to Robert Lee Moore. Bob was finishing up his last year at Babcock School of Business Management at Wake Forest.

Drasi von Wiesenthal writes that Beaverbrook, the thoroughbred racing farm, is doing exceptionally well, selling some very good yearlings at Saratoga, and that her parents are presently racing one of the best three-year-olds in the country — "Au Point." Au Point won the Grade I Dwyer Stakes at Belmont in July.

A note from Michele Wajsbrot indicated that she is working towards her Ph.D. in Eighteenth Century French literature at Indiana U. She expressed appreciation to the Van Treesees for their help in making it possible for her to continue her studies in the U.S. She spoke of Sweet Briar with much fondness and gratitude.

Diane Wiese Volpe was married Sept. 18, '82, to Steve and they spent their honeymoon in Bermuda. Diane's sister, Kim '77, was her matron of honor. Diane is presently working as an interior designer, while setting up house in Miller Place, L.I., NY.

Liz Williams spent '81 in Hawaii being a beach bum and had a great time. She returned to D.C. in Jan. '82 and landed a really interesting job as a ship systems analyst with a heavy contractor — a far cry from archeology! On January 22, '83, Liz saw Katie Brown at the 2nd Annual Inaugural Ball. Liz was also busy planning her sailing vacation in the Virgin Islands.

Betsy Wood writes that her life is finally taking shape after being in limbo for months! She got her M.Ed. in Education of the Hearing Impaired in August and was beginning work on her Ph.D. and teaching at a preschool for hearing impaired kids at U.Va. part time. Betsy was so excited about being able to teach ("jobs are SCARCE") and was also having trouble believing that she was committing herself to "a million more years of school."

Lisa Wray sent in news of her upcoming wedding to George F. Longino, III, due to take place on Aug. 20 in Wilson, NC. The two of them were planning to live in Dallas after a trip to Sea Island and were looking forward to moving into their new house in Highland Park.

Ann Yauger is an Account Executive with American Bell, a new ATT subsidary, selling business and data systems. Ann lives with Francie Root '80, went to Claire Cartwright Vaughan's wedding in Oct. '82 with Jane Lauderdale and Libby Freeman Goetz, saw Hallie Powell Horton, and talks to Susan Gray often.

As for me, I've been getting ready for the arrival of our second child around Oct. 8 [Editor's note: It's another boy, Andrew!], which means Rick has been doing a lot of wallpaper stripping, plastering and spackling. This old house that we bought in Sept. '82 was in need of major renovation! I've been busy keeping Alex, 2 last June, busy and have also been taking a reupholstery class. Marianne Hutton Felch '79 and her husband Bob and daughter Sarah were down for a weekend in March and we get to see them and Jeanne Beard Barden and Bob whenever we go the Connecticut/New York area to see parents.

Rick and I also get to see Julie Pfautz Bodenstab and husband Mark and son Phillip whenever they make it up to the Wilmington, DE, area. In June, I spent a hectic weekend with Paula Brown, when we tried to keep up with Michelle Youree Hostler and Bobby on the way down to Cathy Finley Onder's wedding. Although I get to see Karen Bowers fairly often here in Wilmington, we got to spend a great weekend in Ocean City, NJ, in August. Karen is busy computerizing the car dealership she works for.

A note to all of the members of the Class of '78 that left before graduation — please write in. Everybody would love to know what you all did and are going. Carla, where are you?

Anyway, make it a good year, and Cannie and I hope to hear from all of you next year.

In the Sweet Briar Tradition...

From 1950 to 1971 Anne Gary Pannell Taylor served as president of Sweet Briar College, devoting her efforts to perpetuating the dream of Indiana Fletcher Williams. Sweet Briar was fortunate to have the guidance of Mrs. Taylor. Her many accomplishments remain today as a tribute to her leadership and as examples for others to follow in making their personal commitments to an institution and an ideal in which they believe.

Commitment for Mrs. Taylor has always meant financial support as well as personal effort. Most recently, her generosity favored Sweet Briar's planned giving program with the purchase of a Gift Annuity paying her a lifetime income.

"Sweet Briar has meant a great deal to me and it pleases me to be able to make this gift," says Mrs. Taylor. "As president I was acutely aware of the need for private support, particularly the kind of support that builds endowment. I do hope that others will consider this type of gift to Sweet Briar."

We are honored to add the name of Anne Gary Pannell Taylor, President Emeritus, to the Indiana Fletcher Williams Associates.

Anne Gary Pannell Taylor

The Indiana Fletcher Williams Associates was formed to recognize those who support the College with a bequest or other form of deferred gift. For more information write Walt Kenton, Director of Planned Giving, Sweet Briar, Virginia 24595 or call him at (804) 381-6161.

Education for Peace

I feel a great deal of sympathy with the sentiments expressed in the letter from Helen Weitzmann Bailey, '29, in the Winter issue. Mrs. Bailey expressed appreciation for the vision for peace and international understanding which Miss Martha Lucas brought to Sweet Briar as its president. This was indeed a fortunate influence on Sweet Briar as a counterbalance for all sorts of narrowing influences to which a college such as this is bound to be exposed.

One of Mrs. Bailey's sentences particularly struck me. She wrote: "If all our educators since World War II had taken the lead in developing a sense of moral responsibility in student bodies throughout the country, perhaps the profound and dangerous problems of today might have been avoided." Taken in context with the rest of the letter, Mrs. Bailey seems to be suggesting that greater preparation for peace and understanding among students and educators in the United States would have left us less precariously open to today's wars and threats of wars.

I hope I have misread Mrs. Bailey on this point. No one could possibly dissent from the hope for ever greater dedication to peace and ever greater understanding of the complexities of international life. But it is a matter for concern whenever there is an implication that if Americans will just mind their manners and mend their ways all will be well — an implication, in short that peace and global understanding depend on Americans alone.

We can teach peace and understanding and interdependence here in America from now until doomsday and still not approach any nearer to secure world peace than we are today. The world is full of people who either do not share or do not observe the compassionate values taught by Christianity and other religions. There are rampant philosophies and ideologies which do not share these values. There are many countries in the world which are governed by men and movements practicing quite contrary philosophies — the Soviet Union, Iran, Iraq, Libya, China, Vietnam, Syria and Cuba come readily to mind. There are many leaders, present-day examples of types who have arisen throughout the course of human history to disturb the peace — and here we think of those who rule in the Kremlin, and names like Khomeini, Quaddafi, Castro.

Until educators all over the world hold and pursue the values which Mrs. Bailey and I and millions of Americans share, the world will always be precariously balanced between peace and war. We have constantly to remind ourselves that the surest way to imperil life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, is to fall into the belief that if Americans will just love peace hard enough and work at it hard enough, the peace of the world will be assured. There is a slangy maxim, that "it takes two to tango," and here lies a vital truth we dare not push aside.

"Chips" Pai Corrects

Thank you for the nice article on me in the latest Alumnae Magazine. I would like to correct an impression which is wrong and for which I am responsible, I am sure. The article seems to imply I am still at the Roche Institute collaborating in research with Dr. Michael I. Sherman. I do collaborate still with Dr. Sherman, but am no longer at the Institute as a Visiting Scientist. I was there in that capacity for one year, academic year '78-'79. I do most of my research at Montclair which is only 20 minutes from the Institute.

Dee Long and Lindbergh

In the Fall issue of the Alumnae Magazine Mr. Laukhuff's article reminded me of many things that happened between 1925 and 1929.

On May 22, 1927 as my roommate Paddy (Dorothea Paddock Sigler) and I started to dinner in the Refectory we met Miss M. Dee Long. Miss Long, my English teacher, was the faculty member who lived in Manson next door to us. She greeted us and asked "Wasn't it the most wonderful thing he safely made it?"

Paddy and I had no idea about what she was exclaiming. Since it was near exam time we had been studying harder than usual. So we answered "What happened?"

Miss M. Dee Long answered "If you don't know soon I will flunk you on your exam. This is the most marvelous world shaking event, that we will pay for or rejoice in for years to come."

So, after dinner, Paddy and I hurried to the Library to find that Charles Lindbergh had flown the Atlantic and had landed in Paris, France, in 33 hours on May 21, 1927.

Miss Lucy — A Teacher and Friend

The 1983 Summer Edition of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Magazine brought me real joy when I found the article concerning Miss Lucy Crawford about whom I had intended writing to you for a long time.

Because I graduated with advanced standing in 1924, I regretted that I had not spent four years on such a beautiful campus.

However I am grateful for all that "Miss Lucy" and Sweet Briar meant to me.

Since I was majoring in Latin she thought that I should be studying Greek, but in 1924 Sweet Briar did not offer such a class. The result was that "Miss Lucy" taught me privately without a textbook! In one year I was able to understand the card written in Greek which she sent me from Europe in the summer. That card was one of my greatest treasures!

There is not enough that I can write to express my appreciation of such a marvelous teacher and friend.

"The Whiteman Years"

I surely enjoyed "The Whiteman Years" — a super tribute to two outstanding people.

Perry Laukhuff's "Vintage First Things" was delightful. The articles bring back so many memories. Julia Sadler's "The Walker Connection" was so interesting. What a remarkable family!

Thank you for an excellent Alumnae Magazine!

Many Littles Make a Much

by Caroline Casey McGehee, '49

*But if, Oh Lord, it pleaseth thee to lead me in temptations way, let my temptation be a book....
(Black Cat Press, Purrings)*

For a lover of both books and all things small, collecting miniature books is a fascinating avocation. In it are combined all the best aspects of a hobby: excitement, adventure, new knowledge, new friends, the thrill of the chase, and what Lord David Cecil has called "the pleasure of the eye," as well as the pleasures of touch and even smell.

The two questions I am most frequently asked are, "How many books do you have?" and, "What made you start collecting?" I also am asked, "What is a miniature book?" So in this brief space I shall try to answer these questions.

Caroline Casey McGehee '49 majored in art history at Sweet Briar. She has served as a class fund agent and is currently vice chairman of Friends of the Library. At home in Richmond, VA, she is a member of the board of the Friends of the Richmond Public Library and is serving a second term on the board of Virginia State University.

A miniature book must be a true book in every sense of the word. Not for us collectors the bits of wood covered with paper that satisfy doll house owners. We want books with real print, real illustrations, real covers. It is generally agreed that four inches in height is the absolute maximum that will qualify a book as miniature, and most collectors prefer to keep within three inches. Some purists will not buy a book that is over two and one half inches tall. Personally, I try to keep within the three inch limit and venture over it only when the intent is clearly to be miniature. I consider these books my "folios."

At present my collection comprises almost three thousand titles, about two-thirds of which have been acquired since 1968. Included with the books are miniature newspapers and magazines.

I received my first miniature books as a child, at which time I was interested in collecting all sorts of small things — furniture, tea sets and so forth. As time went on my interest in the books increased, and my manual dexterity lessened. To me it was drudgery to dust and clean tiny objects, and I was forever knocking over what had just been carefully arranged. Then I found a fellow collector in Richmond. She had a number of fine small books and a vast amount of knowledge that she most generously shared with me. After her untimely death several years ago, I was able to acquire most of her collection.

I began to seek out reference material and to learn about the books themselves, where they came from and how and when they were made. I subscribed to several publications for collectors, found dealers who specialize in tiny volumes, and corresponded with publishers. I went to flea markets and antique shows to ferret out books. My collector's eye became more discerning as I compared the fine points of volumes printed from handset type with those printed by offset lithography, with type reduced photographically; as I began to recognize handmade and rag content papers; and as I compared books produced entirely by one person from the text to the paper, printing and binding, with those issued by publishers who bring together the various authors, printers and binders.

My husband, Coleman, and I have been most fortunate over the years to travel to many parts of the world. Everywhere I go I look for miniature books, and the thrill of the search is a large part of the romance and fun of my hobby. I have also had the great pleasure of meeting other collectors around the world and of visiting their homes to see their collections. Friendships made are continued through correspondence, with exchange of ideas, information, and sometimes books themselves. I visit rare book shops and libraries whenever possible to see the treasures they contain. The thrill of handling a tiny medieval illuminated manuscript or an embroidered prayer book incunabular from the cradle of printing before 1501 is something one can do in a shop that would be forbidden in a museum.

How often I think, "If only books could talk and tell us their histories, what tales they could tell!" But, of course, we all know that though books cannot tell us their personal stories, they can teach us many things. I do read my books whenever possible and have learned many fascinating tidbits. Do you know about the great Tungus catastrophe? Have you heard the romantic Scottish ballad of Lord Lovel and his lady fair? Did you know that King Edward VI of England, when eleven years old, wrote a charming Christmas poem on the flyleaf of his prayer book? Have you ever seen a Japanese erotic book with hand etched illustrations and housed in a plexiglass case? Did you know that a whole series of photographic books only two inches tall were issued by the Nazi government during World War II as Hitler propaganda? That during the height of the Italian campaign in 1943 a leather bound three-quarter inch tall volume of Giacomo Leopardi's dialogues was published in Florence? Or that many Europeans in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries carried with them whole libraries in miniature when they travelled? There is hardly a subject under the sun that has not been covered in the literature of miniature books. One may find prayer books, novels, poetry, atlases, dictionaries, children's tales, cookbooks, almanacs, thumb Bibles, and on and on. Dealers often ask me what subjects I am interested in, and I always reply, "All subjects — and the more the merrier!"

The variety in bindings is almost as great as in subjects. Books have been bound in silver, tortoise shell, wood, silk, cork, tapa cloth, tobacco leaves, ivory, vellum, velvet, paper money and mother of pearl, besides the usual paper, cloth and leather. They have been printed in all kinds of type and in a multitude of languages. One of my books is a seventeenth century Book of Psalms engraved in shorthand.

Miniature books have been collected since the earliest days of printing. Among the more famous collectors are the Empress Eugenie, wife of Napoleon III, whose one thousand volumes were lost in the French Commune, the late Queen Mary of England, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Arthur H. Houghton, Jr., retired chairman of Steuben Glass, and Stanley Marcus of Dallas. Today the greatest number of miniature books is being published in Hungary, where limited living quarters make their size especially appealing. Japan produces wonderful books, some of which are true works of art. And here in the United States many new presses have sprung up in recent years that are doing innovative work. The renewed interest in hand work and the urge to produce firm letterpress books are finding expression in a miniature format, whose size both reduces publishing expenses and provides a challenge.

William B. O'Neal, well-known architectural historian, author, Professor Emeritus at the University of Virginia, and collector of master drawings, wrote in the catalogue to an exhibition of his collection:

"Why collect? As yet there is no proper answer to such a question.... The activity itself has had a very long history and seems to have been present in the world almost from the first appearance of man."

He continues, "Michael Ayrton, the English painter, invented a phrase...the 'glutton eye'. In...(a) sense the collector almost always has 'a glutton eye,' that is, an eye which is insatiable..." (And, I might add in the case of a book collector, a glutton's nose and sense of touch.)

Mr. O'Neal adds, "Since gluttony is one of the seven deadly sins — but pleasure is in a kind of limbo, being listed as neither one of the deadly sins nor one of the cardinal virtues — one hopes that the pleasurable and gluttonous aspects of collecting will balance themselves."

Thomas Hoving, former director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, spoke in Richmond on collecting. His advice is simple: "You should collect what you love...what moves you, what excites you, what makes the blood course hot through your veins.... Every acquisition is a love story, a story of passion, that feeling that you can't resist, of greed, treachery, luck and sometimes bitter disappointment," he noted.

"It can also be a detective story, a story of great fortunes and of nervous tension because you never know who else is after the thing you want." He was referring to art, but his words apply to books as well.

Stanley Marcus has written, "It is said that authors who have to eat their words prefer small books," and perhaps that is how miniature books came into being!

Many public libraries have fine collections of miniature books. Among those I have visited are the Library of Congress where the miniatures are shelved right next to Thomas Jefferson's private library; the Free Library in Philadelphia; the Grolier Club and the New York Public Library in New York City; and the Boston Public Library. The Richmond Public Library has some fine little books in its Special Collections Room, and here at Sweet Briar, Librarian John Jaffe has put on display a nice group of miniatures. ■

ALUMNAE TOURS AROUND THE WORLD

Since 1971, the Sweet Briar Alumnae Association has offered a limited number of travel experiences to a wide variety of countries, as a service to alumnae. To date, fifty trips have taken place, including 1,056 people.

Usually, an alumna is asked to serve as official hostess for the Sweet Briar contingent, planning a get-together so that the group can know each other early in the trip. She also serves as a liaison with the travel agency. Of course, professional guides are always provided.

Recently, three members of the Alumnae Office staff have served as hostesses on tours to such diverse areas as Alaska, Russia and Kenya. Here are their reports of traveling, around the world, with Sweet Briar.

NORTH TO ALASKA

by Mary Hughes Blackwell

“Welcome aboard, luv!” This greeting was delivered in a rich Cockney accent as we boarded the Island Princess in Vancouver to begin a four-day cruise up the inside passage to Alaska.

The Island Princess is truly a “Love Boat” — a floating luxury hotel with a varied menu of sumptuous meals three times a day (or four if you count the midnight suppers which were offered to those with the stamina to stay up that late and the capacity to swallow another morsel of food). Just in case we might get hungry between meals the steward kept us supplied with a bowl of fresh fruit in our staterooms.

Every movie I have ever seen of people enjoying a cruise made it seem as if they spent countless hours lounging in deck chairs and reading. It wasn't that way at all. Maybe a few souls who had seen it all too many times passed the time in that relaxed state, but most of us were caught up in the variety of other activities which were offered.

There was much to see: towering mountains covered with snow, an occasional bald eagle, porpoises chasing a school of salmon — someone even spotted a whale. Early risers were offered calisthenics, jogging, aerobics or a leisurely stroll of the decks. There were lectures on glaciers, anthropology of the Alaskan people, on how to play Black Jack or Casino or how to play the Stock Market. There were Bingo games, and slot machines, movies and shuffleboard tournaments, dancing and swimming, and every evening a different variety show.

Aboard, Luv!

On the second day we docked at Ketchikan where we were offered a number of activities, from a walking tour of the town (which didn't take long) to a flight over Mendenhall Glacier.

We put in to Juneau on the third day. The museum there was fascinating and I even stuck my head into the Red Dog Saloon, just to say I had been there, but my head was about all I could manage to get in for the place was wall-to-wall with people at three o'clock in the afternoon.

On the morning of the fourth day we disembarked at Skagway. Following a brief, but comprehensive tour of that area, historically significant as the port of entry and the jumping-off place for the Klondike gold rush, we left by bus ("motor coach" in travelese) for Whitehorse, Yukon Territory. En route we followed the same trail used by the early miners, and we were regaled with stories of that long ago stampede.

The Klondike Hotel in White Horse was clean and comfortable, but perhaps a step down from the luxury to which we had so easily become accustomed. In the coffee shop I had the most delicious meal of crabmeat on toast with melted cheddar cheese that I had found anywhere, and for a reasonable price. Most of us learned that our gourmet meals aboard ship were not absolutely necessary when we were paying for them in hotels on land. Dinners in most of the hotels in the areas where we traveled started at $25, but we found the coffee shops to have interesting menus for much less.

From the window of my room at the Klondike I looked down at a laundramat about a block away. This was a welcome sight and early the next morning I walked over and took care of a week's laundry. Fortunately I did, because the opportunity didn't present itself again and I hate to rinse out little things in the bathroom sink.

We flew from Whitehorse to Fairbanks by vintage DC-10. The takeoff was from a plateau high above the city, which wasn't too much of a challenge. When we ran out of runway we were just naturally air-borne. At first I wasn't sure I would find my usual joy in air-travel, what with the sudden down-drafts and up-surges. After a while we seemed to settle down to fairly steady flying, low enough to see the mountains and rivers, the glaciers and emerald lakes, the tundra and tiaga — thousands upon thousands of acres of land unspoiled by human habitation.

In Fairbanks we stayed at the Travellers' Inn, which would rate four stars in anyone's book. Here we were to have one of the dinners that came with the trip. Shortly after checking in I received a call from the management telling me that our group would have dinner in the Bering Sea at 7:30. That sounded a bit odd to my southern ear and I had to ask for a repeat, which was definitely the Bering Sea. As we soon found out, the dining room was The Bear and Seal!

I found Alaska to be a country of excesses. The state, our largest, has the highest mountains in North America, the most lakes, the greatest distances between here and there, the coldest temperatures, the largest mosquitos, and apparently the greatest appetites. All of the meals which "went with the trip" would have been ample for a lumberjack. The dinner in the "Bering Sea" was no exception. Prime rib, two inches thick, a baked potato the size of a football, and I can't remember what else until the desert arrived. While we had a choice, many of us ordered (what else?) Baked Alaska flambé.

We toured Fairbanks the next morning, including a trip to the boondocks to look at the pipe line, and a stop at the University of Alaska to visit their excellent museum. In the afternoon we went for a four-hour cruise on a stern-wheel riverboat on the Chena river, with a stop-off at an Athabaskan fish camp.

A three-hour train ride the next day took us to Denali National Park. With only time to settle in our rooms at the Denali Lodge, we boarded a bus (definitely not a motor coach) for a 6½ hour tour of the park. If this seems to add up to an excessive number of daylight hours, remember that it was still light in Alaska most of the night, and certainly at 10:30 p.m. we could still spot a couple of moose on the tundra. We saw many caribou, a grizzly bear, Dahl sheep, ptarmigan, ground squirrels, pica, a golden eagle and a raven.

The road began with an asphalt cover, but very soon became a narrow dirt road which wound higher and higher into the mountains, with no guard rails or other impediments to catch a hapless vehicle before it reached the river at the bottom, some four or five thousand feet below. I've seen the same setting in countless cartoons — always good for a laugh until you find yourself in that situation. Mt. McKinley (Denali) was where it should be but, alas, the cloud cover was too thick around it and we missed it. However, Polychrome Mountain, so-named for all its varied hues of rock, made up for it. For that matter, all of the mountains which surrounded us on all sides were awesome.

The following day aboard the train to Anchorage the scenery changed from mountains to rivers to tundra. Going over the trestle across Hurricane Gulch the train had to slow down to five miles an hour because sometimes the wind blows so fiercely through the gulch that a speeding train might be knocked off the rails into the river three hundred feet below.

At the Captain Cook Hotel in Anchorage we again found excellent accommodations, and the view from our room on the fourteenth floor was splendid. At night the lights of the city were a delight.

From Anchorage we flew to Kotzebue (pronounced Kot-see-bew) which is an Eskimo village above the Arctic Circle on the Kotzebue Sound. En route we crossed the Arctic Circle, which made us all eligible for membership in the Arctic Circle Club. Our inn was the grandest establishment in the village and we were quite comfortable, albeit amused by the rules posted on our room doors. Rule #3 decreed "Absolutely no alcoholic beverages allowed." The menu in the dining room included "moose stew" (at $11.00 a bowl) but I passed that up for a bowl of hearty bean soup. Since nearly everything has to be flown or shipped in, food prices are exceedingly expensive.

The village boasts a population of around 3,000, with only about 250 Caucasians. They earn their living by fishing for chum salmon, and I was told that a good fisherman could earn around $30,000 a year. In addition, because of the Native Land Settlement Act of a few years ago, every Inupiat receives money from the U.S. government. Their homes resemble a shanty-town, with no paint, no windows, and the remains of all former appliances, vehicles, tires, and the like, ornamenting their yards. We were told that nothing is thrown away because it represents a large outlay of money. The more junk, the more affluent the owner. There are a few trucks in the village but the chief mode of travel is by outboard motor boats and three-wheel Hondas. It is not at all unusual to see three generations — mother, daughter and granddaughter — riding down the road on one Honda.

We watched the sun set over Kotzebue Sound around 10:30 p.m. but it remained twilight all night long and around 2:30 or 3 a.m. the sun crept back up again. I don't know when the people slept because when I awoke at 2:30 in the morning people were still riding Hondas and bicycles up and down the road.

Before we left Kotzebue we visited their fine museum and were entertained by a group of men and women who demonstrated their native dances. We were invited to join in one "community" dance, which was fun.

Nome was our next stop and we flew there for a visit of less than a day, which was quite enough. Nome was larger than Kotzebue, but the architecture and general decor were definitely "early frontier" with few of the visible luxuries of civilization (such as paint on houses, or paved sidewalks and roads). Here we listened to a long lecture on the history of gold mining in the area, and after watching a demonstration of panning for gold, we were all given the opportunity to try our hand at it (but we had to give back the few specks that we found). Later we strolled along the beach of the Bering Sea, which is only about 150 nautical miles from Siberia. Sadly we found a number of dead walrus which had floated ashore. All had had their tusks and flippers removed, for the first are quite valuable and the latter are a native delicacy. Our guide explained that they had probably been shot by hunters when the sea was frozen over and had escaped back to water where they had died.

We were also treated to a dog-team demonstration (over sand, not snow) by a driver who was quite proud of the fact that he had once completed the Iditerod, a 1,000 mile dog sled race from Anchorage to Nome which takes place every March. He came in 23rd out of 33 who finished and was given a hero's welcome when he returned. This same man fishes for salmon and had salmon drying on racks. He explained that his wife had fileted the fish and hung it up to dry. It is usually dried for about three weeks and is eaten without cooking, just as beef jerky is eaten. Most of the fish is used as a supplementary food for the dogs in the winter, although he usually feeds them Gravy Train dried food.

On our return to Anchorage after the visit to Nome the prolonged daylight enabled us to enjoy the view of the Brooks Range and the Alaskan Range. As we were about to land we had a magnificent view of Denali, over 20,000 feet high and the tallest mountain in North America, flanked by Mt. Foraker and Mt. Hunter which are 17,400 and 14,573, respectively.

We flew back to Seattle two weeks after we first arrived there, and after one last happy hour and dinner and visit with the wonderful people who made up our Sweet Briar group, (there were 17 of us), we scattered to our various destinations the following day. I came home loaded down with books about Alaska which I had hoped to read in the darkening days of winter when most outdoor activities are curtailed. Somehow I haven't quite found the time to indulge in this luxury, but books will last forever, and so will my memories of that fascinating country. ■

ON SAFARI IN KENYA

by Ann Morrison Reams, '42

The trip to Kenya, co-sponsored by Sweet Briar and Randolph-Macon, had two identical sections. I went as hostess with the January group, which had 20 members and Pat Leggett, a Randolph-Macon alumna, was hostess for the June trip with 45 people.

This was truly a trip of a lifetime. We hear and read so much about the animals in Kenya, and indeed they are fabulous. However, the flowers and birds and scenery and people are equally impressive. The journey in our vans from one animal reserve to another was often rough riding, but unbelievably fascinating. The scenery varied tremendously from one area to the next. We saw dusty, dirty, dry farmland and well-cared-for green gardens, mountains, rocky plains, swamps, everything. We watched women walking barefoot along the road carrying heavy loads of firewood. We observed dingy villages with dirty huts, neat slopes with attractive clean huts, smiling faces, good-looking well-made jewelry, graceful and beautiful wood carvings, lovely batiks, colorfully designed fabrics woven by native women, clear blue skies, jagged snow top mountains, rounded hills, everything in contrast.

As in most places, the towns and the countryside have little in common. We visited Nairobi, a very interesting city of almost a million people. Its beautiful airport with breathtaking flowers was our first view of Kenya, and what an impressive and unexpected welcome it was! The city, like the outlying areas, was a study in contrasts. There were well-dressed, well-educated people who spoke perfect English, there were imported cars, T.V. sets and computers, but there were also people in native dress making and selling all kinds of wares in markets and on street corners.

Our most memorable times were on the animal reserves. In these areas where animals are protected, they are seen in their natural environment. The reserves are huge, covering hundreds of acres. Each has a lodge and facilities which are unique and delightful. Visitors are not allowed to roam from their lodge area or get out of vans as animals might attack. Most days were spent on safari, looking for animals and photographing them, which was usually successful as many animals have become accustomed to the vans and are not frightened by them. It was great fun to be the first to spot and identify a particular animal. As the days went by, we continually marveled at the beauty everywhere: the sunsets, the foliage, the sounds, the movement of the animals, the vistas.

A leopard spotted in the Maasai Mora Game Reserve.

Our group was fortunate because the travellers were diverse and had different interests and knowledge. Those of us who were not particularly talented in any area learned much from our well informed friends. We learned to spot wild flowers, plants and birds (one of our group recorded over 250 different species), a few butterflies as well as animals. I even became a pretty good photographer.

We talked with our drivers and others about the future of such a country, where democracy is trying to come into being. This varied country of more than forty tribes, each with its own language, customs and life styles, is full of difficulties which are hard for us to imagine. Many of the tribes mistrust each other, some resist educating their children, some are nomads and will not register or carry passports or identification which is now required. Many don't want to change their life styles or cooperate with those who are forcing them to do so. No money can be taken out of the country, so some Kenyans who have gone elsewhere to be educated hesitate to return because there is little monetary reward. They are desperately needed. However, progress is being made. Yet we felt that there is something intangible which might be getting lost in the progressive world. How they can gain in knowledge, and also retain their special culture, their own values and their own brand of wisdom, is the very real dilemma for the people of Kenya. ■

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE WORLD

by Carolyn C. Bates

Who wants to go to Russia in the winter?

Fifty-four Sweet Briar alumnae, families, and friends did in December of 1982. Some of us with southern blood were glad Russia was having the mildest winter in recent history, but it was still cold enough to justify the warm clothing we had brought.

When we landed in Leningrad, the Russian customs officials seemed most interested in our reading matter. Issues of Time were leafed through page by page, and Hetrick Smith's The Russians was a "no-no" eliciting questioning and confiscation of the offending book.

We knew that we would see in Russia only what Intourist allowed.

Thus we felt fortunate that our tour escort was able to develop a friendly relationship with the two Intourist guides who accompanied us on the entire trip. We were lucky, too, to have guides who were helpful and knowledgeable. As Leningraders, they were enthusiastic about their beautiful city, founded in 1703 (in the midst of a war with Sweden) by Peter the Great as his "window on the West." Called St. Petersburg in honor of Peter's name saint, it became Petrograd during World War I when Germany was the enemy, and in 1924 when Lenin died it was named in his honor.

Everyone wants to see the Hermitage Museum, begun by Catherine the Great and now occupying five buildings, including the Winter Palace which was constructed by Rastrelli under Tsarina Elizabeth, the daughter of Peter the Great. Several of us took a city bus to the Hermitage to get a head start on the group, some of whom were recovering from our New Year's Eve gala (complete with Father Frost and the Snow Maiden, not to mention champagne and vodka!). We were pleased to have more time to admire the marvelous Impressionist collection and other treasures before the New Year's Day crowds arrived. The palace itself was as interesting as the art it contained.

St. Izaak's Cathedral, now a museum, impressed some as grander than St. Peter's in Rome or St. Paul's in London. An excursion to nearby Pushkin gave us a chance to see the Catherine Palace, built by Tsarina Elizabeth in memory of her mother, gutted by the Nazis in World War II, and now largely restored. It surprised us to see such relics of Tsarist times so carefully preserved and restored at such expense.

A war memorial on the edge of town gave our guides a chance to remind us that Leningrad had lost a million of its three million inhabitants during the 900-day siege of World War II, a disaster touching every family and leaving little appetite for war.

An overnight train ride brought us to Moscow. When we were settled in our hotel, not as new as but no less comfortable than our accommodations in Leningrad, we were immediately whisked to the Economic Expositions Park for a troika ride (shades of Dr. Zhivago!) followed by a gala complete with tea or vodka, pastries, caviar, and live entertainment. We also visited the exhibit of youth art and handicrafts.

Of course we were most interested in our visit to Red Square with Lenin's Tomb, greatly overshadowed by St. Basil's Cathedral, that fantastic, colorful structure. Just across the red brick wall, the Kremlin surprised us by containing a number of churches and cathedrals; the snowy air seemed filled with onion-shaped domes. The

St. Basil's Cathedral, incongruous trademark of Red Square, Moscow

Grand Kremlin Palace, large though it was, was not as impressive as Ivan's Bell Tower and the cathedrals which surround it.

We enjoyed an evening at the Moscow Circus and another at the Bolshoi Ballet. The only ideological insight we were offered was a "Round Table" where three English-speaking people answered questions, largely anticipated and prepared for with pat answers. While we had no expectations of learning much about the Russian social fabric, some hints of weaknesses came through unintentionally: problems about food and the quality of consumer goods and the admission of a national inferiority complex, for instance.

Though the most populous and certainly most powerful, Russia is only one of the 15 republics of the U.S.S.R. We visited two others, Georgia and Uzbekistan.

We flew to Tbilisi, capital of Georgia, which has an ancient Christian tradition and an alphabet much older than Russia's. (Don't call a Georgian a Russian!) Houses with wooden balconies reminded us we were near Turkey. Tbilisi, no village at 1,300,000, hugs a curve of the Kura River which is surrounded by mountains. On one side, towering over ruins of a 4th century wall, an enormous aluminum statue of Mother Georgia holds a sword in one hand to meet her enemies and a cup of wine in the other to greet her friends. (We were treated like the latter.) On the other side, halfway up the mountain, stands St. David's Church, a beautiful landmark which is also important in the life of the people. We viewed it from various angles as we traveled up the mountain on a funicular. Our sightseeing included a visit to an outdoor museum of 19th century peasant houses brought together from all over the region; though most of them were of elaborately carved wood, a few from the western mountains were of stone. A more traditional kind of museum contained a treasury of icons, some gold and silver, some set with precious stones, and some painted on wood.

Interior detail of the opulent Winter Palace (part of the Hermitage Museum) in Leningrad

An excursion into the mountains took us to the Church of the Cross, the first Christian church in Georgia, dating from the 5th century and now largely in ruins. Set high on a jutting mountain, it offered a marvelous view of the confluence of two rivers and of the other church we were to visit. This, the Tree of Life, was built in the 11th century over the foundations of a 5th century church. What interested us most was that it was a working church with a service in progress, the first we had seen.

On our last evening in Georgia, we were entertained by a small, but lively, group of folk dancers. I, for one, enjoyed them more than the entertainment that had accompanied our delicious gala dinner the night before — imitation disco with flashing lights and music about ten decibels above ear-splitting.

The food in Georgia was better than that in Russia with more fresh fruits and vegetables and a delicious flat loaf of bread. In this tea-growing region, we had a chance to try a variety of teas too.

Our night flight put us into Tashkent in the middle of the night. (Travel in the U.S.S.R., whether by Aeroflot or train, usually seemed to take place under the cover of darkness. We couldn't decide whether this was to give us more daylight hours for sightseeing or to program the sights we were able to see.) Tashkent, capital of Uzbekistan, the largest of the Central Asian republics, is a transportation center and is in the middle of a cotton-raising region. A fountain in the shape of a cotton boll and street lights decorated with motifs of the cotton bloom and boll attest to the importance of this plant. An earthquake almost leveled the city some ten years ago, and the buildings we were shown were impressively large, but most were what we came to think of as "Soviet modern." Of more interest was the market or bazaar, where the wares had been privately made or grown on the little plot of land allowed for individual use. This bit of capitalism is tolerated because the people need the money and the economy needs the produce.

Bukhara and Samarkand were more exotic, with more reminders that we were in Central Asia and a Moslem land. In Bukhara, along with mosques, we encountered our first madrasahs, those Moslem seminaries with distinctive architecture: towering, flat, highly decorated tile facades with large pointed-arch doorways and an inner court onto which individual cell-like student rooms opened. There was some ceramic tile used in Bukhara but more intricate brickwork, especially in the older mosques and mausoleums. The oldest structure, reputed to be 2,000 years old, was the fortress known as "The Ark," within which can now be found, among other buildings, a museum containing a lash which belonged, so it is said, to Rustum (of Sohrab and Rustum fame) and a summer mosque built as late as 1919. These summer mosques have characteristic wooden columns with geometrically carved and richly painted capitals.

We were surprised to see, in what was unusually cold weather for the

Troika ride in Moscow's Park of Economic Expositions

region, people drinking tea at tables set up in the area defined by the supports of a water tower. It seemed inadequate shelter!

The colorful market in Bukhara had some permanent stalls which were rented, but many people brought their wares and spread them on blankets on the ground. Here we noticed the "tubeteki," the national skull cap, and some very oriental faces.

The Summer Palace, outside of Bukhara, is a wooden structure, painted blue with touches of olive green. Now a museum, it contains, besides exhibits, rooms furnished with rugs and cushions, another decorated with lacy all white carved designs, and others with vibrant colors. Peacocks and other exotic birds stroll in a fenced-off area of the grounds.

A stop on the way back put us near the old covered bazaar, where each trade has its own cupola; the extensive building thus has many small domes surrounding the central dome.

A late night departure by train brought us in the middle of the night to Samarkand, the jewel of Uzbekistan as far as I was concerned. This is Tamerlane country and, along with Bukhara, a stop on the old silk route, though its earlier visitors included an admiring Alexander the Great and the devastating hordes of Genghis Kahn. A stylishly dressed, oriental-looking young woman, whose English was very good, took us first to the high point of the city to see the observatory of Ulug-Beg, a 15th century ruler, grandson of Tamerlane, and learned astronomer. Excavations have uncovered remnants of an enormous sextant with which he calculated the length of the solar year with an error of only 16 seconds.

We also visited the complex of Shakhi-Zinda Mausoleums, a fascinating and beautiful ensemble of turquoise blue tiled domes and intricately patterned tiled facades, which form the burial place of many of the females of the Timurid dynasty, as well as others.

The most impressive sight of Samarkand to me was the Registan Square. Here three madrasahs with their huge tiled facades, minarets, and domes form a great open square. The Great Mosque, which adjoins the Tillya-Kari Madrasah, has been newly restored and gleams inside with gold and color. The last great monument we visited was the Gur-Emir Mausoleum, burial place of Tamerlane (or Timur the Lame) and his descendants. The Timurid graves were opened in 1941, confirming that Timur was indeed lame and that Ulug-Beg met a violent death by beheading. Timur's tomb is of almost black jade.

Samarkand has its bazaar as well, and after a quick tour around it, I sat in the bus and photographed some of the people approaching the market. The facial features reveal a variety of heritages, and the costumes include quilted coats on some of the men and embroidered satin trousers on some of the women. There was no need to remind ourselves that we were eleven time zones from home, twelve for some. Now we know what it is like on the other side of the world!

From Samarkand we flew back to Moscow for half a night's rest before flying on to Copenhagen, still by Aeroflot. Copenhagen felt like home, even to those who had not been there before, and SAS gave us such pampering on the way home that we could forget all the discomforts of Aeroflot and remember all the new and wonderful experiences we had crowded into two weeks. ■

Founder's Day Address
by Robert Shaw
Oct. 9, 1983

Each of us is a Founder

It has occurred to me more than once that the conductor has certain things in common with the preacher, the politician and the professor. Chief among them are a strong sense of caution and a high regard for the quick cover-up — cowardice and camouflage. The preacher has the psalmists and prophets, as well as the anxieties of his congregation, to shore up the authority of his pulpit. The politician can summon the clichés of his writers to drape the temporizing slats of his platform. The professor can fall back upon textbooks, libraries, last year's lectures and, if all else fails, the Socratic method.

The conductor has the inexhaustible bounty of the real creators, as well as the ministrations of instrumentalists and singers who, in fact, make the music, to deck the hall behind him with beauty.

In the very worst sermon, political address, classroom lecture or musical performance, something of value may happen. You can muffle the words of Isaiah, Galileo or Lincoln, but they will not be silenced; and in any major musical score there are so many possibilities for error that no one man can make them all.

But the conductor who takes to the speaking rostrum is a fool, and damned, for he has abandoned the costume and jousting stick which normally enable him to ward off the perceptive mind, and you now behold him face to face (a condition for which musicians demand compensation).

The secretary to the music director of the Atlanta Symphony has evolved over the years an answer to those poor souls witless enough to ask if he might be available to speak before their society. "Mr. Shaw," she says, "only opens his mouth to change his socks."

So look with some charity upon your Founders' Day orator for 1983. Has your selection committee really shown the "good taste and good judgment" by which (or is it at which) you swear?

No man's innocence or ignorance is entirely intentional. I happen to be "fourth-generation" Californian. Among other things, this means that while my forebearers were trying to discover gold 3,000 miles to the west, yours, if they came from this part of the country, already were learning how to print money.

But more importantly, though the Pacific Ocean is practically unrivalled as a pool for swimming, it is about as far as an adolescent WASP should be from the civilizing influences of leagues of Ivy and wreaths of Eglantine.

As a youth there simply was no way for me to imagine the delectations — some of them intellectual — which awaited Western man at the Briar Patch.

Thus, ignorant and innocent — and full of human haste — I erred: an error of some thirty years — lost, alas, and lusterless — ere I encountered a decade ago the fair Sweet Briar Rose that founders Elijah, Indiana and Daisy had planted just for me. There still are a few among you who handsomely tended that flower under the name of Caroline Sauls.

Now, when that youngish lady was contemplating marriage with the conductor of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, the couple called upon her Presbyterian pastor. It was their hope that he would officiate at a ceremony which might be somewhat more ecumenical than canonical, and even, in parts, original, as departing from that which is revealed and therefore unrelenting.

At the end of a few days of deliberation, this good shepherd soberly advised his lambs that he didn't see how, in good conscience, he could do it. And he added, somewhat frostily, that he doubted very much if the music director of the Atlanta Symphony would allow a guest conductor to re-write the Beethoven Eroica simply because he thought he could give it a better ending.

Caroline's mother still is afraid that her older daughter is living in sin, since the only minister willing to risk these rites was a left-ish Unitarian. (I, myself, had suffered a mild case of monotheism in my college years.)

So, I stand before you now as living proof that the quickest and most enduring way to change a Shaker Unitarian into a Presby-Trinitarian is to place in his hands a Sweet Briar Rose. The sainted spirits of my triune are named Caroline, Alex and Thomas, and I worship the ground over which they fly.

If any additional excuse is needed for the gaucherie of this Founders' Day discourse, know that I have just returned from the first eight days of my Junior Year in France. On a plateau in the southwest of that charitable land, Caroline found two piles of rocks that have been there roughly since Joshua "fit de battle" of the Dordogne. As with the "dry bones" of another Biblical hero, Ezekiel, she has now embarked upon their re-articulation — bed, breakfast, septic-tanks and all.

So, I speak to you today with plasterer's throat, plumber's elbow and horses of Charley.

The things which come to mind in these circumstances have been some years in the gathering and, by now, amount almost to a personal litany. They certainly are not apocalyptic, but they're hand-made and, I believe, true; and truth may be a commodity exceptional enough these days to risk its telling.

It does seem to me that in my life-time the political and religious institutions which almost haphazardly through historical time have provided men and women with some sort of healthy and productive reason for being, have somehow managed to compromise their validity as guides and inspiration to what is man's proper relationship to the universe and his neighbor.

We live on a planet that is being fractioned and ravaged, its inhabitants so rootless and bedeviled that they are stock-piling their self-extinction. The Age of Enlightenment has experienced nearly a century of power-failures, among them

Auschwitz and Viet-Nam, Kent State and Memphis, Lebanon, Poland, Afghanistan, El Salvador and the Bronx.

For me, it is becoming increasingly clear that the Arts, and probably in direct ratio as to how liberal — how really free and creative — they are, are today's custodians of those values which most worthily define humanity, which most sensitively divine Divinity, and finally, in fact, may prove to be the only workable Program of Conservation for the human race on this planet.

What do the Arts show themselves to be? What are they trying to tell us of man? How can they help us? I find for myself four answers.

First: Art on the heroic scale is the most pervasive, persistent, powerful affirmation of the life-force in the man-thing. Mysteriously stronger even than sex, it bridges and unites across centuries and oceans. It is a true transubstantiation.

That the "Word became flesh" is familiar Christian doctrine. But what of the reciprocal miracle? The daily possibility of matter becoming Spirit? Paint onto canvas in one century turned into tears six centuries later? Words onto paper today flung into a theatre tomorrow to change a life ten years after? Little spots of ink transfigured into a flood of symphonic sound joining instruments, voices and listeners in an irresistible ritual of common cause. Ally through all time of the evolutionary thrust, the Arts are finally the Flesh become Word.

Second, facing the infinite profusions of matter and sensation, the Arts testify to the human ability to isolate and to identify Nature's myriad phenomena and, finally, to select and relate and to bring order. Out of confusion and chaos, out of the countless and the contrary, emerge in perfect sequence, symmetry and heart-breaking recognizability, a G-minor Symphony, "Swing low, sweet chariot," cathedrals at Chartres and Coventry, King Lear, "This is my letter to the world" and "The Lord is my Shepherd."

Third, the arts provide for the exchange of values otherwise incommunicable by languages of numbers, symbols, alphabets or grunts. A work of art may indeed be a "revelation." The higher consciousness of the creative artists is evidenced not only by the capacity of bringing order out of an experience, but also by the capacity of having that experience.

The reason that our reaction to a Beethoven Eroica, Picasso's Guernica or Wilder's Our Town cannot be adequately described is that art is not superfluous. It exists to convey that which cannot otherwise be conveyed.

And fourth, across boundaries of time, space, chance and malice, the Arts are the open hand of the human heart, and an unwavering assurance of good-will. Separate from Church and State, and unstructured to the point of anarchy, alone — of the great ethical-social-intellectual commitments — they have been substantially free of the excesses and inhumanities which seem eventually to beset all institutions.

Except for very short periods, when they have been subverted by politics or principles not their own, they have been a unifying force in human affairs, have sought understanding and affection rather than half-truth and no-trust. The Arts have instituted no crusades. They have burned neither heretics nor books.

The Arts may indeed be not the luxury of the few, but the last best hope of humanity — to inhabit with joy this planet.

What is it in the Arts that can offer this harbour for man's dignity and survival? I find three decisive elements:

In the first place, it is clear that a commitment to the creative process starts the human animal on an endless, thorny and lonesome road of self-discovery, away from the comforts and compromises of institutions. "Forty days and forty nights" is a Biblical metaphor for what is really a lifetime of wilderness and solitude, but the more deeply one delves into the self, the more knowing and tender is the return to an "other."

In the second place, the Arts are concerned not with the consumption, sale or other exploitation of earth's material wonders — not even with their recycling — but with their reincarnation. They propose not a mounting monopoly of a medium of exchange, but the sweet, quiet exchange of truth and beauty themselves.

In our inch of time, the technological explosions in the means of communication have tyrannized and trampled the essence of communication. "Image-making" and its arsenal of logos, commercials, campaigns and conventions, propagandas and public relations, are elements of control, and therefore of separation and division. Their open intention is to force a predictable response. They are the absolute antithesis of communication, the meaning of which originally was a "coming together:" a sharing, not a submission.

And in the third place, in a time and a society whose values are geared to the biggest, the fastest and mostest, whose gaze is fixed desperately upon the future (as far at least as the next election or life after death or prosperity, whichever should happen to come first) the Arts offer an historical perspective. Their concern is with originality, meaning that which has origins. Thus the Arts lead us to consider and build upon our beginnings, upon essence and upon potential.

Now, if all of this (or even a small part of it) is as true as I think it is, then why is our world so messed up?

Is there, in truth, any less hanky-pank in the American Federation of Musicians than there is in the National Council of Churches, the C.I.O. or the C.I.A.?

Did Picasso's Guernica really inspire the French Army of Resistance, or just provide cocktail yackety-yack for the Museum of Modern Art?

When the opposing trenches in the No Man's Land of World War I sang "Silent Night, Heilige Nacht" on Christmas Eve, how many lungs blistered by mustard gas were instantly healed?

Could Abraham Lincoln have shortened the Civil War by crooning "Tenting Tonight" from the Good-year Blimp?

Are the Arts, then, simply tools of communication, available as well to thief as to saint?

The faith of our country's founders kept generations from sleep at night for fear of missing the "perfectability of mankind."

But the recent sixties and seventies have reminded us that institutions and skills and even men and women themselves are no less capable of inhumanity than of humanity. They have reminded us that the "office" or the "calling" will not invariably ennoble the successful candidate, or make him great. In any of us at any moment, even in those of us who would be happy to know ourselves as artists, the Scales of Virtue may tip towards humanity or inhumanity.

For me it has become abundantly clear that instant and unmeritable salvation in an inexhaustible hereafter is a terrifying evasion of one's responsibility to his time and his heritage, as it is also, I believe, of the Christian ethic.

There was a memorable professor of philosophy in Southern California in the thirties who was president of the Western Philosophical Association (which meant that of the Western Hemisphere) and Hartley Burr Alexander's sentences on "The Honour of God" have become even more telling to me in the intervening years.

"I cannot see God as a burning, all-powerful glory, with evil dissolved before Him, undisturbed and actionless; for life and our own crying hearts belie this. There can be but one understanding of the procession of the stars up from their unguessed abyss, ...of the laboured emergence of earth's habitable forms, and of the affliction-attended discoveries of the fruits of the tree of knowledge. We are in some sense, mounting. But each age is like a stricken field where many are fallen and the waste is heavy; and there is no utter assurance, not even for God himself, that a triumphant quiet will be as an end...

"...Yet can we rest with this assurance: that here within the narrow circles of human days, there is always and uncompromisingly a baser and nobler course, and it is for us to choose the nobler. Only so are we keeping faith... with our own honor.... God can do no less with the truth that is his."

I suspect that in the long run — if there is a long run — even more than religious or political structures, the arts will be seen to be a lodestar of Mankind's evolving humanity.

And, of course, they are vulnerable to subversion.

But, I suspect that their subversion has largely been exercised by those who have learned to manipulate a few of their surface skills rather than by those who have undertaken the relentless and unremitting rigors of their disciplines. And I suspect also that the finest of the Fine Arts, music among them, have too complacently accepted a comfortable elitist and Ivory Tower status. Scarcely believing their own good news, they have not proved to be irresistible missionaries.

For finally, the simple truth is that each of us is an artist, want it or not.

The only question is whether we are artists enough to fulfill our humanity, and to fill full our short mortality.

However we may view Creation, it strikes me as contrary to both reason and faith to argue that it is concluded. (Sweet Briar, of course, is singularly situated in that the moral core of the universe has seen fit to settle so close to it. Has it ever occurred to you that Jesus was lynched by a "moral majority?")

But if, even only in metaphor, humankind was made in the image of the Creator, after that likeness — male and female (not hetero-, homo-, bi-, but BOTH! simultaneously! How's that for equal rights?) — if, indeed, we are creatures of that image, what better place to see Creation at work than in all the likenesses in the world about us, present company included.

If one has a sense of the continuing nature of Creation, "Founders' Day," though it be salutary and even occasionally therapeutic, is very nearly a contradiction in terms, like "Creation Day."

We could parody the old Broadway Music-Hall tune, and sing, in a Ray-Bolgerish sort of way, "Every day is Founders' Day with me..." as with Daisy, Elijah and Indiana... or Caroline, Susan, Jacqueline, Betsy, Judy, Lynn, Claire and Mary.

Each of us is a "founder" — want it or not.

The liberal/creative/conservative arts, like all manifestations of the Spirit, including a sense of responsibility to the day-after-tomorrow, are not easily come by.

You scratch and scramble around intellectual granites; you try to defuse or tether your emotional tantrums; you pray for the day when your intellect and your instinct can co-exist, that the brain need not calcify the heart, nor the heart o'erflood and drown all reason.

But in the struggle lies dignity and a tolerable destiny. (The alternatives to life aren't all that attractive anyway.)

So while we continue to draw this magical breath of life, should we not also concern ourselves with the creative, liberating, conserving arts? For Mankind and Womankind in all their glory are clothed only by such as these.

And without them there soon could be nobody to clothe. ■

Robert Shaw, musical director and conductor of the Atlanta Symphony since 1967, has had a dazzling musical career. After graduating from Pomona College in 1938, he became director of the Fred Waring Glee Clubs for seven years. He founded the Robert Shaw Chorale in 1948 and was its director until 1965. He was founder and conductor of the Collegiate Chorale in New York City (1941-60) and during that period also provided choral direction for the Aquacades (1942-43).

Carmen Jones (1943), the Seven Lively Arts (1944), the Julliard School of Music (1945-48), and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. (1945-48). He was conductor of the San Diego Symphony (1953-57), music director of the Alaska Festival in Anchorage (1956-75), and associate conductor and director of Choruses of the Cleveland Orchestra (1956-67). His wife Caroline Sauls Shaw is a graduate of Sweet Briar, Class of 1958, and often sings with the choral group.

Annual Report of the Vice President and Treasurer

by Peter V. Daniel

College business and fiscal management becomes increasingly complex each year and it is not expected that this trend will change in the future.

In 1982-83 Sweet Briar progressed and ended its fiscal year in a strong and satisfactory posture. In achieving this a great measure of our gratitude goes to the alumnae, parents, and the many friends of the College who contributed generously to the annual giving program.

A very special thanks also goes to those benefactors who have donated to the capital needs of the College. Such generosity has enabled us to commence the long awaited project of converting the Refectory to facilities for the History of Art Department, an archaeology laboratory, an art library, additional faculty offices, and a much needed gallery which will provide security to exhibit and care for Sweet Briar's art collection and for traveling exhibitions.

Gifts to the Endowment Fund amounted to $1,055,000, and the market value of this fund on June 30, 1983, was $26,217,000. Total assets (all on a cost value) were $52,153,000, a very sizable increase of $3,255,000. Most of this increase is centered in the endowment and plant funds.

Operationally, Sweet Briar College continues to operate "in the black"; unfortunately, however, our reliance on student fees is moving upward after many years of experiencing a downward trend; it is hoped that this can be reversed soon.

On these pages I have set forth tables and graphs that illustrate better than words the fiscal strength and position of Sweet Briar College.

G. Noble Gilpin

by Jane C. Belcher
Dorys McConnell Duberg
Professor of Ecology, Emeritus

G. Noble Gilpin, 72, professor of music emeritus at Sweet Briar College, died unexpectedly on December 16 at Westminster-Canterbury House in Lynchburg, Va., where he had lived for the past two years.

Mr. Gilpin, who taught at Sweet Briar from 1946 until his retirement in 1972, was much beloved by both students and colleagues. He received an outstanding teacher award in 1967. He was chairman of the music department for nine years and during much of his career served as chapel organist and director of both Glee Club and Choir. Upon his retirement, former students and colleagues established the G. Noble Gilpin Fund for Support of Music Education at the college.

Mr. Gilpin earned the bachelor's degree in music in 1934 and the masters in music in 1942, both from Syracuse University, and the doctorate in sacred music from Union Theological Seminary in New York in 1959. He also studied choral conducting with Wilhousky at Julliard School in 1947. He taught at Greene-Dreher Community School in Newfoundland, Pa., from 1935 to 1942, before his career was interrupted by four years of service in the U.S. Army, including 20 months of combat duty in Europe.

He is survived by his brother, Harold B. Gilpin, of Sebring, Fla., and two nephews.

A memorial service will be held at Sweet Briar College on Thursday, March 15 at 12:30 p.m.

Gil was the blithe spirit of a Sweet Briar gang of a dozen or so, bound by age, affection and some thirty years' worth of shared Sweet Briar memories. Of all the hilarious tales of the Old Days, Gil's were probably the funniest, and his stock, unlike ours, was spiced by army experiences in WW II. A few of his stories are not inappropriate here, since his having told them on himself revealed not only his delicious sense of the absurd but what he valued and how he saw himself in the scheme of things.

In stature Gil was a little fellow, so little that one wondered how Uncle Sam had accepted him, put him in the infantry, made him part of the force which invaded Italy and Germany, and elevated him to the dizzying height of corporal before finally discharging him.

Once, on a troop train from Germany to Marseilles, he was the only soldier to rest comfortably — he could sleep on the luggage rack, while his buddies stood, waiting their turns at seats. Or how about the time at Fort Meade when, on KP duty, he fell into the huge dough-mixing vat full of water and flotsam. Always resourceful, he maneuvered the long-handled scrubbing brush across the top of the vat and chinned himself up and out. When Martha (von Briesen) once chided him for not reading the bulletin board he said, "How do you expect me to see up that high?"

On his army papers music appeared as his chief civilian interest, so it was not surprising that an officer at Fort Ord asked if he could play the bugle. He said no, but agreed to try, and practiced each day in a culvert, where the sound would be muffled. His skill satisfied him when he was able to play the first five or six notes of each of the day's ritual exercises, for the five other buglers, spotted in different sections of the camp, drowned him out, making further efforts unnecessary. In the early days of the German occupation Gil's general, finding himself quartered in Goering's Hunting Lodge, complete with kitchen staff, decided to throw a dinner party. An aide ordered Our Hero to provide dinner music on the piano, but warned him not to play too loud, as the general liked to talk. Needless to say, Gil did not have his foot locker stuffed with sheet music but figured he could bat out "Rustle of Spring" and other classics of its ilk.

Speaking of music, during a choir rehearsal in Manson there was a disturbance in the rear of the Chapel and Gil, peering into the darkness and making like a general, called out that visitors were not allowed during rehearsals. A man's voice responded, "Oh, come off it, George." The intruder turned out to be one of Gil's GI buddies. During a dress rehearsal for a concert the choir girls expressed dismay over the news that parties at UVA and W&L would mean there would be no audience at the big event. Gil's reaction was, "Forget it! An opportunity to sing Brahms is reward enough for anyone."

During the occupation of Germany Gil's platoon was ordered to round up a German general said to be holed up in a nearby farmhouse. They found the man, decked out in a green uniform, and Gil, the only man who could speak German, reported he was a forester, not a general. Even so, the platoon took him back to the colonel and the latter ordered Gil to drive him to HQ. The only way Gil could manage to single-handedly was to perch the forester on the front of the Jeep; he drove with his carbine balanced on his left arm, attempting to peer around the body of the old man as he zig-zagged through forests and fields, trying to avoid buried mines on the roads. The man turned out to be a forester, a much confused forester.

And then there was the time, back in USA prior to discharge, when Gil's task was to teach illiterate inductees how to read. Since goldbricking was routine in all army activities, his first job was to root out the literates seeking easy assignments. He walked into the room and straight to the blackboard where he proceeded to write a series of four-letter words. He then dismissed all those who laughed.

The stories could go on and on, and will whenever two or more of his old friends get together. We had all hoped he would outlive us so that he could "see us through." We had been witness, you see, to the care he took of Helen Mull, Pash (Miss Reynolds), his father and stepmother, Mimsie (Miss Weaver), Zeke (Mr. Zechie) and Ruth Howland. We figured that under his direction we could make the Great Transition with grace, humility and humor. ■

A scholarship fund has been established by the Alumnae Association in honor of Harold B. Whiteman, Jr., former president of Sweet Briar, in appreciation of his service to the College. The initial $10,000 for this gift came from the accumulated earnings of the Alumnae Office's share of the bulb project.

Mr. Whiteman was asked to determine how the funds should be designated. His response was as follows: "I have been engaged in a series of conversations with respect to the most useful use for the income from the new scholarship fund established by the Alumnae Association in my name. Needless to say, I am so honored by this award that I want to make sure it is put to a distinguished purpose!

"My first instinct was to apply it to a student who had an interest in 'history or a closely related subject.' Investigation, however, shows that the history area seems a bit crowded. There is a scholarship fund in Beth Muncy's name; a second one in the name of Carol Y. McMurty Fowler, which has not started producing income since the donor seeks to reach the $15,000 level in corpus before starting to use it; and finally the History Award in the name of Anne Pannell Taylor, to say nothing of the possibility of expanding that into a fellowship if the recipient is going on to graduate studies. I wonder if it would make more sense in the light of this sizable feast, to make the Whiteman Fund income applicable for the support of a junior or a senior who both has need and shows merit in any aspect of international studies. It would seem to me that this would provide a broad enough base so that there would always be qualifying candidates."

Books... Books... Books...

BACH TO ROCK!, By Rosemary Gugert Kennedy '48, The Rosemary Corp., P.O. Box 15572, New Orleans, LA.

A music appreciation book designed for children in grades three and up, illustrated by Mary Sue Roniger. Included are anecdotes about the great composers, activities and questions, suggested listenings, descriptions of music instruments as well as definitions of "scat," "Tin Pan Alley," rockabilly and psychedelic rock.

TYLERS AND GARDINERS ON THE VILLAGE GREEN, WILLIAMSBURG, VIRGINIA, AND EAST HAMPTON, LONG ISLAND, By Nancy Wilson Mann '32, Vantage Press, New York, NY.

A history of the two prominent families first joined by the marriage of President John Tyler of Virginia to the Long Island belle, Julia Gardiner of East Hampton. The author is a descendant of both families.

TWELVE SECONDS TO THE MOON — A STORY OF THE WRIGHT BROTHERS, By Catharine Fitzgerald Booker '47 and Rosamond Young, C.J. Krehbiel Co., Cincinnati, OH.

An account of the Wright brothers, their family and their work in aviation, based on extensive research and including numerous photographs and drawings. The 200-page book features the historical record as well as personal anecdotes.

LESSONS FOR A FOURTH GRADE CLASS, By Mary Molyneux Abrams '83, Toothpaste Press, West Branch, Iowa.

A curriculum of 10 poems, written by the author when she was a Sweet Briar senior, mother of a five-year-old son, a Sweet Briar Scholar and wife of photographer Dave Abrams.

LEAF RAKER, a collection of poems, including ten works by Sally Hubbard McCrady '65, Brown Rabbit Press.

Ten poems including "Dawn Watch," "Story Rock, Colorado," "At Chichen Itza," and "Home for the Wedding," along with the works of 12 other women poets.

ONE DOES NOT SPELL MOZART WITH A T, By John Shannon, Professor of Music, Hinshaw Music, Inc., Chapel Hill NC.

A satiric history of music, illustrated by Frank Rocca. Much of the humor is drawn from student blunders, but Mr. Shannon says "a lot of the history is literally funny...many composers led colorful lives, to say the least."

A TIME TO LAUGH—VERSE, 1933-1983, By Roma E. Eves '21, Sequoia Press, Berkeley, CA.

An anthology of light-hearted poetry spanning the poet's life as a young girl, a career woman, a wife and mother and grandmother. Titles include: "Unmentionable," "She Snores by the Seashore," "Confucious Say" (If lovely lady/Stoop to folly/She going to be/So velly solly).

Planned Giving News

Walter S. Kenton, Jr., Director of Planned Giving at Sweet Briar for the past four years, has been appointed Director of Development for Emory University's School of Business Administration, as of February 1. Sweet Briar's Planned Giving Program will continue under the management of F. Mark Whittaker, Director of Development.

Mr. Whittaker, a graduate of the University of Maine at Orono, has been Director of Development since 1978. He has been a member of the Development staff of the College since 1971, except for one year as Associate Director of Development at the University of Massachusetts in 1973-74. He is a Certified Fund Raising Executive (CFRE) with fourteen years of professional fund raising experience.

Anne Schutte Nolt (Mrs. Leroy H.), 1301 Homestead Lane, Lancaster, PA 17603

Anne Schutte Nolt writes that she and Frances Pennypacker are the last graduates in the class. Frances reports the death of her sister Mary Pennypacker Davis '16 in August after a long illness. A beautiful memorial service was held in the Church of the Advent, Kennett Square, PA, in September, and two of her sons, back from Maine and Italy, attended. Frances, who no longer drives, finds Kendal at Longwood a wonderful place to live.

Anna Wills Reed, Harrisburg, PA, misses her sister Ruth, who died in June, and her older son, who died last October, but she keeps busy welcoming great-grandchildren.

Rosalia Feder Sarbey wrote on her 91st birthday to say that her whole family was working for the nuclear freeze. "Cricket" herself participates: "I am at our cottage on lake Erie making groups of people welcome to come, swim, and express their artistic talents on the walls, which can hardly breathe because of lack of space for one more talent." In October she moves to Key West to be there until May. Her grandchildren are scattered in Europe.

Word has been received of the death of Maria Neville Brown, who was born in Mississippi, but who had been a leader in church, social, and cultural activities in Waco, TX, for many years.

1919

Nell Eikelman Haní still lives in the same house in San Bernadino, CA, where she lived for 50 years. She still drives her car, attends Woman's Club and Republican Club, has luncheon with her friends, and takes a walk every morning at 6:00. For safety reasons she no longer goes out at night. Reading is her chief indoor pleasure. She says she lives in a jungle of trees and shrubs, including camellias and jasmine, but she has not been able to grow the dogwood she loved at Sweet Briar.

Isabel Luke Witt, Richmond, is still on the go. Last year she went to China with her daughter Isabella. This year they, plus her son and grandson (Jack and Jeremy), went to Florida to Disney World.

1923

Fund Agent

Helen McMahon, Box BB, Sweet Briar, VA 24595

Muriel MacKenzie Kelly reports a quiet year with no big celebrations. She has one new great-grandchild, Mark Andrew Wagner, in Silver Spring, MD. A young Japanese girl, whom she met on a visit to Japan in 1980, spent a month between terms of her college with Muriel and family. They spent three weeks of the month in Upper Michigan with Muriel's son Mack, Ruth, and Muriel's sister Dode from New Orleans. They were thrilled to see bear, beaver, ducks, geese and deer.

Jane Lee Best enjoyed the 50th Reunion so much that she was sorry to miss the 60th. She has five grandchildren, of whom the oldest grandson is a periodontist in Kinston, NC. Daughter Jane Best Wehland's ('57) son graduated from UVA in May, and her daughter is a sophomore there.

Jane Guignard Curry claims she has nothing of interest to report, but she had a wonderful trip to the Canadian Rockies and British Columbia with her elder son in July and in October made her fourth (and, she says, last) visit to Australia. In September her family gave her a grand celebration in Atlanta of her 80th birthday. Since her vision is poor, she has had to give up her driver's license, but she feels she has much to be thankful for.

Emma Mai Crockett Owen continues to be active in Jackson, TN. A member of the Jackson chapter of the Association for Preservation of Tennessee Antiquities, she has served as president three times. She is a member of Youth Town Auxiliary and a trustee of the Jackson-Madison County Library. She also does book reviews for the Jackson Sun.

Fitzallen Kendall Fearing's granddaughter was to be married in California in February to a classmate from Dartmouth and will live in Pound Ridge, NY. Fitzallen says that Martha Newton Groover's granddaughter was married in Orlando, FL, in October. Fitzallen, who lives in Macon, GA, sees Beth Hall Hatcher, Fort Valley, CA, often, and they reminisce about SBC.

Another Georgian, Margaret Wise O'Neal, Macon, went on the Sweet Briar Adriatic Cruise on the Argonaut, along with her daughter and son-in-law, and reports a delightful trip.

Marie Klooz, Sandy Springs, MD, has cut back her twice weekly swimming to a quarter mile and now seldom walks more than two miles at a time. However, she continues a weekly study group on miracles, serves on Quaker committees, and participates in civic and political affairs, as well as Senior Citizens. Friends read to her at least four hours a week, but she misses doing her own reading. She still welcomes newcomers and enjoys an active social life.

Katharine Weiser Ekelund, Pontiac, MI, is still enjoying traveling — to Austria; through the Panama Canal on a cruise that included San Blas Islands, Colombia, and Puerto Rico; and by ship through the Orinoco River with a flight over Angel Falls. She was also expecting to spend a week in October at Hilton Head. In September she was chairman of the Pontiac Hospital Tea for 400 members. Katharine also participates in Altar Guild and Symphony Association. She has nine grandchildren, including four married grandsons, and one great-granddaughter.

Mildred (Kitty) Wilson Garnett (Mrs. Theodore S.), 1411 Claremont Ave., Norfolk, VA 23507

Fund Agent

Jeanette Boone, P.O. Box BB, Sweet Briar, VA 24595

The consensus seems to indicate no reunion in 1984. Only Alice Eskesen Ganzel replied in the affirmative. In her response she reminisced about "the biggest single influence" in her life — Dr. Joseph Folsom — "a brilliant lar-seeing teacher," and wondered where he had gone after Sweet Briar and Vassar, and "if anybody else felt the same about him." I just phoned Tinka Johnson Brehme and she was experimenting with her new microwave oven, having heated up something frozen for lunch in one minute. Her remark on the card begging for news was, "As of right now I could get to any airport, ship, or train but who knows about 1984?"

George Orwell?"

Virginia Davies Nettles' lawyer responded for her. I think she would enjoy receiving cards from all of us. Her address is Lakewood Manor, 1900 Lauderdale Road, Richmond, Virginia, 23233.

Marian Thayer, who was with us as a freshman, has taught many years including years in Japan and Peru. If she would tell us of her experiences there, I'll pass them on to you. In these turbulent years we need to hear from Americans who have lived out of the States. They can help us form intelligent, not shotgun, opinions.

Jerry Reynolds Driesbach is on the road again, arthritic knees and all, to visit Jerry Driesbach Ludeke '54 in California and then revisit Tahiti, New Zealand, Fiji, Australia, and Hawaii. She will spend Christmas in Charlottesville with Georgia Driesbach Kegley '51. Yes, Jerry, The Greenbrier Hotel and Camp Greenbrier are in the same county — we wish we had known you were so close.

Libbo Mathews Wallace and Harry have just celebrated their 53rd with their children and their legion of offspring and grandchildren. One of the latter is at Princeton and two are at St. Andrews Prep School. Martha Ambrose Nunnally writes that their oldest granddaughter, who is a law student at Harvard Law School, married a third-year law student there recently. Martha's husband had an article published in Outdoor Life in October.

Kelly Vizard Kelly is a winter resident in Naples, FL, and a summer resident of New London, NH — sounds like The and me. Only difference is that she is planning to sell her house. Not us! Our home in Norfolk is near the Eastern Virginia Medical School which may come in handy sometime. We surely aren't young, are we?

Bass Boynton Rawlings, with whom I hiked many a mile to Bus Rhea's, has three college granddaughters, a daughter in California, and a son living in Paris. Fortunately she has one daughter at home. In September Frankie Sample Holmlund had a narrow escape in an automobile accident on the New York Throughway. Both she and her husband were battered and are still recovering. The Holmlunds spend their winters in Green Valley, AZ.

Gretchen Orr Hill's granddaughter Nina Pastuhov '83 is repeating 1927's Hegira to Boston to Katie Gibbs.

Elizabeth Brady Lockwood, Bethesda, MD, has completed a ten-year project of editing (with Leonard Elinwood) the Bibliography of American Hymnals, a microfiche publication listing and giving concise information about virtually all American (North, South and Central) hymnals in languages using the Roman alphabet from 1640 to 1978.

Helen Smyser Talbott and Don have moved into a new home on one level with more modern conveniences in South Dennis, MA. In exchanging the Sound for the woods, they also hope to see more birds, as the strong winds made many varieties keep away from the shore.

Elise Morley Fink says that a Sweet Briar club is finally being organized in Grosse Point. Life goes on in the same old rut, as she tells it, but knowing Elise I doubt that. She was a clumsy gal at our 50th with neither crutches nor arthritic hands. Marian Chaffee loves Clearwater where she retired a few years back. She has family members nearby.

Last spring Emily Jones Hodge attended her 60th high school reunion in West Virginia. She and Hanson have three generations near them in Wilmington, DE. Emily and I have weird scrambled family connections. Our daughter-in-law and Em's brother-in-law are married to members of one family not related. It reminds me of our wonderful old camp chef who used to sing, "I'm my own grandpa!" Emilie Halsell Marston and I found that we were neighbors on the Eastern Shore last winter. She visits with Susan Fitchett '24 and Mary Sturgis '25 and also Margaret Powell Oldham. I have seen them, too. I wish everyone could see our solar home on the Shore in Belle Haven, VA. With it we can't fight Ma Bell but we can really laugh at the oil firms that bleed us keeping the Norfolk house from having frozen pipes. I talked today with Camilla Alsop Hyde. She was at Charlotte Kent Pinkney '31 and her husband Tom's 50th. We had seen the Pinkneys recently at Alumnae Council. You should have seen the reunion of Tom and my husband in Prothro Commons for the first time since 1924. They had been at the Episcopal High School in Alexandria together. Camilla sees Lib Wood McMullan and just had dinner with Sarah von Shilling Stanley.

I called our first leader Nar Warren Taylor in Memphis, too. She had a broken hip as the result of an automobile accident this summer and is recovering nicely. She sees Lucy Orgill Genette at her luncheon group regularly and Yenti Slater Shelby often.

When at the Alumnae Council in October only one cute old girl from '21 was older than I. She is a pistol and a charmer. Founders Day was a splendid time to visit. I met the fine new President Fry and saw again

Fountaine Maury Belford, the comparatively new dean. What a pair — you will be pleased when you meet them. I could not remain for President Fry's installation on Saturday as we were closing up Camp Greenbrier in two or three days, and so I missed the great occasion. We visited the International House, the first house on the left as you go down Faculty Row. Our granddaughter Garland Harvie '85 lives in it, and there are twenty-one girls from Lebanon, Germany, South America, England — all over the world. I had to pry The out to go to meals and could not blame him as that is one grand group of students.

Dan Boone is the piece de resistance. She and Helen McMahan '23 have a charming home on Woodland Road, off Elijah's (Bus Rhea's) road. Dan arrived from the Animal Shelter where she apparently volunteers. Now she still denies climbing down the front of Grammar with Bebe Gilchrist Barnes one Sunday morning when they were locked in by some joker. Am I the only one who remembers it? If not, please write Dan that you saw the deed.

Have a healthy year, keep walking, moving — push!! You will never regret it. See you at our 60th, God willing.

Elizabeth MacRae Goddard (Mrs. Stephen J.), 4115 Kendall St., San Diego, CA 92109

Fund Agent

Charlotte Kent Pinckney (Mrs. Thomas), 51 Westham Green, Richmond, VA 23229

Natalie Roberts Foster loves her "new eyes" after her second intraocular lens transplant! She and Polly Swift Calhoun were coordinating in bringing a Vietnamese child to a couple who in 1975 were "her" (Nat's) refugees and now live in Polly's area. Polly finds hospice work demanding but so rewarding; at long last her book about town government in a small New England town is to be published and used as part of a regular U.S. history course. Martha von Briesen spent some time in the Mary Helen Cochran Library at SBC translating a German brochure about an old hotel in Dresden which for a few years in the 18th century belonged to some of her forebears.

Whit Pearsall Smith reports a 50th wedding anniversary and that their one and only granddaughter plans to be married in March. Charlotte Kent Pinckney announced a new grandbaby (making nine) and that our annual giving for '83 was just $59 short of what it was in '82. Perry Whittaker Scott and Bob's oldest granddaughter graduated with honors from high school and plans to study to be a veterinarian; their daughter plans to try for the police department. Elise Jester Meadows has one grandson at Princeton Theological Seminary and one at Vassar; a granddaughter who is a graduate of Angelo State U. and two others in college. Martha McCowen Burnet and her husband have moved after 40 years into one-third of an old mansion and love it. Their 20-yr.-old daughter is a Morehead scholar at Chapel Hill and made Phi Beta Kappa in her junior year. Their 8th grandchild Alex has recently had a baby ("our baby has a baby!"). Martha McBroom Shipman's twin granddaughters have graduated from college and are looking for jobs; her son is a stockbroker and his wife heads up a travel bureau.

Jean Cole Anderson had fun taking granddaughter Jennifer (17) on the SBC tour to Alaska, a miniature reunion with some of the class of '30. Her grandson Johnny was voted all-around fine member of his senior class and has entered Princeton.

Trudy Lewis Magavern reports that she and Quinnie Quintard Bond both made great recoveries from hip replacements, soon playing golf and tennis! Trudy and her husband took all their children and spouses on a rafting trip down the middle fork of the Salmon River in Idaho in August; there are 17 grandchildren. Quinnie still does volunteer work, mostly for the Boston Symphony.

Ginny Cooke Rea and Fritz had a wonderful bus trip in Ireland and the British Isles — "a return to the country of their roots." Ellen Eskridge Sanders and Walter enjoyed a trip to England, Scotland and Wales. Agnes Cleveland Stackhouse and her husband chose a trip to Australia with a group of Brooklyn Botanical Garden members to see the flora and fauna. Jean Ploehn Wernentin and Leon were about to leave for Japan and a 14-day cruise on the Royal Viking Star along the coast of China with stops in Japan and Hong Kong. She still has her needlepoint shop. Helen Sim Mellen has a new daughter-in-law and a 9-yr.-old step-grandson. She and Harold had had a fine trip to Switzerland in April and to Bermuda in May.

A phone call from Evelyn Mullen was a nice surprise! She was planning to attend the inauguration of President Fry and had been asked to be president of the Friends of the Library at Sweet Briar. She is already area chairman of the Museum of Art Library in Raleigh and was to be chairman of the Book Sale at her church's bazaar! Gillette Hilton Pritchard, one of my nearest SBC neighbors, wrote of a constant flow of house guests that kept her busy through the summer. "As for my sister Margaret MacRae Jackson '37 and me, we had a delightful visit in England and Wales in May with friends and in-laws."

Mary Frances Riheldaffer Kuhn went to Greece in June, following the footsteps of St. Paul, with a group from her church. Next summer they will visit cathedrals in England. Mary Frances has just returned from a month's visit to Mystic, CT, and her newest grandson, Thomas Schuyler Schlichter, whose father is commander in charge of the construction of a new nuclear submarine in New London. That makes 10 grandchildren.

Elizabeth Ambler Stribling Bell also announces (from Pasadena) the arrival in November of her tenth grandchild, James Marshall Bell.

Dorothy Ayres Holt keeps busy with all the usual: church, hospital, politics, and Antiquarian Society. Her son and his family live near; her grandson is at the U. of Rochester, and her granddaughter, at Smith. She keeps in close touch with Eda Bainbridge Kolbe and Polly Woodward Hill. Dorothy has not been back to Sweet Briar for years, but she is still interested in all that goes on.

Mary Stuart Kelso Treanor and Walter have moved from Reno back to Santa Rosa, CA. She says she can't wait for our next reunion — "our 50th was such fun!"

1935

Secretary

Janet Kimball Miller (Mrs. John D.), 9460 Live Oak Pl., Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33324

Fund Agent

Lucy Hoblitzell, 115 W. 12th St., Parkersburg, WV 26101

Beverly Hill Furniss was back on campus for the Junior Year in France Reunion with her daughter Emory Maxwell '74 and also saw her Paris roommate, Mary Marks. Mary made a fall trip to Scotland, visiting the Isles of Mull and Iona, an experience which inspired her to reread Robert Louis Stevenson's Kidnapped.

Mary Lou Saul Hunt has a granddaughter in college at Mary Washington. Mary Lou has one son who is chief of medicine at Walter Reed and another son who practices law in Washington, DC. Mary Lou and Keith were victims of a break-in in January in broad daylight, and Mary Lou was gone for only an hour. The robbers took only the best — sterling, her grandmother's gold bracelet, fur jacket, etc.

Martha Jane Gipe Earle writes that she enjoys retirement, especially the leisurely pace, the lack of schedules, and the time to enjoy nature, but she misses the children. The Earles did have a granddaughter living with them this winter while she attended a local college, and after three sons they enjoyed having a daughter, if only for a year.

Isabel Anderson Comer's husband Donald is president of the International Textile Manufacturers Federation, which meets annually in a different country — this year it was West Berlin. Isabel found the host country hospitable, making the visit informative and pleasant, and she enjoyed being with delegates from 46 other countries.

Alice Laubach spent three weeks last summer in England attending an Elderhostel — one week at the U. of Birmingham, one week in Scotland at the U. of Strath Clyde, and one week at the U. of North Wales (Bangor). The weather was perfect, the classes interesting, and the people very friendly.

Mary Templeton and sister Jean attended the first Elderhostel at Sweet Briar in June, as did Anne Spiers Jessup, and they all thoroughly enjoyed it. At the end of November, however, Mary wrote of Anne's death in a freak accident in N.Y.C. on Nov. 23, 1983. She was riding her bicycle in Central Park and was hit by a runaway horse; she sustained critical injuries from which she never recovered. What a shock to all of her friends! Mary recalled the pleasant two weeks in August that Anne and Julia Peterkin spent with her and Jean in their home in Buffalo, exploring and enjoying the natural and cultural resources of the area. Julia, who also wrote of that wonderful visit, had just returned from a great trip to New Zealand and Australia. She sees Lucy Hoblitzell from time to time — when they are both in Parkersburg.

Blandina Jones Skillon spoke of seeing Julia Peterkin also. Blandina had a family reunion of 17 during the 1982 Christmas holidays.

Last July Allyn Capron Heintz had a family reunion of 21 — including the great-grandson — all staying in the big old house in Asheville, which they have been busy redoing. In May Allyn and Leo attended his 50th West Point reunion. Allyn has given up riding but swims a mile a day five days a week. She, Marion Walker Alcaro, Betty Myers Harding, and others spoke of the great job Lucy Hoblitzell is doing as class fund agent. Betty's husband died in June, we were sorry to hear, and she may be moving soon.

Alison Dunne Harrison moved in September from Bolinas to Kentfield, still in California. Alice McCloskey Schlendorf sold her house in Escondido and moved to a condominium in Rancho Bernardo in the fall of 1982. Alice continues her church work in Escondido and her service as secretary on the Board of Directors of the Rancho Bernardo Continuing Education Center, a non-profit organization (affiliated with San Diego State U.), which brings courses to North San Diego County.

Rebecca Young Frazer is serving as a Lady of Dumbarton for the Colonial Dames of America in the State of Georgia. She lives in Atlanta.

Virginia Morgan Mowry visited SBC twice in '83 — once with two granddaughters and in October with daughter Virginia Carpenter Delgado '67. She wonders whether her next visit will be in '85.

Your class secretary spent most of the summer at Lake Ontario getting reacquainted with three of my grandchildren. I enjoyed every minute of it.

I received a nice long letter from Judy Halliburton Davis. Judy and Burke were married in February 1982. He is an author and historian — Civil War chiefly. Burke is retired from Colonial Williamsburg and has a beautiful house there which is their official address. I quote from Judy's letter: "We kept my Greensboro house and we still have the Wrightsville Beach cottage where we play with the grandchildren in the summer." (They have nine grandchildren, ranging in age from 21 to 2 months.) On their honeymoon down the East Coast they ran into Becky Young Frazer in Savannah, visited Jackie Strickland Dwelle, and saw Aggie Williams Ellis and Jane Mitchell Robeson, all in Jacksonville, FL. Judy says life is new and wonderful, and they are almost through building a new and larger home in northern Virginia, just off the Blue Ridge Parkway. They plan to spend lots of time there. She says they have too many places to look after, but they do plan to reduce and regroup. They attended President Fry's inauguration, which was splendid — a gorgeous day, and President Fry was very impressive.

If the chronology of some of this news is confusing, please remember that my notes are due on Nov. 1 and are not published until March of the next year.

Now is the time to start making long-range plans to attend our 50th Reunion in May 1985. (Fifty years seems incredible!) I do hope that many of you can attend. I will start hounding you for news in the summer of 1984. So please answer my pleas — even better, do that and also be on campus. You will never regret it! See you then!

1939

Editor's note: No news was received from the Class Secretary. The follow- ing items were received in the Alumnae Office.

Last April Kay Richards DeLancey spent a month in Florence, Italy, with an American friend, taking side trips to Assisi, Pisa, Siena, and Rome. Then she went by train to Calais and on to visit friends in England — Devon, Norwich, Harrogate, and York. In the summer she and Bob drove their son's "new" car out to him in Kansas City and later camped near Winnipissauki with their grandchildren and their parents. They were looking forward to a trip West this March. In between trips Kay stays busy helping several elderly ladies with odd jobs.

Betty Frazier Rinehart writes from St. Petersburg, FL, that she is living in a nice little apartment on the water, but she goes back to St. Louis often to see her 93-year-old mother. Betty is a grandmother: son Andy, who lives in Denver, has two little girls.

In Whitefield, NH, Julia Ridgely Howe writes a weekly newspaper column. She extols the village common with ice skating in the winter ("Winter snows don't bother me," she says.) and red geraniums in the bandstand flowerboxes in summer. Julia says that she is where she wants to be.

Eleanor Chaffin Williams is presently completing 23 paintings on commission for the Anatole Hotel in Dallas, TX, and is also showing in the Boston area. She wrote that she was about to "produce" her seventh grandchild.

Anne Dearstyne Cornell and Jim had a great family reunion last summer when their four daughters and their families visited them in Shawnee Mission, KS, though it was "hotter than blazes." When Anne wrote, however, she and Jim were looking forward to escaping the record cold by a trip to Hawaii in February. Their youngest daughter is studying nursing at Northeastern U., and No. 3 daughter, Jane, is getting her master's in psychology.

Ethel Hauber Crowe keeps busy with bridge, bowling, needlepoint, volunteer work at the Newark Emergency Center, duties as a deacon of First Presbyterian Church, and yardwork. In August she had a glorious trip to Alaska with a cruise down the inland waterway.

Gracey Luckett Bradley wrote about two "delightful" Sweet Briar trips she had taken on the Argonaut: in the Western Mediterranean with Morry in August and taking her entire Stoddard family — three children, two spouses, and two grandchildren — to Egypt and Jordan in March of '83.

Early in '83 Augusta Saul Farrier wrote of two new granddaughters, one born in May to daughter Betsy Edwards Anderson '70 and another to Cathye and John Edwards. On a trip to Lake Louise and Banff, she also toured the West Coast and saw Bobbie Frazier Rinehart in San Jose. Augusta is frequently with Jane Lewis Kingsbury at Smith Mountain Lake and Jeff Welles Pearson in Lexington.

Betty Barnes Bird was on campus for the Ewald Symposium last March.

Shirley Jones Woodward wrote in April that Bunny had recently retired and that they were loving being back in Rocky Mount, NC.

Kitty Lawder Stephenson's children are all in Greenville, SC. Daughter Jane Stephenson Wilson '67 teaches Latin in high school, son Sam is a lawyer, and Nancy has an import business. Jane and her husband have two sons; Sam and his wife have two daughters. Kitty and Steve still love to dance and lish.

Jean Oliver Sartor and Alton spent six weeks in Italy last summer with La. Tech's program in Rome. Alton studied photography, and Jean took a course in watercolor painting. Jean recently made a gift to the Alumnae Association of a watercolor of cardinals and sourwood painted by her mother and reproduced by her daughter.

Mary Louise Gaul Moore died Jan. 3, 1983, in Manalapan, FL, after a brief illness. She is survived by three daughters and two grandsons.

We express our sympathy to Sarah Belk Gambrell on the death of her husband on March 30, 1983.

Don't forget Reunion May 25-27!

1943

Secretary

Elizabeth Schmeisser Nelson (Mrs. Karl J.), 48 Sachem Rd., Weston, CT 06883

Fund Agent

Clare Eager Matthai (Mrs. Albert D. Jr.), 108 Clinton, Whitesboro, NY 13492

I thank you for returning your news-lilled cards promptly. We had a wonderful Fortieth Reunion. We recharged our old friendships, drank to the rain-soaked beauty of our campus, said farewell to the Whitmans, and were informed of the 1983 state of SBC. Thanks to the inspired management of Ping, we contributed an outstanding gift to the Alumnae Fund.

Sarah Adams Bush continued north after Reunion, spent several weeks with her daughter Jeannette '71 in New Jersey, lunched with Brooks in Plymouth, and attended Bob's reunion at Andover. Ouija was expecting her first grandchild in January.

Margaret Baker Kahin has retired from being pastor of the United Methodist Church to devote the full year to Ring Lake Ranch, which is a retreat, renewal, and continuing education center. Son Brian is working at M.I.T.

in communications planning, while Sharon is heading the Big Horn Basin project sponsored by the National Council for the Humanities.

Brooks Barnes is retired, loves it, and is busy. She volunteers at Children's Hospital one day a week, attends the Boston Symphony every other week, and is on the board of directors of Community Nurse. Brooks also painted the porch of the Antiquarian House. She gardens, cuts wood, and entertains lots of relatives and friends, including SBC friends.

Barbara Briggs Quinn regretted not being able to attend Reunion. She had severe sickness in her family.

Dorothy Campbell Maher tells us that her son Christopher is now in the clinical psychology doctoral program at the U. of Tenn.

Dolores Cheatham James just returned from a marvelous trip to Spain with husband Harry. Son Michael was to be married in Atlanta Nov. 12. Dodi and Annabelle Forsch Prager spent the last weekend in October enjoying each other's company (probably art conversation).

Mary Christian Mulligan spent another satisfying summer as head of housekeeping at the venerable Chalfonte Hotel in Cape May, NJ. Diddy's oldest daughter lives in Maine with her two boys. Mary Minot is a lawyer in Boston, and son Ralph and his wife have given Diddy two granddaughters.

Katherine Doar Jones had a marvelous summer trip to Norway, Sweden, and Denmark with three friends. She also had all her children, their spouses, and her four grandchildren at Nag's Head for a wonderful week together.

Deborah Douglas Adams, after recovering from heart surgery, worked this year as a volunteer, chiefly for church and Youth Estate. Husband Ronald is blind and is judge of a local court. Anne Ribino, a lawyer, is married and has two girls. Ron, a banker, has two girls, and Douglas is a lawyer and a bachelor.

Clare Eager Matthai is resigning from her crime survey interviewing job to have time to continue serving on the Board of Children's Hospital, being active both on the Executive Committee and as chairman of two other committees. She does church work, tennis, golf, gardening, and bridge. Clare saw both the U.S. Tennis Open and the Manet Exhibition in N.Y.C. She plans to visit with her daughter and granddaughter in Florida in March and hopes to see Frances Gregg Petersmeyer. Soon Clare will be writing to you about the Fund. Please be responsive to her in a positive way.

Dorothy Friday went to Weezie Woodruff Angst's daughter's wedding in St. Louis in January of 1983. It was an exceptionally beautiful wedding with "white orchids everywhere."

Dorothy also enjoyed a three-week trip to the British Isles — very interesting, enjoyable, and exhausting.

Marguerite Hume saw Ouija recently on a bus trip to Dallas. Her work has kept her especially busy lately because of the tense international situation.

Esther Jett Holland gave a wedding reception at her house on Sept. 17 for son Hugh, III, and his bride Susan, which included the sixth anniversary celebration of Jett and Beth. She also enjoyed caring for 17-month-old Katherine while Katherine's parents were in Europe. Esther agreed to have the Sweet Briar Day luncheon at her house on Dec. 28, and she was counting on Kitty Doar Jones and others in the Tidewater area to help.

Primrose Johnston Craven has refinished her grandmother's dining room table and does lots of volunteer work, as being president of the largest branch of AAUW in Massachusetts, doing church work, and helping in Girl Scouts.

Prentiss Jones Hale could not make Reunion because of the marriage of her youngest son, Tom, to Debby, a calligrapher. Prentiss visited the young couple in August in Cummington, ME, a place noted for its balloonfest. She then went to Cape Cod. She says she goes to too many night meetings and is a junior warden, chairman of the altar guild, and a lay reader in her parish.

Bonilee Key Garrett and Gavin took a delightful trip up the inland waterway to Alaska. In July they took five grandchildren and several of their parents to see the Indian pueblo at Taos, NM, and then on to Colorado to ride a narrow gauge railroad.

Lucy Kiker Jones just got back from a trip to Scotland and England seeing beautiful gardens with a group of like-minded friends. Since her husband has retired, they have moved to a smaller home but still have a garden.

Karen Kniskern White has all four sons married, now that #2 son, an architect, just married a wonderful psychologist. #1 son and #3 son have each given her two granddaughters. Tookie is working at family court, while Bob, partially retired, still works in Australia land development.

Elizabeth McCormick Johnson would rather spend the winter working in Sanibel, FL, than sitting it out in Michigan. Her priest's wife has two daughters interested in SBC. Their mother likes the feminine emphasis in a woman's college.

Anne McJunkin Briber reports that "at such an advanced age" she is enjoying woodcarving and painting lessons. Frank is retiring and will no longer travel to Japan, China, and Hong-Kong but will be doing consulting on a part-time basis. They plan to be in Milwaukee through the holidays and then Amelia Island until summer.

Barbara McNeill Yow and Jack gave a Parisian dinner complete with can-can chorus girls to celebrate their marriage in Paris 25 years ago. There were 120 guests including family and two college roommates.

Caroline Miller McClintock helped two daughters move, one to North Carolina and one to South Carolina. In October Caroline and Gales attended a gala dinner in Atlanta to introduce Dr. Nenah Fry in that area. Many SBC girls were present. The McClintocks sat with Gregg and Wrede Petersmeyer, who is on the Board of Directors of SBC.

Classmates will be sorry to hear that Mary Eleanor Moss Haberstroh died on Dec. 8 after a brief illness.

Nancy Pingree Drake just returned from a satisfying trip to Paris — both intellectually and gastronomically. Ping then announces her latest grandchild, Nathaniel Cotton Drake, making a total of eight grandchildren.

Harriet Pullen Phillips and her husband had a lovely summer trip, biking, driving, and camping to Seattle, among the islands of Puget Sound and up to Victoria. Later they did a Vermont tour, visiting two children, who live in hundred-year-old houses which need tons of work.

Elizabeth Schmeisser Nelson has a beautiful lovable Cairn terrier, which she was hoping would produce puppies the first week of December, since Kathy (practicing lawyer in New York State) and Doug (research associate in geology at Cornell) refuse to give her grandchildren.

Byrd Smith Hunter enjoyed a beautiful fall trip to the North Carolina oceanfront to be with daughter Carter Hopkins '68, her husband, and their son Hunter. Daughter Baird Campbell '70 and Bill had a second son (Clayton Randolph) last February.

Judy Snow Benoit has eight grandchildren, who live near enough so Judy can enjoy seeing them often. Judy still teaches nursery school three times a week.

Margaret Swindell Dickerman is busy managing her family's newspaper business. She lost her mother in July.

Louise Woodruff Angst and Johnny, recently retired, took a golfing trip to southern England and enjoyed dinner with the U.S. ambassador to England at Winfield House. They also went to Barbara McNeill Yow's fabulous 25th anniversary party in Jacksonville, FL. Weezy's daughter is chairman of the local Ladies Civic Improvement Committee and vice chairman of the national Founder's Fund of the Garden Club of America.

To those who may wonder why their Christmas Notes did not appear in the Spring Alumnae Magazine, a reminder: Our class notes are due at the Alumnae Office by November 1 of the year preceding the Spring Issue. (Our notes never appear in the Fall Issue.) Therefore, the new grandbaby you wrote me about last December or January of '82-'83 is now 14 months old. At any rate, please try to write to me before the first of September if you want your news to be "new news."

The Alumnae Council meeting in October (which was to have been my first) happened to coincide and was superseded by the World Series in Baltimore and our 37th wedding anniversary. The Orioles definitely took the spotlight on all counts.

Marna Bromberg Williams wrote from Winter Park, FL, that she received her Ph.D. in Developmental Psychology and is in private practice in bereavement therapy. Marna has had articles published in The Journal of Mental Imagery and the Forum of Death Education and Counselors.

Margaret Munnerlyn Haverly and Fannie Ulmer Conley both had granddaughters born in Philadelphia last December in the same hospital and were there at the same time, Fannie with daughter Virginia Conley Pappas '73, "Munn" with daughter Peggy Glover, who came home from the hospital on Christmas Eve. Since then Peggy and her family have moved to Charlotte, NC, happily much closer to the Haverlys in Atlanta. I've had several wonderful letters from Munn, and, better still, Mac and I had dinner with her and Rawson when they were in Baltimore in the fall for a meeting. They have a most attractive and diversified family, three daughters and two sons, all out of the nest. Daughter Jane is a lawyer working in Atlanta and sharing a little house with younger brother Ben. The latter is a graduate of Vanderbilt, where he was very active in Young Life. He plans to visit a Uganda Mission next year.

Jackie Murray Sanner says she is still pinching herself over her trip to France last year, where she sat next to Cary Grant during lunch at Place Dauphine, had her first roast suckling pig at a lovely French garden party, and saw the Monet Gardens at Giverney. Jackie keeps her French fluent, teaching the language to a group of gifted children in her county. Her class presented a puppet show of Little Red Riding Hood — in French. Besides her French "Cercle," she has a Spanish conversation group. She is also doing portrait painting and helping in Little Theater. She recently reopened her sculpture studio after a 20-year hiatus and has just finished a commissioned portrait of a two-year-old boy.

Shirley Gunter Ratliff was about to celebrate the marriage of her oldest son, Will, in April, with Joan McCoy Edmonds helping out.

Aimee DesPland McGirt, living in North Carolina, once again spent the summer in Spain doing the final course work for a master's in Spanish. Finishing a reading list and taking oral and written comprehensives are still ahead, and after five summers' work, Aimee is beginning to question whether it's all worth it.

For the last three years, Martha Anne (Mopsy) Frances Burrows and husband Sage have been living in Singapore, where he is with Brown and Root, Inc. Mary Lib Vick Thornhill and Ann Harris Bellows '48 have visited them. The Burrowses find Singapore a good place to live — "clean and green, strong in both government and education." The opportunity to live abroad came at a good time for them since their combined family of five are now all adult.

Catharine Fitzgerald Booker and Rosamond Young have written Twelve Seconds to the Moon, A Story of the Wright Brothers, which is an enlarged second edition of a book written by Rosamond and published in 1978. This is the second collaboration by the two writers; they wrote The Great Lady of First Street, which was published in 1981.

Cordelia Lambert Stites and her husband attended a reception at the University Club in Denver, CO, for her cousin Harold Whiteman. It was her first Alumnae event, and she enthusiastically looks forward to future functions.

Elaine Davis Blackford attended the marriage of her 86-year-old father (bride 82) which was a gathering of four generations in Delray Beach, FL. Also married last year was Elaine's son Dave, to Cindy Hiland. Dave is a senior vice president and Cindy is assistant vice president of Intra-West of Denver, CO. The Blackfords have five grandchildren — four boys, one girl; Elaine has had a lens implant because of a cataract. They live in Monmouth Beach, NJ, where "in spite of Time and its ravages, all is well."

Jane Arthur Etheridge Hamlin lives in Wilmington, DE, and is very proud of her two sons; the eldest, David, is a banking officer at Provident Bank of Delaware, and her younger son, Garret, is a student at Rensselaer, in Troy, NY.

Mary Lib Vick Thornhill was working on watercolors in the spring of 1983 to be in her first one-man show in 16 years. Her subjects were Texas, New Mexico, and China.

Maria Tucker Bowerfind still has all her children in school: one in graduate school, Case-Western Reserve, one in St. John's College, Annapolis, MD, one at University of Vermont, and a 14-year-old boy at home, and she's certain she is the last of the class in this situation! Last fall, Maria saw Mary Stuart McGuire Gilliam, Ellen Gilliam Perry, Bozzie Bosworth Shannon, Evie White Spearman, Sara Bryan Glascock, and Joan McCoy Edmonds at Farmington, Charlottesville. Joan's son Bryan is a senior at UVA.

Kay Weisiger Osborne spent three weeks in Charlotte, NC, while husband Bob was having aorta replacement surgery, and brought him home to recuperate in September. In October she and Jane Warner Williams went to SBC for Alumnae Council, which they enjoyed, returning home via Thomasville and dinner with Meredith Slane Finch.

Our deepest sympathy goes to Ann Marshall Whitley, on the death of her husband Jesse in July. Ann is now official curator of SBC historical properties as well as director of the museum. She has been busy restoring SB House and its furniture and serving on the board of the Amherst County Historical Museum and as president of the local woman's club.

A nice long letter from Margaret Ellen White Van Buren says that children, husband, and grandchildren are all well, and they have had a continuous flow of visitors to New York this past year, mostly people they knew when they lived in Europe for 10 years. Her son Ted worked this past summer for Robert Hayes Coalition for the Homeless. M. E. reports that many New York churches are taking in unsheltered people at night and feeding them meals by day. Of these, her church, Grace Episcopal of NYC, is one, and it has among its clergy the Rev. Fleming Parker Rutledge '59, who Margaret Ellen says is "truly magnificent." Other N.Y.C. SB friends whom Margaret Ellen sees are Alex Marcoglou Tully and Jenny Bell Bechtel Whyte '48. Alex made a long visit to Paris in August and September to see her brother, who lives there, and her mother who lives in Athens. Jenny Bell, who is very busy with her museum labrics to wear, gave a show at the museum of the City of New York October 31, and before that, a show at Asia House. Her designs, made up in museum quality labrics, are fabulous, from all reports. At one of the functions celebrating 300 years of Dutch-American relations, the Van Burens met Henry Kissinger who had the exact same by-pass surgery as Jim, Margaret Ellen's husband, and on the same day. Says M. E., "Nancy Kissinger looked just the way I felt: terrified and worried that he might be overdoing."

Last year our #3 son, Christopher, married Susan Bell, of Charleston, WV. They live near Raleigh, NC, and Susan works as biochemist in the Pathology Dept. at Duke. Chris was involved in the historical restoration in Fayetteville (archeological project, short term) and is now building sailboats. Our eldest son, Tom, was recently elected treasurer of McCormick & Co., a Baltimore-based spice company which has grown to a multi-faceted organization. He and his wife and four (1, 2½, 5 and 7) children — two boys, two girls — live just around the corner from us. Our second son, Ken, still lives near Plymouth, MA, and he and his wife have a little girl. He continues to travel for his import biz, FETCO International, to China, India, Thailand, Hong Kong, etc. Our daughter Jean and her husband Steve Leland also live near Boston, where he works for Wang Computers, and she attends a veterinary clinic to qualify as an assistant. She has her A.B. from Colby College. Youngest son, David, is teaching calculus and physics near Oakland, CA, and Mac — husband of 37 years — is still working full time. At the moment I am still doing the usual — and contemplating school.

When we were in Charlestown, WV, last December for our son's wedding, we spent a delightful morning with Julia Holt Coyle, who packed us all into her station wagon and gave us a mini tour. She and George attended the wedding and reception and were able to meet all our family. They divide their time between Charleston, his family's farm in Charlestown and their home in Florida. She is as slim as a reed.

Remember — keep your cards and letters coming to Baltimore, preferably by the end of summer '84.

It is news-sharing time again. Most of us are busy and happy with our families and careers. We are in our prime.

Dateline: Montgomery, AL: Carol

Rolston Toulmin writes: "Am still at the farm and love it more and more. Bit by bit, I work on improvements and new furnishings for the house. I try to take at least one long trip a year (this year, Italy) and I stay active in community projects. It is a good life and I know how blessed I have been."

Our own "Sunshine" (Tsun-Hsien Kwan Bhagat) sends news from Elgin, IL: "I am working for A.O. Harvestore at their agri-services lab doing food testing and nutritional counseling for dairymen and farmers from all over the U.S.A. and Canada. My husband Shantilal is the community development consultant of the World Ministries Commission for the General Board of the Church of the Brethren and is also the U.N. representative for the church which means commuting every month to New York." Sunshine's eldest daughter, Smrati, lives in Los Angeles with her husband and two-year-old son. She is a flight attendant for Western Airlines. Younger daughter, Anjali, is also married and works as a legal secretary in San Diego. Her son Snehal is a geology major at the U. of Ill.

Impressive news from California: Sue Lockley Glad was appointed scheduling secretary to the Governor of California in Jan. 1983 after serving as a member of his campaign and transition teams. She says her job is "exciting, hard work, and fun."

Other West Coast news: Ruth Clarkson Castella writes that her son Mark had a small movie role in a fast-action ski film called Hot Dog and also appeared as an extra in the film Frances. Ruth herself is busy organizing a trans-continental lecture tour for John Blotfeld, well-known authority on Oriental philosophy and art.

Patty Lynas Ford, another of the California group, sends news that her husband Dick is the founder and executive director of the Hospice Ministry of the Mid-Peninsula, which trains interested people in various churches to care for the chronically and terminally ill. He hopes to create a network of such teams. Patty has been working at the Stanford Medical Center for 11 years and is delighted with a new word processor which simplifies her work with "many manuscripts and grant proposals."

Last April Seymour Laughon Renolds wrote that she had "started the Cambridge Diet and quit smoking simultaneously." She had lost 16 pounds and had not smoked in 12 weeks!

From Louisville Nancy Merchant Henry writes that "having two teenagers is exhausting but worth every minute." Her daughter Nancy Elizabeth entered Stanford as a freshman this fall, and son Frank Morton is a sophomore in high school.

Louise Coleman Jones writes from Lexington, KY, of spending the month of October in India — two weeks traveling with a group and two weeks on her own. It was a fabulous trip. Louise writes, "I've always been drawn to India and was at last able to experience it."

Betty Crisler Buchigniani, Memphis, TN, has three married children. Son Leo, Jr., an attorney in Dallas, is about to give Betty her first grandchild. Daughter Crisler Quick, Huntington, Long Island, is a C.P.A. and enjoys yachting with husband Peter. Daughter Joan Barnett and husband Bill live near Memphis, where he raises and shows Tennessee walker horses. He won the World Championship this year for amateur owned, ridden, and trained Tennessee walkers.

Katharine Phinizy Mackie's husband retired after 42 years of "wandering with du Pont," and Katharine is happy to be back in her own "Briar Patch" — Augusta, GA. Three of her children are in Georgia and one in Virginia; all are now out of school. Katharine enjoyed the Jr. Year in France Reunion at SBC last spring and the reception for our new president in Atlanta in the fall.

Ann Red Barstow sums it up, "Life is beautiful... My three granddaughters are gorgeous; my own five children are healthy, happy, and delightful adults. This past year my school, The Village School of Memorial, built new facilities for 350 children... and we have already outgrown it. The school (owned with a friend) has been a dream come true for the past ten years. I feel godly blessed, and my gratitude is boundless."

After 25 years of happy living in Alexandria, VA, Carolyn Sample Abshire and husband Dave have moved to Brussels because of his appointment as Ambassador to NATO. They love Belgium, the ease of travel to anywhere in Europe, and meeting new international colleagues. Fourth-grader Caroline attends a Belgium (French) school, 15-yr.-old Phyllis is at the International School of Brussels, Anna (23) travels, their son is working, and Mary Lee is a junior at the U. of Oregon. Carolyn's Iberian Imports enterprise goes on and will be 19 years old in May.

Have you read Semper Fi Mac by Henry T. Berry, husband of Diana Weeks Berry? It was published by Avon last year.

We were deeply saddened to learn of the death of Susan Taylor Hubbard's husband Nov. 23. We extend our deepest sympathy to her and to her four children, one of whom, Catherine (Caddy), is a student at Sweet Briar.

A 1982 Christmas card brought news of Janet Broman's marriage to Laurence Dingle. The enclosed photo showed a radiant bride and handsome groom toasting each other.

Please keep in touch. Old friends become more precious as time passes. Share news of you and your families. Next deadline: November 1984.

Gretchen Armstrong Redmond (Mrs. Daniel M.), 4857 N. 35th Rd., Arlington, VA 22207

Before I begin this time, I'd like to extend our love and sympathy to Ethel Green Banta and her family on the loss of her husband Bruce, who died in July following heart surgery, and to Kathleen Peeples Pendleton, who has also lost her husband.

Why didn't anyone tell me you like to be nagged? Your response to my card has really been super. I will try to do this alphabetically and hope I don't leave anything out. Here we go — and if R thru W gets cut, I promise I'll make it up to you next year!

Starting at the top, Honey Ad-dington Passano reports another wedding. Their daughter Helen Kemp (U.Va. '80) married Thomas John Hill on Sept. 10 in Baltimore. He is from Richmond, and a graduate of U.Va., and they will live in Boston where he works at Alex Brown & Sons.

Frances Bell Shepherd wrote that after years of father/son and father/daughter camping trips Jimmy has taken with the children, this year was her turn. They spent two weeks with two other couples in Ouetico Park, Ont., canoeing 70 miles and portaging 30 times! Is she younger than the rest of us? Anyway, they had a wonderful trip and can recommend a great outfitter if any of you are interested. Their son Jim is a freshman at Sewanee this year.

From Texas, Catherine Cage Bruns sent a vivid description of the destruction and devastation wrought by "Alicia" in August. Their neighborhood was more fortunate than many, although they lost many trees and were without power, water, and telephone for more than two days. Remember "Hazel" and cold, candlelit meals in the Refectory? The annual meeting of the Garden Clubs of America in Houston afforded Catherine brief visits with Ruth Ellen Green Calhoun '57, Betty Byrne Gill Chaney and Pam Compton Ware.

Ruth Campbell Vanderpoel and Charlie spent most of the summer relaxing at their home in cool, restful New Hampshire. She wrote that they are learning to accept and adjust to Charlie's diagnosis of M.S. and are finding life much better for knowing what the problem is. Back in New Jersey, she is busy teaching nursery school, playing tennis, aerobic dancing, running, stacking wood, etc. Their son Jim is a senior in mechanical engineering at V.P.I. this year, and daughter Leigh will be married in May to Mark Maynard of Mandham, NJ.

Among the ambitious back-to-school crowd, Nancy Clapp Cudlip is completing the 48 hours in accounting and related subjects required to sit for the C.P.A. exam in Connecticut and plans to move up there from Florida in March. Her daughter Ann is working on her master's at Amos Tuck School of Business, Dartmouth. Son Bill is in the Navy on a nuclear sub. She enjoyed a visit with Kathleen Peeples Pendleton in Palm Beach last winter.

Gail Davidson Bazzarre reports a wedding and a new grandchild. The granddaughter came first — Amber Davidson Bazzarre, born to son Scott and his wife on January 28, 1983. Daughter Helen was married Sept. 10 and is living in Chicago, Gail's home town. And a wedding for Jane Dildy Williams. Their daughter Mindy was married in October and is living in Dallas, where she and her husband both work. Their son Mac is a senior at Hampton Roads Academy and spent the summer with a family in Umea, Sweden, with the Youth for Understanding program. Daughter Ann spent last semester in Paris with the Wesleyan program. Jane and Mac stay home and enjoy the peace and quiet!

Determined to make the Alumnae Magazine, Nancy Douthat Goss sent a post card from China, where the whole family had a memorable trip, "gathering crowds to stare at giant boys and mother with white hair!" Summer visitors to the Goss establishment included Kay Roberts McHaney, Jim, and sons Gordon and Scott.

The news from Joan Fankhauser Burrell includes another wedding. Her daughter Linda (22) was married in July. Daughter Samantha is a senior this year, so they are college-shopping again. Joan's stationery-boutique, On Occasions, had its 11th anniversary in October, so she is keeping busy but still has time for volunteer work and tennis. Jane Feltus Welch had a good visit with Joan a year ago while she was in Cincinnati performing in Inherit the Wind at the Playhouse in the Park. Jane pursued regional theatre auditions up and down the East Coast and loved it. She and Jim and daughter Eliza (17) had a wonderful trip to France and Italy last spring. They met daughter Lucy in Paris where she spent her junior year with the N.Y.U. program. Their son Jim is at the Morgan Guaranty Bank in New York. Since October Jane has been living in New York trying to get back into the theatre business, studying with Geraldine Page, and auditioning for both New York and regional theatre — all with the blessings of her "good husband and family."

The real estate market in Maine must be good, and Bexy Faxon Knowles is familiar with both sides. She and Bob have built and moved into a new house this year — "large, passive solar, heavily insulated, on three acres of woods just five minutes from Exit 10 of the Maine Turnpike." This is her fifth year as a real estate broker. They spent five weeks cruising the Maine coast in their new "Nonesuch 30" and enjoyed a trip to Scandinavia in the fall. Daughter Holly is in college in California, and Chris lives at home and is studying computer science at a local college. In Minnesota, Lee Fiducia Hartmann and Ruedi have not yet sold their home — (it is lovely and on the lake, if any of you are looking!) — so they're still in my neighborhood. Their son Greg graduated from Montana State U. in June and spent the summer managing and playing in a band. Daughter Denise is at N.Y.U. working on a master's in counselor education, specializing in counseling the deaf and hearing impaired. Son Eric is a high school senior.

Petsy Gautier Mezey and Cliff commute between Southfield, MI, where he has his business, and Coral Gables, FL, which they call home, with side trips to visit children, which they seem to have everywhere! Their oldest son is in Florida working for the Chief Judge of Dade Co.; another is in law school at Florida State; third son, who graduated from Denison, is selling for IBM in Chicago and was married October 1; daughter Marne is in graduate school at the U. of Miami, OH; and daughter Peyton is a senior at the U. of Col. in Boulder. I hope I didn't miss anyone! Petsy enjoys seeing Patty McClay Boggs occasionally, now that she and Flip are living in Birmingham, MI.

Barbara Garforth Jackson was busy with wedding plans when she wrote. Their daughter Eve '78 was to be married November 5 to Gary London of Albemarle, NC. Eve has her master's in education and is teaching kindergarten in Birmingham. Betty Byrne Gill Chaney's daughter Ellen graduated from SBC last June. Her son John is in his third year at U.Va. Engineering School. Susan Hayward Collins writes that, as of last May, all seven of their children (a combined family) have graduated from college. After 28 years of college tuition, she says that they are suffering from "mal-tuition," but having a great time together — alone at last!

A new house and lots of travel have been keeping Anne Lyn Harrell Welsh busy. Bill travels abroad extensively and Anne Lyn manages two trips a year. Last winter it was around the world, spending a week alone in Greece, which she highly recommends. So does Mary Hedeman Buckingham. As a travel agent, Marty has been everywhere and reports that Greece and the African Safari were their favorites. The trip that sounded most appealing to me was the one to London on the OE2 with Dick's firm, Cadbury Schweppes, to celebrate the company's 200th birthday! Marty is with New Canaan Travel and so are Lee Haskell Vest '57 and Janet Caldwell Fragale '56, so SBC is well represented. Marty and Dick's son Steve is a junior at Denison. Daughter Linda is living and working in Stamford. The whole family planned a cruise at Christmas. Another of our world travelers, Phyllis Herndon Brissenden and Walter had a wonderful trip to New Zealand last February, renting a car to really do both islands. Then, in September, they went to Scotland to hear the Opera Theatre of St. Louis perform at the Edinburgh Festival. Phyl's enthusiasm for bird-watching has involved her in conservation organizations, diversifying her fund-raising efforts to include wildlife as well as the arts.

The prize in the college degree sweepstakes this year goes to the Halls in Lufkin, TX! Last summer Connie Hill Hall's oldest daughter, Cindy, received her D.V.M. from Texas A & M; second daughter, Julie, her M.A. in English from U. of N.C.-Chapel Hill; and Connie got her Ph.D. in English from Texas A & M. Next May youngest daughter, Martha, will receive her B.A. from Duke. Congratulations all around!

From Ohio comes news of another wedding. Diane Johnson DeCamp's son Doug was married in May to Jennifer Furrell of Sandusky, OH. They are both juniors at Ohio U. in Athens. Graydon has retired from the newspaper and does free-lance P.R. and advertising when the DeCamps aren't at their summer home in Ontario.

Having just finished her second two-year term as president of The Grove Heritage Assn., Pat Kilmer Norris was included in the 1983 edition of Who's Who of American Women. The Grove is a national historic landmark and nature preserve in Glenview, IL, and is keeping Pat busy.

Mrs. Mary Lindsey sent news of Jane Lindsey Riddell's daughters. Carol, the youngest, is a senior at Spring Hill College in Mobile, majoring in accounting. The twins are both out of college — Mary is a lieutenant in the Air Force ROTC, stationed at Alamogordo, NM, and Cathy and her husband are in San Jose, CA, where she works in the computer field.

Manda McThenia Iodice writes that their language consulting business is moving well. They have added a Level One Spanish text with Level Two to come out soon, and Don spent a month in France doing special recordings for a third level of French. Their oldest son spent the summer on and off fishing boats in Alaska, and his younger brother is a junior in high school, fast becoming a martial arts expert.

Frankie Marbury Coxe reports continuing success with her 15-person fund-raising consulting firm, Haas, Cox & Alexander. They handled the highly successful $20 million campaign for the new High Museum, designed by Richard Meier, which opened October 1. The rest of the Coxes are equally busy; Tench is Ted Turner's lawyer so never has a dull moment; Tench II is in his second year at Harvard Business School and plans to return to Atlanta and join a promising computer software firm; and Molly, a 1981 graduate of Princeton College of Art and is living in New York, writing and illustrating children's books — watch the shelves for her first one in the spring!

Both Mary Boyd Murray Russell and Susan Hayward Collins reported the May wedding of Camille Williams Taylor and Lawson Yow. Mary Boyd and George visited them in Atlanta in October and had a grand time. Susan reports that he is very handsome! Best wishes from all of us to both of them. Mary Boyd is still much involved with visiting women prisoners and juvenile offenders, and writes that she and George had some fun scuba diving trips to the Bahamas this year. Their son George (23) is working in Columbus this year, and Walter (22) is a senior at Auburn. Charlotte Orr Moores' children are growing up fast too. Robert graduated from Stamford U. in May of 1982, Jack is a sophomore at Vanderbilt, Jeanie is working in Atlanta, and her youngest daughter is a sophomore in high school.

This has been another good year for weddings. Bar Plamp Hunt's son Paul was married in August in Providence. His cousin, Lydia Plamp Plattenburg's son George, Jr., was married in November in New Jersey. Bar writes that she has been working almost full time since last February at The Providence Athenaeum and loves it. She took time out over Labor Day to go to St. Louis to help Lydia move to a new townhouse. Lydia says Bar put on a two-day garage sale for her, for a very small percentage of the profits, and she recommends her services highly!

Sandy Rhodes Berglund and Don moved to Amherst, MA, a year ago so Don could study line woodworking. They love the area and are enjoying classes in arts and crafts. She promises to look up New England classmates as soon as they get settled in the house they're building.

More from Texas from Kay Roberts McHaney. She traveled to Scotland last spring and, like more and more of us, dropped in on Jane Keating Taylor

'54 and Bob at Ardsheal House. Kay and Jim's son Gordon is a first-year law student at St. Mary's in San Antonio; Scott (17) is a high school junior, spending this year aboard a Tall Ship in the Mediterranean (Kay and Jim were to visit him in Crete at Thanksgiving!); Camille (14) is a high school freshman; and Stephen (11) is a sixth grader.

Betty Sanford Molster reports that Chuck has formed his own computer consulting company this year. Their son Chip graduated from law school and is clerking for a judge in Alexandria. Daughter Margaret and her husband are also living in Alexandria, where Margaret teaches fifth grade. Son John is an underwriter with E.F. Hutton in New York. Jane is twelve, continues to delight her parents, and keeps Betty involved in school activities among other volunteer endeavors.

How I envy all you people in the travel business! Meta Space Moore wrote of trips to Greece in December and Austria in March. Just as fascinating was her experience in New York in April taking an intensive course in "Life and Career Management" at the John Crystal Center. Nella Gray Barkley is the president of the company, and Meta highly recommends the course. Meta's son Allston is a freshman at S.M.U.; daughter Susan graduated from Vanderbilt in 1982 and is working in Atlanta; and Margaret is with the Chemical Bank, recently transferred from New York to San Francisco with the High Technology Dept. Meta also traveled to Savannah in September for the wedding of Emmy Coxe Winburn's daughter.

Another wedding! Betsy Stevens Sutton's daughter Anne was married in September. Their son John is living and working in California and working towards his degree at night. Daughter Holley is a sophomore in high school. Betsy has been active as a hospital volunteer for 16 years and has just begun her 10th year on the Auxiliary Board. She and Bob do take time out from their busy schedules each winter for a warm vacation.

Didi Stoddard is still teaching, tennis, and gardening in Massachusetts and has added bridge to the list. She took another gourmet trip to France last summer and brought back lots of new recipes. Barbara and I will have to plan another trip east!

Mitzi Streit Halla is still planning trips as director of special tours for Hellt World Travel. She has another wonderful one coming up in April to China. Their youngest boy, Brian, is a freshman at Duke this year on an NROTC scholarship. Kenneth (19) is a sophomore at William & Mary. Peggy West Valentine's daughter Ida is a senior at U.Va., having finished the Hollins six-month abroad program a year ago. Their daughter Margy is living in Richmond and working for a real estate firm, and son Henry, III, is with Davenport & Co. of Va. with his father. Ned graduated from Woodberry Forest last spring.

Several of us have sent daughters to SBC, but Elise Wachteld dePapp is the first I know of to send a horse! Last summer she donated a wonderful horse to the school and plans to go down to see him during the year with daughter Erika. The ulterior motive may be to interest Erika, who is in 10th grade, in Sweet Briar! Elise's older daughter, Anne, is a senior at Smith this year and son John is in his second year at Dartmouth. Elise is working full time as a pathologist at Genesee Hospital in Rochester, NY.

Shirley Sutliff Cooper and Tom hosted the oldest established permanent floating mini-reunion of the class at their summer home at Small Point, ME. In attendance this time were Nancy Douthat Goss and Woody, Bar Plamp Hunt and George, Lydia Plamp Plattenburg, and Ann Williams Manchester and Eli. The annual event got raves again this year. Shirley reports that her tennis partner, Pat Smith Ticer, is busy doing her civic duty as a member of the City Council of Alexandria. Also from Shirley came the news that Vida Radin Stringer founded the Washington Educational Services since she stopped teaching a year ago. She has 12 employees and they are involved in tutoring of all kinds — remedial, gifted children, college prep, among others. She also has an import business called Orient Express Limited. She shouldn't have time to get in to much trouble!

After all of this, I'm not going to mention my marvelous summer trip to Alaska which included my first experience on a cruise ship. Nor will I tell you about Barbara McLamb Lindemann's visit over the 4th of July, except to say that we started planning our trip to Reunion '85. We'll see all of you there! In the meantime, please respond promptly to the fund letters and make Gretchen Armstrong Redmond's job as easy as you've made mine.

The biggest event of this year was our mini-reunion in October when eleven of the Reunion committee gathered at SBC to start organizing the May 25-27, 1984, 25TH REUNION. By now you've all received details of that meeting and the cast of characters, but it was exciting to see how enthusiastic everyone was and how quickly all agreed to work on Reunion. Now, the rest of you COME JOIN US in May.

One of the direct benefits of contacting the committee was getting some up-to-date news. For instance, Gay Hart Gaines and her family were heading for Denmark where her oldest son, Stanley, Jr., was getting married. Bambi Price Carne is working with The Illinois Company, Inc., in Chicago, though her travel schedule keeps them guessing. Her daughter Eleanor is currently at Whittier in California. Fleming Parker Rutledge has made the commitment to be a full-time parish priest at Grace Church, Rye. This prevents many other involvements which she had previously enjoyed. We hope she will be able to join us in May. Jane Jamison Messer is dusting off grandtather, getting creative with the hair spray and marking the date on her crowded calendar. Look out! Sallie Beattie Sinkler had a small memory lapse when I said who was calling, but she rallied. Her daughter is at 'Ole Miss and Sally is working part-time at the Mart. Vivian Butler Scott cannot be at Reunion as her eldest son is graduating from Davidson. Courtney Gibson Pelley, who has been on a staff development teaching assignment for the last year, is now principal at Haystack Elementary School in Fairfax County, VA.

Other news came from around the country — Betsy Brawner Pittman's daughter Tina and Ann Pegram Harris' daughter Martha Lyle both graduated from UVA in May '83. Betsy's son Frank is class of '85 at W&L, and daughter Ginger is at Westminster.

Ess Bruner Campbell is adjusting to the relaxed and casual Southern California life style. Both her daughters are enrolled in the U. of California system, and they love the availability of ski and surf. Ess keeps busy with piano teaching and performing, as well as with civic work. She also manages to find time to join Carl on his travels as Pres./CED of Alfred M. Lewis, Inc. Ess, there is plenty of time for you to fit SBC into the travel schedule for May. We expect to see you!

Anne Wimbish Kasanin, Belvedere, CA, will remember March 3, 1983. On that day she was a hostess at the mayor's reception for Queen Elizabeth and Prince Phillip — and that afternoon while swimming she dislocated her shoulder! She hopes to come to SBC for Reunion.

In June Susan Perry Farmer will move from Canada, CA, to San Diego — her 14th move in 23 years! Her husband is president of Science Applications, Inc. Susan sends her best wishes to those attending Reunion but will not join us since their third son will be graduating from high school at that time.

Martha (Patsy) Bulkley O'Brien is running a small boarding stable in Maine and raising one foal every four or five years. She hopes to attend Reunion.

Elizabeth Johnston Lipscomb writes from Lynchburg that the highlight of her year was seeing oldest son Bill among 147 high school seniors recognized as Presidential Scholars in a ceremony on the White House lawn in June. He is now a freshman at Duke. Elizabeth is looking forward to seeing many classmates at Reunion.

Rachel Bok Goldman is an active volunteer in Philadelphia, serving on nine boards, mostly art and music. She remarried two years ago. Her two sons are 22 and 20 and her husband's are 25, 23, and 20. She is looking forward to acquiring a daughter when his oldest son marries in June. Rachel is hoping to make Reunion.

Sarah Bertelsen Maguire has managed a Calico Corners store in Dallas for 4½ years. She and her husband have three sons — 19, 21, and 22; the oldest graduated from Texas in '83 and is in commercial real estate, as is his dad. Sally had a three-day visit with roommate Joanne Bossert Thompson, whom she hadn't seen in 25 years. Joanne became a grandmother Aug. 1, when her son's son was born.

In Dalton, GA, Trish Chandler Burns is celebrating the 10th anniversary of her gift shop. Ann Smith Heist is about to enlarge her boutique in Ormond beach, FL, to include designer sportswear and dresses. Her daughter Mandy is becoming a potential SBC equestrienne.

Judy Welton Sargent moved to Wilmington, DE, in January and loves it as well as renovating their new-old house. Their daughter Susan is entering college this fall; Mary Catharine is a junior at Miss Porter's School. Pickie Payne Hester received her Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology, and her daughter Elizabeth Hester '79 received her Law degree from UVA.

Sue Hight Rountree continues to exhaust me by her activities and energies. Sons Jeff (13) and Chris (10) keep her busy with choir, Scouts, etc., soccer for Jeff and preservation of the environment for Chris. Sue fills her time with a variety of civic groups, schools, Bruton Parish Church, a new scottie puppy, and her miniatures of furniture from the Folk Art Collection.

Connie Fitzgerald Lange's youngests — the twins — are off to college, Colgate and Connecticut, leaving Connie facing the empty-nest syndrome.

Ginny Robinson Harris's daughter will be an SBC freshman in September, and Ginny will be at Reunion.

For up to date and additional news all of you must come to Reunion. Start planning now. SEE YDU THERE.

1963

Secretary

Elizabeth (Lisa) Wood Hancock Mrs. Edward H.), P.O. Box 130, Sweet Briar, VA 24595

Fund Agent

Nancy Roberts Pope (Mrs. James N.), 2721 Farmington Place, Lynchburg, VA 24503

Allie Stemmons Simon's glowing reunion letter was fresh when so many of you responded promptly to my plea for news. To all who missed our 20th, there is always next time, so keep your good intentions to be back at Sweet Briar in 1988. This is my second attempt to compile your news into a cohesive, literate message (the U.S. Mail ate the copy sent from the Alumnae Office to the printer), so I am not feeling too original. Thus I will launch in, in mostly alphabetical order.

Judy Kay Alspaugh Harrison has moved back to Illinois for the third time. She works at the Southern Illinois University Vivarium and is taking business courses. She and Nelson have three children. Vicki Anderson Breem is the mother of five, ranging from a sophomore at W & L to a second grader. Vicki owns a small shop in Pittsburgh called Cherishables, specializing in accents and gifts for the home. The shop is a spin-off from the decorating she has done for some time.

Betsey Beale Gunter, also in retailing, has opened a small toy shop next door to her children's clothing store in Richmond. She hears from Cathy Detmar Nicholls who is in England, still hunts, and was hoping to go to Russia in the fall. Cathy reports that Maxine Tichnor Green has recently decorated the house of her friend Linda McCarthy and husband Paul of Beetle fame.

Katharine Blackford Collins is administrator of a group home for troubled teenagers in Rock Springs, WY. She and John and their two boys had a brief reunion with Sarah Hitch

Hill, Doug, and their two sons last summer visiting Arches and Canyonlands National Parks. Laura Lee Brown Deters and Ginger Cates Mitchell and their families also vacationed together, in the wilds of Canada. That must have been a delightful time — both Laura Lee and Ginger wrote of it as the highlight of their respective years. Ginger stays busy with her three and their school activities and is taking a course, determined to master the computer.

Pat Calkins Wilder writes that she is trying to have a quiet, at-home year but it is hard with the taxi service for her three children. Lynn Carol Blau has two teenagers who keep her busy. The highlight of the Blaus' year was a trip to England and Scotland. Lyn Clark Pegg and her family have moved to Salem, MA. Issues such as women's rights, peace, and justice are Lyn's main concerns, and her activities center around these concerns.

Nancy Dixon Brown stays busy teaching and car pooling for Katherine, who is now five. Julie Arnold Morey and Russ visited Nancy and Don last fall. Cheri Fitzgerald Burchard has moved to Broadbrook, CT, where her husband is rector of an evangelical Episcopal Church. Cheri paints watercolors and teaches an art appreciation class. Carolyn Gabel has left teaching and moved into a new venture with friends. They have bought a bookstore/cafe specializing in feminist books, poetry readings and community events.

Lucetta Gardner Grummon rejoined the singles world in September and is back in school at the U. of Wyoming becoming certified in Special Education. She is active in the Republican Party in Casper and serves on the Casper City Council. Karen Gill Meyer writes from Arizona that her real estate business continues to flourish and she is busy with her teenagers, being a Junior League sustainer, and serving on several cultural boards. Jane Goodridge Schmitt has just moved to Cabin John, MD. She is busy with all the decorating and landscaping connected with a move.

Cinnie Hooton Magowan wrote from California after a long silence to say they are all fine. Her Charles is a junior at Yale, Tom is a sophomore at Trinity, and Doug is a freshman in high school. Judy Johnson Varn's twins are seventh graders at Westminster, her alma mater, and she stays busy with their activities. Sue Jones Cansler is a college student again, taking all the math-type prerequisites for an M.B.A. that she avoided at Sweet Briar! She is also working for the Old Depot Museum in Salem.

Lee Kucewicz Parham and her family are so busy with school and community activities that she had to send me a newspaper article about them to explain it all. Lee owns a Christmas toy and gift shop and among her many activities serves on the boards of the Chattanooga Nature Center and the Education for Musical Arts Association. By now you will have received her letter about the Class Fund. I urge you to respond positively.

Rusty McHugh Lilly is a landscape architect in Charlottesville where her husband Graham is a professor at UVA Law School. Their daughter has just entered Madeira. Mary Lou Marton Seilheimer and Charlie are frequent visitors back on campus. They were here for the inauguration of Nenah Fry, and Mary Lou serves on the Board of the Friends of Art, as does Jessica Bemis Ward. She and Peter were also here for the inauguration.

Betsy Flanders Spencer has recently moved to Charlottesville where Bill is with Wheat First Securities. Their daughter is a freshman at UVA and their son is at St. Ann's-Belfield. Over the last few years Betsy has had exciting trips to Greece, Egypt, and China as her mother's traveling companion. Barbara Noojin Wallhall's daughter is a freshman at Hollins, and Barbara wrote that the first parent's week end brought back memories of twenty-odd years ago. She is a partner in an estate jewelry showing business.

Lucy Otis Anderson's move to Tampa, where John has a new banking position, has been accomplished, but not without trauma. Three floods in a week, broken pipes and workmen who never seemed to show up were part of the confusion, but the Andersons are all settled now and Lucy is beginning her volunteering. I doubt if Charlotte will be able to replace her; she contributed so much there. Ruth (Penny) Pamplin Reeves has been named director of public relations for Magnolia Plantation and Gardens, Charleston, SC. Betsy Parker McColl's Eliza is a first-grader now and Betsy has added carpooling to her busy schedule. She still plays a lot of tennis too. Anne Pinckney Gay's Elizabeth rooms with Randy Kendig Young's daughter at UVA, and her Charlotte is a good friend of Anne Leavell Reynolds's daughter at Hotchkiss. Anne Pinckney, junior, was born last May.

Irene Pschorr Belknap broke a long silence to bring us up to date. She has been remarried for several years to Robert, a family practice physician. They live in Mill Valley, CA, with their "his and hers kids" family. Irene helps manage her husband's office and still paints. She has a limited edition children's print series on the market and designs children's cards. Elizabeth Randolph Lewis is another classmate taking a computer class, just to become literate. Her oldest two are at UVA, her third is a senior in high school, and her ninth-grader is beginning to realize it is going to be lonely at the Lewis house next year.

Harriet Reese Jensen's daughter has applied to SBC as a transfer student. The Jensens live in Denmark.

Barbie Rockefeller Bartlett writes that she is 100% involved with her energetic boys and equally energetic husband, but she still finds time to enjoy friends and takes two art classes. Tish Skinner Dace is Dean of Arts and Sciences at Southeastern Massachusetts U. Her son, Hal has just become a film editor for the BBC. He is married and lives in London.

Betty Stanly had a fabulous trip to China and reported that great improvements in tourist facilities have been made since her 1977 trip: air conditioning, bars, even a western toilet! She attended computer school in Dallas for a week last fall and had some good recess time visiting with Allie Stemmons Simon. Allie, our Sweet Briar Overseer and Class President, par excellence, writes that her top news item is that she and Heinz have been emancipated as parents — both girls are settled happily away from home. Allie was in Atlanta for the fall Board meetings and had a mini-reunion with Betty Stanly, Lee Kucewicz Parham, Nancy Dixon Brown, and Ginger Cates Mitchell.

Robin Swaim Davis writes that this is the year for her "self-awarded sabbatical," which she is spending in New York to revitalize her musical scholarship and piano performance and to soak up music and culture. Two of her children are in college.

Marta Sweet Colangelo missed reunion because of an emergency hysterectomy, but reports she is fine now. Her children are 14, 11, and 4 and Marta's time is spent caring for them and their old house which she says needs much tending. Mary Ann Ulterback Burritt has moved from Virginia Beach to the Washington area since Jim has been transferred. Their Cheri is a senior at Sweet Briar, Kiendel is a sophomore at Wellesley and Jimmy plays on a traveling soccer team.

Nerissa Vom Baur Roehrs says she is the last to check into the ranks of motherhood. Marina Angelica was born in February, 1983, in Frankfurt. To quote Nerissa directly, "Thanks to the miracles of modern medicine and Divine Providence, in no particular order, I finally turned in my black lace and barstool for a pile of wet nappies and terminal dishpan hands...our joy is boundless." Olive Wilson Robinson's Sara is a sophomore at UVA and Trigg is a high school senior. Olive and Roby have recently bought a farm outside Atlanta where they escape every weekend. Polly Wirtzman Craighill is finishing her Master's of Law in Taxation this May. Her thesis topic is "Liquidation/Reincorporation — Is Peaceful Co-existence Possible?"

Jane Yardley Page writes that the last three years have been transition ones. She is single again, got a Master's at Harvard, and moved to Minneapolis where she is a department head at Breck, a large private school. Her Emily is 10, and both Jane and Emily are enjoying their new life. Sallie Yon Williams says that age and skiing have taken their toll on her underpinnings, and she had to have a knee operated on in November. The New York Jets surgeon was her doctor, so we expect to see great results. This brings me to Prue Gay's note, which gave no news of Prue but said, "Rumor has it that Sallie, author of The Art of Presenting Food, might cater our class picnic in 1988 — what a treat that will be." Prue is right. Sallie has agreed, so four years from now I hope to see all of you back at my house.

The news from my house at this time is that the Hancock/Franklin clan is fine. With three teenagers driving, and the fourth only a few months away from her license, I have traded the headaches of car pooling for anxiety attacks. I loved hearing from so many of you and hope you will continue to stay in touch. I leave you with some thoughts that come from your cards, Allie's reunion letter, and observations from some of you. We seem to be an interesting group of women in our early 40's with many different life styles. In part we are who we are because of where we've been, and we have all been together at Sweet Briar. Almost all of us are grateful for that common experience and we can demonstrate that gratitude by helping Lee Parham's efforts to build up our Class Fund for our 25th Reunion gift and by responding to Nancy Roberts Pope's appeal to increase the Alumnae Fund. If this sounds like a sales pitch, it is!

The year 1983 has disappeared, and it is again time to share the news from the Class of 1967. Our response was again plentiful and full of good news. Keep me informed.

Toni Naren Gates has finally become a Westerner living in Wichita, KS. The family spent a week on a dude ranch in Colorado and Toni rode horses instead of taxis. Her theatre group, Tales for Tots Players, was hired for a year to perform at the Wichita Children's Theatre. While on the tennis courts, Toni found another SBC-er Marty Spangenberg '66.

Carroll Randolph Barr is busy working three days a week at Huguenot Academy while her two small ones are in school. Carroll had a visit from Kathy Kelety who came for Carroll's surprise 40th birthday party (two years too early).

Katharine Barnhardt Chase is in her senior year of a baccalaureate nursing program while Bob enjoys his big toy, the DEC 20 at SBC. Their daughter is in first grade at Amherst Elementary and is a gymnast and swimmer.

Kay Trogdon Hightower enjoyed a luncheon with old roommates, Susan Tucker and Diane Mann Lankford, in Atlanta. She and Neil recently did some home remodeling, and married life obviously agrees with them both.

New celebrity is Anderson Carl Beard who will be featured in the Kansas City Times column "Come Into My Kitchen." Anderson is teaching junior high school English, creative writing and girl's phy. ed. and also will be taking a computer course this fall. They are enjoying their new home.

Janie Willingham Glass and Bill are back in Houston with their four children, and Janie has started her own interior design business. She ran into Lynn Frazier Gas, who has moved to Pasadena, CA, and recently married a Frenchman named Francois. They may be moving to the East Coast in June.

After 1½ years in Galicia, Spain, Ginny Carpenter Delgado is back in Madrid, where Rafael is a Brigadier General and is 2nd Chief of the Military Government of Madrid. Ginny is involved in volunteer work from the Red Cross to the Cancer Drive, occasional embassy cocktail parties, but mostly is just "Mom" to 14-year-old Rafael. She is presently training her new 6-year-old English thoroughbred mare.

Jane Stephenson Wilson and Bob are enjoying their two sons, 6 and 3, and she is still teaching Latin. Jane's best student entered SBC this fall.

Sally Haskell Hulcher and Matt had a nice vacation at Martha's Vineyard this summer sans children but found re-entry very excruciating. Matt was racing in the New York Yacht Club cruise.

Beth Glaser Morchower, Richmond, claims to spend most of her life watching Todd, 13, and Randy, 10, play tennis, soccer, football, basketball, and karate, but she had a wonderful overnight visit with Mary Ellen Martin in N.Y.C. in December.

Elizabeth Kurtz Argo lives in Jersey, OH, but works in Columbus (45 miles round trip) as legal secretary at Porter, Wright, Morris and Arthur. Pam Pryor drives out from Columbus once a week to spend an evening.

Lynn Lyle is still working for Florida Jr. College as a lobbyist and living in Jacksonville and traveling in Tallahassee. She finds the whole political process fascinating and stimulating. Watch for Presidential aspirations!! Lynn came north this summer to take a 22-day sailing and natural history course at Hurricane Island Outward Bound in Maine.

Now a retired nursery school teacher, Hallie Darby Smith is working full steam ahead on her toymaking. Watch out Mellie, Hallie is working on her running to give you a real challenge at our 20th.

An update on DeeDee Heyward Dyer whom we have not heard from in quite awhile: she trained at the Philadelphia Museum of Art this year as a Park House guide, where she learned furniture, architecture, and the decorative arts and found it quite a challenge to be back studying with exams and papers. DeeDee closed her British import shop, Londinium Ltd., this year to concentrate on their new home and her two children, 14 and 10.

Still in the wilds of northern Idaho, Gene King Leyden and family are thriving. Gene is still very involved with midwifery while husband Bo builds guitars, hammered dulcimers, harps and mandolins. Gene teaches dance to children and made a tape of children's singing and dancing games and creative dramatics.

Beth Gawthrop Riely and John announced the birth of their son Andrew Carrington in May, and all are thrilled, including 8-yr.-old Christopher. Beth is a freelance food writer contributing to the Christian Science Monitor, the Boston Globe and Bon Appetit. John is teaching at Boston U.

Margy Dorich Brooks and family spent the summer traveling to northern Michigan, to Tucson, and, after 11 years, to Virginia to visit the Homestead.

Molly Randolph Davis and husband Rick are at it again. They rode from the mountains to the sea with a North Carolina bicycle touring group. Their trip covered 650 miles in 12 days from Asheville to Ocracoke.

Barb Tillman Kelley has same job — the Artmobile; same kids — David, 9, and Darcy, 7; and same husband! Barb is heading back to school again for her Ed. S., which is 33 hours above her Master's. God Bless.

Gina Dunlap Cogswell also did some traveling this summer. She and Austin were in Las Hadas, Sea Island, the Canadian Rockies, and the Homestead. Tennis still keeps them very busy — and they are trying to stay out of divorce court after playing mixed doubles.

It was nice to hear from Carol MacMillan Stanley. Carol practices law with her four partners and rides when she can. She earned her "colors" with the Palm Beach Hunt this past year. She and C.R. just celebrated their 17th anniversary and have two boys, 11 and 6.

Peggy Minis Jerome is still in San Francisco and would love any SBC-ers to visit. She traveled a great deal this year, including trips to Australia and Europe, especially St. Tropez, where she spent the month of September.

Dottie Dana King and Bill are living with their three children (11, 8, and 5) in Jacksonville, and Dottie is involved with tennis and school activities.

Dolly Caballero Garcia and Julio are actively working with the Opera de Puerto Rico group to bring opera to the island. Their daughter spent the summer in Europe with her school while the two boys went to camp in North Carolina.

Eleanor Kidd Crossley moved this year from dry Denver to muggy Pittsburgh, and they bought an old house and spent a lot of time refinishing hardwood floors and stripping woodwork. Their daughter was married in June, and they stopped at SBC on their way south. Eleanor was shocked at all the beautiful changes. She will finish her interior design degree in Pittsburgh.

Barbara Annan wrote to tell us of her "peripatetic" existence, dividing time between Palm Beach, their summer home in Wisconsin, and their real house in New Hampshire. Barbara does volunteer work and free-lance writing and raises Siamese cats for show. She headed to Madagascar on an Earthwatch expedition this fall.

Peggy Pittman Patterson is taking a year off from teaching at the Episcopal School of Dallas to be an intern at a large Episcopal church in Dallas in connection with her work at Seminary to get another Master's degree, a Master of Divinity. They headed to D.C. to show their children the sights and stopped off at SBC and ate at the Briar Patch Inn. Husband Dwight is working with computers at Intecom in Dallas.

Madeleine Long Tellekamp is very happy being a wife and mother of three children. They live in Tampa.

Janie Hansford Bronson, John, and daughter Cory are living in Dallas, where John works with labor negotiations at Frito-Lays. Janie travels a great deal with project management for a Houston real estate developer.

Susan Tucker spent a busy summer building up her advertising PR business; she now has three employees. She flew to London in September and took the Orient Express to Venice, and then rented a car and toured France, visiting her Junior Year families in both Tours and Paris.

Lindsay Smith Newsom and Mac spent the summer keeping busy with camp, swim team practices, beach, yardwork and the usual. Mac is very busy designing landscapes — residential and historical — while Lindsay is the state-wide membership chairman for the N.C. Art Society and is promoting the N.C. Museum of Art. Daughter Katie took a computer course working with cameras and videotapes this summer.

Melissa Sanders Thomas and Boyce spent a second honeymoon this summer because their two kids were away most of the summer at camp. Melissa is still playing tennis and even took a ballroom dance course with a friend for moral support and ran into a lot of real strange people, but felt the whole experience "was a real hoot."

Lynn Gullett Strazzini is back living in the U.S. in Williamsburg after five years in Germany. Ed is in his 18th year with the Army and both he and Lynn are at Ft. Eustis, where Lynn is working in civil service. They are active members of the Porsche club having been able to ship their two Porsches home from Germany.

Linda Fite writes that she and family were trapped by the Blizzard of '83 at JFK for 20 hours, and a day and a half later they arrived in Montego Bay but were too busy to meet Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip, who were also in town.

Lyn Milton Walker wrote from California that she has given up all activities and travel to plunge full time into an M.B.A. program and loves it.

Margaret Mapp Young wrote me in March that spring brings three different baseball teams.

It looks as if Marion MacRae will find herself back in San Francisco after she had just refound Washington, DC. Marion works for Bank of America and in her spare time she does gardening and interior decorating.

Daphne Baynham White and family are in Dallas, where Daphne's son and Peggy Pittman Patterson's daughter are in the same class for gifted children. Daphne has worked for Merrill Lynch Realty as a broker, while husband is a lawyer.

Charlotte Moore Williams is currently serving as president of the Board of Directors of the Sheltered Workshop of Lynchburg, Inc.

From our Class President Page Munroe Renger came word that she spent a delightful six weeks at Myrtle Beach and then came home to enjoy "no responsibilities" when the children were off at camp. Page still jogs two miles a day plus walks four miles a day, and then she and the dog do another mile. No wonder she's in great shape.

From our secretary, my only news is by the time you read this I will be a (step) grandmother — and not even 40. I've been working part time in a local real estate firm here in Madison and spent every available moment on our beach this summer. I'm back in school to take a real estate course for my license and passed my mid-term with flying colors after going through hysteria over it all. Been too long out of school! John is doing very well with his new company though hates the commute to Stamford two times a day.

It will be spring at Sweet Briar when you read these notes, but I'm writing them after another wonderful fall Alumnae Council visit. Those of you who haven't visited in a while will, I think, be pleased that the new additions and renovations to older buildings have been accomplished with an eye to both tradition and progress. Sweet Briar's emphasis on those two aspects are part of what gives the college its appeal, and thus its strength. The rest might well be summed up by a scene I witnessed at a recent stepsinging (yes, they still have it!) when the Quad rang with young, vibrant voices singing their own adaptation of the pop hit, "We are Family." As Nengah Fry said in her inaugural address (which I had the privilege of hearing, thanks to my job as your secretary), quoting Sweet Briar's original charter, "Sweet Briar is...peculiar to its own." There's no place like it anywhere, for my money, and I'm always proud to hear that we dedicated alumnae play such an important part in keeping SBC on the list of top-ranked women's colleges, allowing us to attract outstanding students and faculty.

Each time I visit, I'm welcomed as warmly as though I were the most important person on campus, and you will be, too, when you come home to Sweet Briar. Speaking of which, circle May '86 on your calendar NOW, and plan on joining us for our 15th reunion. It'll make you feel as if you were 21 again! Besides, you'll get to see lots of old friends, like...

Karen Murphy Parkman, who has moved to Lincolnville, ME, a tiny coastal village; John is director of the Mid-Coast Teachers' Center in nearby Rockport. Son John has entered first grade and Karen is "happily unemployed" for the present and settling into her new home. Also in Maine is Lendon Gray, who wrote in November she'd just returned from six weeks in Germany, competing against the world's top dressage riders on "Seldom Seen," the horse she hopes to ride in the 1984 Olympic Trials. She notes that Diane Catanzaro '77 has become a serious dressage rider and is doing a super job of running her own stable. Lendon also reports having enjoyable business cum pleasure visits from SBC's director of riding, Jill Randles. Lendon's family's Puckerbrush Riding Center in Dixmont, ME, was also presented with a new filly sired by their Hanoverian stallion and out of "Bunny Wabbit," a grey mare formerly owned by SBC.

A bit further south in Cape Cod, MA, Liz Mumford is painting full time. She had a very good show in August '82 and is working with a children's choir and her new Rottweiler. Patricia Fuller and husband Lee DeSorgher are in Holliston, MA, having recently moved from Boston. Pat reports she's running workshops on teen sexuality and related issues for teens, and for professionals working with teenagers. She's also a counselor at a home for unwed mothers and at a family planning and abortion clinic. As if that weren't enough, she's active in local and state politics, mother to 6-year-old Justin, and was imminently expecting #2 as these notes were due.

In Oriskany, NY, Denise Wisell Gustafson and Paul recently celebrated his promotion to Major and are anticipating a move this summer, but at deadline time didn't know whether it would be Virginia, Connecticut, California, or elsewhere! They hosted a 16-year-old Spanish exchange student last school year and Nesi got a taste of being mother to a teenager instead of to the "under-6 crowd" (tell me about it!).

Dorothy Wetzig Brand is in Elmira, NY, with husband John and children J.G., 4, and Laura, 1½. She writes that she ran a marathon and continues to jog, play tennis, and ski, among other things. (Ye Gads, another SuperMom!) Maggie Mather Feldmeier is still in the Syracuse area, working part time as director of development and public relations for CONTACT, a 24-hour telephone counseling service. She's also been working on developing some listening skills workshops. Husband John is still "buried" in the family manufacturing business, but they manage to squeeze in tennis, skiing, and family and house projects. Julie (3) is in nursery school and Kate (6) is in first grade.

From Tarrytown, NY, Kay Brown Grala notes the birth of daughter Margaret Elaine on March 18, 1983, and Wendy Weiler, chief of our alumnae club in the Big Apple, had two weighty events to report when I saw her at Alumnae Council. She's been named vice president of marketing for Temps America, formerly Mature Temps, Inc., the national temporary employment subsidiary of Colonial Penn Group, Inc. She's also engaged to one Donald Chappell, a Southern gentleman transplanted to Wall Street. Wendy also reports that Marie Walkley Giannini, returned from a long sojourn in Florence, Italy, has now settled in N.Y.C. and is working for a firm that deals in neighborhood rehabilitation. Pinky has a 5-year-old daughter, Eugenie.

Wendy keeps in touch with a good many N.Y.C. '71-ers, including Ellen Weintraub, who recently relocated to Chicago, where she works, according to Wendy, for Merrill Lynch as a "very successful bond trader." Mary Lou Skinner is at home in Middleburg, NY, running her father's car dealership and being an architect on the side, as well as making frequent trips to Santa Fe, NM, to visit old SBC beau Rocky. Wendy also reports that Mani Monahan '78, a member of the NYC Alumnae Club, completed the October 22, '83, New York City Marathon, thereby raising some $600 in pledges for the club, a scheme devised by Wendy. (Glad to see she's not VP of Marketing for nuthin'!)

Sioux Greenwald has a new job with Chemical Bank in telecommunications. Sioux reports that she saw Dre Bateman, who's still with Dept. of Agriculture, during a visit to Washington, DC, this past July, and visits Wendy Weiss Smith in Massachusetts fairly regularly. She also sends news of Dee Kysor Smith, who's in vet school at VPI. Still in NYC is Mimi Fahs, who in October had just accepted her first faculty appointment as a health economist at the Mount Sinai School of Medicine of the City University of NY. By day she researches, teaches and develops a new curriculum for medical students "to teach them socially responsible, cost-conscious decision making," and at night she "hangs out" with an architect, a rock and roll drummer, and a music producer in a loft south of the Village. Remember her as the Mad Hatter in our senior play? Type casting!

Heading south again, Jeannette Bush Miller and Flip have moved from Ft. Lee to Montclair, NJ. Where Jeannette is enjoying the tremendous challenge of her new job as personnel supervisor at a large NY law firm, with offices in Newark and Morristown, NJ.

Ruth Allen Budde (Alan) are in Medford, NJ, with William (2½) and Alan (1). She's given up copy editing for the nonce and volunteers for church and Junior League. Nearby in Summit, NJ, Anne Milbank Mell is in her second term as president of a junior women's club; she also works in Jr. League and contributes her talents as president of the Northern New Jersey SBC alumnae club. She enjoys tennis and yoga on the side. John is still with Bristol Myers International in NYC, and Meredith (6) and Johnny (3) add to the fun. Anne also reports seeing a lot of Jeannette Bush Miller.

And last in our NJ contingent, Candy Gilmore Warner called from Clinton to let us know of the birth of her first child, Ashley Taylor Warner, about 7 months old by now. Candy's husband Bill is personnel manager at Bamberger's; Candy is cleverly managing her workload of baby and business by staying home with a computer; she does accounting for bond arbitrage traders.

Has anyone in Philadelphia heard from Ann Tippin Hughes? Her Notes reminder card came back with a note from some concerned stranger who noted she hadn't lived there for years! We hate to lose people like that...Ann, if you're out there, drop us a line!

Speaking of Philly, I attended Mary Helen Layton's lovely May wedding to George Edward Bates, Jr., in the historic Hill-Physick-Keith House. She's an attorney with Archer and Griner in the New Jersey Philadelphia suburbs, and he's an educational administrator. Mary is still riding, schooling horses for dressage-minded clients, and keeping herself in horses with none of the expense or inconvenience! Wish I'd thought of that.

Katie Horan donated her horse to the First City Troop of Philadelphia to make time for other pursuits, including the training of two new English Cocker Spaniel puppies and her work for the Committee for Dressage at Devon. She's still a stockbroker with Merrill Lynch in N.Y.C. and lives in St. David's, PA.

Down in Baltimore, Molly Clark Ruzicka and Glen are still bookish; Molly is a freelance editor working for publishers there and in Washington, and Glen still commutes by train to the Library of Congress, where he is rare book conservator and hand binder. Not far from there, on Capitol Hill, Rosemary Dunaway Trible's husband Paul is completing his first year in office as the Republican Congressman from Virginia's first district. Rosemary's been too busy to send in a card, but we read about her and the children (Mary Katherine, 6, and Paul Seward III, 3½) in the newspapers quite often. Also in D.C. is Michels English and husband Rob Quartel, she still a management consultant with McKinsey and Co. They had a special vacation trip this year: a month-long visit to Asia to see Rob's parents who were living in Indonesia; they also managed to see the sights of Java, Bali, Thailand, Hong Kong, and Hawaii. Cindy Clarke reports she's still a legal advisor to the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization (INTELSAT) in D.C.

In the metropolitan D.C. area, Melissa McDowell Stevens and Shelby make their home in Alexandria, VA. They returned from four wonderful years in Honolulu after 10 months at the Command and General Staff College at Ft. Leavenworth, KS. Shelby is at the Pentagon in the office of the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations, and Melissa is teaching algebra and geometry to ninth graders at the Potomac School in McLean, VA. They have two sons, Brian, 7, a first grader at Potomac, and Sean, 2.

Robi Randolph Hearing called me up out of the blue a week before deadline: I hadn't talked to her in 13 years, though we were sophomore roomies. In between cutting out paper bag masks for sons Peter (4) and twins Steven and Alex (3) and motherly remarks like, "No, you can't eat a banana through a bag," she filled me in: husband David, a Navy Lieutenant Commander, is at the Pentagon, and Robi is a Smithsonian Institution "resident," giving tours on the 19th century, and doing Red Cross work as well. They live in Fairfax, VA, not far from Christine McLain Buck who is in Falls Church. She's still working as an engineer, and husband Craig's law firm is prospering. Chris reported a trip in September '82 to Bolivia and Peru and also the birth of her sister Kathy McLain Brault's ('68) daughter Kelly on Jan. 2, '83.

Carol Cooper and I had a nice long telephone visit during which she reported earning a bronze medal last July for outstanding service in her position as a dictaphone transcriber for the U.S. Patent Office, where she has worked for 11 years. She's still in her condo at Watergate of Landmark (in Alexandria) and is active in a French social and conversation group, the National Federation of the Blind, and the Metropolitan Organ Society (yes, she still plays, and she favors jazz and pop music these days). She enjoys monthly social outings with the Volunteers for the Visually Handicapped and playing with her "opticon," a fascinating device about the size of a penlite flashlight that converts print into a tactile image (it makes the shape of the letters with pins). She reads these Alumnae Notes that way and also loves to get typed letters.

Gina Mancusi Wills and Ashley are now in Vienna (though Ashley was recalled to Granada — as I was preparing these notes; his return was anxiously awaited as I sent these in.) Ashley is to pursue an M.A. in international and political affairs with a soupçon of economics thrown in, courtesy of the Foreign Service. Zach (6) and Olivia (2½) keep Gina occupied, and when we spoke she hadn't been settled long enough to undertake other endeavors, though she has held down numerous and varied Embassy jobs in Bucharest (handling the Fulbright exchange program), S. Africa (student counseling), and Barbados (family liaison officer). I'm looking forward to tapping her for some SBC stuff; she always was my favorite Ass!

Geographically, here's where the Sprinskys come in. Bill is still with the Defense Mapping Agency and has been busy with that Pershing II missile and international hot spots; he plans to retire this summer and seek an academic post, but where the penny will drop in the post-retirement roulette game, nobody knows. I'm still up to my posterior in Matthew antics and horse manure: stepdaughter Judith, 17, and Matt, 4, are still into showing our two Appaloosas, who are coming right along in the hunter/jumper shows locally. I'm doing volunteer work for Army Community Services and taking a correspondence course that's supposed to leave me with a submittable children's book manuscript when I finish. On the side, I have a horse show photography business, called Foxfield Photography, and have been working for some temporary agencies one or two days a week. That and a number of miscellaneous pursuits keep me off the streets. One of the highlights of my year is the chance to hear from all my old friends, and I appreciate the kind words on so many of the postcards this year.

Down in the Hunt Country, Kathy Garcia Pegues and John are busy with Emily, now in kindergarten and a budding gymnast, and Adam, 3. Kathy is CRÖP Hunger Walk coordinator for Fauquier County and had just finished their big event — a 10-mile hike to raise funds for world hunger relief that logged twice the number of participants recorded the previous year. John is a varsity wrestling coach, as well as assistant principal, and had a state champion matman last year! Kathy reported spending a summer weekend with Wendy Norton Brown and family, having a great time playing tennis and swimming in the river.

Alix Sommer Pearce checked in from Fredericksburg, VA, with news of husband John, now editing Chesapeake Country Life, a regional magazine published in Maryland, and also teaching two preservation courses at Mary Washington College and a George Mason U. Alix is still assistant principal at Drew Middle School outside Fredericksburg and working with John on their 1920's house; she traveled with him to SBC last March for the architecture symposium.

In Richmond, Nan Glaser Lagow is a part-time attorney and full-time mother to Elizabeth Childrey Lagow, born Dec. 31, '82.

Rebecca Randolph's engagement to

Scott William Boyers has been announced. Rebecca graduated from Colgate Darden Graduate School of Business Administration, UVA, and is employed by Price Waterhouse Corp., Richmond. Scott is vice president of Micro Systems, Inc., Beltsville, MD.

Up the pike in Petersburg, Amanda Megargee Sutton sent news of her Nov. '82 nuptials, at which Brooke Thomas Dold and Frances Barnes Kennamer were attendants, and at which Nan wore Frances' wedding gown. Among the guests were Pat Conner Bland and Bruce, along with then 4-month-old Catherine. Manda and Mike have since produced James Marshall, born Sept. 27, '83, and now doing fine after initial respiratory difficulties as a side effect of his C-section birth. Having missed Alumnae Council because of that long-awaited event, Manda is already looking forward to Reunion.

Kathy Jones Youell is also in Petersburg, a full time senior psychologist at Poplar Spring Hospital and in private practice. She and John, who is with Philip Morris, have two children, Blanton (7), a soccer player, and Kate (4), a budding "pre-ette." Kathy reports a nice visit in autumn '82 with Kathy Wilson Lamb and family while in Atlanta at a workshop.

In Roanoke, Mary Frances Oakey Marshall and Heman have bought a new house; Heman continues to put in long hours as a lawyer and Mary Frances stays busy with the PTA, Law Wives, and Junior League, as well as son Tevis, now in second grade, and daughter Claiborne, now in kindergarten. If you see a car with plates that read "UVA-SBC," wave and honk at the Marshalls! Mary Frances also writes of having seen Carol Newman at her sister Harriet's ('74) wedding in March '83. Carol is now in her second year of law school at Duke. Mary Frances asks if I'm a neighbor of her sister, who lives about a dozen blocks away on N. 36th St. in Arlington (yes, but it's a big county, Mary Frances).

Becky Bottomley Meeker and David are in love with the Tidewater area after a year with their new business, Gloucester Yachts Inc. They also spent a great weekend with Kathy Wilson Lamb and family in Hilton Head over Labor Day '83.

Rounding out the Virginia contingent for this year is Eldie Taylor Thompson, still in Monroe. Clay is 6 now and in school, and daughter Meredith is 2.

Across the border in North Carolina, Catherine Gross Hendren is in Winston-Salem at Wake Forest U.'s Law School. Psychologist husband Tom is still in New Berne in private practice, and they get together on weekends. Cathy bade me tell her erstwhile roomie Trent Stevenson that 10 years without writing is enough suspense for her (so where ARE you, Trent??), and to announce to the world that Cami Crocker Wadehouse had beautiful children. Susan Schmidt had been teaching environmental ethics and toxic substances at N.C. State in Raleigh and then switched to teaching creative writing at Carteret Tech. College, while "trying to earn an income freelance writing (and) working on a novel." She's also doing a lot of sailing and last summer kayaked 300 miles along the coast of Alaska. (One can hardly call us a dull bunch!)

Margaret Highsmith Dickson's life is full, what with working three days a week for radio stations in Fayetteville and Wilmington, NC. Husband John is in his seventh year prosecuting in the state courts, and the pair became parents again in April, producing a sister, Ann Bright Dickson (called Bright) for son Wyatt, now 3. Margaret notes that old roommate Claire Kinnett Tate's daughter is also named Bright. In Jacksonville, NC, Betsy Proctor Jennings is teaching second grade and taking care of Mac (9) and Katie (7) while Joe, now a USMC Major, is in Okinawa for six months. He's based at Camp Lejeune and should be returning just about now. Betsy remarks that teaching is "one career that has consistently survived moving every two years and has given me maximum time to spend with my family. Hard as hell to get tenure anywhere, though! Moving often does have two distinct advantages — you see the country and you get your house clean!"

Over in Charlotte, Frances Woltz Fennebresque and John, an attorney, have four children (the class record so far, to my best knowledge): John, 12½, Amy 9½, Frances, 5, and Billy, 1. She dashed off a short note ending, "Need I say how I spend my days?" Nopa...have you thought of starting a taxi and errand service? Should be a snap.

Also on the Mother-go-round is Caroline Tuttle Murray. She and husband Rick moved last summer to Reidsville, NC, Rick's home town, where he has joined a law firm. It's just 25 miles from their old home of Greensboro, and they're building a new house. Caroline is teaching a class in English smocking, studying local history and learning to play bridge, at long last. Their children are Cassidy (5) and Scott (2).

And last among our North Carolina contingent, but certainly not least, is Pamolu Oldham. She's in the news, having been awarded a $5,000 Artists Fellowship by the N.C. Arts Council. Word is she plans to use the fellowship to complete work on a novel. She is also, according to a news clipping I have from The Pilot, the founder and editor of Crane's Creek Press, co-director of the Crane's Creek Center in Cameron, NC, and since 1975 has been an instructor in English at Fayetteville Technical Institute. Pamolu earned her M.E.A. in fiction from Columbia U. and is also a graduate of the Radcliffe Publishing Procedures course. The article casually mentions she's a painter and sculptor as well as a writer. My hat's off to you, Pamolu.

Caroline Gibbes Crosswell didn't write this year, but I got a card from the Alumnae Office indicating she's an ophthalmic surgeon, a bit of news that may previously have passed unnoticed. She's in Columbia, SC. From Knoxville, TN, Lynn Massey Vogel wrote to report a name and address change: after nine years of matrimony, she's finally getting around to notifying the authorities. Lynn left SBC in May '68 and transferred to U.T. in Knoxville, where she received her B.A. in English, then taught high school English for two years before going to U.T. law school. She married Howard H. Vogel, a fellow law school classmate and received her J.D. degree from U.T. in December '75 but has not yet practiced because she's been changing diapers for the past eight years. Diaper-ees include Carolyn (8), Alex (6), and Anna Kathryn (3). Good to hear from you after so long, Lynn!

Foley, AL, is still home for Carolyn Jones Walthall, who writes she keeps up with the outside world by reading the NY Times, as her life focuses on school, church, community controversies, children and the like. Husband Julian is busy with church life and the chairmanship of the PTA playground committee, and Carolyn occupies herself with volunteer work at son David's (7) elementary school, especially coordinating a resource room at the school called the Imagination Center. She explains that the children there have no art or music and she has taken on as her cause this year the implementation of an art/music program with community-volunteers for 1500 elementary students. There's also Claiborne (4), of course, and Carolyn also tries "to salvage part of (her) person for Julian and myself." Also in Alabama is Martha Roton Terry. She and Jack are still in Mobile but took a fantastic trip to Pebble Beach, CA, last June. Jack played golf while Martha took side trips on business to San Diego and Denver. Son Caldwell is a pretty good golfer for a 2½-year old, according to his mother, who also notes she sees Frances Barnes Kennamer often and can't wait until our next reunion. There's a sensible soul!

Fellow Dixie-ite Beryl Bergquist Faris has expanded her Atlanta, GA, law firm with the addition of Robert C. Schock, former General Counsel for the Atlanta District Office of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. The firm continues to specialize in immigration and naturalization law. Neighbor Cindy Davis Rackley has been with First National Bank of Atlanta for three years now, was promoted to vice president last July and last fall was appointed head of corporate communications (public relations). She reports having seen Kathy Barnes Hendricks, Becky Mitchell Keister, and Corbin Kendig Rankin, all SBC '70.

Kathy Wilson Lamb is also in Atlanta, and she continues to be involved with Marie's (8) and Katie's (5) schools, volunteer work, tennis, and a recent move to a larger house not far from her old one.

A bit further south, in Louisiana, Carol Everest Keeney reports to move to Lafayette and by now will have borne her second child. She and husband Arthur were hoping for a girl since they have three sons (two of his and one of hers). She also sent word of Mimi Sonsteli, who has a little boy and lives in Pennsylvania. Carol is "not working" (fat chance, with a new baby!) but is enjoying stained glass craftsmanship. Mim Washabaugh Meglan and Vaughn, who is with Standard Oil, have been in New Orleans about a year by now, and have a cute little house just 15 minutes from the French Quarter (watch out for old classmates round about Mardi Gras time!). She's in school full time at Tulane chasing an M.B.A. and loves the academic challenge, but not "being a starving student again!" Sorry, Mim, but I haven't heard a peep from or about Debbie Pigman. Has anyone else had news of her? Last we heard she was in Ghana, West Africa.

Down in Florida, Barbie Gracey is entrenched in her family's Boca Raton real estate agency, where she specializes in physician's malpractice insurance (her younger brother handles the real estate end). Barbie hints at a semi-long distance romance; no wedding plans right now, but she's enjoying herself. Cami Crocker Wodehouse and Chuck finished and moved into their new house last March; she's still teaching algebra part-time in a private school where Charlie, 7, is a student. Carey, now 3, also keeps her busy, as do fishing trips with Chuck, who is still with Seaboard Coastal RR. Our other note-sending Floridian is Kate Worobec Story, an account executive (stock broker) with Merrill Lynch in Tampa, having finished #2 in her training class in NYC last July, thereby winning a trip to Jamaica after just three weeks in commission production! Husband Steve is a tax attorney with Hugh Culverhouse, owner of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers pro football team. Son Stephen, Jr. (4) has a genius IQ and keeps Kate on her toes...he's so smart, it's scary, Kate says. And anyone who's interested in "networking" with a stockbroker, give Kate a call — she loves it and says it's a tremendous opportunity.

Further west in Texas, Nancy Liebowitz Voss and Bob are in Lewisville, just north of Dallas, where they've been for the past five years. Nancy's teaching math at the local high school and Bob is a helicopter pilot who flies offshore to the oil rigs. Son Todd is 6 now, in first grade and into soccer; daughter Allison is 3 and "into everything." Margaret Mackie Sanders is in Dallas proper, in a general radiology practice based in both hospital and office settings. Son John has started kindergarten and is also a soccer player; he and mom have also taken up skiing and jogging.

In the rival city of Houston, Bev Van Zandt Steele and Bob continue to sail and race most weekends, scuba dive whenever possible, and enjoy being back in Houston with family and friends. They survived last summer's hurricane and the autumn flooding without damage. Bev is still with TRW and Bob with Exxon, and Bev taught sailing at a women's sailing camp last summer; she's looking forward to it again this summer and to advancing into racing. She reports seeing Lind Dore Fountain, Liz Glassman, Liz Clegg Woodard '72, and Betty Duxon, who by now (according to Bev) has wed a fellow psychology Ph. D. named Alfred J. Kahn, currently the director of the counseling and testing service at U. Houston. Betty's private practice in psychology is in the process of expanding, and what with a wedding to plan, a growing practice, and a search for a new house, and professional and community commitments, she was looking forward to a much calmer 1984.

Heading north again, in Cincinnati, OH, Rhoda Allen Brooks and John managed a trip from London to Venice on the Orient Express, minus "chicken pox-infest children" Lyn and John, both 7. Rhoda is taking a vacation from Junior League commitments but urges us to support the SBC bulb program. Gale Hull Whetzel chimed in from Columbus, busy with her two boys, ages 4 and 8. Husband Gene is with a very large law firm there, and Gale, while horseless for the moment, is working on getting her American Horse Shows Association judge's card so she can "do" some small local shows. She's also trying to get up the nerve to do freelance articles for magazines. If she's like me, after she gets the nerve, she'll have to work on getting the time!

Patti Schwalm is in Brookfield, IL, having "finally" finished her Ph. D. at the U. of Chicago. She's published five articles, including a color cover photo on BioScience and Science. She tells us she's the only graduate student in history to win both awards in top research in herpetology from national societies. And Mary Barnes is working on Chicago's Loop as a marketing analyst for Continental Grain Co.

Indianapolis, IN, is home again for Judy Brown Fletcher and Steve, returned from Gainesville, FL. Steve has started his own environmental consulting firm. Katie, 10, and Will, 6, are helping mom and dad renovate a 1920s house, and Judy's taking a year off to plaster, strip, paint, etc... she's become so expert at demolition Steve calls her the Corps of Engineers!

From Sheboygan, WI, Linda Lewis Brauer and Warren's twin boys, Scott and Erich (now in kindergarten), and daughter Lindsay (4) keep them busy. Warren has a family practice and Linda's taking on a new project turning a 40-year-old Dairy Queen into a "beautiful dental office" of her own. On the side she does volunteer work and is on two committees of the Wisconsin State Dental Association. Lynn Manegold Rix and Paul are in Madison, where Paul is a journalist with the Wisconsin State Journal, recently noted in the NY Times and Newsweek. They have two kids, Adam (7) and Natalie (4). Lynn has a cottage business designing and producing children's clothing she markets at better shops from Chestnut Hill to San Francisco and from Minneapolis to Naples. Somehow they still find time to travel, ski, and canoe.

Dayton Lawson Miller didn't check in by letter, but her address change marks a move from Iowa to Boise, ID. Word of Jennifer Slade came through Katie Horan, who says Jennifer and husband Gary Bilofski have homes in both Michigan and Montana because of the nature of Gary's work in ecological studies and research in conservation. Mary Bell Parks has begun a day-care business in her home in Loveland, CO, to spend working time with Julia (5) and Steven (2). She's into reading Margaret Pym (yeah, good stuff, Mary!) and running in 10K races — her best time so far is 54:16.

And on the West Coast, heading down the home stretch, we come to Susan O'Malley in Seattle, WA; she teaches in a physical therapist assistant program at Green River Community College in Auburn, WA. In January she was named program coordinator. She's still single and enjoys hiking and mountain-climbing. Jacque Penny Goldstone and Bob moved to Portland, OR, from Yakima, WA, last June, opening their third Budget Records & Tapes store. Jacque notes her "children," cats Jethro and China Rose, were painted by NY portrait artist Mim Vang Olsen and are now on a card made by the Carolyn Bean card company. She reports talking with Mary Lou Skinner and Meredith Mill McKelway and says they're both doing fine. She also instructed me to tell you all that you did "a super job of giving last year...it was the best ever." Dig down deep when she and our other class fund agents call again on this year's drive. If you visited Sweet Briar again, you'd realize how important our gifts are to preserving and enhancing that special place.

Our Golden Staters round out our travelog this year. Cindy Riddle is by now through with her training program sponsored by the Director's Guild. She spent the second half of '82 working on two TV series, Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, and Tales of the Gold Monkey. A word to the wise: she recommends the training program for SBC grads who "want to get into film and TV production." Finally, Comer Schmoeller Mari is still with Fireman's Fund but has moved into the sales department. She works in Novato and lives in San Rafael for the time being, but reports she'll move to San Jose (probably has by now) for about a year and then go elsewhere in California. Her twins are now in second grade and enjoying school.

That concludes our Magical Mystery Tour for another year, so let me wind up with a plea to all our unheard-from classmates. We know you're busy, but sometime in the next year, let me have word of you so I can pass it along to your classmates, who still remember you fondly and, while wondering where you are and how you're doing, wish you well. And remember to plan ahead for Reunion '86! With this much advance hoopla, there'll be few excuses for not being here!

Thank you for the great response. Each year the notes get longer and more interesting and fun to read.

Randy Anderson Trainor has had a busy year. She married Tom Trainor and moved to southern New Hampshire. She "inherited" Tom's 12-year-old daughter, and she and Tom had their own son Cliff, born this summer. The family is planning to open a large greenhouse operation

From her farm in Tennessee, Bel Bashinsky White writes that she has been busy with volunteer work and watching her son Case grow up. Her husband Russell is farming full time and Bef helps him with general farm chores.

Jeannette Block De Poy has taken a leave of absence from her job as a mental health worker to travel with her husband Scott, who is on four with the Alabama Shakespeare Festival. She has just been appointed the vice president of recognition of the Metropolitan Atlanta Chapter of the Red Cross.

In Winston-Salem, NC, Linda Carroll Matthews is working as a lab technician at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine in OB/GYN research. Her husband Brian is completing his third year of residency in otolaryngology. Creighton, their 4½-year-old daughter, is looking forward to "real school" and enjoys gymnastics.

Writing from the hospital, CeCe Clark Turner announces the birth of her son Clark Oct. 4, 1983. CeCe has been employed with Hop-In Food Shops as the property manager and is looking forward to some time at home with Clark and 2-year-old Cameron.

Carol Clement-Pavia and Frank moved into a new home in Palos Verdes, CA, and spent the summer learning how to grow tomatoes and pumpkins in their garden. They are expecting their first child in June.

Anne Cogswell Burris has been busy expanding her family. Sons Scott, age 3, and Ben, age 1, were expecting a new brother or sister by Christmas. Anne and Lon took a relaxing vacation to Bermuda in July and were planning to visit Wendy Wise in November.

In New Orleans, Yvonne Collier Gwin and Oscar have moved into the Gwin family home with sons Mac and Elder, ages 5 and 4. Yvonne has a new daughter, Yvonne Marguerite. Their older son, Mac, started kindergarten at Newman School.

A cheerful note came from Cathy Cowdery Etheridge in Raleigh, NC, who writes that life is full and wonderful while caring for husband Bill and Blake, their son. Cathy and Bill were expecting their second child in December.

Here in Richmond, Catherine Cranston Whitham finds herself busy working part time for executive recruiting and placement at Thalhimers and volunteering with the Jr. League and as a Sunday School teacher. Children Ann, 3, and Craig, now 1, fill her spare time, as does her job as Admissions Rep for SBC in the Richmond area. Her husband Whit is a partner with a law firm here.

Beverley Crispin Heffernan continues to work with the Dept. of Energy in D.C. She and her husband Jim and son Jimmy, age 2, live in McLean with three golden retrievers and three horses. The family enjoys flying around the U.S. in their plane and visiting Nancy Haight, who lives and teaches in South Hamilton, MA. In June, they spent two weeks in France.

Janis Csicsek Dodge and Stanley had their first son, Trey, in May '83. Janis is working for The Bank for Savings in Malden, MA, as marketing and sales coordinator.

Penny Czarra wrote in December that she is back in Bethesda after living and working in India for six years.

Bonnie Lee Damianos Rampone and Chuck are planning to build on a wooded lot near E. Setauket, NY, to accommodate their growing family. Chuckie, age 3, has a new brother, Christopher, who has just turned 1. Bonnie Lee is still on maternity leave from teaching, and she and Chuck were looking forward to an Acapulco vacation in January. Marcia Thomas Horner, husband Jim, and three daughters attended Christopher's christening in June.

Marsha Decker Power has lived in Dallas, TX, for over four years. She is the associate executive director at Medical City Dallas Hospital, a job that keeps her very busy. It is with sadness that I write that Marsha's husband Ernie Power died of cancer in August just as he was beginning his last year of SMU Law School. Ernie and Marsha had enjoyed three wonderful years of marriage.

Stephanie Dewey Hoffman is a freelance commercial artist and is married to the owner of an ad agency in Memphis, TN. Her husband invented a new kitchen gadget nationally marketed called the Tab Grabber to open cans and bottles.

In Charlottesville, Louisa Dixon is working in the UVA French Dept., where her favorite duty is spending Christmas in Paris as assistant to the director of the UVA mini-mester in France. Louisa spent 10 days this summer in Haiti near Cap Haitian with a work camp group building an agricultural school.

Sarah Dowdey, who has a master's of library science and a master's in modern European history, works as a law librarian for Morgan, Lewis, and Bockius in Washington, DC, and lives in Alexandria. At Christmas time she was "housesitting" in Paris.

Mary Dubuque Desloge and Chris are the proud parents of William Livingston Desloge, II, now 1 year old. Mary has been busy redecorating their house, and she and Chris visited Nantucket in June. She passes on the news that Jo Ellen Lenoir and Nan Cunningham traveled to Portugal in August.

Jeannette Egli Stamm is employed by General Physics Corp. in Columbia, MO, as a staff analyst. Her job entails emergency training and planning for nuclear power plants. Jeannette is also serving as an officer in the Delaware Air National Guard and trying to find time for soccer and roller skating.

Having retired from teaching riding at Foxcroft School, Katylou Gray Brittle is now galloping race horses and schooling hunters at different farms around Middleburg, VA. Katylou enjoys setting her own hours and plays tennis when she is not on a horse.

Lisa Hall, who has an M.A. in art history from SMU, is in her fourth year as an instructor and slide curator with the Dept. of Art History at Fla. State U. in Tallahassee. Last summer she had a course at Goethe Institute near Munich and traveled in Germany and France.

Ellen Harrison Saunders has been trying to balance her time between her job in public relations at Obici Hospital, community activities, and her new son, Harrison. Ellen is involved with the SBC Alumnae Council and visited the campus in October for the inauguration of President Fry.

It has been a busy year for Melissa Greenwood Riemer. She and Jeff bought a new house after selling their old house, spent two weeks on Kiawah Island, SC, with her parents, and managed to have their second daughter, Katherine Holmes, all in a three-month period. Melissa is now trying to get a full night's sleep, spending her daylight hours chasing Emily, who is three, and caring for Katherine.

Cathie Grier completed her master's in counseling and has returned to Charlotte where she teaches skills for vocational success in a public high school. She takes the students on an outdoor challenge course which includes high-rope walking and rappelling.

In Phoenix, AZ, Helen Hodges Richards is teaching piano lessons in her home and taking care of Sarah, 3½, and James, 16 mos. She is also correspondence secretary for the Arizona State Music Association. Helen's husband Steve works for Diamond's Dept. Store as a system programmer. They vacationed in St. Petersburg, FL, in October.

Neil Hunter King was married to Chip Labor Day weekend in Charlottesville. Many of our classmates helped Neil and Chip celebrate their wedding day.

Beth Jones Elkins continues to work as manager of insurance and pension benefits for a steel company in Pittsburgh and Steve is a tax lawyer with Gulf Oil. They vacationed in Scotland and England last year and are planning to add a new member to the Elkins household in April.

Temporarily retired from nursing on an alcohol and drug detoxification unit, Kate Joyner Bailey is now a professional parent to Ed (28 mos.) and Charlie (7 mos.). Kate's husband Jerry is hoping to leave Atlanta in a few years and move the family back to a farm in Virginia. Kate is sharpening her skills in the Georgia master gardener program.

Christine Kjellstrom Douglas and Sandy are in their second and last year in Hong Kong. Christine fills her days with teaching tennis and swimming and taking classes in Chinese cooking and Ikebana flower arranging. They have traveled to Malaysia and back to the Adirondacks in the U.S. She has been through eight typhoon warnings.

Mary-Somers Knight Estrada has been trying to figure out life in Mexico while balancing a five month old on one hip.

On the way home from the hospital, Carol Leslie St. John mailed us news of the birth of her second son, Kevin Charles. Brian Michael is now 2½ and keeps Carol busy. She is still free-lancing for a New York design firm and running her own design business.

Karin Lindgren is finishing up a dissertation in French at the U. of Mich., where she is this year an official translator for the U. of Mich. Center for Research on Economic Development, dealing especially with West Africa.

Dee Passarello Matthews and her husband are both managers for American Bell, Inc., in Madison, NJ. In November they had a trip to St. Martin in the Caribbean.

From Atlanta, a birth announcement comes from Jane Perry Bean. Emily Phillips Bean was born on Feb. 6, 1983, and joined her brother Jeffrey, age 3½. Jane is on leave from her teaching job at Ga. Tech in order to work on a certificate in translation and interpretation in French at Ga. State. Jeff has been busy building a new printing plant in Thomaston, GA.

Linda Poole is very busy in Cincinnati working as a paralegal and traveling on the job for the toxic shock syndrome cases. She visits Lexington, KY, for the races and is involved in the Jr. League in Cincinnati.

Carol Porter earned an M.B.A. from Case-Western Reserve and is now a senior officer and assistant to the managing officer of Park View Federal Savings and Loan Assoc.'s corporate headquarters in Mayfield Heights, OH.

Anne Ross Shipe was married in Charlottesville to Jim Shipe on April 23. Jim is a biochemist in the Dept. of Pathology at UVA. Anne and Jim honeymooned in Jamaica and have vacationed in New York. Sandra Vonetes did the flowers for Anne's wedding.

Sarah Ruhle Kyle and Ted are living in the country near Chapel Hill. They enjoy the quiet and their young springer spaniel, Persey.

In Charlotte, Sallie Scarborough has bought a condominium. She works for her father and took some time off to vacation in Austria and Switzerland this summer.

Betsy Scott Kimmel and Dennis have added Eric Scott to their family. He was born on March 1983 and has sister Kristin (3) to play with. Dennis is now with Smith-Kline in international marketing, and Betsy was able to join him for a three-week vacation in Sweden. Betsy is busy as the treasurer of the Jr. Women's Club of Haddonfield, NJ, and is supervising the addition of a new family room to their home.

March must have been a good time for babies. Ginny Shipe Cameron and Dennis had a second son, Andrew Blace, who joins brother Scott, now 2. Ginny is on the go with her insulation business as the housing industry is expanding. Her husband Dennis works in D.C. with the Dept. of Defense in the Waste, Fraud, and Abuse Division. The Camerons have bought some property in West Virginia on the Cacapon River and plan to build a "get away" cabin there.

Polly Shriver Kochan began her residency in radiology in Philadelphia in July. She and her husband announce the birth of their first child, Michael Edward Kochan, on Jan. 26, 1983.

Terry Starke Tash is substituting and tutoring at the Collegiate Schools in Richmond and doing some volunteer work in the public schools.

In Louisville, KY, Libby Stough Rush supplies the antique and interior design store, Bittners, with furniture which she purchases for them as an interior designer. She and Noel are enjoying their daughter Carolina, who is going on 2.

Nan Stuart Bagdikian and Eric have convinced Betsy Rawles to move to S. Lake Tahoe, CA, where they live with six golden retrievers, two cats, two horses, and four chickens. Nan is senior state humane officer.

In Louisville, KY, Barbie Tafel Thomas is keeping up a fast pace with her three children, Grant, 5; Clay, 3; and daughter Lee, who is 1. Barbie is playing team tennis, smocking for Lee, sailing with her husband and volunteering with the Jr. League.

Leslie Thornton is working for Grayanna Co., a public relations firm in Georgetown, DC. Most recently she has traveled around the U.S. with Prince Talal, a member of the Saudi royal family on behalf of UNICEF. Leslie planned to visit her mother in the British Virgin Islands in January.

Two trips to Virginia were enjoyed by Dorsey Tillatt Northrup this fall.

She attended Neil Hunter King's wedding in September and vacationed at The Homestead in October. Dorsey slipped over to Lexington, VA, for old times' sake. The Northrups are busy with family activities in Wooster, OH, and may be moving to West Virginia in the near future.

Rose Anne Toppin Cranz and Buzz had a little girl, Laura Foster, on July 31, 1983. The proud parents took her with them to Neil Hunter King's wedding in Charlottesville. Rose Anne is enjoying life in Fort Worth, TX.

Jennifer Turner Joiner and Dan moved back to Roanoke with their son Nathaniel Voss (3) in March. Dan works for Fralin and Waldron, and Jennifer is doing free-lance art work. The Joiners show American saddle-bred horses in the spring and summer and enjoy skiing in the winter months.

Maria and Sandra Vonetes are in D.C. where Maria works at the EPA for the government. Sandra has her own flower shop and enjoys seeing many SBC customers.

In Miami, Beppy Walton continues to work for Delta Airlines as a sales representative. She may be relocating in 1984.

Laura-Hope Walton Lawrence was graduated from Centenary College in 1976 with a B.A. in foreign language. She is a sales assistant with Merrill Lynch in Shreveport, LA, and will head the Client Service Dept. in 1984. Laura-Hope married Robert Edward Lawrence in 1979, and their daughter Hope Taylor was born in Feb. '82.

Ann Wesley Ramsey had a busy year completing an addition on their home and joining Rick on several business trips. When not carpooling or entertaining Rick, 4, and Alden, 2, Ann volunteers with the Jr. League and plays tennis with a women's group.

Another employee on Capitol Hill, Libby Whitley works for Senator Paul Trible, who represents Virginia. Libby and her sister Cindy '78 bought a house last summer and live with two dogs, a shepherd and a dachshund. Libby enjoys hiking and hunting, especially with a special friend in Denver.

Ashton Williams completed her M.B.A. this past year and is the vice president for This End Up Furniture Co. Ashton traveled to the Bahamas and spent as much time skiing at Snowshoe, WV, as she could get away from her job to do.

Worden Willis Galasso spends 80% of her time on the road with her job as senior loan analyst with Bank of Boston. Worden completed her M.B.A. last summer.

Nancy Wilson Tucker and her husband announce the birth of Nancy Leigh on Aug. 24, 1983. Edwin is 4½ and enjoys his sister.

On Dec. 17, 1983, Wendy Wise was married to Carlos J. Routh, Jr., a vice president of the international bond division of E.F. Hutton & Co. in New York. Wendy is an officer of Media Records, Inc., an auditor of advertising lineage, and is a member of the Junior League of New York.

This has been my busiest year since graduation. I have become involved with the Garden Club of Virginia and the Junior Board of the Virginia Home for Boys. As I write this, I am still working at the hospital but plan to semi-retire in January as we are expecting an addition to our family in February. We took a vacation to Jamaica last winter, and I plan to enjoy sitting by the wood stove rocking the baby this winter.

Keep in mind our 10th Reunion in May 1985.

1979

Secretary

Clara Jackman, 2364 Woodhurst Drive, Richmond, VA. 23233

Fund Agent

Carol Robinson, 2350 Kinnamon Rd., M, Winston-Salem, NC 27103

Hello! Piper Allan is attending the U. of Miss. Law School.

Susan Andrews Cruess and Leigh have bought a house in Minneapolis. Susan was promoted to commercial banking officer in the Agribusiness Division of Corporate Banking. Leigh is product development manager for the Financial Trading Group at Cargill.

Susan Anthony Lineberry and Neal did two very grown up things in September. They moved into their home and had a baby boy. Andrew Coleman Lineberry was born Sept. 14 and is to be a future wahoo!

Wendy Atee Woodward had a baby boy in March of '83. Stanley Edmund, Jr. (Teddy) is a bundle of joy. Husband Stanley has been promoted and the Woodwards are moving to Lexington, KY, where Stanley will be a manager at Castleton Farm. Wendy is thrilled to be moving into horse country and has a horse of her own.

Janet Baldwin graduated from SMU Law School in Dallas and is working at Mercantile Bank in Dallas as trust counsel in the Trust Department. Janet is Vice president of the "Slipper Club" — a young woman's social club which gives three parties a year. Janet reports that she is still dating someone special who is a '76 graduate of W&L.

Jody Boaze-Daniels is a research technician for the Dept. of Horticulture at Va. Tech. Jody was married to W Lee Daniels in April. Her husband is working on his Ph.D. in agronomy at Tech.

Laurie Bowen Carmichael and Archie have built a new home. Laurie's years in Virginia inspired them to build their house in the Williamsburg style. The Carmichaels would like people to come visit! Laurie has started selling the YT clothes line (division of Tanner) from her home and had a very successful showing. Laurie still teaches an exercise class and plays a lot of tennis.

Page Breakell Beeler moved from Charlotte to Martinsville, VA. Page and her husband bought a home and are having fun remodeling. Page got a job working for a law firm.

Bunny Brown Bomar was married to Bobby in August '82. Katie Ewald, Laura Tucker, and Holly Harrison were in the wedding and gave quite a show at the rehearsal dinner (complete with baton twirling, singing, and other frolicking!). The Bomars are living in Little Rock and Bunny is working for Merrill Lynch as a sales assistant. Bunny will be taking her broker's exam in early '84 and will then start selling. Watch out as she is already looking for customers!

Betsy Byrne Utterback and Jim moved to Bloomington, IN, where Jim continues to work for General Electric. Betsy is finishing up her M.A. at Indiana U. Jamie is almost two years old and will be having a little brother or sister in May. The Utterbacks were planning to be in Mexico for New Year's.

Sally Byron says all is great in "Balt-more." Sally is getting into water sports because of the interests of her fiancé. Sally will be married in the spring of '84. Sally saw Robin Behm in Maryland with a "politico" talking about the United Way campaign.

Gay Goracci is in her third year at Thomas Jefferson U. Medical School and really enjoys it. Gay is engaged and plans to marry in April of '84.

Chic Groner is the successful owner of The Three Gulls gift shop in Virginia Beach. I was lucky to have seen Chic making a big purchase with Nancy Hatch on the boardwalk in Virginia Beach. Chic is hoping that everyone will make it for Reunion. Chic mentioned that Janie Clark Morrison and Jed are expecting in March.

Pat Guild has been busy with long hours at a new job. She is working for the president of Lambert Publications, which publishes international directories. The people and the work are fascinating, a sign of a great job! Pat still manages to meet with new friends and SBC friends in D.C. She also managed to take time to get to Hawaii!

Corby Hancock is teaching earth science and advanced biology at Severn School in Maryland for the second year. Corby is also advisor for the school's yearbook. She mentioned that Jeanne Degeatano is working in Raleigh and making wedding plans for the near future.

Cathy Harold has settled in the Philadelphia area. She is working as associate editor of a scientific magazine for eye doctors published by the Chilton Co. Her job is fun as well as challenging, and Cathy wishes to stay in the area for a long time.

Cheri Harris Lofland was married to Doug in April with a honeymoon in Bermuda. Doug and Cheri live in Arlington where Cheri continues to work for the National Soft Drink Association but has a new title as administrative assistant. Cheri gets together with Sue Lord and Karen Ries who also live in Arlington.

Congrats to Mary Harris who is now Dr. Mary Harris! Mary is living in Charlottesville, VA, serving an internship in internal medicine at UVA with plans for residency training in neurology there.

Nancy Hatch never writes but I know she is alive and well! She seems to like her job with Dow Jones as an educational services rep. Her home is in Atlanta but she travels a lot.

Are you ready for this one?... Jane Hubbard Sams and Lloyd are in Abu Dhabi near Saudia Arabia on the Persian Gulf. They will be there for two or three years. Lloyd is working for the First National Bank of Chicago. Hub says all is well and that she is learning to "drive a camel"! She would love to hear from us, contact me for her address.

Marianne Hutton Felch writes from Larchmont, NY, of the birth of their second child, first son, Oean Hutton Felch, on Nov. 24, 1983.

Karen Jaffa McGoldrick and Lawrence are settled in Atlanta. Lawrence is an associate in the law firm of Fisher & Phillips. Karen and Prudence Saunders are business partners breaking thoroughbred yearlings for the track and sales ring. Karen is also getting her horse ready for showing in dressage competitions and hopes for a busy show schedule in '84. Karen reports that Cathy Calello's wedding was a great experience — a true emotional high!

Aimee Kass received her master's in early childhood and elementary ed. from N.Y. U. She is now subbing for 23 school systems until something permanent comes along. Aimee has heard from Kate McTaggart Allen '81 who had a baby girl, Isabel Louise, in Sept. '82.

Jacquie Kenner Carmody and Arthur have become Richmonders. Arthur is working for CFB and Jacquie will be house hunting.

Sue Lord is working outside of Fredericksburg for a defense contractor. Sue has been on the wedding circuit — Cheri Harris, Sarah Skaggs, and Phyllis Shelton.

Lauren MacMannis Huyett and Bill are expecting their first little one in December. Lauren is tutoring at Hathaway Brown, a private girls' school.

Theresa Marshall Tingley and Mike made it to New York for Pam Ramsdell Mitchell's wedding. All is going well for Teresa and Mike in Dayton.

Graham Maxwell Russell reports all is well in Palm Beach. Alexander, their son, has turned one year old.

Tricia Paterson is in her second year of grad school at the U. of Alabama in Birmingham where she will receive her M.A. in public health and business administration. She plans to go into health management. Tricia reports that she sees Tucker McGowin in Birmingham.

Hold onto your hats... Pam Ramsdell Mitchell was married to John in New York. It was a great time for all in attendance. Laura Evans, Celeste Dubuque, Patti Snowden Cloetingh and Davie, Teresa Marshall Tingley and Mike, Pam Weiler, Ann Rockwell '80, Emily Quinn '80, and myself. After a busy summer in Charlottesville, the Mitchells moved to Tallahassee, FL, where John attends law school and Pam is busily sewing for the new little Mitchell!

Jeanette Rowe went on a nine-month trip to Europe that turned into two years! According to sister Florence, Jeanette has seen the world, every bit of it! She was due to arrive home in October with some very special news.

Prudence Saunders is living in Atlanta and working with Karen Jaffa McGoldrick, as well as at a small animal clinic. Karen and Prudence are helping to work for horse racing in Georgia. You two can hit Virginia next! Prudence mentioned that after one triathlon she is looking on to the Ironman! (Only joking.)

Patty Schrader is still in Colorado studying the fishes of the Colorado River for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Over the winter she will be in Logan, UT, taking classes at Utah State.

Shari Sellers went on a four-week vacation to St. Thomas and the famous islands of Grenada. Fortunately, Shari left Grenada a week before the take-over. Shari received her B.S. in biology from the U. of Conn. She then went on to work as an animal health technician for eight veterinarians at Bolton Veterinary Hospital, also in Connecticut. After one year she went back to school for a medical technology degree. Shari is now a certified med tech at a hospital in Waterbury, CT.

Phyllis Shelton Higginbotham was married to Jay on October 22. Ginger Pierson and Karen Ries were both there. Phyllis and Jay honeymooned in Fredericksburg, Hilton Head, and the Blue Ridge Mountains. Their new address will be Altavista, VA, where Jay has accepted a job as legal counsel with a construction company.

Patti Snowden Cloetling and David have moved to Richmond, right down the street from me! David is a manufacturer's rep for industrial products. Did I get that right?! Patti is busy job hunting and will have a job when this is published.

Beth Timken Biehl and Andy have bought a townhouse on Stoney Creek in Pasadena, MD. They are enjoying the water and their new Lab puppy. Beth still works for Maryland National Bank but is now involved in the Branch Automation project as a training supervisor. Her team is responsible for training the staff of all 200 branches!

Pam Weiler continues to work for Degussa Corporation as a personnel representative while she takes courses at New York U.

Nancy White Bryant was married to George in July. They had a sailing honeymoon in the B.V.I. and are now settled into their Manhattan apartment. Nancy continues to work at Sotheby's, producing catalogues. On the side she writes and illustrates a newspaper for senior citizens published by the New York Junior League. Nancy is also working on an M.A. in communications design at Pratt Institute. And if that is not enough, Nancy is vice-president of SBC alumnae in N.Y.C.!

Vickie Wingate is a CPA with the S.C. Legislative Audit Council. Vicki has bought a condo and a Persian cat and is feeling very domesticated.

And I, Clara Johnson, have enjoyed being your secretary. I will miss your notes but you can still write to me! Please send me photos and changes of address so I can prepare the scrapbook for the BIG reunion! I continue to love Richmond. I am still teaching kindergarten in King William but am hoping to find a position closer to Richmond. I hope to have more exciting news for you at the Reunion...so BE THERE!!!!

Blair is hoping for a job on Wall Street, Meg works for Lancome cosmetics, and Kathy, for Adolpho; they live together.

After travels to Hawaii and California Karen Kerlin is a non-teaching academic computer programmer at Georgetown U. Mandy Beauchemin is working on her master's in biology at Boston Col. Sandy Ahern is at U. of Ga. studying Fashion Merchandising and got engaged to Michael Simmons last Christmas.

Rexanne Baker spent her summer in Virginia Beach and is now in Kansas City, MO, where she is working for a commercial photographer and plans to attend Kansas City Art Institute. Myra Merritt attended Middlebury studying German this summer and is hoping to enroll in art history graduate school. Tresy Robinson is in Mobile working for Overseas Hardware Co. and in her spare time takes accounting and paints. Mary Pope Hutson and Sally Archibald share an apartment in D.C. Mary Pope is working for Senator Jesse Helms and taking Spanish.

Cate McNider is living in London taking dancing classes and auditioning for plays. She and Melissa Harshaw share a flat. Diana Duffy is working on her master's in electrical engineering at UVa. Elena Quevedo is loving N.Y.C., where she is getting her master's in art history at NYU. Mary Ware is living in Richmond and teaching kindergarten; in her spare time she is planning her September wedding to Brian Gibson. Gretchen Wulster is living at home and working as a paralegal for Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett in N.Y.C.

Ann Goldmann is loving her new life in Dallas, where she's working as a secretary/consultant trainee for a financial search firm. Eleanor Bibb is also living in Dallas and is enjoying her job with Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich Publishers. Ann and Eleanor often see Tracy Gatewood and Leslie Wright. And now Elizabeth Terzian has moved to Dallas, where she is a systems engineer for Electronic Data Systems. She also has wedding plans for the summer. Nina Pastuhov has moved to Boxborough, MA, and is enrolled at Katharine Gibbs in Boston. In January Amie Lisner plans a move to N.Y.C., but now she's working part-time at Carroll Reed.

Amy Painter graduated from U. of Texas in international business. She's now living in Austin after a trip to Europe. Miriam Baker is currently teaching kindergarten in Birmingham and living with a friend. Nancy Cunningham and Lizzie Pierpoint share an apartment in Roanoke. Nancy works for Frances Kahn in sales and as a skin care representative and is also doing free-lance ads. Lizzie is in a buyer's trainee program with Lazarus, Inc.

Elise Wright is loving her new apartment and job at a small clothing store in Miami, FL. Ellen Clare Gillespie is working in N.Y.C. for Merrill Lynch. While she was home, she saw a lot of Mimi Kitchell, Suzanne Turner, Virginia Claus, Tish Littleton and Melissa Cope who all live in Alexandria, VA. Polly Parker is living at home and staying busy with work at Saks Fifth Ave. and marketing classes.

Anne Little is living and working in Atlanta. Pam Weekes spent the summer lifeguarding and is now an assistant to the head of transportation for an international firm of architects, engineers and planners. Churchill Bird spent this summer in Europe and in January began to work for City Mortgages. Mason Bennett is working part time at SBC and actively looking for a job in D.C. Cindy Shirley is now at paralegal school in Atlanta.

Becky Campbell is living at home, working for Northshore Publications, and doing free-lance advertising. Claire Ciesko is living at home and working for AT&T in N.Y.C. Martha Riggs is currently living at home, but hopes to move to North Carolina soon. Phyllis Zoe Fedder is at Florida State School of Business. I have an unidentified card from someone who left SBC freshman year and is now at U. of Calif. — nice to hear from you, but please identify yourself.

As for me, I'm living at home and currently working for Jos. A. Bank Clothiers. I just wanted to say thank you for your responses and encouragement! Keep me posted of any news, honors and address changes

THE DEPARTMENT OF CONTINUING STUDIES & SUMMER PROGRAMS PRESENTS

Sweet Briar Summer, 1984

Alumnae College

This is an opportunity for alumnae to become part of college life again and to share this enjoyment with husbands and families. For the first time, Sweet Briar College will offer a residential program especially designed for those who have yearned to re-experience not only the physical beauty of the campus but also the intellectual stimulation that is distinctly "Sweet Briar."

The Alumnae College will begin with dinner on Wednesday, July 17 and end with breakfast on Sunday, July 22.

The teaching faculty will include Fontaine Maury Belford, Dean of the College, Carol F. Rhodes, Instructor in Music, Michael Richards, Hattie Mae Samford Professor of History, and John E. Savarese, Associate Professor of English. In a lecture/discussion format, the faculty and participants will explore the twentieth century up through the 1980's and discuss how the issues of the twentieth century are inter-related with the liberal arts in the areas of literature, the arts, history, science and computers.

Other summer programs:

Elderhostel

June 3-9 and June 10-16

An international program designed for older citizens who enjoy the best traditions of education and hosteling. There will be two one week sessions of this residential program offered at Sweet Briar.

Cost: $180.00 per person

Elderhostel is open to people over 60 or to those whose participating spouse or companion qualifies.

Management Development Seminar June 24-28

An intensive residential program for women in management positions who wish to advance more rapidly in their chosen careers. The teaching faculty include professors from Sweet Briar College and outstanding members of the business community who address the areas of management technique, women in organizations, computers, business communications, the art of negotiating and nonverbal communication.

Cost: $500.00

Application deadline: May 26, 1984

Suzuki Institute

July 29-August 4

Residential violin and piano institute for students and parents.

Dennis Van Der Meer Tennis

June 1-August 5

Ongoing clinics for professionals, adults and juniors.

Artists Harvest Sights, Sounds, Smells of Sweet Briar

by Stephen Humphrey, Assistant Director of the VCCA

Over the eight years that the Virginia Center for the Creative Arts has been at Sweet Briar — during the two summer sessions on campus and in the six years at Mt. San Angelo — the mountainous Virginia landscape has deeply affected the artists, writers, and composers who have been VCCA Fellows.

It is most evident with the visual artists. Any time the weather permits, it is pretty common to see a painter with an easel along the Mt. San Angelo driveway or beside Highway 29 trying to capture the colors of the landscape.

You have to look a little harder for the poets but they're often outdoors, too, no matter what the weather. Most often they're sitting alone in the fields or walking slowly by Mt. San Angelo pond with a notebook.

The composers you never see. They stay in the studios (next to the pianos) with the windows open to let the sounds of fields and woods drift inside.

There are uncountable ways in which the sights, sounds, and smells of the Sweet Briar hills are harvested each year by creative people who have come to the VCCA for just this purpose. These Sweet Briar experiences find their way into paintings, poems, stories, novels, photographs, and music. And these works are taken to New York, Chicago, San Francisco, London, Paris, or Tokyo, and places in between.

You can pick up The New Yorker magazine and find almost every week an exhibition or performance of work done at the VCCA in the "Goings On About Town" section. The New York Times Book Review or The Washington Post Book World frequently lists books written by VCCA Fellows. The same is true of numerous other publications.

Night Hill Walk

by David McAleavey

1.
we walk up the hill at night lit the modern rural way high-watt yard lamps on barns & tall poles sideways flashes from the highway below us pale overturned bowls of scattered towns

2.
fireflies so profuse sight tricks us till we conceive a screen, on which play intelligent Brownian worms transforming the whole surrounding wall of woods into a rebus that shows us as we are: aliens, clowns or we are not clowns, are right to test the world's malevolence, right to play at fear like shocked opossums who'll never get used to fuss or eeriness — before which we too keep our heads down

3. into the wind you recite words about vanity as if to say the universe has a hollow core or is a coal burned & burning & to be burned, is an abyss eating itself & its surround overhead & across the fields the lights of cars & trucks sweep & sway on & by our nearly hidden figures on this knoll demarking us

whose consciousness is always in its bounds vulnerabilities in me quiver here despite my words, & yours, which in the day amuse me — now these swooping beams rake & troll the hillside, blind calamitous hooks which do not mean to but which do astound

4.
from the hill we see close by a white spire ringed by spotlights, one aimed away arcing off wide & high making an infinite accidental hole towards what is beyond us & past all creeds & gowns

We cannot draw any closer tonight tho I see your face deep-wrinkled your temples gray even in this light & know: if love could make whole what ages or bleeds... — it has never been so hard just to stand still on the ground

5.
I lean my head back to face the stars, trite tired unhappy with the way mind repays the senses by holding back, holding out to be sole arbiter of things & then gets scared & deserts us deserting too the sweet of new-cut hay souring down

6. midnight
a long Amtrak sashays through, sounding different rackets as it tolls the looser ties over culverts, blows its tattoos & leaves a new silence all around and in the quiet beside a tree we say hello, hello to the moles and voles crickets & toads, interrupting them yes with our tremendous human voice but also comforting the spiders tending their nets among ivy & creeper on the warm summer ground

Mount San Angelo rises above and well back from the road, a black roof and white chimneys seen from a highway, a glimpse of capitols
if the trees are stirring.

Rough fields
fall away on three sides. Down hill, bottom right, a group of Holsteins gathers at some trees.

You cross the northbound lane, go down a dip and across the fat pipes of a cattle guard, wind past the cows
and a tin-roofed, sledge-footed saltlick up on stilts, shift down to second by a stand of trees and come around the top of the S and up the rise over a rattly cattle guard into the lot.

COW/ LINES

A dominant part of the Sweet Briar landscape is black and white: the College's Holstein dairy herd. The ruminating presence of the heifers and steers at Mt. San Angelo has fascinated particularly the city-dwelling artists. And the cattle have been fascinated by the artists.

It is nearly an everyday sight at Mt. San Angelo — an artist sketching a group of cows that are lying in the shade; or a curious group of cows gathered around an artist painting at his easel, oblivious to his audience.

New York artist Jean Zaleski has made cows her specialty ever since her first visit to the VCCA in 1976. In subsequent visits, Zaleski has created an important series of paintings and prints entitled "Pasture Forms" derived from the abstract black and white shapes of cows' markings. Jean has had 17 solo exhibitions around the country.

When she first came to the VCCA in 1976, Jean met Edwin Honig, who was also a VCCA Fellow. Honig is a distinguished poet, translator, and scholar, who has published nine books of poetry and is on the English faculty at Brown University.

They decided to collaborate on a project in which Jean would do illustrations of the cows and Edwin would write poetry about them. The result is Cow/Lines published in 1982 by Copper Beech Press.

Portions of Cow/Lines are reprinted below with grateful acknowledgments to Copper Beech Press.

The map of a strange unchartered country covers half the wobbling cow hide.

Ravens and hawks
hurtle and rise to startle the sleep of a green afternoon.

Dusk and the dark
bunching up hills kept back by a clean cropped field from pouncing on loitering cows.

CRACKS IN THE SOVIET DOMESTIC AFFAIRS

by Michael D. Richards

It is fitting that we take a look early in 1984 at domestic matters in the Soviet Union in connection with American foreign policy. The Soviet Union is often seen today as the country that comes closest to reproducing the features of an Orwellian society as George Orwell described them in Nineteen Eighty-four*.

There is another, perhaps more important, connection between the year 1984 and the Soviet Union. I am thinking now of a small book, really a longish essay, by a Soviet historian and writer named Andrei Amalrik, Will the Soviet Union Survive until 1984? That particular question has now been answered. What is important about the book, though, is that it was one of the first to suggest that the Soviet Union was not as strong as we had thought, that it had terrible problems, that it might even (dare we hope for it) collapse of its own internal contradictions. Since the late 1960s at least (Amalrik's book dates from 1969), the United States has alternated between the idea that the Soviet Union is unbeatable, immensely strong, and so on, and the idea that it is on the verge of collapse, almost completely helpless in the face of domestic problems that may well destroy it. My own views tend a little more toward the latter than the former and I will eventually set out a few reasons why I see it this way. First, however, I want to state a couple of conclusions, the main points of this sketch, on the grounds that they might otherwise get lost in the details yet to come.

My conclusions are two:

1) The alternation between diametrically opposed views of the health and well-being of the Soviet system is one among many indications that we are greatly lacking in people who are experts in Soviet affairs, both those who know the language and the country from first-hand observation and those like myself who try to keep up with what the experts are saying. In fact, we are in worse shape now than we were in twenty years ago.

2) The problems that the Soviet Union faces, serious and extensive as they are, will not provide us with any easy answers for our foreign policy dilemmas. We need to rely on what we always should rely on — maintenance of good working relations with our allies; a clear-headed, unemotional view of world problems; and tough-minded negotiations with the Soviets on questions susceptible to negotiation. Above all, without losing sight of the need to keep in mind various expressions of public opinion and the policy shifts that invariably follow changes in administrations, we should conduct our foreign affairs in a professional manner. Regrettably, neither this administration nor the one before it has been able to do this with any consistency.

Let us turn now to three aspects of Soviet domestic affairs that are of obvious importance for American foreign policy. I will comment on each in turn and suggest a few conclusions that makers of American foreign policy might draw from a study of each aspect.

* For those who might take comfort in the idea of the Soviet Union as an Orwellian society, I would like to suggest that the United States bears a reasonably close resemblance to the society depicted by Aldous Huxley in Brave New World. I do not think that we can take much comfort in that.

KREMLIN WALL AND AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

The first aspect has to do with the leadership of the Soviet Union. Here, I must confess that what I said in January had very little predictive value. Yuri Andropov died 9 February 1984, almost precisely a month after my talk. My firm prediction that Konstantin Chernenko would not replace Andropov was quickly proved wrong. Despite my rather poor track record to date, I will continue to recommend that we keep a close watch on two younger members of the Politburo, Grigory Romanov and Mikhail Gorbachev. Gorbachev, a Secretary of the Central Committee, seems an especially likely candidate to take Chernenko's place as General Secretary eventually. It is all a guessing game, of course, and before we get carried away by the speculations, we might examine the connections between the Soviet leadership problems and American foreign policy more closely.

I have two suggestions to make here:

1) The Soviet Union has been in an extended leadership crisis, from at least 1980 on. Because of this, we can expect the Soviets to be tenacious negotiators who will not easily give ground and who will be trying to change any diplomatic agenda to their advantage. Our response to Soviet activities in world affairs has to be based on the realization that a leadership crisis there does not translate into weak or indecisive management of foreign affairs but into just the opposite.

2) The Brezhnev regime by the late 1970s was pursuing an opportunistic, expansionistic, aggressive foreign policy. In large part, this was meant to compensate for domestic problems. In some part, however, it seems to have been an inability to resist temptations provided by inept American foreign policy. Despite recent trends, we need now a careful, case-by-case assessment of foreign policy questions, not reflex responses, as I think has been the case in Central America and in the Caribbean.

The next large area has to do with the Soviet economy, which faces a nasty combination of short-run problems, such as successive bad harvest, and structural problems. It may be going too far to label the situation, as Marshall Goldman does, The Failure of an Economic System.* The system works, if badly. More important, it is unsuited to the rapidly changing economic conditions of the 1980s. Paradoxically, it is a system hamstrung by the very features that should enable it to function in the most rational and efficient manner possible. It operates on the basis of Five-Year Plans. These plans are set up so that various targets, usually expressed in quantitative terms, must be met: so many million tons of steel produced, so many thousand Gromyko toasters built, that sort of thing. The very nature of the system works against innovation, against declaring a product or an industry obsolete, and therefore against the most rational use of resources.

What is important is fulfilling or overfulfilling the quota and earning bonuses. A new product might be difficult to produce in large quantities right away. Sorry, no bonus this year, comrades. Never mind that the new Kolyma hairdryer is far superior to the old Crimea model; the point is the number of units produced. Factory managers, then, play games in order to make the quota. They pad payrolls so that they will be sure to have enough people on hand to fulfill the quota. They send people out to beg, borrow, literally steal raw materials or components since it is not always possible to get what is required through regular channels. And, always, they practice "storming"; at the end of the month, the quarter, the year, the Five-Year Plan massive, heroic efforts are made to produce the requisite number of units of whatever. Not surprisingly, much of what is produced in these periods is junk.

How does one obtain scarce products in the Soviet Union or get something repaired or get special medical attention? Usually through a vast, complicated system of bribery, barter, and corruption, a semi-capitalist system that is na levo, on the left or unofficial.

What does this mean in terms of American foreign policy? Let me once more make two suggestions.

1) No matter how poorly the Soviet economy performs, we cannot expect that that will have any serious effect on the Soviet military (barring near or complete collapse, of course). The Soviet military has its own system of factories that produce much of what it needs. Often, its products are not available within the civilian economy. Goods that the military procures from the civilian economy must meet rigid standards. The Soviet military budget, visible and invisible, has continued to expand steadily while the growth of the economy as a whole has declined sharply over the last decade. Whatever the military needs, it will get. There are no shortcuts for us here. Our attempts to put pressure on the Soviet economy, whether through grain embargoes or actions to stop the use of American products and processes in the construction of the natural gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe, have nearly always failed to have much effect on the Soviet Union and have usually hurt us, particularly in terms of our relations with our allies.

2) The Soviet Union will have increasing problems keeping up with the development of technology. Yet it seems to find ways of coming up with the technology it needs. We must be careful not to export technology with obvious military application. We need also to guard against industrial espionage (although this is difficult when so much technology is German or Japanese or French, rather than American). In general, however, the export of technology should not be directly linked to diplomacy.

To summarize, we should not expect to make much headway diplomatically, or in terms of the balance of power, through economic means. Occasionally, symbolic gestures may be necessary. Ordinarily, we should not expect a great deal from efforts made in the realm of economics. In fact, we may have to shore up the Soviet economy now and then (an example here would be Poland's large debt to western banks; it would not be to our advantage to bring the Polish economy to its knees even though this would have a drastic effect on the Soviet economy).

A third area of interest is the Soviet military. Recent scholarship and practical experience in the case of KAL 007 suggest that the Soviet military establishment is not as formidable as we often picture it. Andrew Cockburn, for example, in his book on the Soviet military, not only calls into question Soviet capability to wage nuclear war (there should not be any doubt, by the way, that the Soviet have no desire to wage nuclear war) but even calls into question the apparently overwhelming advantage in conventional forces possessed by the Soviets in the European theatre. The Soviet army faces numerous problems including low morale among enlisted men, inadequate and sometimes inoperative equipment, widespread corruption, and a fiasco in Afghanistan. Most Russians, nonetheless, are deeply patriotic and would resist fiercely any perceived threat to their country. However strong or weak we may picture the Soviet military as being, there is no advantage here that we may apply in the realm of foreign affairs.

Michael D. Richards is the Hattie Mae Samford Professor of History at Sweet Briar. He is an authority on Russian and Soviet history and has lectured widely on subjects relating to social protest, protest movements and revolutions. He currently teaches a course at Sweet Briar on modern Russia.

Mr. Richards earned his B.A. degree from the University of Tulsa and his A.M. and Ph.D. degrees from Duke University. He is the author of Europe, 1900-1980: A Brief History and is a contributor to the Modern Encyclopedia of Russian and Soviet History.

Mr. Richards has made a number of revisions in his speech given in January at the Winter Forums. These reflect the events that have taken place since then, some of which have brought quite significant changes.

Other areas, such as the state of national well-being or conflicts within the Soviet Union over national, ethnic, and religious issues, might also be examined, but I believe that enough information has been presented to reinforce the conclusions that I began with. We need to know more about the Soviet Union in order to evaluate properly what is an extraordinarily complex social, economic, and political system. We also need to realize that nothing in Soviet domestic affairs offers us any diplomatic shortcuts or quick fixes. This is not to say that we will not formulate and implement policy, at least in part, according to what we know of Soviet domestic developments, only that we must not expect too much from that knowledge. We should try to learn more and more about the Soviet Union, but we must not expect to make direct application of most of that knowledge to foreign policy questions. ■

Gretchen Husting '84, an English-art history major from Winnetka, Illinois, put her studies at Sweet Briar to use in an internship with McCall's magazine in New York City, where she was exposed to the complexities of magazine production.

Winter Term at Sweet Briar — it's a chance to break away from the rigors of the classroom; to get job experience in Washington, D.C., New York, Denver, or Paris; to do independent research in the field or on campus; to visit the finest theatres in Europe; or to pursue a particular facet of a special area of interest.

Winter Term is the month of January when students take advantage of more time for intense study of particular subjects on campus, or when they undertake internships or independent studies that may take them anywhere from their senator's office in Washington to a corporate headquarters on Wall Street or to a remote field laboratory.

During Winter Term 1984, of the more than 100 Sweet Briar students who had internships, nearly a third were involved with political, legal, or public service positions, mostly working for congressmen or governmental agencies, and another third had economic internships — working for banks, brokerage houses, and elsewhere, learning more about the world of business.

This year, seniors Barbara Callahan, an economics major from Smithfield, New York, and Heather Willson, an art history major from Miami, Florida, had internships at the corporate headquarters of E.F. Hutton in New York City. Senior Keli Colby of Zionsville, Indiana, a government major, conducted research for strategic planning operations for Citibank in New York.

April Adelson, a sophomore from Swampscott, Massachusetts, turned her Winter Term into an internship with the National Museum of American History at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., and Karen Goodspeed, an environmental studies major from St. Louis, studied the approach to environmental decision-making taken by the National Audubon Society in Washington, D.C.

Putting her economics major and Management Program training to the test during an internship with E.F. Hutton in New York is Barbara Callahan '84 of Smithtown, New York. This summer, Barbara is continuing her study of international economics with a scholarship to the University of Regensburg in Germany.

Helping prepare radio actualities and other promotional materials was just some of the work Mary Earle McElroy '84, a government major from Richmond, conducted for the Republican Conference during her internship in Washington, D.C.

The National Economic Research Associates of Washington, D.C., was the site for an internship for Gigi Collins '84, a Magna Cum Laude mathematics-economics graduate from Mendham, New Jersey. Gigi and Wendy Birtcher '84 were co-recipients of the 1984 Connie M. Guion Award for excellence as a human being and a member of the College.

One of numerous legal internships was filled Winter Term by Kathy Kenton '84, a Turning Point student who was named the Emily Watts McVea Scholar as the highest ranking member of her class — an honor she received all four years. Kathy interned with Judge Jim Farmer in the General District Court in Amherst, Virginia, and has been accepted to law school at the University of Virginia.

Chris Svoboda '84, a mathematics-computer science major from Richmond, studies blueprints for the interior of a new library with her internship adviser, Guy Martin, architect. Chris, who has her sights set on architectural school, spent her Winter Term with Martin and Jones Architects in Washington, D.C.

U.S. FOREIGN POLICY IN AN AGE OF ECONOMIC INTERDEPENDENCE

THE 1984 EWALD SCHOLARS SYMPOSIUM

by Janet K. Lowrey, Director, Public Relations

It might have been the Ides of March rather than a night in early April when a heavy fog enveloped the land and battering winds and rain sent economists flying over Central Virginia in search of Sweet Briar. Some of the country's leading authorities on the "dismal science" began to wonder how dismal things might really get.

The Lynchburg Airport was closed. Program chairman Jacqueline Browning was trying to operate an air traffic control center from the PR Office at Sweet Briar. One economist flew from New York to Washington to Greensboro to Roanoke to Charlottesville before being grounded. Friendships were born in the Charlottesville Airport. Yet finally, despite these odds, by dinner time on the night of April 4, the first contingent of distinguished economists, political scientists, government officials, and other program participants were dining at Sweet Briar House prior to the opening address of the 1984 Ewald Scholars Symposium.

Jacqueline Browning, Associate Professor of Economics at Sweet Briar, and Dean Fontaine Belford, Chairman of the Ewald Committee, had gathered a blue-ribbon roster of 15 speakers from business, labor, government, and academia to address the vital, complex, and timely issues surrounding the Symposium topic: "U.S. Foreign Policy in an Age of Economic Interdependence."

The two major speakers represented opposite sides of the political spectrum: Ray Marshall, who spoke the evening of April 4, is Bernard Rapoport Centennial Professor of Economics and Public Affairs at the University of Texas and Vice Chairman of the Mondale Campaign. Herbert Stein, who spoke the following evening, is A. Willis Robertson Professor of Economics at the University of Virginia and a member of President Reagan's Economic Advisory Board. He is also a senior fellow of the American Enterprise Institute, a Washington, D.C. think-tank, and editor of its monthly publication.

"Internationalization is one of the universal imperatives of our time," declared Marshall in his speech on "Internationalization and Labor Relations." Marshall, who was Secretary of Labor under President Carter, believes that because of the internationalization of the American economy, the social contract between labor and business, which evolved during the 30 years following the Great Depression, is no longer viable. "We have lost control of our own affairs," he said. We can no longer assume that simply by changing economic policies we can solve our economic problems."

Neither Keynesian economics, supply-side economics, nor monetarism will work today. With labor now competing against Japanese and Mexicans, unions will have to become more productive, efficient, and flexible, and public policy will have to encourage cooperation with other countries if the U.S. economy is to prosper.

Nor is it in the interests of the United States to ignore the Third World, Marshall said. We should increase our imports from the Third World, leaving labor-intensive industries to the developing nations and concentrating on areas where we have an advantage.

Herbert Stein, who was Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under Presidents Nixon and Ford, considers such terms as "foreign economic policy," "international trade," and "international finance" to be misleading metaphors. In his "Reflections on Foreign Economic Policy," he clarified this observation:

"International trade is not trade between the U.S. and Japan. It is me buying a VCR from a Japanese company. It is not trade between nations; it is trade between individuals and companies, some of which are in different countries...The basic question of foreign economic policy is whether the government should have a different policy toward the transactions of its own citizens with citizens of other countries than it has towards the transactions of its own citizens with each other."

The answer to that question, according to Stein, is "the general lesson of economics...that the policy should be the same, and that the same policy should be a policy of non-interference." There are exceptions to this credo, Stein noted, and these are made necessary either to protect the national security, to provide a general climate of economic stability, or to provide for the well-being of the most disadvantaged citizens.

The Politics and Economics of the New Protectionism

Four panel sessions on Thursday and Friday, April 5 and 6, were forums for thought-provoking discussions of such questions as the effect of imports on domestic employment, the threat of Third World country defaults on U.S. bank loans, and the impact of trade and investment decisions on developing countries. The speakers agreed and disagreed, revealing the interaction between economics and politics and the tough decisions policymakers face when they address problems with global consequences. The first of these sessions dealt with the New Protectionism.

"I do not believe the Japanese are competitive giants about to overwhelm American industry....Basically, the American economy is in good shape," said Richard Cooper, who moderated this session, keeping at bay two natural antagonists, Douglas Fraser, retired head of the UAW, and Melvyn Krauss, a conservative economist from New York University and the Hoover Institution at Stanford.

Fraser, unlike Cooper, is worried about the Japanese. "Suppose we meet the wage competition of Japan," he said. "What about Korea and Brazil? Do we destroy the blue-collar class in America and their purchasing power?...There are outrageous practices — barriers to our products — in Japan," he protested.

"When we talk about free trade — and I think it is a sound principle — I want to inject the question of fairness," Fraser said. Other countries are not engaging in free trade and when the U.S. does, the cost falls on certain industries, such as automobiles and steel. For example, Japan subsidizes its steel industry so it can sell steel more cheaply to the U.S. "How do you expect the American worker to stand idly by and cheer the slogan of free trade when there's an element of unfairness in the whole system?" Fraser asked.

Krauss disagreed. "It's a mistake to see the problem in terms of labor alone," he said. The New Protectionism, in his view, means that capital and labor in weak industries are conspiring together against the tax payer, the consumer, and other industries. "The idea of fair trade instead of free trade could as well come from Iacocca as Fraser," he said. Krauss opposes a new industrial policy based on "a new cooperative model between big business, big labor, and big government," with bosses of the three sectors making all the decisions — decisions that could be wrong.

One of the issues upon which Fraser and Krauss disagreed was the government's bailout of the Chrysler Corporation, whereby the company received $1.5 billion in loan guarantees which were subsequently paid back seven years ahead of schedule. Fraser cited the bailout as an example of successful industrial policy, in which government, workers, the company, bankers, dealers, and parts suppliers all cooperated. Krauss was not impressed. What would have happened, he asked, if there had been no bailout? The company would assuredly have gone bankrupt, but would that necessarily have been bad? Creditors and stockholders would have lost, but Chrysler might have been bought by another company, perhaps Renault or a Japanese firm; the workers might have gotten jobs with GM; the money might have been spread out in loans to small business, which did fail.

Industrial policy is "a threat to individual freedom," Krauss said. "Free trade has become almost a religion among economists. Free trade is in — protectionism is out."

Cooper, who is Maurits C. Boas Professor of International Economics at Harvard and a former Undersecretary of State for Economic Affairs under President Carter, intervened with what he termed "a picky but important semantic distinction — we do not have free trade here. As a society we have never set free trade as an objective." Industrial policy at its best, he believes, supports the economic infrastructure with government programs and research — for example, agricultural research programs and the educational system.

"Krauss identified an important trend — the growing expectations of people of national governments," Cooper continued. "The New Protectionism has meant increased subsidies and interference, especially in Europe. The free market view is congenial to most Americans." Our dilemma is whether to emulate other countries if they are engaging in subsidies or insulate ourselves from them, he said. "A third, and messy, option is to try to do things together, since we are linked with major industrial countries, to make sure gross abuses are avoided and to maintain tolerance for minor differences, just as we do within the United States."

Economic Interdependence and Foreign Policy

"There's been a major change in U.S. power and national psychology," said Charles Maynes, Editor of Foreign Policy Magazine, who was Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs during the Carter Administration.

"After World War II, we used economic markets to support political goals...Economic interdependence was seen as a goal. Increasingly, now, interdependence means vulnerability, as when a country refuses to play the game, for example, when the Iranian crisis paralyzed the economic system. The Soviets are also affected by interdependence."

"Henry Kissinger is 'the high priest of interdependence,'" said Kenneth Waltz, Ford Professor of Political Science at the University of California, Berkeley. "The U.S. is beginning to take on other people's problems as our own. For example, we'll get involved in a war to protect the flow of oil, yet we get only three percent of our oil from the Middle East, while Japan gets 60 percent." Interdependence, he said, means that two or more parties depend on one another to about the same extent. Today we do not have interdependence but great inequalities between nations, conditions of independence and dependence.

"Interdependence does exist," argued Judith Goldstein, Assistant Professor of Political Science at Stanford University. "We have to worry about prosperity among our allies as well as the threat of the Soviet Union. The world of capitalism is interdependence. We have mutual vulnerability. We must allow capital to go where it can. We need European countries and Japan, but they have been cheating on the system. They can't be free riders any more."

"Ken Waltz is engaged in an interesting semantical trick," said Maynes. We are the leading economy and not equally interdependent with other countries, he said. "I agree that not all the political problems in the developing world are ours. We are a status quo power and benefit from order, not disorder. We face an opponent that benefits from disorder, not order."

"Reagan is operating with global unilateralism, failing to take into account the economic concerns of our allies," Maynes continued. "The Third World debt to the U.S. owed by Mexico, Brazil, Venezuela, and Argentina is dangerous economically and politically, he believes. "There is human catastrophe in many parts of the world."

The Crisis in International Banking

"This is an exciting program — it has elements of a mystery story, with Mr. Kafka (Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund) standing on the sidelines as a potential White Knight and the evil Russian Red Bear waiting to pick up the carnage of the system if it should fall apart," announced John Bilson, a cheerful Australian now Associate Professor of Economics at the Graduate School of Business of the University of Chicago. "Who're we going to blame for the debt crisis?" He referred to the crisis involving what he called "the MBA group — Mexico, Brazil, and Argentina" — developing countries to which the largest U.S. banks have lent $31 billion or 107 percent of their capital.

Alexandre Kafka protested being identified as the "mystery man of the group" because he had sent in part of his resume in Portuguese. "I am not a mystery, but I am perhaps slightly schizophrenic," he said, "because as a Brazilian and an officer of the IMF, I am the opposite of what Shakespeare recommended — both a lender and a borrower."

"There is no global disaster," Kafka said. For the IMF, debt crises are nothing new. "The Fund is hampered by the paucity of its resources. Ever since the early 60's, it has borrowed from member countries," he noted. "Where do we go from here and what can we do? A new debt crisis is possible. It takes time to get together a financing package and you need a financing package to prevent defaults. A weakness of the IMF is that it cannot make quick money available while a long-term solution is being found."

"Everything will be all right," said Rimmer de Vries, a tall, commanding Netherlander who is Senior Vice President of Morgan Guaranty Trust Company and a member of President Reagan's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness. After 23 years as economist with Morgan Guaranty's international division, he has observed that there is always a crisis. "The Italian crisis, the sterling crisis, the dollar crisis under Nixon, the OPEC surplus, the second oil shock — all have disappeared. Now the debt crisis. This is a global crisis concerned with the health of the banking system. This is different. The social issues involved — the adjustment for poorer countries — is far more severe."

Interdependence in the World Economy: A Developed/Less Developed Country Perspective

"Population growth is the most serious threat to world order. Every year almost 90 million people are born," said Michael Todaro, Professor of Economics at New York University and Senior Associate at the Center for Policy Studies of the Population Council. "The economic and demographic conditions of the LDC's (Less Developed Countries) have a growing impact on the U.S. The use of energy and raw materials by developed nations is leading to growing interdependence." He sees the U.S. depleting its own sources of minerals so rapidly that by the year 2000 we will be 90 percent dependent on Third World countries like Chile and Peru for our minerals, except perhaps for phosphates. "We can no longer say that only poor countries depend upon the rich," he said. "Over 41 percent of U.S. trade is with developing countries. The question is whether interdependence will lead to cooperation or confrontation."

Paul Streeten, Professor of Economics and Director of the World Development Institute at Boston University, noted a certain cultural interdependence within the cities of the world, particularly among the young, who wear much the same clothes and share the same music, drinks, drugs, and crimes, even in China. However, "the poorest of the rural masses are not geared into cultural interdependence, which is more or less limited to the urban middle class," he said.

"We are suffering from a gap between the technological revolution in communication and transport and our institutional responses," he said. "This is a global problem which does not require more international bureaucrats serving national interests," he said. We need institutional responses to such major global problems as the need for peace, purity of air and water, monetary stability, and reduced unemployment.

"What is the role of morality in the field of interdependence?" he asked. "We have an excessive emphasis on self-interest. Do rich people owe any obligation to poor people? Does the world consist of community in that sense?"

Like Todaro and Streeten, Margaret Catley-Carlson, president of the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA), is concerned with the human side of interdependence. "Our shared world faces three huge, crucial problems: the danger of war, the threat to our environment, and the continuing human disaster represented by world poverty," she said. "Clearly we are living in a period of great and growing interdependence, so these global problems are also our most serious national problems." Developing this theme, Catley-Carlson stated her case:

"When we look at the map of the world, the most striking thing about it in human terms is that there are some very rich nations, mainly in the north, and a great many poorer nations lying to their south in Africa, Asia, and Latin America, home to three-quarters of humanity. In fact, we know that roughly 40,000 Third World children will die today, innocent victims of malnutrition and preventable disease, and that the toll will reach 15 million in the course of an average year.

"The kind of world that knows such terrible truths, yet manages to take them in its stride, is intolerable — but that's our world, that's the biggest story happening in it, and that is the real context of interdependence for most of those involved. It is hardly necessary to point out that such a world can never be safe, stable, and peaceful."

Summary

In summarizing the symposium, Kenneth Thompson the Program Moderator, Commonwealth Professor of Government and Foreign Affairs at the University of Virginia, noted the richness and variety of views and categories of concerns of the various speakers. He saw no agreement on whether we have experienced a recession, whether it is good or bad that we've had a strong dollar, the full meaning of the trade deficit, or whether there is any relationship between trade deficits and the rising and falling of interest rates. "Thus the role one plays, whether a scholar, banker, or economist, has an impact on one's view."

"The common ground of interdependence and foreign economic policy looms out on all our horizons as some part of the reality with which we cope," Thompson said, "but we give them different weights. Whether we express greater or less empathy for other peoples, we have looked out on the world." ■

A Woman for All Seasons

by Elizabeth Bond Wood '34

The Boards of Overseers and Directors, in 1950, elected Dr. Anne Gary Pannell the fifth President of Sweet Briar College. In choosing this graduate of Barnard and holder of the D. Phil. degree from St. Hugh's College, Oxford, and Dean of Goucher College, the Board showed greater perspicacity than even they realized. In this dainty, almost fragile-looking young widow was an inexhaustible amount of energy, a will of iron and an unswerving dedication to scholarship and to the importance of women's education.

Anne Pannell was the leader who set the tone for Sweet Briar for the next twenty-one years, the same tenure held by her mentor, Dr. Meta Glass. In fact, Mrs. Pannell was acutely aware that she was fifth in a line of strong women, each of whom had made a unique contribution to this young institution. She was determined to contribute no less than they to the strengthening of the College. Her achievements attest to her success.

During her administration the endowment of the College increased sixfold, and the physical plant expanded to include the Meta Glass and Dew Dormitories, the Babcock Fine Arts Center, the Connie M. Guion Science Building, the Dana Wing of the Library, the Memorial Chapel, a new Book Shop, and the Cornelia and Edward Thompson Wailes College Center. With the faculty's cooperation she instituted major revisions and enrichment of the curriculum — notably in the areas of art and the sciences, the establishment of an Asian Studies program and emphasis on ecology and conservation. Certainly she was happy to be able to raise substantially the salaries of faculty and staff, and the growth of the library holdings from 72,250 to 141,000 catalogued items gave her great satisfaction.

The personal honors and awards that came to her were legion, including the presidency of the American Association of University Women, senator of Phi Beta Kappa, presidency of the Southern Association of Colleges for Women, the vice-presidency of the Board of the American Council on Education, and membership on the Ford International Fellowship Board and the Scholarship Board of the Ford Motor Company. Seven institutions awarded her honorary degrees and she served as a trustee of her Alma Mater, Barnard College, as well as Chatham Hall and Foxcroft School. The French Government honored her by naming her a Commander de L'Ordre des Palmes Académiques, and Sweet Briar gave her "The Distinguished Service Award."

The listing of her accomplishments and honors, as impressive as it is, does not really catch the essence of "The Woman for All Seasons." What was she like personally? How do we who were enormously influenced by her describe this many-faceted lady so that she becomes a vibrant reality to the Sweet Briar alumnae who never knew her? This is an almost impossible task but a labor of love and appreciation for her as an individual and as the "Queen Bee," which was her nick-name.

In celebration of her presidency the 1971 winter issue of the Alumnae Magazine was dedicated to her, including the feature article by Catharine Fitzgerald Booker '47 and six thumbnail sketches by people who knew her well.

Eleanor Barton, Professor of Art,

President Pannell with sons Gary and Clifton.

When administrative duties permitted, President Pannell delighted in becoming Professor Pannell.

wrote, "Anne Gary Pannell and her faculty have known and enjoyed over the years a very real and lively friendship. On this premise, Heaven knows, we have held to the tradition by arguing very briskly, battling mightily over every academic and domestic issue...In theory no efficient administrator has time for private woes and joys of members of the faculty. In fact, our president has been incredibly sensitive to the human situation of every one of us; quick to respond with perceptive sympathy and help that has been needed or with warm appreciation when something has gone well."

Peter V. Daniel, Vice-President and Treasurer, wrote, "I found her a gracious lady who was able to charm the fuzz off a peach. She showed her talent as a masterful fund-raiser from the start...We shared a common interest as the problems of bringing up active young sons on a woman's college campus in rural Virginia was not an easy one. There were times when her offspring tested their mother to the fullest, but she proved her gameness. For example, when Clifton bought a motorcycle, it seemed only fitting that mother should climb on the back seat and race all over campus...She had a real desire to understand the world of the computer, building blue prints, masculine cussedness or an unremitting business world. She has challenged my mind and abilities to bring the best to Sweet Briar, which she, by her leadership, has done."

Nida Tomlin Watts '40, a member of the Board of Overseers, 1963-69, wrote, "In my mind the word 'courage' is reserved for President Pannell, especially during the years 1963-67 when the Boards of Directors and Overseers decided to take legal action in regard to the interpretation of the will of Indiana Fletcher Williams, Founder of Sweet Briar College. The purpose of this litigation was to permit the College to operate and grow in overall excellence; this meant a restricted admissions policy (which excluded black students) must be examined and changed. Throughout this trying period, Mrs. Pannell kept the future welfare of Sweet Briar foremost in her mind and heart. She knew this decision involved alienating some friends, accepting often ignorant criticism, graciously explaining to many persons the necessity of the action and enduring the uncertainty of when and where the litigation would ever end. Along with the time devouring emotional involvement with the case she carried on with her manifold duties as President, plus her tireless efforts to raise funds — despite the fact that Sweet Briar then, in money seeking, was practically like an untouchable. Nevertheless she went on trying...Again, this was a large lesson in courage to the rest of us. Her actions re-emphasized my belief that courage is primarily moral courage."
